"There is a great ground swell of interest in health insurance as the best way of meeting the costs of medical care," Cruikshank said. "In the vanguard is organized labor. Just behind we can see the leaders of the voluntary insurance movements. Behind them is the AMA, and I think we saw in the past few days that they are trying to catch up. Way back in the rear is Dr. Morris Fishbein. He is not our leader—I don't believe he's yours."

With the exception of the note of discord brought into the Assembly by Dr. Fishbein, the proceedings on the whole were surprisingly harmonious.

An outstanding achievement was the unanimous acceptance by the planning committee of the important Medical Care section of a 7-point program, endorsing prepaid health insurance as the basic method of financing medical care.

Two prominent members of the AMA—Dr. Thomas A. McGoldrick, Brooklyn, and Dr. James R. McVay, Kansas City, Mo., and four other doctors were on the committee of nine that accepted the program.

Harry Becker, CIO delegation chairman, and a member of the Assembly's executive committee, was one of the three laymen on the committee. Becker is the Auto Workers' social security dept. director. Cruikshank and Horace Hansen, National Cooperative Health Federation, were the other two.

Six of the seven points on the Medical Care report were practically identical with a statement drawn up earlier by spokesmen for 15 national organizations representing more than 15,000,000 members. Otis Brubaker, Steel Workers' research director, and John R. Kumpel, Rubber Workers, joined with Becker in endorsing the statement for the CIO.

The planning committee omitted the last two points of the original draft, calling for a national health insurance plan and continuation under it, of voluntary plans with acceptable standards.

POINTS accepted, however, laid down some of the main essentials for a national health plan.

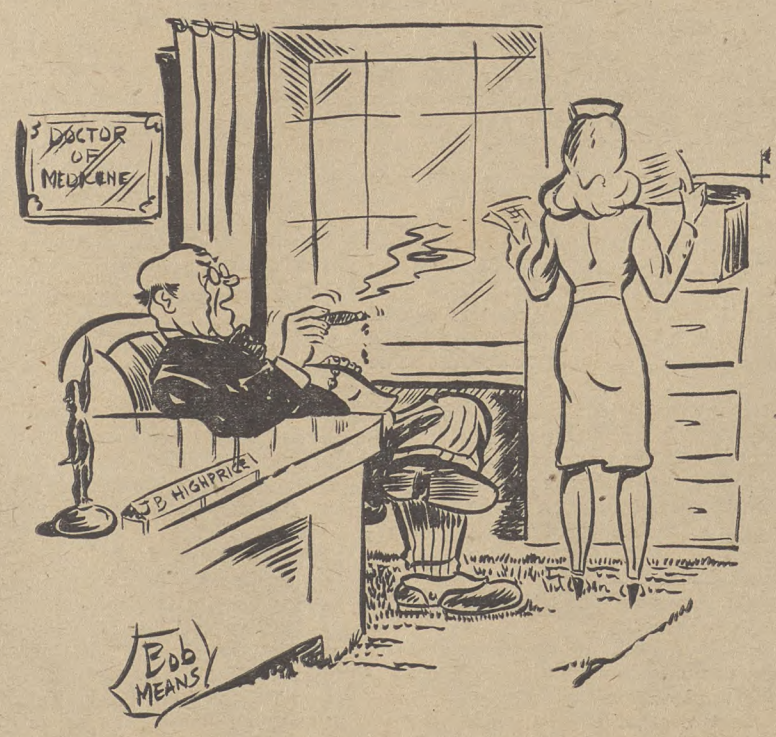
The program called for adequate medical service without regard to race, color or creed, and urged the principle of contributory health insurance as the basic method of financing medical care needed to "avoid the indignities of a 'means' test."

The seventh point, added as a substitute for the two final points in the original statement, declared that an adequate health program must be accompanied by "adequate housing, a living wage, continuous productive and creative employment under safe working conditions."

In a statement issued in behalf of the CIO, Becker hailed the Assembly as an "outstanding success" and called upon the AMA "to take the lead in organizing follow-up conferences to further widen the areas of agreement between the medical profession who furnish health service and the American people who must pay the bills.

"The labor and other consumer groups cannot compromise on the basic question—a public health program for all of the people. As long as four out of five children live in families with incomes of less than $3,000 a year, the overwhelming majority of the American people cannot pay for full and comprehensive medical care offered through voluntary plans."

CIO SPOKESMEN: Otis Brubaker, Steelworkers' research director (left), and Harry Becker, Auto Workers' social security dept. director, busy in the press room at the National Health Assembly at Washington, D. C.



"You know, the National Health Program may be a good thing for most people, but think of what it might do to my fee schedule."

THE ADVENTURES OF JIM BARRY

AT THE FIRST MEETING OF THE UNION COMMITTEE, JIM BARRY SHOWS HOW POLITICAL ACTION WORK IS ORGANIZED....

HERE WE HAVE OUR TOOLS ... A CITY DIRECTORY.... A LARGE MAP SHOWING EACH PRECINCT, WARD AND CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT ... FILING CARDS. AND MOST IMPORTANT ... YOU PEOPLE ... THE VOLUNTEERS WHO WILL PUT OVER LABOR'S POLITICAL ACTION!

PUT THE NAME, ADDRESS, PHONE NUMBER OF EVERY MEMBER IN YOUR UNION ON A CARD LIKE THIS! THEN LOOK UP ON THE CITY MAP... AND WRITE IN ON THE CARD THE WARD OR PRECINCT IN WHICH THE MEMBER VOTES!

FOR EACH WARD AND PRECINCT, FILE THE NAMES ALPHABETICALLY. THEN CHECK THROUGH THE REGISTRATION LIST AND FIND OUT WHO IS ELIGIBLE TO VOTE IN HIS PARTY'S PRIMARY....

WHAT'S SO IMPORTANT ABOUT THAT, JIM?

BECAUSE ELECTIONS CAN BE WON... OR LOST... IN THE PRIMARIES, SUE! IF ALL THE CANDIDATES WHO WIN THE PRIMARIES ARE LABOR-HATING REACTIONARIES.... WELL, YOU WON'T HAVE ANYONE TO VOTE FOR WHEN ELECTION DAY COMES!

BUT THE OPPOSITE IS ALSO TRUE! IF YOU TAKE A HAND IN THE PRIMARY AND SEE TO IT THAT YOUR PARTY NOMINATES A PRO-LABOR CANDIDATE.... YOU'VE GOT THE ELECTION PRETTY NEAR SEWED UP!

NEXT THING YOU DO - TO GET BACK TO OUR WORK - IS TO MAKE UP A PRECINCT BOOK... THAT'S GOT THE NAMES OF YOUR UNION MEMBERS IN THE PRECINCT AND THEIR ADDRESSES.... NOTATION TO SHOW WHETHER THEY'RE REGISTERED... THE NAMES OF VOLUNTEERS WHO ARE GOING TO WORK IN THAT DISTRICT.....

MAKE A NOTE IN THAT BOOK ON THE TIME AND PLACES WHERE TO REGISTER.... THE POLLING PLACES... A MARKED SAMPLE OF THE BALLOT.... AND OTHER IMPORTANT INFORMATION THAT THE BLOCK CAPTAIN MAY NEED....

AND THAT BRINGS US TO THE NEXT BIG STEP... ELECT OR SELECT A PRECINCT CAPTAIN - OR CO-CAPTAINS....

AND THE PRECINCT CAPTAIN'S BADGE OF OFFICE IS THE PRECINCT BOOK! AFTER THIS IS DONE... WE'LL BE READY TO REALLY SWING INTO ELECTION WORK! I'VE OUTLINED A LOT OF WORK THAT HAS TO BE DONE TO PREPARE FOR THE ELECTIONS... BUT IT ISN'T HARD - AND IT CAN BE DONE!

IF LABOR IS TO PROTECT ITSELF FROM THE MEN WITH SMALL MINDS WHO SEEK TO CHISEL AT THE FOUNDATIONS OF OUR NATION, LABOR MUST ASSUME ITS RESPONSIBILITY BEFORE AND DURING THE ELECTIONS! IT'S OUR VOTE... OUR GOVERNMENT... OUR COUNTRY - AND NO ONE CAN TAKE IT AWAY FROM US!!

Hearing Told Low Pay Score

THE Senate Labor Committee, after two weeks of hearings, has all the ingredients for lifting the minimum wage to 75c and extending wage-hour coverage.

But with Sen. Joe Ball (Rep. Minn.) as the chef, the legislative broth may not be as tasty as labor and liberal groups desire.

Ball's sub-committee wound up two weeks of testimony-taking by hearing from the CIO Food & Tobacco Workers, the Natl. Consumers League, an AFL restaurant union and more employers associations.

Elizabeth Sasuly, appearing for FTA-CIO, asked that wage-hour coverage be extended to cover food processors and workers on big "industrialized farms."

They "are among the most bitterly exploited people in the United States," Miss Sasuly said, but special interest groups employers have been able to keep them out of wage-hour protection by raising "smoke screens to hide the granting of special privileges to the processing industry."

Prof. Walter Gellhorn of Columbia Univ. Law School, who represented the National Consumers League, urged Congress to pass the Thomas-McCormack Bill (S. 2062) to help the nine-million low paid workers who do not belong to unions.

He criticized Sen. Ball's own bill (S. 2386) as inadequate. Its 60c minimum—capable of being cut to 50c in some industries—will not protect standards already won in American industry, Prof. Gellhorn said.

Employers' groups have opposed both an increase in the minimum and wider coverage by the law.

UAW's T-H Test Is Turned Down

Efforts by the CIO Auto Workers to secure a "declaratory judgment," defining the Taft-Hartley law's political section as unconstitutional, have ended unsuccessfully.

A three-judge federal court in Washington turned down the petition filed by UAW Pres. Walter Reuther and in effect advised the union to wait for outcome of the National CIO's case, now being studied by the U. S. Supreme Court.

The judges noted that U. S. District Court Judge Ben Moore had ruled the T-H ban on political expenditures by unions as unconstitutional.

Arguments before the Supreme Court on the CIO case, which stemmed from Pres. Murray's endorsement of a Maryland Congressional candidate last summer, were heard April 25 before the high tribunal.

Congressional Roundup

Butter Lobby Loses Round 2 in Fight To Keep Oleo Tax

THE score is 2 to 1 in favor of the oleomargarine lobby in its Congressional battle with the big "butter-and-egg men" from the west.

By a 47-30 vote, the Senate sent a bill outlawing all federal taxes on oleo to its Finance Committee. Senators from dairy states, which have long fought the cheaper oleo product, tried vainly to get the bill referred to the Agriculture Committee, where it faced a dreary future from an anti-oleo majority.

The vote represented an overruling of Sen. Vandenberg (R., Mich.), president of the Senate, who had referred it to the Agriculture group.

CIO, which has supported the fight against oleo taxes and license fees, had urged the bill be sent to the Finance Committee, which regularly handles tax problems.

Don Montgomery, auto union representative in Washington, wired Senators before the vote that "the attempt to send the bill to the Agriculture Committee is simply an attack by the butter lobby to drop pussy down the well with a sack of rocks around her neck."

The tax repeal bill had a stormy history in the House before that body voted its final OK. The House agricultural group—dominated by dairy state Congressmen—voted to table the tax, but southern Congressmen led a petition drive which bypassed the committee and resulted in passage.

Southerners in Congress are interested because soybean and cottonseed products are used in margarine, which retails for about half the price of butter. Federal taxes on uncolored oleo are a half-cent a pound, but amount to a dime on the colored product. License fees for manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers of oleo range between $6 and $600 a year.

The bill (HR 2245) would end all these fees and taxes, but would not affect taxes or restrictions on the sale of the product in several states.

'Equal Rights' vs. 'Equal Status"

A proposed equal rights amendment to the Constitution, which CIO and many other labor and liberal groups predict will do more harm than good, has received an OK from the Senate Judiciary Committee (an all-male group).

The Constitutional amendment proposal needs two-thirds approval in both Senate and House and ratification by 36 state legislatures—so don't hold your breath until it has passed.

CIO has called for passage of an Equal Status bill which would end discrimination against women but would preserve all their past legislative gains.

Displaced Persons Bills Coming Up

Two hundred thousand displaced persons from the refugee camps of Europe will be granted haven in the U. S. during the next two years if the Fellows Bill (HR 6396) gets by Congressional hurdles.

The bill is waiting Rules Committee action prior to House debate and vote. In the Senate, the Wiley Bill (S. 2242)—which would permit only 100,000 DP's to enter the country, and these under heavy restrictions—is on the Senate calendar.

The Fellows measure, while weaker than the original Stratton bill, may get strong Republican support. It bows low to the states' rights argument by permitting governors to set quotas for immigration of DP's into each state.

Public Workers Slam 'Rider' Plan

A scheme to ban payment of wages or salary to any U. S. employe who belongs to a union that hasn't seen fit to sign Taft-Hartley anti-Communist affidavits, was severely slapped last week by Pres. Abram Flaxer of the CIO Public Workers.

The proposal was contained in a 'rider' to an appropriation bill for the Federal Security Agency.

(The dictionary defines 'rider' as: "an addition or proposed addition to a legislative bill, modifying or adding to its original purport.")

Flaxer described the rider as legislation "in the realm of utter confusion." He said it is "no particular secret" that the T-H law doesn't apply to unions of government workers, and that the affidavits need be filed only by unions which would or could use the services of the Labor Board.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

Cain Plan To Defeat TEW Fails

LATEST of a long list of moves by Sen. Harry P. Cain (R., Wash.) to squash the Taft-Ellender-Wagner long-range housing bill has fallen in defeat along with the others.

Cain's newest strategy was to remove from the bill the section providing mortgage loans to private builders and in a separate measure to extend the loans for another twelve months. The TEW bill has already passed the Senate.

The section, known as Title VI, is favored by both the real estate lobby, whose members stand most to gain from it, and by TEW proponents, whose interest is to stimulate construction. It it were removed from the TEW bill, House friends of the real estate lobby would be free to oppose the long-range program, since the remainder of the program holds little or no attraction for them.

Thus the Senate, in extending Title VI for only two months—presumably until the overall bill could be passed—delivered another rebuff to Cain and the real estate lobby.

Michigan Rep. Jesse Wolcott's House Banking Committee, meanwhile, was plodding through hearings on the TEW bill. Capitol Hill speculation was that the hearings would be long, and would leave Wolcott right where he began—opposed to the public housing provisions and generally cool to TEW.

In New York City Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., housing committee chairman of the American Veterans Committee, speaking before the 17th annual meeting of the Natl. Public Housing Conference, predicted that the housing bill would pass if it ever got to the House floor.

He also predicted that rent controls throughout the country would undergo a gradual weakening under the administration of Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods. Woods, opposed by the CIO Housing Committee, was confirmed by the Senate last week.

Only 109 of the 600 local boards were found "truly representative" by the Housing Expediter. The present rent law requires the boards to be representative of the community, since they have broad powers in recommending rent ceiling boosts or decontrol.

CIO Councils Director John Brophy has urged CIO units to press for the appointment of CIO representatives on the rent boards.

Huber Scolds Cox For Kroll Smear

A stinging reply by Jack Kroll, CIO-PAC director, to smear charges leveled against him by a Georgia Congressman, have been entered into the Congressional Record.

Rep. Walter Huber (R., O.) read into the official record Kroll's denial of claims by Rep. Eugene Cox (D., Ga.) that the PAC Director is an alien who has voted illegally. Actually, Kroll was brought as a child to this country when his father migrated from England. As a child, he became an American citizen when Kroll's father obtained citizenship in the 1890's in Rochester, N. Y.

UAW STRIKES AT CHRYSLER

The UAW asked for a substantial pay increase, pension and health benefits. Chrysler Corp. said "no." So—

Pickets like those shown here leaving their hall for duty at the Detroit Chrysler plant went into action in Michigan, Indiana and California.

Sixteen Chrysler plants were shut down tight.

And Chrysler—like U. S. Steel—bought advertising space in the newspapers to try to sell the idea that bigger paychecks would be harmful to workers.

For the story of how 75,000 unconvinced workers reacted to this line, see Page 3.

MEMO TO CONGRESS: This picture, taken down South, is a reminder to Congress that it's falling down on the job of helping the American people. Girl is drawing water from old-fashioned well in front-yard of a country slum. Action on 75c minimum, on housing, on civil rights, on inflation—all might help, but Congress isn't acting.

Some Bosses Say "Yes" —If They Have To

SOME 14,000 CIO Fur Workers have won seasonal raises and a three-year agreement following a two weeks' strike.

The strike was called after the Fur & Trimming Manufacturers closed the shops pending settlement of the contract dispute. The manufacturers had insisted on the right to cut wages arbitrarily and fire workers at will.

The new contract bars these practices and contains numerous clauses safeguarding the union's security. The Taft-Hartley Law bars the union from retaining the closed shop.

Under the agreement, a joint labor-management committee will work out minimum wage scale increases from now until October.

STEEL: After two months of tedious bargaining CIO Steelworkers at the Hamilton and Ontario Works of the Steel Company of Canada have won a 13½c an hour "package" increase. Similar gains were made by CIO Steelworkers at the Dosco plant in Sydney, N. S.

The "package" includes a 11½c across-the-board increase in pay rates, plus payment for four holidays. As a result of contract changes employes of both companies now have six paid statutory holidays.

FARM EQUIPMENT: Some 2200 CIO Farm Equipment Workers at the Oliver Corp., Charles City, Iowa, have broken through industry's "1948 wage freeze" and come up with wage increases of 11c an hour.

Improved vacation provisions and grievance machinery, a voluntary checkoff of union dues, improved overtime provisions and protection of established piece work rates are also included in the contract.

HOSIERY: Increases in piece work rates, roughly equivalent to 7c an hour, have been won by 11,000 employes of 40 full-fashioned hosiery mills. Since this portion of the industry usually sets the pattern for the remainder, an additional 15,000 hosiery workers are expected to receive the same gains.

NEWSPAPER GUILD: Arbiter David A. Wolff has awarded the 260 CIO employes of the Detroit Free Press a 12% increase, retroactive to August 1, 1947. The Free Press did not carry the story.

FOOD, TOBACCO: Immediately upon walking out of the fields and sheds, 4,000 CIO asparagus workers in California heard the riot act from the lips of the county sheriff.

The act even prohibits union officials from talking to strikers. Most of the employes are migrants who move from one crop to another. The industry covers six San Joaquin and Sacramento Valley counties.

RETAIL, WHOLESALE: Over 500 employes of the Vim Radio and Sporting Goods Stores and Times Square Stores, New York City, have been on strike since April 23. Thirty-five stores and two warehouses are affected.

The walkout was precipitated by the companies' insistence on inserting two new wage categories in the contract as a precondition to an agreement—a $26 a week classification for stock clerks and a $28 category for sales clerks. These were not included in the contract which expired April 1.

LITHOGRAPHERS: Wage gains of $5 to $7 a week have been won by 350 CIO Lithographers from 12 Cincinnati firms. An additional $1 a week increase will be effective Oct. 1, and beginning July 1 each firm will contribute $1 a week per employe for a health, accident and hospitalization plan.

Oil Union Wins 17½c Increase

By RAY DAVIDSON

THE "no raise in 1948" policy of U. S. industrialists has been dented by CIO Oil Workers.

OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight last week announced Sinclair Oil Corp. had agreed to raise base rates for all employes in its producing, pipe line and refining operations 17½c an hour. About 9,000 workers will benefit, beginning July 1, expiration date of the present contract. The new agreement is for one year.

This represents the first major wage increase negotiated by the union this year, and is believed to be the largest wage increase in a national contract obtained by any union in 1948.

The union also won improvements in various fringe clauses. The new contract has been approved by the OWIU international policy board and now awaits ratification by OWIU's Sinclair membership.

Knight announced that OWIU now would press its negotiations with other oil companies for a wage hike. Virtually all contracts affecting oil workers are now open or will be opened within the next few weeks.

"We believe Sinclair's granting of this wage raise at a time when many industrial leaders are dogmatically refusing to recognize the needs of their employes represents real labor-management statesmanship," said Knight.

"We believe it will pave the way for peace in the oil industry this year."

National Phone Strike Looms

AS American Telephone & Telegraph Corp. negotiators walked out of government-arranged negotiations in Washington, the long lines telephone union, CIO, announced it has "but one choice—a nationwide strike."

The American Union of Telephone workers, affiliated with the CIO Telephone Organizing Committee, had been holding contract talks with the corporation since April 5. Its contract expired May 8.

Giving rise to union accusations that AT&T is "out to bust the union," the company last week flatly rejected Federal Mediation & Conciliation Director Cyrus Ching's proposal that the old contract be extended "for a reasonable period of time."

Although the union has agreed to every proposal of the mediation service, it said the corporation had "rejected all efforts" of the Service.

Missouri Democrats Name CIO Man Delegate

CIO in Missouri will be represented at the Democratic national convention for the first time in history.

James A. Davis, secretary-treasurer of the state CIO council, has been elected a delegate-at-large to the party convention in July. His election is an indication of growing acceptance of CIO in the "show-me" state.

Union-Liberal Groups Hit At Mundt-Nixon Bill

A solid line-up of labor and liberal organizations is fighting the Mundt-Nixon bill, termed by many as perhaps the greatest threat to civil rights to come before Congress in decades.

The bill (HR 5852) was up for debate in the House as The CIO News went to press. It is a product of the House Un-American Activities Committee, which has been issuing an almost daily "report" calculated to convince headline-readers that the Communists are just about ready to take over Uncle Sam.

Rep. Klein

The legislative battle in the House against the Mundt bill will be spearheaded by a group of New Dealers in Congress. Among them are Rep. John Blatnik (D., Minn.), Rep. Klein (D., N. Y.), the New York American Labor Party's two Congressmen—Marcantonio and Isacson—and others.

Rep. Thomas (R., N. J.), un-American committee chairman, who is ill, sent a message to the House urging support of the bill.

CIO jumped into the campaign against the bill with a warning to Congressmen that the bill "seriously threatens the existence of bona fide labor unions and... sweeps aside civil rights guaranteed to every American by the Constitution."

The bill, described by some of its sponsors as "tough," was prepared with the announcement intention of closely regulating Communist political organizations and "front" groups. But, it gives the Attorney General broad powers and excuses for labeling all types of liberal or progressive organizations as "Communist."

Organizations so described would be compelled to register, and their members—regardless of the type of organization—would face loss of many basic civil rights.

IN his letter to Congressmen, CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan said people would be "punished, restrained and regimented solely on the basis of political opinions rather than on the basis of overt acts of disloyalty."

A union, he said by way of example, "might be branded, in the heat engendered by the dispute, as having either political objectives or goals consonant with those of some foreign political organization."

An "irresponsible" Attorney-General could thus brand the union as subversive. His actions "could easily and quickly lead to crippling of the union's activities and to the blacklisting of its members."

THE United Steelworkers convention charged the bill "contains dangerous threats" to freedom of speech, press and assembly. The Amalgamated Clothing convention predicted it would lead to government control of "thought and ideas" and to the "totalitarian principle of guilt-by-association."

Similar stands were taken by the CIO Electrical, Fur & Leather, Transport and Public Workers unions; by the independent Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen; by the Natl. Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which said the bill is so loosely worded that the big Negro organization could easily be listed as "subversive."

At the White House, Pres. Truman said he's opposed to outlawing the Communist party, a goal contained in the Mundt-Nixon measure. He added that there are plenty of laws already on the books to protect the country from overthrow of the government.

UNDER the Mundt-Nixon bill, however, almost any liberal activity could "qualify" as subversive.

Enforced to meet the standards of a Rep. Thomas (R., N. J.) or a Rep. Rankin (D., Miss.), it could lead to blacklisting and unemployment for workers who happen to be members of organizations proscribed by the Attorney General; to intensified red-baiting of legitimate strikes; to pressure on workers to drop union membership; to branding as subversives the campaigns against the poll-tax or the Taft-Hartley bill or peacetime conscription — merely because an Attorney General might rule they're calculated to help overthrow the government.

Rep. Blatnik

UAW Set For Long Strike

THE CIO Auto Workers last week dug in for a long strike at Chrysler as the company's refusal to meet lowered demands forced the issue to the picket line.

UAW was off to a good start as 75,000 Chrysler workers in Michigan, Indiana and California left their benches to heed the strike call which they had authorized. Chrysler employes were so incensed by the company's adamant position that it was difficult to keep them on the job until the strike deadline arrived.

Picketing was orderly, despite Chrysler's apparent attempt to provoke trouble. To avert injury of pickets at the Dodge Forge plant in Detroit, the union called on the police to investigate the alleged provocative tactics of Rover Eads, Dodge Forge plant manager.

The union charged that "about every hour" Eads was driving his car at about 30 miles an hour in "obviously unnecessary trips" through the picket lines.

Recognizing the likelihood of a long strike, the UAW executive board called on each member through its locals to give $2 in June and $4 in July to the strike fund.

But the executive board did not stop there. It voted to deduct $20 weekly from the salaries of each of its members, with the international officers paying an additional $10 weekly. It also authorized the deduction of $10 to $15 from the weekly pay of each staff member and international representative.

The members of the UAW Chrysler staff had voted to give their salaries to the strike fund for the duration of the walkout. Although the executive board called on the Chrysler staff not to take this action, it is nonetheless expected that many of them will give their entire pay to the strike fund.

THESE steps were taken as Chrysler published what the union characterized as misleading ads in the nation's leading papers.

The union took two exceptions to the ad:

1. The statement that the company was offering an increase of 6c an hour when negotiations broke down.

The union declared that the company withdrew the 6c offer several weeks ago when U. S. Steel announced it would pay no wage increases and that it had never been advanced again.

On the eve of the strike, the UAW negotiators said that they had offered to settle for 17c. Chrysler, they asserted, had said that was the sum needed to restore the purchasing power of its employes to the June, 1946, level.

The union had asked an increase of 25 cents an hour, plus pensions, hospitalization, three weeks' vacation with pay, guaranteed weekly wage and elimination of wage inequities.

2. The company's assertion that wage increases "would only result in higher prices and higher living costs."

UAW said it had showed conclusively that Chrysler could give a 30c increase and still make 14½% on its investment, after taxes. It could also cut prices, the union said, and make 6 to 8% on its investment. (See adjoining table.)

The Case For Better Paychecks

STEEL

The Workers' Needs

The minimum budget required to maintain an average family with the necessities of life is $3520 annually, according to Dept. of Labor figures.

That would require an income of $1.76 an hour based on an average working year of 2000 hours, which is approximately the hours worked by employes in the industry last year.

The average hourly earnings in the steel industry are $1.52 an hour, which means a deficit of approximately 24c an hour for each hour worked.

The Industry's Profits

The steel industry can afford to give a real wage increase and at the same time cut prices substantially. In 1947 the profits of the steel industry exceeded $500 million a year after taxes, a record high and an increase in excess of 55% over 1946.

The United States Steel Corp. had profits last year of approximately $224 million before Federal taxes and $153 million after such taxes. This corporation's profits in the year 1947 increased $73 million over 1946.

AUTOS

The Workers' Needs

The family of the average Chrysler worker of four must live on an income $13 below the minimum weekly income set by the Bureau of Labor Statistics as the bare subsistence budget.

The average auto worker's earnings rose 12% between June 1946 and January 1948, but the cost of living went up 27%.

The Chrysler worker's family could afford less than 90% of the food, clothing and other necessities which the bread-winner's pay check could buy in June, 1946, when OPA was destroyed.

Profits of the Chrysler Corp. in 1947 were 50% higher than the average for all corporations in the auto industry.

Chrysler's Profits

Chrysler's profits in 1947 were 25.6% on its investment— the average for the industry was 17%. (Six to 8% is generally considered a good return.) Each Chrysler worker produces 68c in profit for the corporation each hour he worked.

Chrysler profits were so great in 1947 that it could have cut retail prices $145 on every car it produced last year and still have made 8% on its investment.

Chrysler's profits in 1947 prove that it can grant every Chrysler worker a 30c an hour wage increase and still make 14¼% on its investment, after taxes. It can cut price, grant the wage increase and still make a good 6% to 8% on investment.

ELECTRICAL

The Workers' Needs

The Electrical Workers made a survey on the cost of a food basket. It averaged $3.07 in 11 cities in January, 1945. The average cost now is $5.61, an 83% increase. Commodities priced included one pound each of white flour, white bread, round steak, hamburger, pork chops, bacon, butter and lard, a quart of milk and a dozen eggs.

The average annual wage in the electrical manufacturing industry is $600 short of the amount which the Bureau of Labor Statistics says is needed for a minimum adequate living standard for an average family.

The real weekly average wage of the average worker in the industry has fallen $13.03 since January 1945 even including wage increases.

The Industry's Profits

General Electric's profits after taxes were $95 million last year, compared with $56,451,000 in 1945 and $41,236,000 in 1939.

Westinghouse's estimated profits after taxes were $61,524,000 last year, compared to $30,377,000 in 1945 and $13,854,000 in 1939.

PACKING

The Workers' Needs

The U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics family budget shows that it takes more than 29c an hour than the Packinghouse Workers are being paid. (More than two-thirds of the packinghouse workers earn a rate of less than $1.10 an hour. The minimum rate in the industry is $1.02 an hour.)

A union survey of packinghouse workers' families at various packing centers showed that almost all of the workers had cashed in their saving bonds and a large proportion were going into debt to meet current needs.

The Industry's Profits

The profit figures of the Big Four before income taxes were: (The before tax profit is a much better measure of potential ability to pay higher wages than the after tax figure. This is because wages as a part of the cost of production constitute a charge on business which has precedence over income taxes.)

Scab Held In Picket's Slaying

A second CIO Packinghouse Worker has lost his life in the two-months struggle for a higher wage as a result of Armour Packing Company's "back-to-work" movements.

Ed Hucks was shot and instantly killed by an alleged strikebreaker last week while he was on picket duty at the Armour plant at East St. Louis, Ill.

Hucks' assailant fled into the plant, where police, with the aid of union members, arrested him. A scab, Oscar Perry, was identified as the assailant, and a coroner's jury held him for grand jury action in the slaying of Hucks.

Most newspapers ignored or made scant mention of the tragedy. As the CIO News went to press, many papers were carrying streamers on the alleged kidnapping of some strikebreakers from the Cudahy plant at Newport, Minn. The union denied responsibility for the disappearance of the strikebreakers.

Pres. Philip Murray announced last week that the Steelworkers' executive board had voted $60,000 to the union, the largest contribution ever made made by the steel union to a strike.

ARMING of scabs has been fairly general in the meat strike, union spokesman said, as has been the reckless crashing of picket lines by company trucks and automobiles.

An Armour striker was killed recently when a truck charged through the picket line.

A picket was run over in Chicago two weeks ago by an automobile driven by a company official. Similar incidents have occurred in Kansas City.

Suits to restrain the "Big Four" packers from violating contract provisions still in effect and from circulating threatening letters have been filed in the Federal District Court in Chicago.

The union also will sue the companies for damages for each of its members affected by the contract violations.

In a frantic effort to force the strikers back into the plants, the companies circulated letters threatening them with loss of seniority if they did not return.

In South St. Paul, a group of Congregational ministers and laymen issued a report declaring that "management (Armour) has not taken a sufficient interest in the social welfare of the workers or the community."

Dynamiting Spurs Organizing Drive

Dynamiting of two cars parked near the Mt. Pleasant Church, Fayetteville, N. C., while a CIO Woodworkers' organizational meeting was in progress, stimulated the drive in two ways:

1. The meeting continued with a crowd that almost filled the church.

2. The next day the Lumber River Mfg. Co. consented to an election May 21, which the CIO leaders in charge of the drive are confident of winning.

OVER AND OVER AGAIN

At the risk of resembling a cracked phonograph record which plays the same thing over and over again, we're going to discuss the deplorable prices-wages-profits situation.

The only new ingredient that has been added to the mess lately is the determination of big industries not to provide their employes with badly needed pay increases.

This determination, if you believe what you read in the ads, stemmed from industry's sudden worry about inflation, which has been worrying the nation's workers for a long, long time.

And it isn't a bit surprising that industry's anxiety over the situation should have broken into full bloom at almost the very moment the CIO's three largest unions started negotiating for pay hikes.

It's enough to make a gullible unionist super-cynical!

Let's go back to the real beginning of the real inflationary period and see what has happened.

Let's see why Joe Doaks and all the little Doakses are having difficulty making ends meet—and why they aren't happy and contented.

STARTED WITH DEATH OF OPA With NAM carrying the ball, calling the signals and designing the strategy, Congress unsheathed its little inflation axe and chopped up the Office of Price Administration. "Things will be OK now," the nation was assured.

NAM, however, failed to point out that things would be OK for a selected few but not for the many.

Every person who saw his dollar become smaller and smaller as prices climbed higher and higher knows what happened next.

It wasn't good.

Labor unions pointed out time and again that there was no justification for the prices industry was charging or for the profits it was making.

Keep this up and something's going to smash, the unions said. If industry soaks up too much of the consumer purchasing power there will be a bust that will make the last depression look like somthing good.

Prices and profits went right on up—and up—and up.

Finally the unions had to admit they had failed in their efforts to obtain action which would hold profits and prices in line. Then they announced it would be necessary to ask for substantial wage increases.

ANOTHER SQUEEZE The steel industry is now carrying the ball and the electric and auto industries are helping run interference in another play designed to put the pinch on the nation's workers. The packing industry is in there bucking the line, too.

The play is designed to convince the public that the forces of inflation are being turned back and that this cannot be accomplished if workers are given pay hikes that they need badly.

It's a fake play in many respects.

The price reductions that have been announced, particularly by steel, will make no real or immediate inroads on the cost of living.

And, nobody—be he unionist or not—can eat steel products, electrical equipment and automobiles.

We'll say again, as we've said many times before, we'd be mighty happy over some real price reductions.

Workers, however, must have pay increases if there is no substantial and immediate reduction in the overall cost of living.

Radical Doctrine: Free Enterprise

You've Often Heard It Mentioned By Business But You've Seldom Seen It Work

By ALLAN L. SWIM

I may be damned as a dangerous radical for saying this, but I'd like for this nation of ours to try out free enterprise—free, competitive enterprise, that is.

You'd have to fight a bitter battle with Big Business to bring this about, but it would be a worthwhile skirmish.

And there would have to be a lot of stringent legislation and an almost entirely new concept of doing business.

Advocates of such a plan would, no doubt, be condemned for preaching a new and dangerous doctrine.

OUR approach to such a program would be, first, to admit frankly that we don't have a free, competitive enterprise system in this country.

And I don't care what you've been reading in the NAM and business-sponsored ads!

Oh, sure, a lot of industrial and business big shots have given a lot of fine-sounding lip-service to the idea, but few of them meant what they said.

Either that is so or they have forgotten or never knew the meaning of the phrase "free, competitive enterprise."

Maybe some of them got it confused with "freedom to exploit."

And I'm not talking in riddles.

LOOK what happened just recently when the U. S. Supreme Court illegalized the cement industry's price-fixing scheme that is known by the fancy term "multiple basing point system."

Irving S. Olds, chairman of U. S. Steel, threatened to blow a gasket because the decision endangered the price fixing mechanism used for years by the steel industry.

You don't have price-fixing, you know, when you have free competitive enterprise. No, sir, you don't. You can't have price fixing and free competition at the same time.

Just think what might happen to the cost of living if steel and other basic commodities were sold on a competitive basis.

Sounds like a revolutionary idea, doesn't it?

A FREE, competitive enterprise system would play the dickens with the nation's corporate set-up and there probably would be serious repercussions.

Monopolies and semi-monopolies would have to be broken up. They prevent free competition.

Why, it might even be necessary to change our patent laws, thus preventing control of certain industries through ownership of rights to production machinery.

This might make it impossible for some 250 big corporations to control two-thirds of the nation's manufacturing facilities.

It could even mean the end of the intricate interlocking directorate system, which permits a few to exercise great economic control over the many.

Yes, it's a radical idea!

THE more I think about it the more convinced I become that a real, free, competitive enterprise system would be a good thing.

It might even break up corporate domination of state legislatures and city councils, and radically change the complexion of Congress.

I haven't figured out yet exactly how trade unions would operate under such a system, but obviously their role wouldn't be more difficult than it is now.

They wouldn't have to battle with monopolistic giants and "loaded" legislative bodies. Their members would pay less for food, clothing and the other necessities.

Don't get me wrong. I'm not plugging free, competitive enterprise as the perfect economic system.

I'm just saying it would be a darn sight better than the system we're operating under at present!

Doctor Writes Book Lauding Group Health Plan

LET'S not be smug about our health record in America when every year 70 million sick people lose a billion days from work.

That is what Dr. Benjamin Miller says in his short, lively book, "You and Your Doctor." He tells the layman what must be done to help the doctor help him.

Just published by Whittlesey House, New York, "You and Your Doctor" is a highly readable volume. Analyzing the state of medical care in the world's richest land, it is of special interest to organized labor and other groups considering sponsorship of group health plans.

Miller starts off by presenting the problem of the harrassed Dr. Stockton, the typical general practitioner in a medium-sized city. During his working day he is called upon to do all sorts of medical work he knows he is not fully qualified to handle.

At the same time his patients rely on him almost as a modern household god. They do not consider how many years since he took his training, how little time his busy schedule leaves him for reading medical literature, how far behind 20th century specialization has left him.

The book then shows how both doctor and patients benefit by group organization of medical practice. A so-called pilot physician, a general practitioner retrained for this job, makes original contact with the patients, diagnoses ailments and confers with specialists. The latter then take over treatment. Group medicine, Miller shows, gives greater service return per dollar cost.

Miller shows how the organization of group practice gives doctors time to do research in their special fields. It means better training for the younger men who join the team.

The book frankly plugs for federal government assistance to medicine. It proposes a medical education program (without discrimination) and funds for research. A national disaster service, centrally organized, could cut the death toll in a future Texas City explosion, Ohio River flood or unexpected train crash.

It also makes out a simple, sensible case for universal post-mortem examination. Of particular interest where occupational illness is suspected but not proved, the routine post-mortem would prevent many a medical secret from being buried with the victim of a preventable malady.

Union members thinking about their health problems can invest a wise few hours looking over "You and Your Doctor."

Labor Institute Set

A Co-op Labor Institute will be held at the University of Wisconsin, Aug. 8-12. The CIO Auto Workers and other unions are participating.

The Answer Was On The Tip Of His Tongue

JOHN is one of those rare guys you meet only once or twice in an average lifetime.

He has been hailed by those who know him as a potent fighter for freedom and democracy.

He has been condemned by those who do not know him as a peddler of dangerous foreign ideologies.

The manner in which he comports himself when speaking from the pulpit—as he often does—leads many to think he's a minister.

When walking the picket line—as he often does—he behaves like a veteran unionist.

Occasionally, after he has spoken to a college group, a professor will approach him and call him "Doctor."

ONE of John's close friends once remarked of him, "He's the only guy I know in the labor movement who takes God along with him every place he goes—and I mean every place."

Another recalled when John and Eugene B. Grace, the steel tycoon, were serving as elders of a Presbyterian church at Bethlehem, Pa., and there was a disagreement over church policy. The friend says John solemnly asked:

"Does this church belong to Jesus Christ or Eugene Grace?"

He usually asks pointed questions like that—and his answers usually are as sharp as his questions. But he is a kindly man.

JOHN neither smokes nor drinks, but he doesn't look out of place among workers when they gather in smoke-filled rooms to toss off a few beers and discuss union problems.

He looks like a farmer when he climbs behind the wheel of his Jeep-tractor and plows a furrow across his hilly land in Georgia.

He acts like a mischevious little boy when he tells how he outsmarted some mill manager who attempted to beat the union by exploiting race and religious prejudice.

JOHN has become something of a legendary figure though he's still a young man. Many of the fantastic stories about him are true—but many are exaggerated.

They are exaggerated in John's favor by his friends—in his disfavor by those who have clashed with him.

Ask him what he does and he'll likely reply, "Oh, I work for the Steelworkers, trying to sell the idea that labor needs the church as much as the church needs labor."

Press him and he'll say that he's now community relations director of the CIO Organizing Committee, that he was the first president of the Steel local at Bethlehem, that he's been to Europe and all over America, that he is not a minister.

JOHN is probably at his best when talking with a religious group about organized labor in general and the CIO in particular.

One of his best stories concerns just such a meeting. John was really warming up on his favorite subject—the CIO. Then the question and answer period came.

A rather belligerent woman shot this one at him: "If the CIO is as good as you say it is, why do you spend so much money and hire so many organizers just to try to sell the organization to the workers?"

"My dear lady," he replied, "I believe I can answer that by pointing out that we spend a lot of money and hire a lot of people to carry the message of Christianity to the people—and it's a good message.

"Christianity was founded some 2000 years ago. The CIO wasn't founded until 1935."

That was the last question the woman asked John Ramsay, "who takes God along with him every place he goes." A. L. S.

Regional Parley Launches CSC Organization in New England

MORE than 250 delegates attended the first New England CIO regional conference on Community Services recently at Boston.

It was held under the joint auspices of the National CIO Community Services Committee and the State Councils of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut.

The program served as the kickoff for a campaign to establish Community Services Committees in local unions and councils throughout the New England area, and provided New England CIO members with their first opportunity to hear a full exposition of the CIO-CSC program.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, main speaker at a dinner meeting, said that the CIO was laying new stress on the need for improving the health and welfare services available to the union members, both in collective bargaining and in the community services field.

"Large corporations," he said, "have a distinct social responsibility and they should begin to sense their social obligations. I don't believe a company is a good company or that it has the welfare of its employes at heart unless it is prepared to join in agreements for good wholesome forms of social insurance and pensions."

He also told delegates that the CIO recognized the need for establishment of a health and welfare department of cabinet rank in the Federal government, and urged the New England CIO members to press the fight.

CSC Chairman Irving Abramson called for a militant fight to eliminate slums, substandard housing, juvenile delinquency and other forms of social unrest in the community, and urged delegates to fight for increased CIO representation on the boards of public and private health and welfare agencies.

CSC Director Leo Perlis discussed ways and means of putting the CIO's program into effect at the local level. He stressed the work of CIO in organizing solicitation of its membership in fund-raising drives for the support of private health and welfare agencies.

CIO members, he said, should regard the help they get from such community agencies, not as "handouts" but as assistance to which they are entitled.

OTHER speakers included John C. Pierce of the CIO-CSC; George L-P Weaver, director of the CIO Committee against discrimination; Julius F. Rothman, CIO-CSC staff, and Everett F. Thatcher, CIO-CSC representative on the staff of the Community Chest of Springfield, Mass.

Three dinner speakers presented a "cross-section" of CIO relations with community agencies. They were:

Pres. Herman Greenberg, Western Massachusetts CIO Council; Edward Orzelle, USA-CIO union counsellor in Chester, Pa., and George Swartz, Council of Social Agencies, Bridgeport, Conn.

Ex-NLRB Attorney Cites Flaws In T-H Act

"One of the basic defects of the Taft-Hartley Act is that it was enacted without a full inquiry into the many complex facts of labor disputes. Hearings on the Act were not so much aimed at getting facts as at eliciting opinions," says Gerhard P. Van Arkel, general counsel for the Natl. Labor Relations Board in 1946-47.

Van Arkel's analysis of the Taft-Hartley Act has just been issued as one of the series of Social Action 15c pamphlets published by the Council for Social Action of the Congregational Christian Churches, 289 Fourth Ave., New York 10, N. Y.

Learn To Travel On a (G) String

These are the bare facts:

Local 302 of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers at Dallas, Tex., planned a benefit dance to raise expenses for its convention delegate. A vacant night club was rented, tickets printed, invitations mailed.

Then, into town a strip-tease troupe, featuring a parrot which assisted the maidens in disrobing. The troupe spotted the vacant nightery and rented it.

The ACWA entertainment committee happened by, dropped in and spotted the discarded garments littering the dance floor. They didn't even bother to look for labels before squawking louder than the parrot.

One of the strippers put on a nice smile and a smock and sat down to negotiate with the irate ACWA committee. Would $150 break the night's lease? It would!

Somewhere on her person, the stripper found $150 and handed it over in exchange for the ACWA lease.

And then the ACWA Local 302 delegate claimed she would be the first ACWA member in history to go to the convention on a G-string.

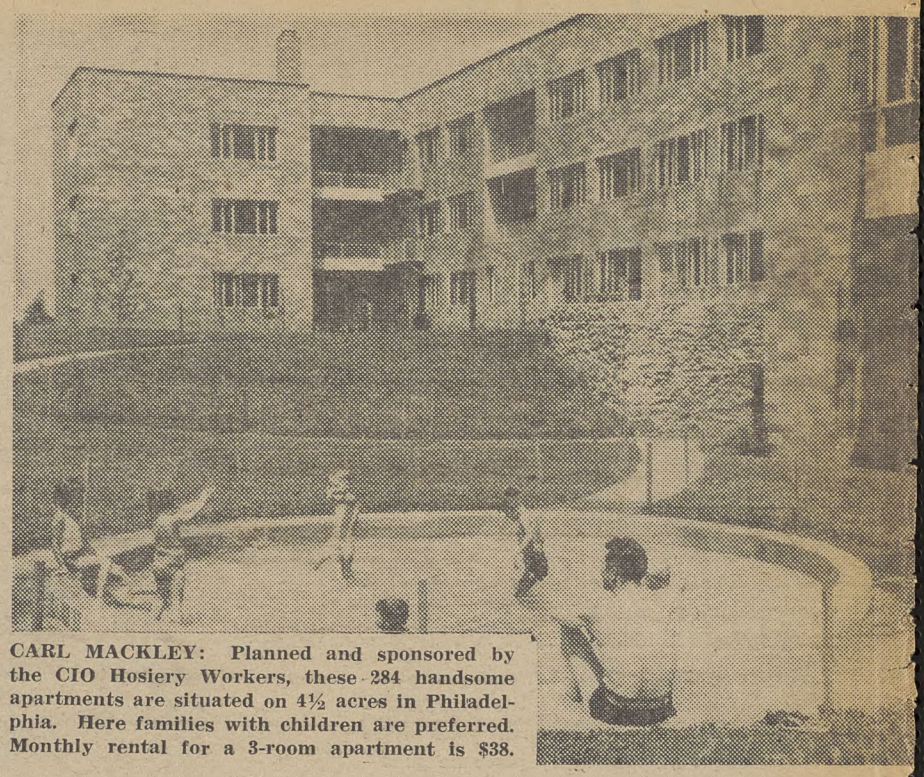
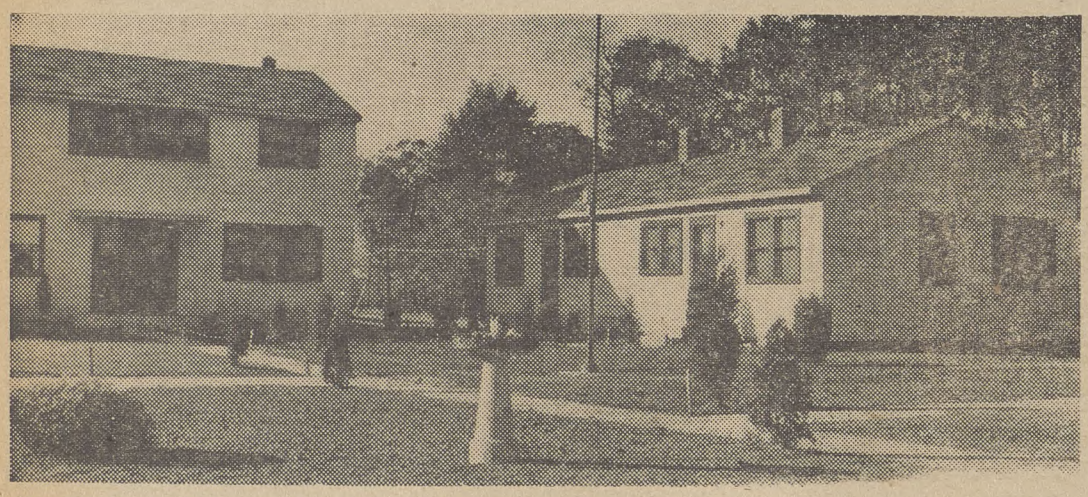
AMALGAMATED: Pioneer in union cooperative housing in this country, the Amalgamated Housing project in the Bronx, N. Y. has come of age. It's 21 years old this year, is busy increasing its capacity from 700 families to 1450. Rents average $11 a room, about 20% less than that for comparable apartments. In addition the union has a project in Manhattan's East Side, housing 235 families and is now building Hillman Houses to accommodate 800 families. Real estate bigwigs predicted the Bronx project would become a slum, but since its beginning, it hasn't had a single juvenile delinquency case.



CARL MACKLEY: Planned and sponsored by the CIO Hosiery Workers, these 284 handsome apartments are situated on 4½ acres in Philadelphia. Here families with children are preferred. Monthly rental for a 3-room apartment is $38.



AUDUBON: Built by the Federal Public Housing Authority at a cost of $2,321,000, this project has 500 homes similar to the one above, houses mostly CIO Shipyard Workers, employes of the New York Shipyards, and a smaller number of CIO Electrical workers, RCA employes at Camden, N. J. Tenants are now negotiating to buy development from government. Audubon was one of eight mutual ownership projects built by Government for war workers. Plans are to sell developments to tenants, who are members of non-profit Corporations.

AUDUBON VILLAGE: It can happen here, and demonstrating it are Mr. and Mrs. William Brown, whose triplets were born shortly after they moved into the housing development. Populated mostly by CIO Shipbuilding Workers, project is government-built.

By GLORIA CAPLAN

"OH, give me a home, where——"

Well, maybe not "where the buffalo roam," but if you're one of several million Americans, you're looking for a home where the rain won't come cascading down the living room walls, where you don't have to brave the elements to reach the bathroom, and — most important — where your kids can grow up in a safe wholesome environment.

And, if you're an average worker, "coining" about $50 a week, chances are you're having no luck. Private builders have been building, they'll tell you. They completed 837,000 units last year. But unless you're able to shell out about $10,000-and-up for a home, they're not for you.

Four years of war played havoc with the nation's housing. (This just aggravated a shortage that had been accumulating since 1926.) The war meant a cessation of home construction—except for emergency housing in suddenly over-populated defense areas. It meant a sharp increase in the marriage rate, accompanied by a sharp birth rate rise. Veterans came home; they wanted their own place; their own family. What did they get? A mother-in-law.

Some Congressmen, apparently fed up with the plague of mother-in-law jokes, declared that what this country needs is not a good five-cent cigar—but a good supply of reasonably-priced homes. And since private industry had demonstrated its inability to fill the gaps, it was clearly time the government took a hand in matters.

THAT was three years ago when Sen. Robert Wagner (D. N. Y.) wrote a housing bill. The following year, Sens. Taft and Ellender joined Wagner in improving the instrument. It had the overwhelming support of labor, veterans, housewives, civic groups, church groups—everybody, practically, except the real estate lobby. The lobby has been successful in keeping the TEW bill buried for two years.

Recently it lost its battle in the Senate, which finally passed the measure as modernized by a set of amendments submitted by Sen. Ralph Flanders (R. Vt.). And now it is waging a last-ditch battle in the House Banking & Currency Committee, where Chairman Jesse P. Wolcott (R., Mich.) is holding on to the bill for dear life.

But the Congressman knows he can't stall forever, for the majority of his committee is against him. And once the bill escapes his committee, it is assured of passage in the House.

Thus the chances for enactment of this very thorough attack on a gigantic problem look good. It could mean the construction of 1½ million homes a year for the next 10 years. It makes use of every possible means of stimulating construction—from 90% loans to non-profit cooperatives and speculative builders to public housing for low-income groups.

It provides for research in new building methods, incentive for prefabricated housing, special consideration for veterans, and aids to cities for slum clearance.

But the sections with which we are now concerned are those which union members, acting together, can take advantage of. These are:

1. Provision for government loans of 90% of the cost to non-profit housing cooperatives at not over 4% interest. Loans may be repaid over a period of 40 years.

2. Veterans co-ops can receive 95% loans.

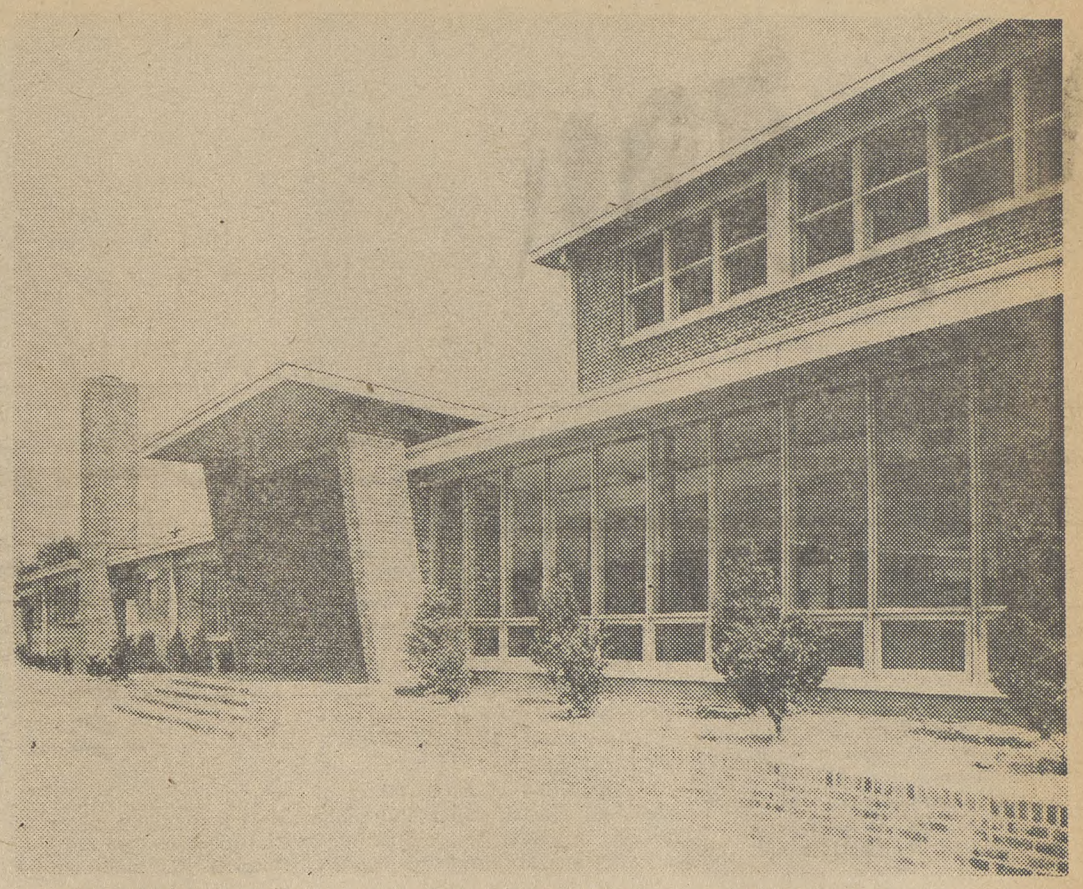
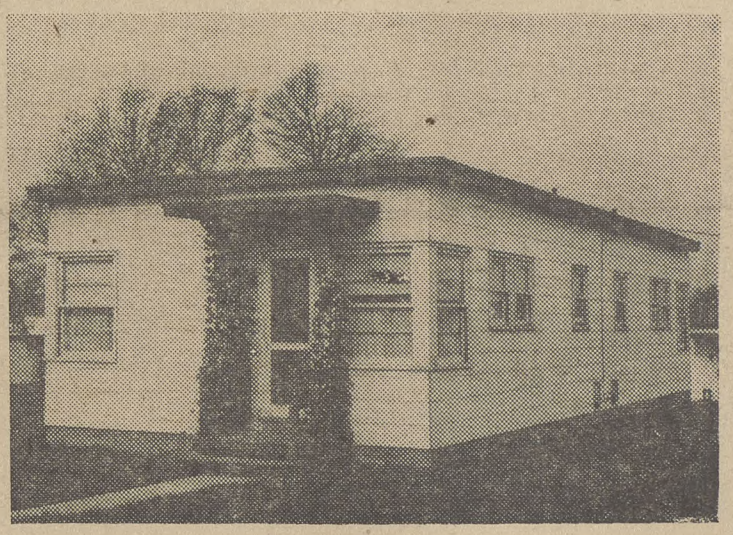
WALNUT GROVE: One of 8 government-built mutual ownership projects, this development near South Bend, Ind., houses 250 families, mostly CIO Auto Workers at Bendix and the Studebaker plants. Transfer of title to tenants' Mutual Housing Corp. will be completed soon.



WINFIELD PARK: Typical of most housing projects, this community building is the center of development's cultural and social life. CIO Shipbuilders of Kearny, N. J. induced government to build project, which is one of eight mutual housing projects built during war. Community center houses large gym, also used as meeting hall, 3 club rooms, a library, fully-equipped kitchen, maintenance shops, garage and managament offices.



WINFIELD PARK: Some 3000 residents live in houses similar to this one. Recently the New Jersey legislature declared the development a separate township, which necessitated tenants' having to cope with such headaches as maintenance of schools, roads, fire, police, and health depts. Tenants are selected on a basis of veteran status, need for housing, likelihood of family to contribute to project's success. Turnover averages only two families a month. All agree it's a happy and wholesome place to live and raise kids. What more could a group of people want? Not much.

GREENMONT VILLAGE: Another typical scene in housing projects is the coop store, through which tenants make great savings. A government-built mutual ownership project at Dayton, O., Greenmont was bought by tenants' corporation last year. Most tenants are CIO Electrical Workers, a smaller number CIO Auto and Rubber Workers.

The Amalgamated's credit union took up the challenge, formed a housing corporation, obtained loans from two Amalgamated banks and smaller loans from other sources.

The Amalgamated Cooperative Housing project in the Bronx, N. Y., was the initial result. Today it houses 700 families, is now being expanded to house a total of 1450 families.

In 1930, spurred on by the success of the first endeavor, the union began its second great project on the Manhattan East Side. It now houses 235 families.

Still another project is underway today—Hillman Houses, situated near the second group of buildings. On completion it will house 800 families.

Told briefly, it sounds easy. But as pioneers, the cooperators had a rough time of it.

Big realtors warned that the union was only transferring the slums from the East Side to a lovely high-rent section of the Bronx. "They know better now," say the Amalgamated cooperators of today.

And then the depression hit. Workers were hard-pressed to pay rentals, and the corporation was hard-pressed to keep its head above water.

But you can't keep a hardy, determined bunch of cooperators down — and it was the spirit of cooperation, strongly imbedded in each that insured the continued healthy existence of the little community.

So devoted are the tenants to their cooperative that 70% of the original cooperators still live there.

In 20 years there has not been a single case of juvenile delinquency at the project.

And no wonder! Take a look at the way the project caters to its youth:

It has a nursery, a playground, a cultural center, a library and reading room, a summer camp, classes in art, drama, music, carpentry, radio and electrical shops. At one time it owned its own school bus.

In addition, the project has its own cooperative milk service, cooperative stores and laundry and a tea room. At one time the corporation bought a 300-acre farm outside New York on which it produced its own poultry, eggs and vegetables, but war-time complications forced the corporation to sell it.

At one time, too, the project owned its own electrical power generator, which permitted a tremendous saving — savings which were then thrown into providing other services.

At every turn tenants enjoy savings which grow out of cooperative enterprise. And the greatest of these, of course, is on rent. The average rental is $11 a room. The management estimates this is 20% less than rents in similar privately-owned apartment houses.

And not the least of the project's contributions to the community is its daily lesson in democracy. For each tenant is a member of the corporation, and each has a say in the policy-making.

STONEWALL HEIGHTS

Like most housing projects the Textile Workers' housing cooperative at Front Royal, Va., began with a Housing Committee.

Nestled deep in the Blue Ridge Mountains is the little town of Front Royal. Population in 1943 was 9,000. Chief industry: American Viscose. A quiet little textile town until war necessitated the plant's doubling the number of its employes.

Up came—you guessed it—the housing problem. Through the efforts of the TWUA local, the government erected several hundred temporary units. At that time the average wage at the

ACW Moves Forward On Broad Front

By ALLAN L. SWIM

SOME of the darndest things happen at those Amalgamated Clothing Workers conventions.

Take what happened last week at Atlantic City as an example.

Some 1500 delegates from 38 states, Canada and the District of Columbia met at ACW's 16th biennial convention.

Speakers condemned those things which CIO members dislike—the Taft-Hartley Act, the high cost of living, the poll tax, the increasing use of the injunction.

They called for a return to the policies which Franklin Roosevelt advocated, asked for broadening of civil rights, urged greater participation by workers in political campaigns.

They talked about banks, insurance companies, college scholarships and housing projects.

And they were talking about Amalgamated's own two banks, which have assets of 80 millions; Amalgamated's own insurance companies, its co-operative low-rent housing enterprises and the Sidney Hillman educational foundation.

Furthermore, a large number of employers were honored guests at convention social functions.

Foreign policies of both the U. S. and Russia were sharply

Perverted Words

"The NAM has perverted the words 'free enterprise' to the same extent that the communists have perverted the word 'democracy,'" Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers told the convention.

"Monopoly is now more rampant and exerts a greater influence in this country than it ever has before."

JACOB S. POTOFSKY

criticized by ACW Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, who voiced strong support of the CIO's political action program and equally strong condemnation of the third party movement.

He attacked U. S. handling of the Palestine situation and other actions in which "narrow national or even private interests conflict with world justice and peace."

Russia, he said, "must bear a large part of the guilt, along with other great powers" for the "present state of hysteria and war-scare that has engulfed so much of the world:

"No totalitarian force, from the right or left, can stand up against democracy if we cultivate democracy both at home and abroad and let the world see from our acts that we believe in it. Let us make the European Recovery Program, which we support, a powerful force for democracy and the rehabilitation of devastated Europe."

Potofsky denounced Congress for its passage of the Taft-Hartley Act, lifting of price control, passage of an "inequitable" income tax reduction measure and for its failure to provide adequate housing, medical care and educational facilities—and for failure to raise the minimum wage.

He paid high tribute to the late Sidney Hillman, who had presided at all ACW conventions until the one this year, who had directed PAC and had made an enviable record as labor leader and fighter for the cause of democracy.

PHILIP MURRAY said the CIO "has no more use for the swashbuckling monopolist — that greedy, selfish pirate of American business—than it has for the selfish, greedy forms of either fascist or Communist dictatorships."

He charged the Communists played a major role in creation of the third party and that the new party "can make no substantial or constructive contribution toward the well-being of either the American people or the American labor movement.

"They are credited with a statement to the effect, 'Well, what we will do is to elect a reactionary Congress in November, give the U. S. four years of ultra, ultra reactionary government, and then the people will get sick of it and they will vote a liberal government into power four years from now.'

"Isn't that some reasoning?

"You know that if we elect an extremely reactionary government next November, the American labor movement will be fighting with its very back to the wall to preserve itself during the next four years and it is doubtful that many organiations will be able to survive an ordeal of that description."

Referring to groups within CIO which fought ERP and are now supporting the third party, Murray said that "it is my firm conviction that there should be no room for division within the framework of the CIO affecting the administration of a policy that a national convention and a CIO Executive Board have passed upon."

CARRIES ON: Jack Kroll, PAC director, discussed his work with Mrs. Sidney Hillman, whose late husband was first head of the CIO's political organization. The Amalgamated convention voted firm support of PAC, condemned the third party.

"MEN and not things are the goal of social living," said Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of New York as he opened the convention.

Rabbi Stephen S. Wise of New York said, "Long after you who are young and I who am old have passed, a truer, nobler, juster American democracy will cherish and bless the memory of a great American, a great leader, a glorious industrial statesman—Sidney Hillman."

375,000 Strong

The Amalgamated, founded in 1914, now has a membership of 375,000, an all-time high.

Membership has increased 25,000 during the past two years.

Acting Secretary of Labor David A. Morse said that "there can be no democracy without a virile, functioning, free trade union movement. If this goes, America will have plotted a new and dangerous course from which there can be no easy return."

Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas of California said that "with all its faults, the Democratic Party is still the party of the people. What is wrong with it—and there is a lot wrong at the moment—can only be made right by votes."

Mayor William O'Dwyer of New York declared that "the harm done by the 80th Congress is not finished yet. No matter who is president, we've got to have a liberal Congress."

Senator Claude Pepper (D., Fla.) urged that labor be given a full voice in determining the policies and carrying out the administration of ERP.

FROM DIXIELAND: Biggest surprise of convention was demonstration planned by Vice Pres. Gladys Dickason and staged by Southern delegates representing 30,000 members. Convention voiced strong support of CIO's Southern drive and ACW organizing work.

'Be It Resolved . . .'

Among resolutions adopted by ACW were ones which—

Called on nations of the world to "exhaust every resource to secure peace" by moving away from "stand-pat positions" if necessary and engaging in negotiation and conciliation.

Condemned the Taft-Hartley Act and the increasing use of anti-labor injunctions.

Supported the Report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights, condemned the House Un-American Activities Committee, the Mundt Bill and the "lack of safeguards" in Executive Order 9835 ("loyalty order") and called for legislation outlawing the poll-tax, making lynching a federal offense and establishing a permanent FEPC.

Denounced the "concerted drive of reactionaries" to cripple the Dept. of Labor.

Approved extension of reciprocal trade agreements.

Approved CIO participation in the World Federation of Trade Unions.

Opposed compulsory military training.

Steelworkers Plan Affidavit Legal Test

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

"In 1936 — June 17 — eight men meeting in a small room of the Columbia Bank Bldg. on the corner of 8th and Wood sts. in the city of Pittsburgh adopted a resolution which in substance provided for the organization of this industry."—Philip Murray.

IN 1948 — last week — more than 3000 men and women, meeting in a large auditorium on Huntington ave. in the city of Boston, heard CIO Steelworkers' Pres. Murray announce that the union which was born in 1936 has now grown to the "largest single labor organization in the U. S. A."

The convention itself was perhaps the largest gathering of any labor organization this country has ever seen. The delegates filled every seat in the huge Mechanics Bldg. and overflowed into balconies. The town was so crowded that some delegates had to stay in Providence, 50 minutes away by train.

THE convention—it was the fourth biennial constitutional meeting—had a crowded five days, but these were the highlights:

● Decided to pick June 17—Philip Murray Day—as the jumping off place for a campaign to sign up every one of the union's 928,670 members for a $1 conrtibution to PAC.

● Denounced U. S. Steel and other companies for refusing to grant a wage increase in the recent reopenings, but cheered Murray's declaration that "it is our union's purpose to maintain inviolate our contractual commitments and that we will not strike during the term of the contract."

● Debated at length, but decided, on a suggestion from Murray, to refer to the executive board for decision "any future steps which may be required in order to preserve the integrity of our union with reference to the Taft-Hartley Law."

● Heard Arthur Goldberg, union counsel and also attorney for the CIO, say that the organization might file financial statements with the Government so that it could make a clear-cut legal test of the affidavit issue.

● Referred to the board the question of indorsing Presidential candidates.

● Barred communists from holding any office in the union, including delegates and committeemen. This passed with few "noes."

● Increased the officers' terms to four years (elections are held late in the year by referendum; nominations are made by stated numbers of locals). There was more opposition here.

● Accepted, on a standing vote of 1500 to 800, a recommendation that convention delegate requirements be reduced from one for every 100 members to one for every 500. This caused the heaviest opposition of any vote in the convention.

"In the fall of 1936 the organization went through its initial organizing work. In 1937, bitter strikes—Republic Steel, Youngstown, Bethlehem."

The convention last week found its officers' report interesting reading. The union now has 2171 active locals, has increased its contracts to 1957—a rise of 345 since Apr. 1, 1946. Ninety per cent of contracts have dues checkoff provisions, 214 contain clauses covering health, welfare or insurance policies and seven have guaranteed annual wages.

Canada came in for special mention. Members there have increased 50% over May, 1946. Recently, a local was chartered in the iron ore mines of Wabana, Newfoundland.

Also interesting was the fact that the union's paper, Steel Labor, had a circulation of 1,041,000 in April, 1948.

"Twenty-one members of the organization in the course of the 1937 strikes were brutally murdered — murdered by policemen and murdered by agents of these mighty corporations. But those brave souls did not die in vain, they died that you and I might live."

There was long and bitter discussion last week over the wage issue. Most of the discussion was aimed against the corporations. Perhaps it could best be summed up by this quotation from the officers' report:

"The Steelworkers have been keenly aware of the cost to them and to the nation of continuing inflation. For that reason your leaders last year negotiated a two-year contract and you approved that policy. We hoped by this gesture to stabilize wages and other costs and so to halt inflation, insofar as steel price increases contribute to that inflawould try to hold price lines. You know only too well what has happened.

VOTE GETTERS: Mayor Hubert Humphrey, of Minneapolis, who made a stirring address to the Steelworkers, shakes hands with Pres. Philip Murray.

"Your union has been blamed for contributing to inflation. No one who knows the facts of our bargaining during the last two years could, with any honesty, make such an assertion. The union cannot even share in the blame for steel price increases. The Steel Industry alone fixes the prices of steel. "The industry does not bargain with the union in terms of a direct relationship between wages and the prices of its product. It maintains that prices are 'management's prerogative.' The sole initiative for fixing steel prices lies with the industry and, therefore, the major responsibility for the inflation which follows is the industry's."

Murray and Delegate Nick Migas, Indiana Harbor, Ind., engaged in a debate over this issue. Migas had distributed a signed handbill, in which he criticized the leadership in the wage negotiations and charged that officers had given orders "to go easy on beefs in the mills."

Murray declared: "He lies from the pit of his stomach and from his tongue."

He invited Migas to reply. Migas said he had meant nothing personal. Several delegates attempted to interrupt him, but Murray rapped for order. After Migas finished, a motion was made to unseat him, but Murray ruled it out. Later, according to police, Migas was knocked into a gutter in front of the building.

"Hundreds of our people were incarcerated in prisons throughout the nation in 1937 and hundreds were evicted from their homes and subjected to almost every manner of brutality at the hands of local governments and private corporate interests."

The Taft-Hartley affidavits issue came to the floor because of a Natl. Labor Relations Board ruling in the Inland Steel pension case. The NLRB had ruled that Inland should negotiate with the union on the matter of pensions, but gave the Steelworkers 30 days in which to file affidavits and financial statements.

Several delegates urged that the union reverse its policy and sign now. Murray, in an hour's discussion, defined the perils and pitfalls both of signing and not signing. He said he was well aware of the anxiety of some delegates and was well aware of the risks in the course he was advising. However, he assured them, "we are not going to endanger the union's integrity or endanger the union's perpetuity."

Murray assailed Congress and business for uniting to pass the Taft-Hartley Law and in particular the affidavit requirements, which, he said, have caused almost irreparable damage to some unions.

"But, there was a determination amongst the people that come what may they were going to organize."

There were enough references to PAC to show that Steel is in there to stay in political action. There was the plan for Philip Murray Day; there was Murray's statement that PAC would remain a permanent fixture in the American scene; there was a resolution referring the question of Presidential indorsements to the board; there was a repudiation by resolution of the third party movement in 1948 (with a few scattered opposition votes).

Additional key issues considered in resolutions:

Protection of democracy: This was a general attack on the many present denials of civil liberties; in particular, the Mundt-Nixon bill was roundly denounced. This was passed on a rising vote with no opposition.

Foreign policy: A strong stand was taken in favor of the Marshall Plan.

Other resolutions adopted covered such matters as the international officers; housing and rent control, the Mine Workers' injunction case; the UN Appeal for Children; Palestine; Walter Reuther (CIO Auto Workers' president, still in a hospital recovering from an attempted assassination, sent a message to the convention, which won loud cheers): poll tax; Americanism; state labor laws; the Fair Labor Standards Act; Social Security, social insurance and pensions; safety in the steel industry; peacetime military conscription (the board was authorized to revise its opposition to conscription if the situation changes); veterans; cost of living; support for strikes; education; anti-labor injunctions; organizing.

Murray revealed that U. S. Steel had made a counter-offer on the union's proposal for a health, welfare and pension arrangement. The firm's offer, which falls far below the union's request, includes:

Life insurance equal to one year's earnings and a paid-up $1000 policy on retirement at age 65; hospitalization benefits of $6 a day; sick benefits of $21 a week; surgical benefits up to $175.

Cost of the U. S. Steel plan would be shared by the company and union, but it would be administered solely by the company.

"And you did organize!"

Speakers at the convention included:

Mayor Hubert Humphrey, Minneapolis: "The sooner the labor movement gets itself scot-clean of this raggety, taggety outfit (the Communists) the better off the labor movement will be." Almost every delegate present sprang to his or her feet cheering this remark.

Humphrey, who expects to be the Democratic candidate this fall against Taft-Hartleyite Sen. Joseph H. Ball (R. Minn.), lashed out at Ball as "ghost writer" for Taft and Hartley.

He also warmly defended the striking CIO Packinghouse Workers.

He declared he wants neither the reactionary gutter to the right of the road nor Communist gutter to the left, but would walk down the broad highway of life in the center with the people.

He lauded the work of Murray and other CIO and Steelworkers' leaders for the people of Minnesota and the rest of the country.

Archbishop Richard J. Cushing, Boston: "Thank God for the power that organized labor has acquired. Use that power to preserve and to push forward every legitimate right. But demonstrate once, for all and forever that organized labor is always the first to give the public a break; that the cause of labor is truly the cause of the people. You and I know that to be true. Let us never give an enemy the chance to represent it as false!"

Dir. Ewan Clague, Bur. of Labor Statistics: "A preliminary battle on the trend line frequently prevents an ultimate skirmish on the picket line."

Harry Douglas, Federation of British Steel Workers: "Our mighty union greets your mighty union."

Other speakers included Chat Paterson, president of the American Veterans' Committee, who brought veterans' greetings. As many as half the delegates were veterans of either World War I or II.

And that's the story of the union that grew from eight men to nearly 1,000,000 in 12 years—and is still growing.

"I take some pride in this union, because, like you, I have fought to build it. I take pride in the membership, because, like you, I feel their pulse and understand them."

EVERETT R. DUNCAN
A delegate from Local 2282, Houston, Tex., where he works as a two-color lithographer for Continental Can.

Rearguard Action

"We called our last convention a victory Convention. Since then, we have discovered, however, that we had not completed our victory. Ever since that time, the union has fought a rearguard action, to prevent a further wage loss and a further deterioration of our living standards."—CIO Steelworkers' officers' report.

Hail, Hail!

The city of Lorain, O., likes the CIO Steelworkers.

So to express that liking a telegram—"best wishes to Pres. Philip Murray and his Steelworkers"—was sent to the Steel convention by:

"Mayor Patrick J. Flaherty, Safety Dir. James Ryan, Sanitation Dir. Wallace Chapca; Chief of Police Theodore Walker, Police Prosecutor Austin O'Toole, Clerk of Courts Norman Donohue, Lorian County Sheriff Carl Finnegan, Democratic Chm. Joseph Ujhelyi,, Solicitor John D. Pincura, City Auditor Joseph Mitock, and members of the City Council."

Censorship Of Radio Hit By CIO

RADIO stations should have no right to censor the scripts of political candidates —even for possible libel, the CIO argues in a brief filed with the Federal Communications Commission.

The FCC has held hearings befor making a final decision in a case involving the Port Huron Broadcasting Co., which operates a Michigan station. FCC has taken a position that any censorship is bad censorship, particularly where political speeches are involved.

In supporting the FCC's preliminary judgment, the CIO said the decision represents an important step toward giving workers' organizations more equitable access to the country's broadcasting facilities.

CIO pointed out that labor spokesmen often "had difficulty buying or otherwise obtaining radio time to present their arguments and programs before the public . . . The threat of libel action is an excuse that can be, and has been employed in the past, for censoring or banning altogether the messages of labor representatives."

The Huron case involves only the scripts of candidates for public office, to whom stations are forced under the U. S. communications act to give the greatest possible time for airing of views.

No Matter How Humble—There's No

plant was $30-$40 a 48-hour week. The new homes rented for about $50 a month and could be bought for about $8000.

That wasn't for workers earning 90c an hour, the union figured. Besides, the houses were too small and poorly planned.

Disgusted, the local formed a housing committee. From the Roanoke TWUA local it obtained a $4000 loan, smaller loans came in from union members and officers, and it built an initial "sample" house.

Although the union had anticipated being able to achieve a sales price of $5000, cost of building the house was around $7500. But producing houses in quantity would cut unit costs, they reasoned. So Local 371 formed Old Dominion Housing Corp. and started building houses.

All sorts of obstacles popped up. The local planning commission said they'd have to widen the roads leading up to the property. This entailed buying the land on either side of the street. It meant long delays as the union chased after owners away at war or tied up with a mortgage or judgment against the property. Worst of all, it meant more hard-to-come-by money.

It was even necessary to secure an amendment to a Virginia law which prohibited unions from owning real estate.

The Parkersburg, Va., TWUA local loaned $2000. Workers put all their savings into it; so did the local officers. The national, in an unprecedented move, advanced $10,000.

By 1946 the corporation had built 50 houses on the 57 acres of rolling farm land at a cost of $6050 a unit. Similar privately-built homes in the area sell for $8500 to $9000.

Each house is slightly different from the others in appearance. Each has two stories with fully-equipped kitchen and modern bath.

How did the union do it so cheaply? It answers the question this way:

"The Old Dominion Housing Corp. was not set up to make profits and in fact will not permit any profits to be made by any individual out of this undertaking." None of the 30-odd people who loaned money received a cent of interest.

Yessir, brother, that's what we call cooperation!

What does it prove? The union answers that too:

It proves, it says, "that workers who have a little money saved up can start their own housing projects and achieve substantial reductions in cost over what they would have to pay if they bought from the conventional type of real estate operator."

GREENMONT VILLAGE

Greenmont also owes its beginnings to a CIO housing committee—the housing committee of the Montgomery (Dayton, Ohio) County CIO Council, formed in 1940.

"Some of the CIO people in Washington told us about the mutual ownership plan and we figured it was what we wanted," commented Marvin Miniard, who spearheaded the move and is the project's manager today. Miniard, a CIO Electrical Worker, was formerly an electroplater at the Frigidaire plant in Dayton.

It was up to the committee to convince the Federal Public Housing Authority that South Bend needed housing—and quick. And they did—with pictures of workers' families living in junked trolley cars and shacks; with thousands of questionnaires distributed to workers in defense plants to determine their needs; with public meetings on the housing shortage.

Greenmont Village, one of eight mutual ownership projects built by the FPHA, grew out of that crusade. Occupation of its 500 units began April 1, 1942. And in 1947 it became the first and only one of the eight FPHA projects to be bought by the tenants through a mutual ownership corporation, of which only tenants are members.

Rentals at Greenmont are $27.50 for three rooms, $32.50 for five. The cooperative spirit permeates every phase of the community life. There's community canning, a child care committee, a joint recreational program, cooperative stores, a community building. And when the management wants to explain a problem, it sometimes resorts to street meetings, resembling the old town meeting method.

It's 141 acres of democracy—that's what the tenants think of it.

These are just examples, remember, of what union members have accomplished in obtaining cooperative housing. There are many others, some of which are pictured on this page; and others are under way today.

But the point is: You too can start a housing project—IF the TEW bill goes through and IF you learn the value of cooperation.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

Reg. Dir. August Scholle, Detroit, Mich., reports that the CIO Paperworkers won the election at Eddy Paper Corpn., the results being UPA-CIO 49, independent 20. Rep. Covey was in charge.

Dir. Martin Gerber, Region 9, UAW-CIO, New York, N. Y., advises the UAW won an NLRB election among the employes of the Precision Die Cast Co., Fayetteville, N. Y. the results: UAW-CIO 368, Federal Union-AFL 269, no union 22.

Reg. Dir. Loren J. Houser, Indianapolis, Ind., reports the following election victories:

Kiser Plating Co., plant in Muncie, Ind., UAW 22, no union 13. This campaign was conducted by Field Rep. Karl Parker assisted by Brothers Ballard and McNamara.

National Industries, Inc., Muncie, Ind., makers of lawn mowers, UAW 24, no union 6. The campaign was conducted by UAW Field Rep. Karl Parker.

Hotel Anderson, Anderson, Ind., Retail & Wholesale Union 38, no union 9. This was a consent election conducted by the State Department of Labor.

Reg. Dir. Frank J. Bender, Baltimore, Md., advises a union shop election in the U. S. Printing and Lithograph Plant resulted in 150 votes for the Paperworkers, 5 against.

Dir. of Org. George Brown, IWA-CIO, Portland, Ore., reports a union shop election at Mengel Plant, Laurel, Miss., 634 eligible, 427 for, 22 against; a union authority election at Heinz Lumber Co., 324 yes, 49 no; and a representation election at Frost Lumber Co. at Nacogdoches, Texas, IWA 123, independent union 63; union authority election at Ralph L. Smith Lumber Co., Anderson, Calif., yes 177, no 8.

Intl. Rep. Edward Chevlin, RWDSU-CIO, Kansas City, Mo., advises an NLRB collective bargaining election was won at Kansas City Barrel and Package Co., with 100% of the votes being cast for the union. Brothers Edward Chevlin and John Worrel handled the organization at this plant.

Van A. Bittner, national director of the CIO Organizing Committee, advises that the committee had won nine elections, lost one and "held its own" in a decertification election during the past week. Heading the wins was the balloting in the Lone Star Steel plant in Dallas where the CIO won 410 to 33 over the AFL Boilermakers. The loss occurred in the same plant where a small railroad unit voted 41 to five for the AFL over the CIO.

The United Steelworkers of America are now in convention in Boston, and it is one of the largest assemblies of labor in the country.

26 Scabs Get Gun Permits

By TOM NOWELL

EVIDENCE that the Anchor Duck Mills, Rome, Ga., was preparing for a "shooting" strike even while last-minute negotiations were underway with the CIO Textile Workers has been uncovered by J. D. Pedigo, manager of the union's Northwest Georgia Joint Board.

Pedigo obtained a list of pistol licenses issued in Rome between March 1 and April 5, which revealed that Paul A. Redmond, president of the mills, waited until two days after the strike began on March 22 to obtain his license to carry a weapon. R. H. Bachman, personnel director of the strike-bound mill, went surety for Redmond's permit to carry a gun.

L. H. Rice, general superintendent of the mill, however, was not so patient. He obtained a permit to carry two guns on March 12. Pedigo pointed out that Rice adopted much the same policy as the Japs before Pearl Harbor, for he was smiling and affable over the negotiations table even after he had obtained a license to pack the guns.

In addition to four mill officials, 26 known strikebreakers were discovered to have obtained "gun-toting" permits during the negotiations and strike. Among them are Karl Knowles and J. P. Brown, who recently led an assault upon women pickets more than 200 yards away from mill property.

The two-month strike, which has been marked by violence on the part of the scabs, was brought on by the company's insistence that the union sign a contract that provided no security for the workers, and laid the union open to devastating attacks.

To date two men have been shot, both wounded by strikebreakers. No violence has yet been attributed to union members.

Hubert Wilkey, a 19-year-old striker, was shot down by a company overseer. Wilkey, married and the father of a young child, had done nothing to bring on the deadly assault. He is still in a critical condition in a Rome hospital.

William T. Brock, himself a scab, was shot and lost an eye after a bullet was fired by a "trigger-happy" strikebreaker.

The company offered a $2,500 reward for Brock's assailant, and union members who drove him into the mill and told police where to find Quinton Dempsey, now on bond for shooting Brock, are claiming the reward. Dempsey had sought refuge in the mill.

To publicize its sensational findings, the union bought a full-page ad in the Rome News-Tribune.

Offer New Course

Publicity, Promotion and Public Relations will be one of the new courses offered this summer at the fifth annual Leadership Training Institute at the FDR-CIO Labor Center, Port Huron, Mich., August 15-21. The Institute is sponsored by the Michigan CIO and the United Auto Workers. Its regular summer program extends from July 11 to Aug. 21.

THE ADVENTURES OF JIM BARRY

AS JIM AND MARGIE DEMONSTRATE POLITICAL ACTION WORK TO A LOCAL UNION COMMITTEE, DISTRICT ATTORNEY BRADLEY-PRO-LABOR CANDIDATE FOR CONGRESS- PAYS THEM AN UNEXPECTED VISIT....

I'M GLAD NOW I DROPPED IN! I WAS REALLY WORRIED ABOUT HOW MUCH LABOR COULD DO IN THE COMING ELECTIONS.... WONDERING IF IT WAS JUST JUST LOUD TALK...

WELL? YOU'VE SEEN- WHAT DO YOU THINK?

IF EVERY LOCAL UNION GETS STARTED THE WAY YOU HAVE HERE- WE'LL HAVE A MAJORITY OF HONEST, LIBERAL-MINDED MEN IN CONGRESS FOR A CHANGE!

YOU CAN COUNT ON EVERY UNION MAN! LABOR'S NEVER GONE BACK ON ITS WORD YET- AND WE WON'T IN THIS ELECTION, EITHER! ALL WE HAVE TO DO IS REALLY ORGANIZE OUR STRENGTH!

GOOD NIGHT, JIM! MARGIE! GOOD NIGHT, MR. BRADLEY!

SO-LONG!

WELL, I'M GLAD I LISTENED TO OLD POP STORM AND MADE UP MY MIND TO CHALLENGE THE MACHINE FOR THE NOMINATION... I'LL GET SOME SLEEP NOW, G'NIGHT!

WE'VE STILL GOT SOME WORK TO FINISH AT THE OFFICE, G'NIGHT!

AT THE OFFICE OF THE UNITED LABOR PRESS....

THEY'LL BE HERE SOON, M'BOY! NO USE FUSSIN' AND FRETTIN'!

YEH... MAYBE YOU'RE RIGHT, POP! MAYBE THERE'S NO USE.... THIS IS THE THIRD TIME IN A WEEK THAT MARGIE'S LEFT ME FLAT!

WHAT'S THE USE GETTING MARRIED? WHAT'S THE USE OF MAKING PLANS? ALL MARGIE THINKS ABOUT IS POLITICAL ACTION... ELECTIONS.... UNION WORK!

THAT'S HOW IT IS BETWEEN ME AND JIM, PETE! BUT I'M NOT COMPLAINING... I'D RATHER BE A UNION MAN THAN....

OKAY! YOU HAVE HIM! BUT I WON'T MARRY MARGIE! NOT A PICKET LINE... OR DOORBELL RINGERS!

I'VE HAD JUST ABOUT ENOUGH! MARGIE'LL HAVE TO CHOOSE BETWEEN ME OR... OR.... THIS UNION WORK! SHE'S GOT TO STOP WORKING ALL DAY AND ALL NIGHT! I'M GOING TO PUT IT STRAIGHT TO HER! SHE'LL HAVE TO CHOOSE....

CHOOSE WHAT, PETE?

No OK On Regional Schools

BY a one-vote margin, the Senate last week declined to give U. S. approval to an agreement among 15 southern states to set up regional school facilities for Negroes.

Sen. Wayne Morse (R., Ore.) led the fight against the state compact, and won a 38-37 vote to "recommit" the joint resolution which would have written a federal O.K. on the agreement. The resolution had been passed in the House, but the Senate action probably has pigeonholed it for the rest of the session.

The proposal has been vigorously attached by Negro groups, which charge that it will perpetuate "second class" educational opportunities for Negroes throughout the south.

Despite the refusal of Congress to endorse the agreement, however, the 15 states are still free to go ahead with their plans. The plans were made by state officials after the U. S. Supreme Court, in a number of decisions, made clear that the states must make available decent schooling for all their citizens.

SEN. Morse, in explaining his position, declared: "I feel . . . the federal government of the U. S. should never sanction a compact without laying down a non-segregation principle and condition within that compact."

Such approval of segregation by the federal government, he said, would be a "very unfortunate precedent."

In waging his fight against the compact, Morse had threatened to meet southern resistance to the resolution by tacking on, in amendment form, bills to outlaw the polltax, make lynching a federal crime and set up a Fair Employment Practices Committee.

All three bills have been gathering Congressional mould. Southern polltax Senators have promised a filibuster against any or all of them, and the GOP majority—despite militant talk a few months ago—has so far shown no desire to force the bills to a vote by limiting debate.

The GOP hinted for a time that the anti-lynch bill had "priority status," but Sen. Taft (R., O.) last week indicated it stood far down the line on the Republicans' action list.

Kill Bill To Boost Natural Gas Rates

A plan to gouge consumers by "decontrolling" U. S. powers to regulate the natural gas industry has been killed in Senate committee.

The Moore-Rizley Bill, passed in the House, was knocked down in the Senate Commerce Committee by an 8-4 vote. It would have weakened authority of the Federal Power Commission, and permitted natural gas distributing companies to jack up their rates.

CONGRESSIONAL ROUNDUP

Railroads Get Another "Break" as House Passes Bill Giving Anti-Trust Exemptions

RAILROAD corporations got two breaks from the government last week.

First, they were "taken over" by the government under a 1916 law when three brotherhoods threatened a strike for higher pay and better work rules.

Then Congress took steps to remove them from any possible prosecution in the future under the anti-trust laws.

By a 272-53 vote the House passed the Reed-Bulwinkle bill, which has long been favored by the railroads and their friends in Congress. A similar bill, though containing a few differences from the House version, had been passed earlier in the session by the Senate.

It's expected Pres. Truman may veto the measure, but the size of the majorities favoring additional protection for the railroads is probably enough to override such Presidential disapproval.

Wood Union Plugs For 75c Minimum

America's lumber industry will be happier and more stable with a 75c hourly minimum wage, Pres. J. E. Fadling of the CIO Woodworkers predicted in a statement filed with Sen. Ball's Labor subcommittee, which has wound up hearings on proposed wage-hour changes.

The lumber industry, composed of large numbers of small producers, has all the disadvantages of farming and monopoly, Fadling said. Like agriculture, lumber prices vary widely between good times and bad; like tightly controlled industry, its production swings sharply from high to low.

A 75c wage, he said, would help put a floor under the industry's economy, and makes impossible any return to the nickel-an-hour wage that plagued the southern pine industry during the depression.

The Woodworkers' statement rounded off a full-sweep presentation of CIO's views on the Thomas-McCormack Bill (S. 2062), which would lift the minimum pay rate under the Wage-Hour law to 75c an hour and extend coverage to millions of now unprotected workers.

There is little indication, however, that Congress will take any Wage-Hour action at this session.

'U. S. Must Buy As Well As Sell'

America must be prepared to buy freely in world markets as well as to sell its own products, both to help keep prosperity at home and promote recovery abroad, CIO reminded a House committee last week.

Stanley Ruttenberg, assistant research director, presented testimony for Secy-Treas. Carey in which CIO called for passage of House Joint Resolution 335, which extends the government's power to negotiate Reciprocal Trade Agreements for another three years.

International trade "is a means to an end . . . steady employment at remunerative work yielding high living standards," Ruttenberg told the House Ways and Means Committee. The old Republican theory of the early '30s that America can build jobs and prosperity by restricting foreign markets "is fallacious," he said.

"We cannot live long in a world of peace if trade barriers stand in the way of feeding, clothing and reconstructing war devastated areas," the CIO official said.

"Under the European Recovery Program, we will supply machinery and equipment to rebuild many industries. However, unless we are prepared to buy the products which these rehabilitated industries will produce, we deny to those countries the vital monetary exchange necessary for them to become self-sufficient nations."

Asks Senate To Restore Social Cuts

"IS this Congress going to improve the social security system or undermine it?"

The question was put squarely to a Senate Appropriations subcommittee last week by a CIO witness demanding more funds for the government's Federal Security Administration.

Mrs. Katherine Ellickson, assistant CIO research director, presented testimony for Van Bittner, head of the CIO Social Security Committee, in which she asked the Senate to undo damage caused in the House when it acted on a supplemental funds appropriation for FSA (HR 6355).

In addition, Frank Donner, assistant CIO counsel, urged that the Senate knock out the Keefe rider tacked on to the funds bill in the House. The rider would bar payment of wages to FSA employes who belong to a union that hasn't filed non-Communist affidavits under the Taft-Hartley Act.

Donner charged that the rider was unconstitutional and a form of "yellow dog contract" designed to keep government employes out of the CIO Public Workers Union.

BITTNER'S statement charged that the House-approved fund cuts and changes in FSA's structure "are not aimed at economy—they will stunt the social security program as the workers of this country have envisioned it.

Recalling that a special Senate Advisory Council had recommended big improvements in social security, the CIO said it would make "mockery of the work of the Council if you go through with the slashes imposed by the House on top of last year's heavy decreases."

Bittner charged the Natl. Association of Manufacturers and other employer groups with playing both ends against the middle on social security issues. He said they have campaigned against strong national control of the system on the basis of "states' rights"—and then have gone into state legislatures to lobby against proposed state-wide reforms.

CUTS voted by the House will almost cripple the work of some bureaus in the Social Security Agency, the CIO warned. The House voted a 55% cut in research funds, a 70% slash in information work, a 30% cut in administrative funds for the Bureau of Employment Security and the U. S. Employment Service, and a $23 million cut in grants to the states for employment services and unemployment compensation.

Bittner's statement argued strongly that the Senate should kill that section of the bill transferring the U. S. Employment Service from the Labor Dept. to FSA.

"It should be clear," the statement said, "that a strong USES is needed, with adequate staff and funds . . . All organized labor has supported retention of the USES in the Dept. of Labor and strengthening of this department in other ways."

During the testimony, Mrs. Ellickson strongly denied that the Federal Security Administration had written a CIO pamphlet on security, as one House Committee had charged.

She said some facts had been supplied by the agency—as the government does for all sorts of organizations and private citizens—but that the pamphlet had been written and prepared by the CIO Research Dept.

The CIO News

Vol. 11 WASHINGTON, D. C., MAY 24, 1948 82 No. 21

THE FUTURE'S PATTERN?: National Guardsmen (in above photo) are "roughing up" and arresting striking CIO Packinghouse Workers at South St. Paul, Minn. Violence, which the union charges was provoked by the arming of scabs and which resulted in the death of three pickets elsewhere, preceded intervention of the guardsmen. The lower picture shows how the paraphernalia of modern war, including the half-track armored car, was used against the strikers. See story on Page 3.

U. S. NEWS SAYS '48 PROFITS WILL EXCEED '47 RECORD

MAYBE you didn't know it, but there's a lot of dough in growing and selling avocados.

The average worker probably will never know what an avocado tastes like, so high is the price of one, but there's a boom on, folks, in avocados. Last year, farmers were paid 9 cents per avocado; this year they get 15c.

Or, suppose you're a guy with enough moolah to spend a day in Atlantic City. If you were a GI stationed there during the war, you'll remember that drinks were pretty cheap in the swank hotel bars—thanks to OPA. Now OPA is gone, the war is gone. And so are cheap drinks. Boy, oh boy, have they gone up!

NOW, let's look at profits.

In France, according to the Wall St. Journal, "the breath-taking rise in prices seems to have halted." The Paris price index now stands at 1499. A year ago it was 873. France figures 100—or normal—as 1938, just before World War II.

Admittedly, the French are worse off than we are. But things don't look any too rosy here, either. Big Steel's now completely debunked price cut—far less than a half a cent a ton—hasn't made the slightest dent in the cost-of-living spiral. And, estimated profits for 1948 make it fairly certain nothing short of government action—hardly expected from Congress—will reduce the American cost of living.

David Lawrence's U. S. News and World Report is our authority for an estimate that profits—they hit an all-time high of $18,500,000,000 after taxes in 1947—will be $21,000,000,000 this year. (U. S. News bases its estimate on the rate for the first quarter. Most authorities estimate 1947 profits at $18,000,000.)

That's a hefty amount of profits, if you consider that the level of profits—after taxes—was only $5,000,000,000 in 1939.

BUT, U. S. News is pretty sad about it. Consider the plight of the stockholder:

"Dividends, however, have not kept pace with profits," says U. S. News. "Before the war, corporations paid nearly 80% of their profits to stockholders. Last year, corporations paid out less than 40% of their profits to stockholders.

"Weekly earnings of factory workers, on an average, have risen 119% from 1939 to March, 1948. This rise is a good deal greater than the 70% rise in the cost of living. This means that factory workers and nearly all other wage earners are much better off than they were before the war.

Come, Come, Mr. U. S. News, why don't you tell the whole story? Granting, for the sake of argument, that your figures are correct, let's see exactly where the wage earner is today.

Suppose a typical wage earner made $20 a week in 1939. Increase that by 119% and he now should be making $43.80 a week. But, according to U. S. News' estimates, the dollar, worth 100 cents in 1939 purchasing power, is worth only 60c now. So, the $43.80 would purchase only $26.28 worth of 1939 values.

No, Mr. U. S. News, the average worker hasn't improved very much—and he hasn't moved into the Ritzbelt yet.

Ah, ha, you naturally say. But hasn't the employer's dollar also shrunken in value?

Yes, it has. Let's take that 60-cent dollar again. That makes the $18,500,000,000 worth $11,100,000,000.

So, the worker's purchasing power has risen 31.4% over 1939.

And—the boss' purchasing power has risen 112% over the $5,000,000,000 the collective bosses made in 1939.

Here are a few indications of that first quarter of 1948 (from Wall St. Journal):

Anaconda Copper—you remember Anaconda—made $13,069,818 in Jan., Feb. and Mar., 1948, compared to $12,369,572 same time in '47.

Sinclair Oil: "Earnings in the first quarter of 1948 were about equal to the earnings reported in the first six months of 1947," Pres. Harry F. Sinclair told stockholders.

United Aircraft: $3,248,230 in 3 months of '48 vs. $1,431,496 in '47.

Continental Oil: Net earnings, first quarter, '48, of $2.92 a share vs. $1.38 same period, '47.

Greak Lakes Paper Co.: $523,086, three months, '48; vs. $321,549 in '47.

Laclede Gas Light Co.: $1,071,298 vs. $757,066.

Republic Oil (Plymouth affiliate): 1947 was firm's highest earning year, despite a three-month strike and loss of three months' production due to Texas City disaster. Earnings for 1947, $2,004,255, vs. $1,067,151 in '46.

So they go. Most industries are having higher profits, but a few, like airlines, rails, movies, etc., were down.

And still the cost-of-living index creeps up.—A. R.

House Ignores Protest

Mundt Bill's Fate Up To The Senate

WHAT'S ahead for the Mundt-Nixon bill, passed last week by the House over strong protests from labor, liberal and religious groups?

• Sen. Taft (R., O.), Republican leader in the Senate, gave it arms-length treatment in a news conference. He said it requires "a lot of real study" by the Judiciary Committee. There's probably not enough time for such a study and passage, since the end-of-session log jam is already beginning to mount.

• Sen. Wherry (R., Nebr.) on the other hand, thinks that the 319-58 vote by which the House passed the bill "makes it mandatory we act on that bill or something like it before adjournment."

The bill, sponsored by the House UnAmerican Activities Committee with the announced aim of regulating closely all Communist political and non-political organizations, was sharply attacked throughout the country and in Congress during three days of debate.

CIO had asked Congress to kill the bill as a danger to labor's rights and to civil liberties in general. A large number of CIO unions—among them steel, auto, electrical and clothing—had voiced similar demands.

The 58 "anti" votes came from New Deal liberals, together with eight Republicans and two Labor Party Congressmen.

(At Oak Ridge, Tenn., the New York Herald Tribune reported, two atomic scientists have been suspended and others are being investigated because of hazy charges. They included anonymous "accusations" that relatives of the men are believed to have associated with persons believed to be Communists or Communist sympathizers.)

Rep. Javits (R., N. Y.) said the bill "affects millions of innocent people who may be engaged in an activity like advocating a law for a national FEPC or any other particular activity."

Rep. Murdock (D., Ariz.): "Unless we are far more careful in fixing our definitions in law than I can see in this bill, we are going to undermine . . . the basic freedoms sought to be preserved in the Bill of Rights."

Rep. Fogarty (D., R. I.): "Some of us who come from New England believe this is the same type of legislation that drove Roger Williams out of Massachusettes into Rhode Island 300 years ago."

Rep. Holifield (D., Calif.) sought to hold up the bill until the Dept. of Justice could report on the need for regulation of subversives through new laws and could study the constitutionality of the measure. This and other amendments offered by the opposition were defeated.

Supporters of the bill, led by Rep. Nixon (R., Calif.) and other members of the UnAmerican Activities Committee argued that the bill was needed to protect the country from revolutionary organizations and domination by foreign communists.

Pres. Truman indicated his opposition to the proposal.

The House Vote On Mundt 'Subversive Control' Bill

Here's the voting record on House passage of the Mundt-Nixon "Subversive Activities Control Bill." The bill was passed May 19 by a 319-58 vote. 215 Republicans and 104 Democrats voted for the bill; 8 Republicans, 48 Democrats and 2 American Labor Party members voted against. Votes FOR the bill are marked "W"; votes AGAINST the bill are marked "R." Other symbols NV—not voting; PR—paired right; PW—paired wrong.

Packing Votes on 9c Rise

AS the CIO News went to press some 10,000 CIO Packinghouse workers were voting on whether to accept the companies' offer of a 9c hourly increase and return to work.

The vote came 65 days after the beginning of the turbulent nationwide strike, during which three pickets were killed, scores of others injured and many jailed on slight pretexts.

Latest victim of strikebreakers' violence was William Farrell, a picket at the Rath Packing Co., Waterloo, Iowa.

Farrell was instantly killed when a non-striker, allegedly fired the fatal shot from his automobile as he drove through the plant gates. The bullet also pierced a woman striker's shoulder.

Violence which flared after the shooting precipitated the mass entrance of State Guardsmen on orders of Gov. Robert Blue.

In South St. Paul, Minn., too, Natl. Guardsmen stood with fixed bayonets last week, ushering scabs in and out of Swift and Armour plants. Although the city is not under martial law, soldiers were enforcing an order forbidding four or more persons to assemble publicly.

Symbolizing the nature of the strikers' battle was one picket sign:

"Vets must fight the army for a living wage."

HONOR SLAIN PICKET: Fellow members of the CIO Packinghouse Workers accompany the body of Edward Huchs outside of the plant of Armour & Co., National City, Ill. While on picket duty, Huchs was allegedly slain at the plant by an armed scab, who was subsequently arrested. Three pickets have lost their lives during the nation-wide strike, one by bullets allegedly fired by a scab and another under the wheels of a truck. A large number of pickets were injured and many were arrested during the strike.

Union Roundup

Brewery Workers Win 17c, End Strike

THE beer that made Milwaukee famous is flowing again—and its producers, the CIO Brewery Workers, have gone back to making it—with a 17c hourly wage boost.

The raise went to the 5500 employes of Milwaukee breweries after a 24-day strike.

Shut down by the walkout were three of the country's largest beer plants—Schlitz, Pabst and Blatz—as well as the Miller, Gettelman and others.

Wage talks this year began March 1, but were stymied by the employers' refusal to agree to what the union considered a fair increase, in the face of rising living costs and the companies' very healthy production and profit figures.

Following the companies' refusal to grant any increase at all, the union conducted a strike vote. This prompted the companies to offer in succession a $1 weekly increase, $3, $5, then $5.50. All were rejected by the union. A special international union negotiating committee finally picked up the wage talks, obtaining the $6.80 offer. This was accepted by the membership by a magin of 4 to 1.

Auto: As CIO Chrysler employes rounded out the second week of their walkout, they found themselves battling the Michigan Republican administration as well as the corporation.

Countering the state attorney general's attempt to prove the strike illegal because the union did not conduct a strike vote under the state Bonine-Tripp law, the Auto Workers are seeking a permanent injunction to restrain the state from investigating the walkout.

Because the strike affects Chrysler plants in several states, the union contends that the state law does not apply.

Meanwhile, UAW members at Chrysler's main supplier, Briggs Manufacturing walked out in protest against the company's attempted speed-up.

The possibility that the Chrysler strikers would be joined out on the pavements by General Motors employer after May 28 is growing with the continued stalemate in negotiations. The GM division has already filed state and federal strike notices and a walkout has been authorized by the membership and Intl. Executive Board.

At Ford, where talks are not scheduled to begin until June, UAW members have thrown their weight behind the Chrysler strikers with a $125,000 contribution, of which $10,000 is to go directly for relief needs of strikers' families.

No benefits will be forthcoming from the Michigan Unemployment Compensation Commission, which said the strikers are ineligible, and the Detroit Welfare Commission has announced it will be unable to assist families until they are "destitute."

Increases have been won as follows:

Office And Professional: Pay boosts as high as $20 a week have been won by CIO employees of the Eagle Lion Films, Inc., New York City.

Negotiated by the Screen Publicists Guild, CIO Office & Professional Workers, the increases are retroactive to Nov. 18, 1947.

At eight other screen companies in New York the Guild won arbitration awards ranging from $5 to $12 in increases. These companies are Loew's-MGM, RKO, Paramount, 20th Century-Fox, Republic, United Artists and Natl. Screen Service.

Stone: Contract talks have netted some 150 CIO Stone Workers at five Maine-New Hampshire granite concerns "package" increases of 19c an hour and a contract considered by the union as one of the best in the industry.

Minimum rates for quarrymen are now $1.15½ an hour, and for blacksmiths $1.38½. Also provided is the union shop.

Oldest

The Brewery Workers is the oldest industrial union in the U. S. according to Managing Editor E. Beinecke of the Brewery Workes.

It was founded in 1886, helped organize the AFL, left the AFL in 1941 and affiliated with the CIO July 1, 1946.

And that, said Mr. Beinecke, is sufficient evidence to prove the CIO News erred last week when it referred to the Amalgamated Clothing Workers as the CIO's oldest union.

Hope Board Bares Phone Wages

PRESIDENT TRUMAN'S decision to appoint a fact-finding board in the long lines telephone wage dispute has brought cheers from the American Union of Telephone Workers, CIO, and protests from the world's biggest corporation.

Headed by Dr. Sumner H. Slichter, Harvard professor, the board must report to the President by June 6. The other members are Aaron Horvitz, New York industrial expert, and Charles A. Horsky, Washington, D. C., attorney.

The threatened walkout by the 25,000 CIO members, following American Telephone & Telegraph's abrupt cessation of talks, would imperil "national health and safety," explained the president in naming the board.

While the company protested it was "at a loss to understand" the action, AUTW Counsel Henry Mayer hailed it as "our first opportunity since the Natl. Telephone Commission—a part of the old War Labor Board—went out of existence to present a factual picture of the wage status of telephone workers in the United States."

The union, he continued, will demonstrate that AT&T profits have been so great in the past two years as to permit both a wage increase and a cut in telephone rates.

THE union's negotiators had indirectly requested the government to take over the corporation. "It will be extremely interesting to find out whether or not the government will seize AT&T and ask Judge Goldsborough to curb unfair practices of the world's largest monopoly," they stated.

To the union's request for a 30c hourly wage increase and changes in the working rules, the company has countered with a single offer: a two-year extension of the old contract, which expired May 8, without a wage increase and with a single wage reopening.

A request by the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service that the old contract be extended during negotiations was rejected by AT&T, as was a union offer to extend the contract for 60 days or for two years with two wage reopenings.

The Washington, D. C., Traffic Division of the independent Communications Workers of America accepted the AT&T's "bargain"—and then some. Representing 3000 local operators, it signed a 3-year contract with no pay rises and two wage reopenings. CWA Pres. Joseph Beirne described the agreement as a possible "basis for settlement of other CWA contracts."

To inquries as to whether his union would support a possible CIO strike, Beirne remained noncommittal.

CONSIDER PHONE TIEUP: Faced with American Telephone & Telegraph's repeated refusal to grant wage boosts, the American Union of (long lines) Telephone Workers, CIO, says it has but one recourse if AT&T doesn't change its tune: strike action. Shown discussing union strategy are John J. Moran (left), AUTW pres., and Robert Creasey, AUTW vice pres.

UAW Victor At Caterpillar

AN NLRB run-off election has given the CIO Auto Workers bargaining rights at the Caterpillar Tractor Co., Peoria, Ill.

Victor by a vote of 7,702 to 5,644 for the AFL Auto Workers, the CIO union has already begun negotiating a contract at the plant. Among the union's negotiators is Roy Reuther, brother of Intl. UAW Pres. Walter Reuther.

The CIO Equipment Workers previously held a contract at Caterpillar. When the agreement expired, the company refused to bargain on grounds that the union's officers had not filed noncommunist affiidavits under the Taft-Hartley Act.

A strike ensued, during which the NLRB conducted a representation poll. Because of its noncompliance with T-H, the Farm Equipment union was not placed on the ballot. No union won a majority in the first balloting, the AFL Auto Workers gathering more votes at that time than the CIO-UAW.

Immediately following the first NLRB vote, the strike was called off.

YOU'VE GOT TO LISTEN!

If you don't like this editorial you can wad the paper in a ball and heave it into the wastebasket.

If you don't like what a radio commentator says you can flip the dial.

You can get up and walk out of a movie if you think the picture stinks.

But you've got to sit and listen to the boss raise unshirted h—— about your union if he calls you and fellow workers together on company time for such a purpose.

That's what the NLRB says, in effect, in its latest far-reaching decision.

This decision, reached under the Taft-Hartley Act, gives a new slant to "freedom of speech" because it does not recognize "freedom not to listen."

Without this latter freedom the scales are tipped heavily in favor of the employer. That, of course, was one of the principal purposes of T-H.

MUST NOT THREATEN The Board's decision, reversing a previous ruling, seems to us to be as ridiculous as it is unfair—despite the fact that it holds an employer's anti-union talks must contain "no threat of reprisal or force or promise of benefit."

Let's see how it would work out:

A plant superintendent calls all of his workers together and says he's going to make a little talk about the union that's trying to organize the plant.

He really pours on the adjectives. He says the folks will be much better off if they have nothing to do with the "dangerous foreign agitators" who are working for the union.

By this time a lot of union members and pro-union guys are hot under the collar and fed up with the browbeating they're taking. They decide to walk out on the superintendent.

But can they? He's talking and they're listening on company time. They're getting paid for hearing an anti-union speech. Couldn't they be fired, demoted or pushed around if they staged a walk-out demonstration?

So they remain—and pretend to listen attentively. This tends to influence the fellows who're still on the fence as regards the union—influence them in favor of the anti-union employer.

NLRB has been in business long enough to know that the worst kind of coercion and intimidation often comes not from the direct threat but from the implied threat of reprisal—and from unconscious fear of reprisal.

IS BADLY BALANCED The Wagner Act was created in an effort to give workers an opportunity to build up a buffer against the great power of giant industries and to protect individuals who wanted to form unions.

The Act said, in effect, that employers must not interfere with efforts to their employes to form organizations of their own and bargain collectively.

NLRB began relaxing its protections quite some time before the T-H Act was passed by Congress—relaxing them under the guise of providing employers with freedom of speech.

This began tipping the scales in favor of the employer, Passage of T-H tipped them further.

Now the NLRB has handed the employer a new club and an open invitation to use it to beat timid workers into line.

On company time, of course.

Dopey Junior Thinks Up New Game

Takes A Lesson From Congressional Elders And Gets Himself Into Trouble

By ALLAN L. SWIM

ONE of our favorite characters is a greedy little dope named Junior. who believes what he reads in the NAM ads.

After what happened last week, Junior's union card-playing old man is hardly on speaking terms with the brat.

Mama, a tolerant soul who still believes there's hope for her offspring, has a sore arm.

The boy who lives next door is pining for an opportunity to catch Junior in a dark alley.

And Junior is eating his meals from the mantle.

IT ALL started when Junior's old man brought home some Big Business propaganda designed to convince the gullible that the Taft-Hartley Act would cure almost everything this side of pneumonia.

"Mama, take a look at this junk,' he said, showing her the propaganda. "It says here that the T-H Act is designed to bring about stable management-labor relations—but I'm telling you it's aimed at smashing our unions."

Mama agreed, but that didn't shut the old man up. He went right on.

"This bill will weaken the unions, stir up trouble and take away many of the gains we've fought for for years."

He tossed the stuff in a waste basket, where Junior found it the next morning. Then Junior did some reading.

BY MID-afternoon Junior was running around the neighborhood, armed with a big stick and playing a game called Taft-Hartley.

He and a couple of his close cronies were having a wonderful time—but nobody else was.

Before the close of the day a couple of lads went home with bruised heads and bloody noses.

It was on the second day of "Taft-Hartley" that Mama became a bit suspicious—so she kept an eye on her bothersome child.

She saw the little boy next door come home with a sack of candy. She saw Junior, armed with his big stick, saunter over in his direction.

Then the telephone rang and Mama missed what happened next—but she found out about it later.

JUNIOR asked his little neighbor for some of the candy and the neighbor said, "OK, have a piece."

Junior jammed his hand into the sack and took out about three-fourths of the candy.

The owner of the candy objected. Junior cracked him over the head with his stick. The boy got up off the ground and started swinging at Junior.

Junior made a few ineffectual passes, then turned and ran down the street to the home of a justice of the peace, where he asked the man to issue an injunction against his neighbor.

Mama grabbed him by an ear on the return trip and hauled him into the basement.

MAMA, being an advocate of "spare the rod and spoil the child," whacked Junior across the fanny a few times with a piece of kindling. Then she demanded, "What made you behave like that?"

"Aw, Ma, I was just playing Taft-Hartley. It's a good game. You grab more than your share and you hit the other guy if he lets out a squawk. If he starts fighting, you try to pin his ears back with an injunction.

"That mean old justice of the peace just laughed at me when I asked for an injunction. We're going to rotten-egg his house tomor . . ."

As we said before, Junior is still eating from the mantle.

It's Hard To Ask Rep. Hoffman a Question

THE following is a verbatum account of a conversation between Rep. Clare Hoffman (R., Mich.), Henry Epstein, FEPC supporter and former attorney general of New York state, and Albert Warner, moderator on the Mutual radio network opininaire program. The subject was: The case for and against a national FEPC.

EPSTEIN: Are you aware of the fact that the federal government has enacted laws compelling employers to pay minimum wages and fixing maximum hours which their employes may work?

HOFFMAN: Well, that's a silly question. You know, of course, I'm aware of it. What are you doing? Trying to kill time?

EPSTEIN: Now, wait a minute. Are you aware of the fact that for many years the states tried to enact such measures and could not successfully enact them?

HOFFMAN: Well, I don't know whether they could successfully or not, I know they didn't enact them.

EPSTEIN: And aren't you aware of the fact that the Supreme Court struck down such laws as unconstitutional at one time?

HOFFMAN: What of it?

EPSTEIN: Well, don't you—don't you believe . . .

HOFFMAN: What's that to do with the question? . . .

EPSTEIN: Now please wait a minute!

HOFFMAN: See? Now he's taken by the clock, he's taken two-thirds of the time . . .

EPSTEIN: Now, I'm trying to ask you a very pertinent question . . .

HOFFMAN: Well, then get at it and ask it?

EPSTEIN: Isn't it a fact that when the government tells you you must pay a man a certain wage, it's also interfering with the employer's right?

HOFFMAN: Maybe it is—and the reason—now keep still till I answer it—and the reason for that law, and the only reason for it was, it was said to protect the health of the worker. It hasn't done any such thing—that isn't the real purpose of it . . .

EPSTEIN: Would you repeal that law?

HOFFMAN: Will you keep still till I answer it, or won't you? . . .

WARNER: Well, you had pretty well answered it . . .

EPSTEIN: Would you repeal that law?

WARNER . . . He's asking you a simple question, now

HOFFMAN: That isn't pertinent to this issue . . .

EPSTEIN: Would you repeal that law?

HOFFMAN: I said I refuse to answer that question because it has nothing to do with this question . . .

Vote On Affidavit

The CIO Farm Equipment Workers executive board will submit to its membership the question of filing Taft-Hartley non-Communist affidavits and financial statements.

He Recalled When He Served As Bodyguard

THEY sat at the breakfast table arguing—the tough old-timer who migrated from Europe and the young lawyer.

There was no heat in their words and no anger in their hearts, but they went at it hammer and tong.

The lawyer said all he wanted was a decision on a legal matter involving his union.

"Decisions! Lawyers! Legal technicalities! Bah! The labor movement wasn't built that way," the old-timer said. "Why I can remember . . . "

"Yeah, but that was before we had the Taft-Hartley Act and all of the . . . "

On and on it went—and finally the lawyer departed, apparently in the best of humor.

The old-timer smiled.

THE waves lapped upon the beach. Men and women with union badges pinned on lapels or dress fronts strolled along the Atlantic City boardwalk, headed for the morning session.

The old-timer took a sip of coffee, smiled again—as though amused by some private joke—then started telling about the early rough-and-tumble days of the American trade union movement.

"Every place I went there was trouble," he said. "Trouble, trouble, trouble.

"They send me into a town and tell me the boys at the plant want a union but don't know how to go about it.

"In a few days—maybe in a few weeks—there is a strike. We have no money, no food, no friends—but we got guts.

"We got guts and we got determination. Some of us are beat on the heads. Some of us are tossed into jail.

"Finally I move on to another town—and behind me I leave a union. And it is a good union, too."

THE old-timer shook his head, recalled the hunger he had seen in Europe—and the hunger he had seen in this country years ago.

He told about some of the famous old "radicals" who fought in their own way to make life a little easier for the working man.

Not step by step but in a haphazard, chatty manner he told the story of the growth of organized labor in the United States.

"Injunctions! Bah!" They were unfair—so we ignored them. What if you did go to jail occasionally?

It was a crusade—and in a crusade men get hurt, some badly. They work with the tools at hand. They keep fighting because they're convinced they're right.

IT WAS nearly time to go, but the old-timer had one more yarn to spin and one more sip of coffee to swallow.

"Money wasn't too much of a problem back in those days—because we didn't have any most of the time," he said. "Guys working for starvation wages couldn't pay more than a few cents for dues.

"Yes, things were different — and I've come a long ways since then. I've got what to me is a soft job now.

"It's soft by comparison.

"Say, I had one of the darndest jobs once. I was a bodyguard—bodyguard for a union treasurer.

"My job was to protect him—see that he wasn't ganged and robbed—when he took our weekly dues down and deposited them in the bank.

"I'd just trail along with him to see that he didn't get into trouble."

He smiled reflectively, then chuckled as though enjoying another private joke.

"After all," he concluded, "we had to take precautions. The union was taking in $37.50 a week—and that was a lot of money." A.L.S.

Tragedy Bars Firm From Hiring Boys

The case of Jerry Webb is closed.

Jerry, 14, was killed last fall in a St. Stevens, Ala., sawmill where he was employed in a hazardous occupation contrary to the child labor provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

He had been on the job only one week when a piece of flying timber was driven through his body. He died the next day. A permanent injunction in the Federal District Court in Mobile legally closed the case, reports the U. S. Dept. of Labor.

"An investigation by the Wage and Hour and Public Contracts Division of the Dept. of Labor disclosed the child labor violation and the mill operator consented to the injunction order forbidding such violations in the future," states the U. S. Dept. of Labor's Information Bulletin.

The minimum age for employment in general industry subject to the Fair Labor Standards Act is 16 years. Minimum age for hazardous occupations under orders issued by the Secretary of Labor is 18. Most occupations in sawmilling have been classified as hazardous.

More than 32,000 minors were found to be employed illegally in some 8,000 establishments inspected during the fiscal years 1945, '46 and '47, according to the Wage-Hour and Public Contracts Divisions. More than a tenth of these violators were in the lumber and timber industries, including logging, pulpwood, sawmills and planing mills.

Knife CIO Bills

PRACTICALLY every piece of major legislation designed to help workers and their families has been killed at the current session of the New Jersey State Legislature, says the New Jersey CIO News.

Nearly every CIO-backed bill was relegated to the Miscellaneous Business Committee, known as the Assembly "death chamber." By referring bills to this committee, assemblymen could kill the bills without having to take a definite "yes" or "no" stand.

Among measures knifed were nine CIO-drafted bills including four unemployment compensation bills introduced by Assemblyman Clemens and endorsed by Gov. Driscoll.

Other CIO-supported bills "referred" included the Vogel Bill to provide cash sickness benefits through a wholly public fund; bills to provide a state wage-hour law, repeal the vicious employer unemployment compensation "merit-rating" plan and to provide additional state housing projects.

DOZENS of other bills to improve the workmen's compensation law and improve working conditions of state employes were also killed.

This was done despite the fact that William L. Connolly, director of the U. S. Bureau of Labor Standards, reports that accidents in industry have been increasing for several years. Last year some 17,000 workers were killed, he stated.

Peak of accidents under wartime industrial expansion was reached in 1943.

Educational Conference Held For Northwest

Abundant water power continues to pour down to the sea unharnessed while natural resources that cannot be replaced are being used up for power, Morton Tompkins, Master of the Oregon Grange, told delegates to the National CIO's Northwest regional education conference held in Portland, Ore.

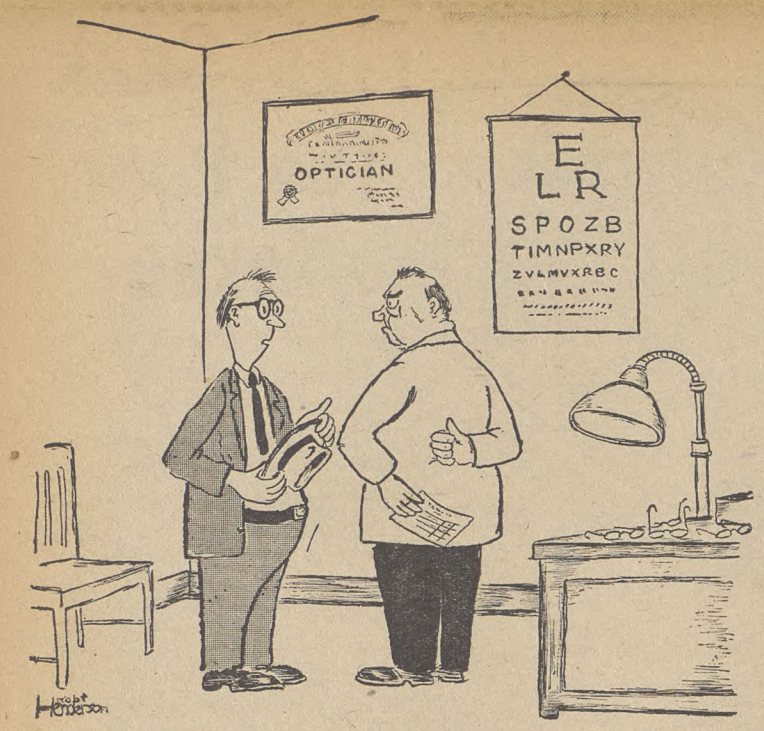
Nearly a hundred delegates, speakers and visitors attended the conference.

Tompkins was the featured speaker at a session devoted to films and discussions on "Conserving Our Natural Resources." It's everybody's business to save the soil, our single greatest natural resource, Tompkins told the CIO'ers.

He urged development of the power potential of the Northwest as a method of saving the country's natural resources, pointing out that poor handling of them is a curse against future generations.

Other highlights of the CIO education conference were discussions led by Ellery Foster, research director, Intl. Woodworkers, on "Prices, Profits and Wages," and by Stanley Earl, secretary, Oregon CIO Council, chairman of a panel on cooperation between the CIO and church, veteran, farm, business, professional and fraternal groups.

Nathalie Panek of the Natl. CIO Community Services Committee was chairman of a panel discussion on the need for implementing Pres. Truman's Civil Rights Committee report.



"The reason I didn't pay the bill was because I couldn't read it with the glasses you made for me."

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

Reg. Dir. George Craig, Philadelphia, Pa., reports the following elections victories:

Frank P. Mita, Phila., Textile Workers 9, no union 1, void 2; Skyline Hosiery Co., Reading, Pa., Hosiery Workers 20, no union 6; Alliance Yarn Processing Co., Phila., Textile Workers 21, no union 12, void 2.

President Truman has just announced the creation of a Board of Inquiry in the Long Lines case against A.T.&T. were requested by the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Board to extend their contract and to continue negotiations. The union accepted this—the company refused to continue the contract with grievance procedure and voluntary check-off included.

In other words. they would continue everything but the union. They have taken the same position with other groups, which demonstrates that A.T.&T. is only a well-protected gigantic trust. In numerous states they have passed laws banning strikes in utilities.

It would be well for them to examine the position of A.T.&T., one of the largest corporations in the world with no competition allowed. The CIO is determined to support these workers in fighting for their union and the right to bargain collectively. We shall watch developments from now on with keen interest.

The Packinghouse Workers' strike continues. The companies are adamant. Any approach to reason and fairness has been spurned by them to date. Three Packinghouse Workers have given up their lives in this struggle. At the moment, every indication is that the companies are out to destroy the organization. We call upon our members everywhere to rally to the support of the Packinghouse Workers of America. Send donations to Secy.-Treas. Lewis J. Clark, United Packinghouse Workers of America. 205 W. Wacker Drive, Chicago 6, Ill.

The United Steelworkers of America just concluded one of the greatest conventions ever held—this in spite of the glaring misrepresentation by the press, which was very obvious to all the delegates. Some 3200 delegates were in attendance, the largest assemblies of labor in the country.

One cannot help but look back at the conditions twelve years ago and the resistance of many years by the steel corporations and the great accomplishments of today. President Murray and his officers and staff are to be complimented.

Stand with your Union. You need it more now than ever.

Organize the unorganized.

Methodists O. K. Labor Chaplains

Methodist ministers may now be appointed as chaplains to labor under a decision unanimously approved recently by the General Conference of the Methodist Church, supreme legislative body of some 8,000,000 Methodist in all parts of the world.

The action taken by the Conference was reported by the Rev. Charles C. Webber, Methodist minister, and president of the Virginia CIO Council, who attended the Conference.

Several years ago the Rev. Mr. Webber was appointed a labor chaplain by Bishop Bromley Oxnam of the New York East Conference, but the appointment was questioned on the basis that there was no church law authorizing it. Mr. Webber therefore accepted an assignment as a regular CIO staff member and later was selected Virginia CIO President.

Italian Factory Opens in August

A complete mass production clothing factory donated to the workers of Italy by the CIO's Amalgamated Clothing Workers will begin operation in August at Massacarrarra.

ACW Vice-Pres. August Bellanca, who recently returned to New York after three months in Italy, said the Italian government had given its final stamp of approval to the cooperative clothing project, established under a $500,000 program financed by ACW members.

Philip de Luca, Amalgamated representative from Philadelphia, now in charge of the Amalgamated Clothing Corp. for Italy, said the factory would introduce American methods and would be the first of a series of model cooperative factories to be set up under the program. Some 500 persons will be employed at the Massacarrarra factory.

Oppose 3d Party

The executive board of the CIO Shoe Workers has voted 11 to 4 to follow national CIO policy against a third party in 1948.

The board pledged itself and its members to exert fullest possible support of CIO-PAC.

The Executive Board of Virginia State Industrial Union Council has voted to back national CIO policy in favor of the European Recovery Program and in opposition to the third party in 1948.

The Hennepin County (Minneapolis) Industrial Union Council has voted support of CIO policy in favor of the European Recovery Program and against a third party in 1948. Earlier the Council had tabled a similar motion.

Boss' Speech is Free, Your Listening Isn't

"FREE SPEECH" a la Taft-Hartley is wonderful!

Employers have the right to make anti-union speeches, but their employes don't have the right not to listen.

That was the substance of a NLRB ruling last week, which concluded that employers may force workers to "attend and listen to" anti-union speeches during working hours.

In so deciding, the Board reversed its Clark Bros. ruling, issued a year before Taft-Hartley went into effect. That ruling held it an unfair practice for an employer to compel workers to listen to anti-union tirades.

In another case, involving the CIO Furniture Workers at the Colonial Hardwood Flooring Company, Hagerstown, Md., a trial examiner held that unions are not responsible for pay losses suffered by non-strikers during strikes. NLRB Gen. Counsel Robert N. Denham had urged that the union be ordered to make up such losses in earnings.

INVOLVED in the " free speech" case are the CIO Stone Workers and the Babcock & Wilcox Co., Augusta, Ga. Acting on complaint of the union, NLRB Trial Examiner James R. Hemingway last June found that the company had "interferred with an election" conducted by the Board on Jan. 31, 1946, had engaged in unfair labor practices, and he recommended the election be set aside.

The Taft-Hartleyized Board disagreed. "Even assuming . . . that the respondent required its employes to attend and listen to the speeches," concluded the Board, " . . . it did not thereby violate the Act."

In his report, Hemingway told of an incident on Dec. 23 in which Plant Supt. Carl Claus summoned employe Haywood Kettles to discuss the latter's union activity. The superintendent told Kettles he "felt like firing him because Kettles didn't have any business taking names (for the union) on company time." There is no ruling against such union activity.

Later, a day or two before the election, Claus met Kettles. Claus told him he had heard about some of the things Kettles was saying, then hinted darkly: "Now we want to work together. And we want to do all we can for you, but if you won't work with us, we'd rather not have you."

ON STILL another occasion, the superintendent asked Kettles why he didn't quit, if he wasn't satisfied. Testifying before the trial examiner, Kettles said, "I was being worried up so very much—every day or two I was wanted for a conversation with someone—and I was getting so very much tired of it, until I almost decided to look for another job sure enough."

The company describes itself as the largest employer of "colored help" in Augusta. Throughout Claus's many anti-union speeches ran the constant reminder that the company was "taking good care" of its workers.

Whether the union won or not, he said once, "I'm still going to do my best to look after you."

NMU Test of T-H In Supreme Court

The CIO Maritime Union's challenge of the constitutionality of Taft-Hartley requirements that union officers file non-communist affidavits and financial statements has reached the Supreme Court.

Appealing from a lower court decision, which upheld the T-H provisions, NMU asked the court to rule the pre-requisites for NLRB services unconstitutional. In addition, it asked that the High Tribunal enjoin the Board from conducting any elections in areas the union is trying to organize without placing the NMU on the ballot.

The government has 30 days in which to answer the appeal.

Two other CIO cases in federal courts are questioning the constitutionality of T-H provisions. The first, involving CIO Pres. Philip Murray and the CIO News, would declare unlawful the ban on use of union funds in publications in connection with an election.

The second, brought by the CIO Auto Workers, would test the legality of the entire section banning political expenditures by unions.

Cooperative Paper Starts in Winnipeg

A new cooperative daily newspaper owned and controlled by its readers has been started in Winnipeg, Canada, capital of cooperative-minded Manitoba.

The "Winnipeg Citizen" is a six-day morning paper controlled by a board elected by a group of predominantly trade union stockholders in 12 districts in the city.

Gen. Mgr. John Francis Sweeney says the policy is to give labor news a better break, and nationally to be absolutely politically independent.

CIO Just Too Much For Upholsterers

The AFL Upholsters' International Union in 1946 launched a Southern organizing drive.

In spring, 1947, the union abandoned the drive. The executive board's report to the union convention gives two reasons for this abandonment of the "losing fight":

1. "AFL support did not materialize."

2. "We had to contend with open CIO sympathy."

Textile Union Raising $5,000 To Aid Members Who Suffered In Tornado

THE CIO Textile Workers has launched a drive to raise $50,000 to aid 365 members in McKinney, Tex., whose jobs and homes were swept away by a tornado May 3.

The money will be collected by voluntary contributions from the union's 900 local unions and joint boards.

TWUA pres. Emil Rieve said the move was in the tradition of the union which last year collected $31,000 to help union members in Biddeford, Me., when their homes were destroyed by forest fires.

Half of the money asked for Texas will be earmarked to replace homes, clothing and furniture ruined by storm and rain. The balance will be used to operate a commissary until the workers move into their own homes or find other quarters. Pending the collection, the international union is operating an emergency commissary.

The tornado, which struck at 3 p.m., as shifts were changing at the McKinney plant of the Texas Textile Mills, ripped away the spinning room of the mill and paralyzed Joseph Farley, a member of TWUA Local 617, when he was pinned by falling timbers.

Three other union men were hospitalized, 60 workers' homes completely destroyed and hundreds of roofs torn away by the big wind, which raced through the town of 10,000 in nine minutes causing an estimate $1 million damage.

Families which lost their homes have been living in tents supplied by the Army. Plant officials estimate that the mill will not be in operation for at least a year.

Two Films Added To CIO Library

Two new films have been added to the CIO film library, announces the CIO Department of Research and Education. They are:

Pattern for Peace (20 min., rental $2), which analyzes the UN structure and aims.

The World Is Rich (43 min., rental $6), which shows what the Food and Agricultural Organization (FAO) of the UN plans for increasing food production and insuring fairer distribution to all the world's people.

The second film is not a movie to run at regular union meetings, but should be planned as part of a community program, states the CIO Education Dept.

LIBERALS WIN: Stephen J. Gall, Chairman of the Dallas Area Political Actions Committee views chart used for precinct meetings following Dallas County Democratic County convention. W. Don Ellinger, President Texas State Industrial Council points to the Texas Regular opposition which the liberals in Dallas overwhelmed. CIO participated in a liberal coalition victory at the county convention. Labor is now certain it will have a voice at the Texas Democratic convention.

CIO and Liberal Coalition Win Second Largest Texas Democratic Delegation

A LEAD headline in the May 5th Dallas (Tex.) Morning News boldly read:

"LABOR CALLS TURN AT PARTY SESSION."

And the first paragraph told in a nutshell the story of an unprecedented (for Dallas) victory that grew out of united labor-liberal political action:

"Labor leaders scored their first major political victory in Dallas Tuesday," it read, "when they called practically every turn at the county Democratic convention."

The list of delegates from Dallas County to the state Democratic convention underscored the extent of the victory for at least 15% were said to be labor union members, with the remaining 85% described as friendly to labor. Robert Oliver, state CIO director, and Wallace Reilly, manager of the Dallas Labor Temple are members of the delegation.

(Dallas County has the second largest delegation to the state meeting.)

Responsibility for the upset dealt to Gov. Beauford Jester's "reglars" rested with a determined coalition composed of CIO, AFL, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, independent telephone workers, Independent Association of Machinists, Americans for Democratic Action and the Progressive Voters League.

REPRESENTING CIO in the coalition are Steve Call, Dallas Area PAC Chairman; A. R. Hardesty, Assistant State CIO Director; and W. Don Ellinger, Texas State CIO Council President.

Behind the triumph lies a story of precinct organizations and months of dogged doorbell-ringing. The campaign was launched last September with the formation of the coalition.

Through efforts of these doorbell-ringers, the number of qualified voters (which in Texas means paid-up poll taxes) tripled in the county. The Dallas Area CIO Council reported that its deputies had sold 10 times as many poll taxes as they had two years ago.

Under the leadership of Call, carbon copies of the poll tax receipts issued by labor deputies were retained. These formed the basis for a precinct voters file.

GOV. Jester's men immediately felt the results of this groundwork at the county convention when the labor bloc succeeded in gaining election of its candidate, George Sergeant, as temporary chairman. Sergeant is former mayor of Dallas. From then on the session went labor's way.

The new state of affairs in Dallas County was further indicated by the more than 50 Negro delegates seated in the room. All voted with the labor bloc.

When the county's delegates get to the state convention, they will be bound by unit rule, which means that all their votes will be cast in support of the Democratic party's platform—even the civil rights program, if adopted by the national convention—and in support of whatever presidential nominee is chosen.

The liberal coalition had adopted a "4 C's" motto: "Coalition, Canvassing, Cash and Candidates"—and it worked.

Family Life Meet Hears CIO Speaker

The CIO's deep concern in matters affecting the welfare of families is shown in the resolutions passed at CIO conventions, CIO Research & Education Director Kermit Eby told the National Conference on Family Life in Washington recently.

More than half of the resolutions passed at the last CIO convention, Eby said, were concerned with families, children and family security.

"Certainly there are no more pertinent issues than cost of living, a living wage, housing and rent control, full employment, social security, child labor and women workers facing those who would make the family secure," Eby declared.

Dyers Dissolve Their Federation To Affiliate Directly With Textile

THE Federation of Dyers, Bleachers and Finishers, a subsidiary unit of the CIO Textile Workers, was dissolved recently at a special one-day convention called for that purpose at New York City.

From now on the federation's 59 local unions and 25,000 members, most of them located in New York, New Jersey, Rhode Island and Connecticut, will be affiliated directly to TWUA.

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve announced that a dyeing division had been set up in the union. This corresponds to the existing organizational setup, which includes northern cotton-rayon weaving, woolen and worsted, synthetic yarn and textile bags divisions.

Director of the dyeing division, Rieve said, will be Herbert W. Payne of New York, the union's synthetic yarn director. Payne will also continue in the latter capacity, Rieve said. Assisting Payne will be William Gordon, business manager of Dyers Local 1790, New York. Both men are TWUA vice presidents.

Federation Pres. Joseph W. Knapik, who is retiring from the union, announced that the federation's treasury amounted to $213,513.

Fight Soak The Poor Taxes

THE CIO is fighting "soak-the-poor" taxes in Michigan and Louisville, Ky.

In Michigan, a drive to lop off $60,000,000 from the annual food bill of Michigan workers has been launched by CIO-PAC. The savings would be effected through elimination of a three per cent state sales tax on food.

The Michigan CIO-PAC is circulating thousands of petitions seeking to put the question of repeal of the food tax on the November ballot. The Michigan Federation of Labor is joining forces with the CIO in the drive.

In Louisville, CIO succeeded in delaying passage of wage tax proposal, which bobbed up again in modified form before the board of aldermen, who are scheduled to act on the measure this week.

As originally proposed the ordinance called for a cent tax on each dollar of gross pay. In its modified form the wage levy would be reduced to ¾ cent and corporations would pay a cent on each dollar at net profit.

Dan Bedell, CIO-PAC director in Louisville, said that a large delegation would protest the tax proposal at the aldermen's meeting this week. If the tax is enacted, Bedell said that action is planned to obtain an injunction to halt the wage levy on the ground that it is unfair to 3000 residents of Indiana who work in Louisville.

7 Anti-Laborites Defeated

SEVEN Congressmen—all of them Taft-Hartley supporters—have been defeated in primary elections held so far. Four others—only one of them pro-labor—did not seek re-election.

Defeated at the polls were:

Peter Jarman (D., Ala.), who voted wrong on 7 out of 12 crucial issues, according to the CIO News 1947 voting guide.

Carter Manasco (D., Ala.), who had 7 wrong votes.

Emory Price (D., Fla.), with 8 wrong ballots.

Hugh Meade (D., Md.), with 8 wrong votes.

James Gallagher (R., Pa.), with 9 wrong votes.

E. W. Chadwick (R., Pa.), voting wrong 11 times.

James Scoblick (R., Pa.), wrong 9 times.

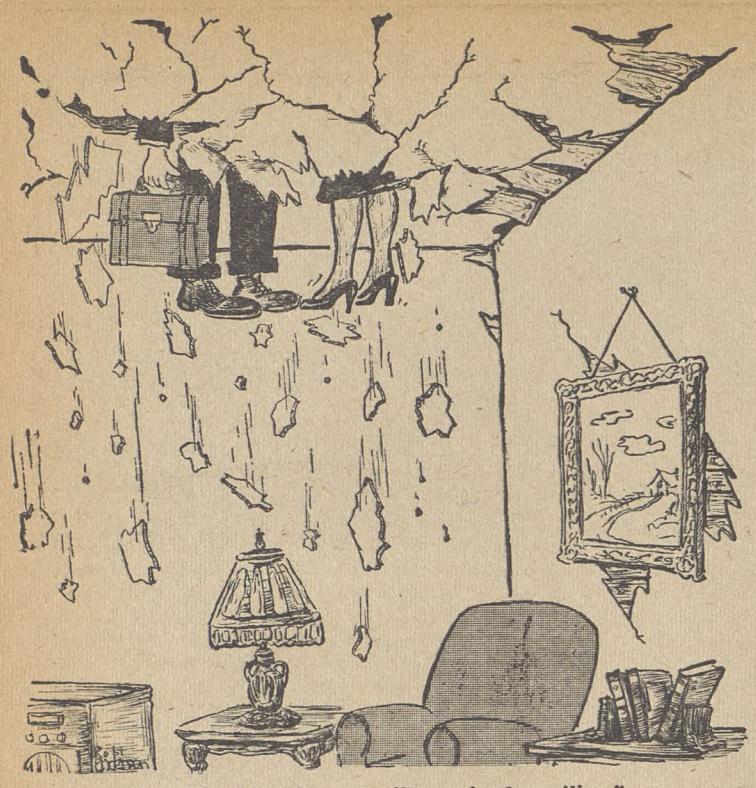
Those who did not run again were:

Joe Hendricks (D., Fla.), with 4 wrong votes and 4 times not voting.

Louis Ludlow (D., Ind.), who could not serve because of illness last session, but previously had a straight pro-labor record.

Mitchell Jenkins (R., Pa.), with 9 wrong votes.

Fred A. Hartley (R., N. J.) (workers won't cry over this loss), with 9 wrong votes.



"Yes, Mrs. Murphy, we will repair the ceiling."

Steel Union Plans Test of T-H Affidavit Clause

CIO's 928,000-member Steelworkers Union is preparing the ground for a court test of the constitutionality of the Taft-Hartley act's section on "non-Communist" affidavits.

Basis of the court action will be the Natl. Labor Relations Board's order in the Inland Steel pension case. The NLRB ordered the company to bargain with the USA-CIO on pensions, provided the union signs the affidavits and files financial statements with the NLRB and the Labor Dept.

Last week the union notified the NLRB that it had complied with the financial registration, but it described the T-H affidavit requirements as "illegal, unconstitutional and void."

A brief filed with the NLRB by General Counsel Arthur Goldberg said the affidavit provisions of Taft-Hartley are a bill of attainder (legislation directed against a specific person) and violate four of the 10 sections of the Constitution's Bill of Rights.

He said that matters of free speech, free press and free assembly are involved ,and that the affidavits force the "loss of valuable property and other rights as a condition to the exercise of the rights of free speech and assembly."

The Natl. Maritime Union has appealed another affidavit case—which it lost in a special three-judge federal court—to the U. S. Supreme Court.

The high tribunal is also expected to rule May 24 or June 1 on the test case brought by CIO and Pres. Philip Murray of the T-H act's ban on political expenditures by labor unions.

Deny Craft Vote In Two Plants

In a precedent-making decision, the NLRB has rejected a craft union's request for separate elections in two steel plants.

The ruling was a victory for industrial unions, which, under the Taft-Hartley Act, ran the danger of being split into numerous craft units.

Petitioner for the elections was the AFL Bricklayers Union, which sought separate units at the Natl. Tube Co., Lorain, O., and the American Rolling Mills plant, Middleton, O. The CIO Steelworkers for many years have held a contract covering all production and maintenance workers at the first plant, and the Armco Independent Federation, Inc. in the second.

The two main factors on which the decision was based were the close integration of the bricklayers' work with the whole steelmaking process and the relatively long history of plant-wide bargaining in the industry. It was on these two points that the Steelworkers based their opposition to the election.

Deny Vets Steel For Pre-Fabs

TWENTY-SEVEN steel company vice presidents have refused to allocate steel for prefabricated housing, and vets, who are hardest hit by their action, are plenty mad.

Protesting the blow to housing construction, American Veterans Committee Chairman Chat Paterson wrote Sens. Charles Tobey (R., N. H.), Joseph O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.), Ralph Flanders (R., Vt.) and Francis Myers (D., Pa.).

In refusing to allot the 60,000 tons of steel to prefabs as requested by the Commerce Dept., the industry "has killed the industrialized housing program which we have worked so hard for during the past two years," Paterson said.

"The issue was whether some steel should be diverted from non-essential to essential needs," he continued. The industry chose in favor of non-essential needs.

He urged the Senators to draft legislation calling for a Congressional investigation of the industry's "stranglehold" on the nation's economy; provide "statutory allocation of steel for essential purposes; and authorize federal loans to new steel companies to expand steel production, which the present steel companies have been unwilling to do."

Labor Backs Israel In Arab Invasion

Strong support for the Jewish state of Israel in its war of defense against invading Arab armies has been voiced throughout the U. S. labor movement.

At a New York rally of the Natl. Committee for Labor Palestine, Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood brought support and greetings from the CIO and Pres. Murray. Haywood said,

Rule Checkoff Permits Initiation Fees, Assessments

The Department of Justice has cleared up two questions about check-offs under the Taft-Hartley Act which have arisen many times in collective bargaining throughout the country.

In a memorandum to the Dept. of Labor's legal staff, the Assistant Solicitor General (his name's George Washington, believe it or not) ruled:

1. The term "membership dues" in Section 302(c) of the T-H Act includes initiation fees and assessments—so that a member's authorization for a dues checkoff permits the checkoff of such fees and assessments as well.

2. A check-off authorization which provides that it shall continue in force unless revoked at the end of the year, is valid under the Taft-Hartley Act. Such a check-off would be valid for as many years as the worker wishes it to be effective, and must be honored by the employer.

The T-H Act provides that check-off authorizations "shall not be irrevocable for a period of more than one year . . ." and the Justice Dept.'s ruling clearly establishes "escape period" check-off authorizations as legal.

Questions involving these practices arose during the auto union's negotiations with General Motors. While a private citizen or group may not ask the Dept. of Justice for legal advice, the UAW requested the Labor Dept. to seek a ruling on the subject.

CIO Men Stay Away From Justice Meet

Four CIO officials last week stayed away from the Justice Dept.'s third Natl. Conference on Citizenship, charging that the composition of the program was "unrepresentative and prejudiced."

They said the 4-day meeting was "totally lacking in representation from labor and other democratic groups whose record in the fight for progressive social legislation is second to none." More emphasis should have been given to "actual accomplishments in citizenship education."

The CIO spokesmen described as a "mockery" the scheduling of an address by Donald Richberg, Washington corporation lawyer, since Richberg had "testified against FEPC legislation which would give citizenship rights to millions of Americans not now enjoying them."

Signing the letter of "resignation" from the confab were Kermit Eby, CIO director of education and research; George Weaver, director of the Committee to Abolish Discrimination, and John Edelman and Paul Sifton, legislative representatives for the textile and auto unions.

Congressmen Who Signed TEW Discharge Petition

In response to a query some weeks ago from CIO Housing Committee Chairman Walter Reuther, 109 Congressmen have replied that they have signed Discharge Petition 6, which would pry the Taft-Ellenger-Wagner housing bill out of committee.

Reuther's letter requesting the information was necessitated by a Congressional ruling which prohibits House members from disclosing the list or number of signers of discharge petitions. They may, however, say whether or not they have done so.

The petition was originated by Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D., Calif.), when it became apparent that the House Banking & Currency Committee, under the chairmanship of Rep. Jesse Wolcott (R., Mich.), would attempt to suppress the bill until too late for passage this session. The committee has sat on the measure the past two years.

Recently, when the Senate passed the legislation, Wolcott scheduled hearings, which are still in progress.

He is a dogged foe of the public housing provision.

If 218 signatures are obtained on the petition, the housing bill will be able to escape Wolcott's knife. CIO members are, therefore, urged to write their Congressman, if his name does not appear below, asking him to sign immediately.

* HONOR ROLL STATE—All members from this State have signed.

FUR OPENS: Pres. Ben Gold, of the CIO Fur & Leather Workers, greets delegates to the 17th biennial convention of his union at Steel Pier, Atlantic City. The convention, which ran all last week, dealt long and seriously with the new problems presented under the Taft-Hartley Law and other acts of the 80th Congress. The economic impact of inflation also was a major topic at the parley, which was attended by more than 500 delegates.

PUBLIC ZONERS: Panama Canal Zone delegates to the second biennial convention of the CIO Public Workers are shown at the Hotel Chelsea, Atlantic City. Left to right: Reg. Dir. Max Brodsky; Cristobal Chapter Chm. Graham Lewis; Eec. Board member Cleveland Green; 2d Vice Pres. David Alexis, Pres. Pasqual Ampudia; Intl. Rep. Joseph Sachs; Rec. & Cor. Sec. Foster G. Bournes. All belong to Local 713, which covers the zone.

Fur Backs 3d Party; UPW Hits Keefe Rider

BY ARTHUR RIORDAN

Fur & Leather

THE 36-year old CIO Fur & Leather Workers held their 17th biennial convention at Atlantic City last week.

More than 500 delegates attended the seven-day session. (As the CIO News went to press, the union was electing officers.)

Much of the convention's time was given to political and economic problems as raised in the officers' report of Pres. Ben Gold and the other leaders. Here are highlights:

The Third party: All but two officers and executive board members joined in a recommendation that "our union associate itself with this great people's movement." The two dissenters were Board Members Richard B. O'Keefe and Julius Berger, who urged that the union follow the CIO's policy against a third party in 1948.

Sen. Glen Taylor: The running mate for Henry A. Wallace cancelled a speech to the convention because of a conflict in schedules.

Taft-Hartley: "We will have no truck" with this "slave labor law."

Cost of living: "Our members' purchasing power dropped by 25 per cent and more. Corporations piled up the most tremendous profits in history."

New York Fur Lockout: Workers came to the convention fresh from a victory following a lockout and general strike involving the fur association.

CIO relations: "It is the hope of the board that the CIO remain united as a powerful economic and political force and that in the course of its activities and inevitable struggles complete until unity will be restored and the basis of its traditional progressive program and policies."

Marshall Plan: "The trusts and cartels in Europe are being revived, even in Germany."

Wages: "We have already succeeded in obtaining 10 to 14 cents an hour for a large portion of our membership."

Fur Division: "about 98 per cent organized . . . all union gains, such as 35-hour week, strictly enforced.

Leather Division: "Now self-sustaining . . . won prolonged strikes . . . maintained and increased gains, such as vacations, paid holidays, overtime, health and life insurance, etc."

Potash: The Government move to deport Irving Potash, manager of the Furriers' Joint Council, was denounced.

Fitzgerald: The president of the CIO Electrical Workers addressed the convention, declaring:

"Philip Murray, Emil Reive, Walter Reuther and Sidney Hillman fought for Henry A. Wallace at the 1944 Democratic convention and considered him one of the greatest living Americans. Henry Wallace has not changed since then—those labor leaders have changed."

Possibility of war: The officers urged "all Americans to unite and defeat the evil forces that are driving our country to economic crisis, to Fascism and to war."

Miscellaneous: The convention assailed the Mundt bill, and asked for lifting of the embargo on arms to the Israel Government.

Public Workers

MEMBERS of the CIO Public Workers, meeting last week in Atlantic City, mapped plans for a full fight against the Keefe Rider.

The rider, attached to the Federal Securities Supplemental Appropriations Bill, provides that pay will be withheld from any Government worker whose union has not filed the non-Communist affidavits and financial statements of the Taft-Hartley Law.

Flaxer

Public Workers' Pres. Abram Flaxer told the second biennial convention's delegates and the press that the officers had been informed by their counsel, Lee Pressman, that the rider is unconstitutional.

Flaxer also said that representatives of the union's 86,000 paid-up members would go to Washington for "mass lobbying" when Senate debate begins on the bill, already passed by the House. He said a "death watch" in the Senate galleries was also planned. If the rider is enacted, an immediate legal test will be sought. Flaxer declared the union would adhere to its policy of no strikes against the government, even under this pressure.

THE delegates—five of them from the Panama Canal Zone representing UPW's 11,500 zone members—heard Flaxer say that the average member of the State, county and municipal locals is making $10 a week more in wages than he did two years ago. Other gains: less hours, higher overtime pay, annual leave, sick leave, vacation allowances, holidays, pension plans (covering two-thirds of members), life insurance plans, health and hospitalization and extension of civil service.

Contracts: Signed agreements are held with 22 cities.

Convention actions:

Taft-Hartley: Though there is little application of this law to UPW's membership, the act was roundly blasted as hurting all labor.

Third party: "Although we recognize the great importance to the nation of the existence of a third party (the Wallace party), we are not endorsing any party or candidates or taking an official position."

Split-up: Flaxer told reporters there was no intention at this time of returning two unions—federal and State-county-municipal. Instead, the Board was given power to act to protect members' interests.

Officers: The convention reduced the number of vice presidents from six to one.

Flaxer was reelected with eight opposing votes. Roy Eldean, Chicago, was elected vice president; Ewart Guinier, New York, secretary-treasurer, and Robert Weinstein, organizational director.

Mundt and Keefe bills: The delegates denounced these as harmful to the interests of the 30,000 federal UPW members.

Foreign policy: A prolonged debate was touched off by a resolution urging the U. S. Government and the Soviet to discuss mutual problems under the terms suggested in the exchange of letters between Henry Wallace and Premier Stalin. A demand from one delegate that the resolution include endorsement of the Marshall Plan brought a charge by officers that ERP might promote war with Russia.

Albert Fitzgerald: The head of the CIO Electrical Workers denied a charge by CIO Pres. Philip Murray that the third party had originated at a Communist party meeting.

Wages: The convention urged a minimum wage of $3000 a year for government workers, a 35-hour work week and other improvements in working conditions.

Opposition: Mrs. Jean C. Clements, representing a minority group of delegates (Build the Union Committee) claiming to have 5000 to 10,000 adherents, told the delegates that "if the officers had signed the T-H affidavits, our members would have had some protection against red-baiting charges."

'Silver' and 'Gold' Hit

"Outlaw 'Silver' and 'Gold' Discrimination in Panama Canal Zone."

That dramatic sign at the CIO Public Workers' Convention dramatized the union's campaign against bias. The term, "Silver," is used in the zone to designate all races other than white; the term, "Gold" means white. It is a carry-over from early zone days when pay was handed out in gold or silver, depending on color.

Steel Workers Raise Dues to $2 Monthly

The CIO Steelworkers' convention has increased the union's dues rate from $1.50 a month to $2 a month.

The convention also raised the salary of Philip Murray, who performs the dual duties of president of Steel and of the CIO, from $20,000 a year to $25,000. He receives no salary from CIO. Other officers were raised from $12,000 to $15,000; regional directors from $6000 to $8000.

CIO Rail Workers To Ask 20% Rise

A 20% wage increase and a 40-hour week will be asked of the Pennsylvania Railroad for 60,000 CIO non-operating employes when negotiations begin.

The demands were drawn up at a two-day conference of the Railroad Workers negotiating and policy committee in Pittsburgh. The Railroad Workers belong to the CIO Marine and Shipbuilding Workers.

Resort for Fur

The CIO Fur Workers' is already taking reservations for its new summer resort, which will be completed in June.

The resort, located on White and Amber Lakes, Sullivan County, New York, is in the heart of the Catskills. The Ben Gold Fur Workers' Health and Welfare Trust Fund will operate the place, which will feature cottages, recreational and educational facilities.

40c Minimum A 'Disgrace'

"It's a national disgrace for the Congress to maintain the present minimum pay rate of 40c an hour."

That conclusion was drawn by the Economic Outlook in a thorough study of wage-hour problems and of both the Thomas-McCormack and Balls bills to amend the Wage-Hour Act. The Outlook is published monthly by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research.

The Outlook praised the Thomas-McCormack proposals, which would extend wage-hour coverage and lift the minimum to 75c an hour. The bill (S. 2062) "deserves the wholehearted endorsement and support of all Americans interested in the basic ideals of the original Wage-Hour Act."

"Ball's bill," the Outlook said, "turns the clock back and reduces the effectiveness and meaning of the present Wage-Hour Act."

Three ACW Board Members To Retire

August Bellanca, A. D. Marimpietro and William Reznicek have all reached the age of 65 and will be retired as vice-presidents of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

Other incumbents and several others were nominated for the vice presidencies, and those placing as the first 16 on a referendum of the membership will be elected.

The names of Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky and Secy.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum will also appear on the referendum ballot. They are assured of re-election as there were no other nominations for these posts. The new board is expected to re-elect Exec. Vice Pres. Hyman Blumberg.

New Executive Board Of Textile Union

The following were elected executive board members at the recent convention of the CIO Textile Workers:

England Takes Labor Education to the People

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

IN a small mining community about an hour's ride by bus from Newcastle, students enrolled in a British workers' education class plodded through the snow to the small Methodist church where their class in the study of English literature was meeting. They brought their own coal and built a fire in the classroom stove.

In the Eastern District of England, a class of farm laborers and members of the Women's Land Army bicycled or walked several miles to the one-room parish house where they were taking a one-year course in the social history of England. At frequent intervals one of the students stood on a chair to pump up the lamp hanging from the ceiling so the tutor could see his notes.

Over in the Aberdeen district of Scotland, a class of housewives taking a short course in the problems of the Highlands, met in the afternoon when the children were in school. Each woman brought along some cookies and a sandwich, and tea was made in the classroom.

In North Staffordshire, some 70 students attending a one-day school on the Future of the British Trade Unions adjourned to a government-run cafeteria for "high tea" paid for by the unions, and resumed their discussions again about six.

In the same locality, a Workers' Education Association speaker lectured once a week to some 60 young prisoners in the city jail.

In the London district a class of skilled and white collar workers were enrolled in a one-year class on union problems promoted by the British Trade Union Congress to arouse interest in educational projects.

THESE are a few of the varied activities being conducted in Great Britain by the Workers' Education Association, as described by Mrs. Anne Edelman Stephansky in a recent report on a study of workers' education made during a six months' visit to England in the winter of 1946-47.

Mrs. Stephansky made the study at the suggestion of Kermit Eby, CIO director of Research & Education. She is the daughter of John Edelman, Washington representative of the CIO Textile Workers.

The study is based on interviews with officials of the WEA, British trade unions, Labor Party, universities and Local Education Authorities, school boards and on a six weeks' tour of the country planned for her by WEA officers.

Starting her tour in mid-January 1947, Mrs. Stephansky notes that it "coincided with one of the most trying periods in recent English history."

Electricity was cut off several hours during each day, street lights were turned off or dimmed. Transportation was slowed down or completely halted. No one had enough coal to keep warm at home, many schools and universities were without heat a good part of the time and movies and theaters were unheated.

Mrs. Stephansky was struck with the "vitality, the warmth and the sense of mission," among worker's education groups, that presented such an "inspiring contrast to Britain's present economic condition.

"The devotion of class members, officials and teachers kept classes going despite cold class rooms, bad transportation and material shortages of all kinds," she said.

"A GROWING realization of the country's plight gave the impetus in many areas for the establishment of new classes and new branches. People wanted to know the why and wherefore of their present situation and organized classes to find out for themselves."

Telling how tutors, after a full day's work, would travel for an hour or more to a cold class, sometimes creeping through fog and ice in a car to get to class, Mrs. Stephansky comments that the "spirit of adventure about these people and a sense of purpose, made it possible for a foreigner to have a real belief in the ultimate recovery of Britain."

Another thing that impressed her about the WEA classes, was "the breakdown of division between peoples within a community."

The WEA to which the major portion of the report is devoted, and the policies and activities developed since it was set up 41 years ago by a group of trade union and university leaders, is of particular interest to supporters of the Labor Extension Bill in this country.

This bill, now pending in Congress, proposes grants in aid to local and state groups to help finance a program somewhat similar to that of the WEA, which in general aims to help working men and women in all groups of society—industrial workers, farmers, housewives, white collar workers — become well-informed, intelligent citizens.

WHEN it was set up in 1907, the WEA was supported solely by private contributions, but in 1924, the government granted limited financial support, and under the New Education Bill passed in 1944, generous financial support was given by the government to adult education including the WEA.

In addition to funds it receives from the Ministry of Education, the WEA is financed by contributions from trade unions, educational trusts, individuals, and by membership affiliation and class fees.

The WEA operates on three levels—local or branch, district and national. For administrative purposes the country is divided into 22 districts, all the branches in the district being under the general jurisdiction of the district office.

A Central Council, composed of the district secretaries, representatives of the Workers' Educational Trade Union Committee, groups affiliated with the districts, national officer and "co-opted" members (individuals not representing any particular group, invited to participate in the Council) meet at least three times a year to formulate a national working-class education policy, convene national conferences, assist the districts and build up a national interest in education.

The Workers' Educational Trade Union Committee is composed of representatives of all nationally affiliated trade unions and the WEA's Organizing Secretary, who serves as chairman.

Types of educational programs offered by the WEA include classes emphasizing the social sciences, one-day and week-end schools, summer schools, correspondence courses, exchange of students with schools in other countries, and residential colleges.

BRITISH WORKERS' CLASS: Nearly 100,000 students—manual workers, clerks, housewives, farm laborers, civil servants, professional workers and others—are enrolled in the Workers Education Association program in Great Britain. Classes like the one above are run through the WEA's 870 local branches.

Offer Scholarships For Rubber Workers

Fifty scholarships to labor summer schools are available to locals of the United Rubber Workers under a program set up by the union's international executive board.

No local is eligible for more than two of the $120 scholarships, regardless of the size of its membership. Those who receive the scholarships will be selected by their locals with the approval of Dr. A. L. Lewis, URW education director.

The labor schools approved by the union's board are University of Wisconsin, Madison; Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio; Highlander Folk School, Monteagle, Tenn., and Hudson Shore Labor School, West Park, N. Y.

Ross In Austria

First post-war convention of the Free Austrian Confederation of Labor, meeting in Vienna, heard a message of greeting and support from the CIO.

Michael Ross, CIO director of international affairs, spoke on American labor problems and viewpoints. Ross will spend the next few weeks in Germany as CIO representative on a Labor Dept. mission which is meeting with trade union leaders in the western zones of that country.

Wins Scholarship

Pauline Leake, research director of the Georgia Workers Education Service in Atlanta, has been granted a full-expense summer scholarship by the Institute of Intl. Education to study at Leeds University in England.

German Pianist's Tour Protested

Members of several American Veterans Committee chapters in New York City are protesting the planned U. S. concert tour of Walter Gieseking, German pianist. The campaign is spearheaded by the AVC Musicians' Chapter.

Leon Goldstein, musicians chapter chairman, quoted a New York Times story by Delbert Clark from Berlin which said:

"A study of the record, including an interview with the pianist by the Military Government investigator, seems to put him (Gieseking) definitely in the class of artists who gladly gave their talent to the furtherance of the Hitler and when Hitler lost, excused themselves on the ground that they were artists and thus above politics."

Ten Chemical Workers Are Killed In Kearny, N. J., Plant Explosion

TEN CIO Chemical Workers died at the Koppers Co. plant, Kearny, N. J., last week, when trapped in a blazing building set afire by the explosion of an oil distillate tank.

Eight of 17 men trapped in the building escaped and one of them died later in the hospital.

The tank exploded, according to the company, when high winds blew some of the liquid against a hot pipe, resulting in a flash which set off the tank. The adjacent two-story building in which the men were trapped was engulfed in blazing oil.

Victims of the blast were:

Joseph Richardson, Joseph Jetter, James Freeman and Roosevelt Murray, all of Newark, Milton Cawley and Macij Mazurczyk, both of Harrison, Wladyslaw Nesterowski, West Orange, James Chisholm, Jersey City, Sidney Fisher, New York and Harms Seelman, Brooklyn.

The Kearny blast came two days after an explosion on the property of the Eastern Gas & Fuel Associates, Everett, Mass., which took the life of one CIO chemical worker. The explosion there occurred at the Boston Consolidated Gas Co., located on the EGF property.

Ontario Federation Steps Up Support of CCF Candidates

THE Ontario Federation of Labour, Canadian Congress of Labour affiliate, has launched one of the most ambitious political action programs ever undertaken by Canadian unions.

Enlisting support of CIO-CCL unions in the central Canadian province, the Federation is carrying on an intensive campaign supporting CCF candidates in the provincial election slated for June 7.

Both the OFL and the CCL have repeatedly endorsed the CCF—Co-operative Commonwealth Federation—as "the political arm of labour." The party's program provides for decent labor laws, a broad hospital plan, construction of low-cost homes for rental, increased old age pensions and a government auto insurance scheme.

"The CCF is the only party pledged to carry out the kind of program labor wants," said Joe MacKenzie, OFL president.

The OFL program on labor's needs was placed before Ontario's Conservative cabinet earlier this year but Federation officers got a cold reception from the Premier, George Drew.

Congress About to Hand People a Goose-Egg

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

FIVE months after the 80th Congress came back to Washington, its record on bills to help the people totals up to a big goose egg.

With adjournment due in a month, plenty of bills backed by labor and liberal organizations are slated to be lost in the last-minute rush.

GOP leaders in Congress contradicted themselves on which bills will be pushed, which will be shelved. There has also been no agreement among Republican top brass as to whether Congress will re-convene later in the year to clean up some of its heavy back-log.

At any rate, predictions voiced by some newspaper columnists last autumn that the Republicans would outdo the New Deal on "reform" legislation have so far proved to be just a gigantic bum guess.

Here are brief summaries of what's happening—or not happening—on important bills supported by CIO and other progressive groups:

Civil Rights

House has passed the Mundt-Nixon bill, widely criticized as the most dangerous threat in a decade to civil liberties, and forwarded it to the Senate. Action there is still a question mark—Sen. Taft talks of need for detailed study, Sen. Wherry (GOP whip in the Senate) says vote is necessary before adjournment. (See other story on Page 3).

Bills to extend civil rights are getting no such priority treatment as the Un-American Activities bill received in the House.

Anti-lynching measure, which GOP leaders had slated for fast handling in Congress, is stuck in Senate Judnciary Committee. After failing to agree on a bill, Committee members have shelved it completely.

Taft is reviving mention of the anti-poll tax bill, already passed in a voice vote by the House. But the Ohio boss of the Senate stresses that he's "making no promises."

Rep. George Bender (R., O.), sponsor of the polltax measure, asks for letters to Senators insisting (1) that the bill be called up for consideration; and (2) that the Senate limit debate—by a two-thirds vote—in order to head off southern Democrats' filibuster.

Many Republicans seem to be alibi-ing the do-nothing policy on the southerners' threat of a talk-fast, but Bender says the bill can be passed if the Senate majority wants it passed.

Housing

Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill, backed by labor and a host of liberal and veterans organizations, is still snagged in Rep. Wolcott's (R. Mich.) House Banking & Currency Committee. Wolcott, antagonistic to the bill, is making haste as slowly as he dares.

Meanwhile, about 130 Congressmen have signed petition to dismiss the committee from further handling of T-E-W bill. If bill comes to vote in House it will probably become law—it's already been ok'd by the Senate. (See other story on Page 8).

Taft-Hartley

Sen. Joe Ball (R. Minn.) is going to hear plenty when his Joint Congressional Committee on Labor-Management Relations opens hearings on Taft-Hartley law.

Ball—who faces a tough race for re-election this fall—has tried to limit testimony to five types of amendments to "improve" T-H-law. CIO witnesses from numerous unions will appear with story of what T-H law has already done to effective collective bargaining.

Oleo

There's little scientific difference in food values of butter and oleomargarine—and there's also no guarantee that Congress will end oleo taxes before adjournment. (U.S. levies a ½c-a-pound tax on white oleo, a dime tax on yellow oleo, and big license fees on manufacturers and stores).

Senate Finance Committee held two days of hearings on the bill, will probably report out a repeal bill soon. Some Senators want an amendment forcing restaurants to announce when they're serving margarine.

Such a proposal, not contained in the House passed tax repeal bill, would lead to a parliamentary snafu almost certain to prevent any final action this year. Principal contest on the tax is between legislators from dairy states, who want the tax; and from cotton states, who don't like the tax, since their products are used in production of oleo.

But consumers will benefit from repeal of the tax, Don Montgomery, legislative spokesman for the United Automobile Workers, told Senate Finance group's hearings.

"Housewives who cannot afford butter would not be penalized because they use a substitute for butter," Montgomery said.

"These taxes on oleomargarine are intended to make it difficult for them to buy a table fat which is cheaper than butter and is better than pan grease, and they have that effect."

Wage-Hour

Sen. Labor sub-committee (headed by Ball, too) held hearings on changes in Wage-Hour Act. Thomas-McCormack Bill would lift minimum pay from 40 to 75c an hour, extend coverage; Ball's own bill called for only a 20c rise in pay base countered by widespread weakening of the law.

It looks as if neither bill will get to first base at this session.

Education

Quality of schooling for American kids varies widely throughout the country—depending, in part, on wealth of the various states.

U. S. Aid to Education Bill (HR 2953) provides federal funds to bolster state school programs. Almost nobody is against the proposal—publicly, at least.

Nevertheless, it's been stalled in the House for months, although it was passed by heavy margin in the Senate.

Nothing is apt to happen unless House Labor Committee issues favorable report or majority of Congressmen sign discharge petition and blast the bill onto the floor by that difficult process.

Labor education extension bills have also won strong industry and union support. Senate committee has issued favorable report—but House Labor Committee is just winding up hearings.

A General Motors spokesman (the company made a million dollars a day profit in the first quarter of this year) won headlines objecting to a CIO-PAC pamphlet against high prices which a University of Michigan extension course instructor had brought in to class. "Marxism," said the GM man. He said GM isn't against the bill, but wants Congress to know what "might" happen.

Write your Senators to get an early, favorable vote on S. 1390; urge House Labor Committee members (headed by Rep. Hartley) for a report of approval as soon as possible.

Social Security

Social security has felt Congressional knife twice this session.

Pres. Truman's veto of Gearhart bill, wich takes magazines and newspaper salesmen out of social security, was over-ridden in House and Senate, and has become law.

Funds for Federal Security Administration were badly chopped in the House though Senate may still restore them in full or in part.

But bills to improve a social security system, which has been getting rusty through the years, have been pigeonholed.

Old age pensions average less than $30 a month—not even within shouting distance of present living costs. But McGrath-Murray-Wagner-Dingell bill (S. 2422 and HR 6099) has received little support, no action. Same goes for proposals to improve unemployment compensation and temporary disability insurance.

Natl. Health Insurance Bill (S. 1320, HR 3548) has been buried six feet under by GOP majority. Even Sen. Taft's substitute measure (S. 545), turning the health insurance proposal into a charity scheme, has been gathering dust.

Anti-Inflation

Anti-inflation bills disappeared from view the day Chicago commodity market prices broke several months ago.

Although prices have snapped back since then, nothing further has been heard of them.

Citizenship

Akse Bergh, a native of Norway, has been sailing for 12 years—much of the time on U. S. ships. He's a member of the Natl. Maritime Union.

During the war, he sailed in the first allied convoy to the Mediterranian, worked on ships in the sub-infested Persian Gulf, sailed to the Philippines and was on the Leyte invasion fleet. Twice turned down by the Army and Navy because he was more useful in the Merchant Marine, Bergh won a Navy citation for "loyal, sober, industrious, conscientious service."

For Bergh and many alien seamen like him CIO maritime unions are pushing the Celler bill (HR. 6033), which comes up for hearings at a House immigration sub-committee May 26. It would give alien seamen—thousands of whom risked their lives for Uncle Sam—a chance at American citizenship.

Bill provides that for each month of wartime service in merchant marine, aliens will be given two months residence credit towards the five years needed for citizenship.

Many of the alien seamen face deportation unless the bill passes. Dept. of Justice, which has opposed other bills on the subject, is keeping hands off this one.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

GM Settles, Chrysler Reported Agreed

LATE FLASH: As the CIO NEWS went to press, the radio reported that Chrysler had settled for a 13 cent an hour straight increase.

The CIO Auto Workers and the General Motors Corp. last week startled the industrial world with a wage settlement that came after nearly 20 hours of continuous negotiations. (Details of the settlement are on Page 3). Above, looking chipper after the long session, are (left to right): UAW vice Pres. John W. Livingston; T. A. Johnstone, assistant director of UAW's General Motors Department; Harry W. Anderson, GM vice president and director of personnel, and Louis Seaton, GM director of labor relations. They are looking over the agreement, which has been recommended to the 225,000 UAW-GM members for approval. To the left Chrysler strikers are shown.

Wage Roundup

Strike Continues At Wilson & Co.

CIO Packinghouse Workers were returning to the plants last week, many of them bearing physical evidence of picket line encounters with scabs and police during the seven weeks' strike.

At Wilson & Co., settlement was still on the list of unfinished business. Wilson employes, angered by the company's refusal to submit proposed firings to grievance procedure or arbitration, voted not to return until the company changed its stand.

Armour, Swift and Cudahy previously agreed to drop insistence on arbitrary firings, most of which would have affected union leaders, and agreed to submit the issue to grievance procedure and arbitration.

Charging Wilson with violation of the contract terms which remained in effect, the union has filed an injunction and damage suits against the company. Wilson it claimed, has been denying vacation and sick pay benefits to strikers in violation of the contract.

During the long battle for higher pay, more than 50 injunctions were slapped on the union throughout the nation. Three strikers lost their lives in company-inspired back-to-work movements. Local police, state militia and national guardsmen were thrown into the fray to assist strikebreakers through the picket lines.

Elsewhere CIO unions continued pressing for higher pay as contract expiration or reopening dates approached.

Telephone: The day after announcement of the General Motors settlement, the American Telephone & Telegraph Corp. decided to renew contract talks with CIO long lines employes.

But the GM settlement had not shaken the world's largest corporation from its "no pay rise" position. Instead, AT&T offered a 3-year contract with no raise and two wage reopenings. This is the same settlement previously accepted by telephone unions representing 54,000 employes. All but two of these are affiliates of the Independent Communications Workers of America.

The CIO union is seeking a 30c hourly raise, a union shop and improved pensions.

Maritime: Five CIO maritime unions and one AFL union will meet jointly with East, West and Gulf Coast steamship owners in an effort to conclude contract talks before the June 15 contract expiration date.

Principal bone of contention is the union hiring hall, which, the companies claim, violates the Taft-Hartley law as it is now operated.

Textile: Threat of a June 1 walkout by 20,000 CIO textile workers in the rug and carpet industry loomed as the union announced the companies had failed to make a "reasonable offer." The union is seeking a 20c hourly rise plus 5c an hour to adjust inequities.

Companies involved are the Mohawk Carpet Co., Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Co., Alexander Smith Carpet Co. and Karagheusian Carpet Co.

Profits of the six concerns, the unions said, last year increased 32.8% over 1946.

Farm Equipment: Contracts between the CIO Farm Equipment Workers and Intl. Harvester Co. have been extended another month to permit further wage talks. The agreements were scheduled to expire May 27.

So far, said Gerald Fielde, secretary-treasurer of FE's Intl. Harvester Council, the company has proposed "a contract which is plainly intended to throw overboard collective bargaining and basic working standards."

Uxtra! Uxtra! C. of C. Split Open Over U. S. Spending

FOR good red hot newspaper copy, there's nothing like a split in the ranks of a union. Stories like those get front page treatment, preferably with pictures and big headlines. If the paper has had experience, it sometimes runs the same story two or three days in a row with scarcely a change in the facts.

On the other hand, you'll get the impression from your daily papers that the country's business organizations stand 100% united, sir, behind their lofty ideals.

So it may please you to know that there's been a real, old-fashioned, honest-to-goodness split in the ranks of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce. (We'll bet you didn't read about it in your daily paper).

THE fuss, according to the Congressional Quarterly, is over "government economy." The U. S. Chamber is all for economy—and so it urged the Senate to knock $200 million out of a $700 million river-and-harbors appropriation bill.

But many local Chambers disagreed—particularly where Uncle Sam was preparing to spend dollars and cents in the old home town.

The Senate Appropriations Committee received many requests that "favorite project" be kept in the bill. Some of the leters took direct issue with the national Chamber of Commerce "economy" position.

Partly as a result of such home-town pressure, the Senate killed the funds cut. And also put a dent in the Chamber's united front.

CIO Backs Truman on Security

The CIO has given its indorsement to Pres. Truman's new social security message and has urged Congress to enact it speedily.

The praise for Truman's message was contained in a letter from Van A. Bittner, chairman of the CIO Committee on Social Security, to the President. Bittner said the message was "strong."

The letter from Bittner to Congressmen declared "failure to enact broad improvements in the social security program will mean tragedy for millions of Americans and a severe setback to our program of international friendship.

"It is inexcusable not to provide decent benefits to the aged, widows and orphans, persons who are sick, or unemployed, and others who are victims of ill-fortune."

THE President's message to Congress, in which he declared "now is the time," included:

1. Raise the limit on earnings under social security from $3000 to $4800 a year

2. Increase the social security payroll deduction rate from 1% to 1½%.

3. Make women eligible for old age pensions at age 60 rather than the present age 65 for both men and women.

4. Broad recommendations—worked out with Federal Security Administrator Oscar Ewing and Democratic Congressional leaders:

a. Extension of coverage for old-age and survivors insurance.

c. Insurance against loss of earnings because of illness or disability. The President asked that in cases of disability for six months or more insurance be established against loss of earnings as part of the present system of old-age and survivors' insurance.

d. Improved public assistance for the needy. Specifically, this recommendation advocated legislation to permit the government to increase the money it spends on matching state funds for the aged, related "more equitably" to the financial resources and needs of each state.

He pointed out Congress not only has failed to act on his previous recommendations, but is now considering legislation to withdraw social security protection from many persons now covered.

"I believe that instead of limiting coverage, it should be expanded and that a number of other improvements should be made," he said

Truman Asks Aid For Education

The American system of education is in "danger of a serious breakdown," unless Congress provides Federal aid for education, Pres. Truman warned last week.

In a letter to House Speaker Martin, Pres. Truman urged the House to follow Senate action in approving a bill to provide Federal aid for education.

The education bill, along with some minimum wage measures, has been bottled up in the House Education and Labor Committee for many months.

Congress Group Finds

GOP Apathy Speeds Deflation Menace

"IT is clear now that it is too late to expect any change of policy by the leadership of this Congress. The choice, therefore, must be made by the people between the policy of action and the policy of drift."

Thus did the minority members of the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report hurl the gauntlet at the do-nothing policy of Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., O.), chairman of the committee.

Sen. O'Mahoney

The minority report, signed by Sen. Joseph O'Mahoney D., Wyo.), vice chairman of the committee; Sen. Francis Myers (D., Pa.), Sen. John Sparkman (D., Ala.), Rep. Edward Hart (D., N. J.), Rep. Wright Patman (D., Tex.) and Rep. Walter Huber (D., O.), had these highlights:

President's reports: These, "as contrasted with the interim reports of the Joint Committee, the actions of the standing committees of the 80th Congress and the laws passed by Congress itself strikingly emphasize the conflicting points of view of the executive and of the legislative branches. Pres. Truman has recommended affirmative action to hold inflation in check . . . Congress has preferred inaction."

(In referring to the "President's report," the minority means the reports of the Council of Economic Advisers.)

Inaction: "The hope of those who prefer the policy of inaction is that somehow, without government guidance, things will take care of themselves, that somehow the law of supply and demand, instead of inevitably producing inflation due to competition among spenders for goods, will somehow equalize conflicting forces, that rising prices will induce production in sufficient volume to meet demand and that in some vague and unpredictable way the economic system will adjust itself if only the government follows a policy of keeping hands off.

"That this is unsound is demonstrated by the fact that even its advocates, as indicated by the action of the Senate with respect to consumer credit and rent control, concede that there are circumstances in which government cannot afford to keep hands off."

Evil effects: "Seven million American families at the bottom of the economic scale were obliged in 1946 to subsist on an average annual income of only $835 . . . In terms of purchasing power it means—and there is no dispute in the committee on this point—that these 7,000,000 families offer a much poorer market to industrial and agricultural producers and those engaged in trade than would be the case if Congress chosen to take a positive stand.

"If the price spiral continues and the next group of seven million families, who in 1946 had an average income of $2023, are compelled, like the group at the bottom of the scale, to forego the purchase of necessaries as well as of luxuries, then business will really begin to feel the disadvantages of shrinking markets.

"If finally the inflationary balloon is allowed to burst, then indeed business will come rushing to Congress for government aid much as it did after the collapse of 1929."

The danger: "How dangerously close (to the breaking point) inflation has carried us is demonstrated by this fact: the average wage in manufacturing in June, 1947, was $1.18 per hour. If the average manufacturing worker works 50 forty-hour weeks a year, he would earn only $2360 or 41% below the necessary minimum for a family of three children; or 33% below the minimum for a family of two children. Since June, 1947, prices have increased faster than straight time wage rates."

(The reference to the "necessary minimum" for a family means the Bur. of Labor Statistics' "City Worker's Family Budget" report.)

Peril to business: The minority quotes the Natl. City Bank of New York as expressing gloom over the resistance of buyers to many items on the market, particularly at Easter, and as saying "The result is bound to be an increase in business failures and rising pressures of competition on profit margins."

What has been done: "To date, the Congress has done nothing about either the cost of living or the housing shortage. True, the Senate has passed a bill to control consumer credit—but the House has taken no action. The Senate has passed a housing bill, but the outlook for it in the House is dark."

"Now Is the Time": "The facts before us, as well as the experience of the past, teach us that the result of Congressional inaction means only that the pattern of the past will be repeated even to the depths of diseaster.

"Those who have urged the policy of inaction have contended that government controls in time of peace are intolerable, but they overlook the fact that these are not times of peace.

"It is an utterly false assumption to contend that, with the turbulent world discharging economic and political lightning of an intensity scarcely ever seen before, the people and business leaders can safely close their eyes and pretend that we are living in a normal world.

"These are not normal times. They are abnormal times."

Conclusion: "It is important, therefore, coldly to reappraise the President's reports, and weigh his recommendations in the light of the hard facts before us and the desire of the American people to achieve world peace and a stable economy in which Freedom and a stable economy may be maintained."

Over the Top Again

The Washington local of the CIO Oil Workers has gone over the top again. The local voted to subscribe to the CIO News for all its members. This is the local that recently received a PAC honor award because the members had subscribed 277% of its PAC quota.

GM Settles; What Next?

By GLORIA CAPLAN

AS a big crack appeared in industry's "no wage hike" stone wall, American big business seemed ready to play a new follow-the-leader game.

This time the new leader was General Motors, but the big question was who would play.

With 75,000 Chrysler workers in their second strike week, with such industrial giants as General Electric, Westinghouse and U. S. Steel adamant in their "no's" to union demands, with Ford demanding wage cuts, General Motors last week threw a hand grenade into the stone wall.

Just 72 hours away from a strike deadline and after 2½ months negotiating, GM and the CIO Auto Workers reached a settlement. The union immediately announced it was not what it wanted for its members, but that in the light of the current period of "economic and political reaction" it represented a UAW victory.

Here is what the new two-year agreement provides:

- A total increase of 11c an hour for the 225,000 workers covered by the contract is effective May 29.
- Three cents of this amount represents a straight "standard of living" increase.
- The remaining 8c is a cost-of-living raise, designed to bring workers' purchasing power up to the 1940 level.
- Beginning next Sept. 1, the union and the company will examine the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics consumer index. If the index has gone up, the workers automatically receive a 1c hourly increase for every 1.14 points of the rise. If the index has gone down, wages will be revised downward in the same manner. The corporation, however, is prohibited from cutting wages more than 5c an hour between now and 1950.
- Next May an additional 3c hourly "standard of living" increase goes into effect.

TIED thus to the cost-of-living roller-coaster, the formula protects the workers against the squeeze of inflationary prices, and if prices decline, assures them of no greater wage cut than 5c an hour. In addition to maintaining the 1940 wage level, it increases that level by 3c an hour.

In place of the union shop, sought by the UAW, the agreement provides for checkoff of dues. The long-debated question of pensions awaits a final decision of the NLRB before it is resolved. If the NLRB rules that collective bargaining on pensions is mandatory, the corporation will discuss inclusion of such a plan in the 1950 contract.

The agreement raises GM workers' purchasing power by $55 million a year. If the same formula is eventually applied to the rest of the auto industry, it will mean a purchasing power rise of $220 billion, the UAW said.

Whether the corporation will reimburse itself for the wage increases by boosting prices has not yet been established. The union is insisting that GM can easily afford the wage increase without a price hike.

To support its claim, the UAW pointed out that the seven major automobile assemblers enjoyed such great profits in 1947 as to permit the wage increase provided in the GM formula, as well as a price roll-back of $230 on each passenger car. After this the companies would still enjoy a 6% return on their investment.

GM GRANTS PAY RAISES Breaks Industry's United Front

THE union's reaction to the settlement was aired in a statement by J. W. Livingston, UAW vice president, and T. A. Johnstone, assistant director of the UAW's General Motors division.

On the "plus" side, as they see it, are these factors:

- "It is a far-reaching victory in a period when powerful and greedy forces in American finance and industry were determined to block wage increases or even reduce wages while prices continue to rise."
- "It will assist the rest of American workers, now stymied by industry's "no's," "in getting a small measure of economic justice."
- "It is a staggering defeat for the 'no wage increase' policy launched by U. S. Steel and General Electric and copied by the Chrysler Corp," as well as for the Ford Motor Co., which proposes a wage cut.
- The 3c "standard of living" boost, though small, indicates that GM has conceded the validity of the union's argument that workers are entitled to share in the growing output. If the principle is accepted by the rest of industry, it can have far-reaching effects on collective bargaining in the future.

On the negative side, the UAW officials listed the following:

- "Substantial as it is, the UAW-CIO regards this victory as essentially a holding operation. It can be termed a victory only in the context of today's economic and political reaction. Nevertheless, we are recommending its acceptance by General Motors workers as their contribution to industrial peace, even though it does not represent all they are entitled to and is far short of the contribution which General Motors could and should make to a sturdy, healthy and equitable national economy."
- GM's use of 1940 as the base for measuring wages was unsatisfactory to the union. That wages were "far too low" that year to sustain full employment was indicated by the 8 million workers then unemployed.
- "Instead of sharing its dangerously inflated profits beyond a cost-of-living adjustment based on a depressed 1940 wage, General Motors offered an annual increase of 2% or 3c an hour as a gesture toward keeping the workers' purchasing power abreast of the increased output . . ."
- The union, they said, accepts the provision tying wages to the cost-of-living "only because those in control in government and in industry show no signs of acting at the public interest.
- "The assumption that workers can expect no more than to remain on the economic treadmill, inching up 3c an hour per year, while management and stockholders reap profits proportionately far in excess of that amount, is unsound and unwise."

Although GM's statement accompanying its proposals to the union offered no clue to the riddle "Why did GM desert industry's united front?", it did represent an acceptance of the union's major economic arguments.

"Perhaps," it said, "the easiest thing for us to do would be to say no" to your economic demands following the position generally taken by many other important employers and hope that with better crops this summer the cost of living would go down and that in the meantime your union and its members would be patient and would not precipitate a disastrous series of strikes. This would be leaving all of the responsibility with you. We believe we should share this responsibility . . ."

The economic facts, it continued, "may be interpreted to support the union's contention that GM workers have been placed at a disadvantage by the fact that consumer prices have advanced more rapidly than their hourly earnings." In addition, it accepted the union's contention that workers should share in the gains resulting from increased production.

The company's proposals were based on these two principles. However, when it came down to brass tacks, Livingston and Johnstone said, the "figure itself shortchanges the principle involved."

The Game Starts

Shortly after news of the UAW-GM agreement appeared, a follow-the-leader game started:

- General Electric, which spearheaded the old "no increase" march, was the first to suggest it was deserting the old ranks. Calling for immediate resumption of wage talks with the CIO Electrical Workers, GE's vice president, L. R. Boulware, said GE would have to "take another look" at previous decision to keep GE wages frozen.
- The possibility that the two-weeks Chrysler strike would be ended within a few days grew as negotiations, broken off three weeks ago, were resumed the day after the GM settlement. The union's original request for 30c an hour was sliced down to 17c as talks opened. Whether Chrysler would follow GM's pattern, no one knew.

Uses Citizenship Meet To Hit Labor

Over angry protests of both AFL and CIO, the National Conference on Citizenship ended with a labor-baiting speech by Donald Richberg.

The conference was held in Washington under the auspices of the Justice Dept. and the Natl. Education Association. It was supposed to promote ideals of good citizenship.

Richberg is a big business spokesman who often sounds off against unions. He testified recently against a fair employment practices act to end discrimination in industry. He used the citizenship conference to attack so-called labor monopolies.

AFL Legislative Rep. Lewis Hines broke the polite atmosphere of the conference by objecting vigorously to Richberg's use of the forum for anti-labor propangada. He charged that "Mr. Richberg collaborates with labor's enemies on the Hill." He challenged Richberg to fair debate, but his offer was not taken up.

Anticipating the nature of Richberg's remarks, the CIO earlier had withdrawn from the conference. Four CIO spokesmen criticized the biased nature of the program as arranged by Atty. Gen. Tom Clark and the educators.

NAM Spent $4 Million For T-H, etc.

THE Natl. Association of Manufacturers spent more more than $4 million last year to get its program across.

Most of that $4 million went into selling the public and Congress on the necessity for tax relief—especially for big business—and on the necessity for "curbs" on labor. It got what it wanted.

Recently the Association reluctantly filed its first statement of lobbying expenses under the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act. Although the NAM's total 1947 budget was the largest of any organization which filed, only a small hunk of that $4 million appeared on the report as a "direct lobbying" expense.

The NAM estimated it spent $146,000 for lobbying last year. Some of the other items on the budget, all intended to influence legislation directly or indirectly, were:

"Government finance," $60,288; "industrial relations," $146,193; government relations div., $166,495; "law," $125,348; "total direct legislative," $670,922; "NAM program," $2,364,105; "public relations," $1,947,365.

Previously the NAM had refused to file a lobbying statement, insisting that the courts would first have to define the term "principal activity" in the law.

IN case you're interested in the kind of money that's been blockading the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill, take the real estate lobby, composed of the Natl. Association of Real Estate Boards, the Natl. Association of Home Builders and the U. S. Savings & Loan League.

Pres. Truman last June termed the real estate lobby "selfish and shortsighted." Its activities, he said, were "clearly subversive of representative government."

The NAREB says it spent $32,976 on direct efforts to influence congressmen on housing legislation in the first three months of 1948.

This is the group now on trial in Washington, D. C., federal district court on a price-fixing charge.

The Home Builders are as coy about registering under the Lobbying Act as the NAM. NAHB Exec. Vice Pres. Frank Cortright, to underscore the Association's "who me?" attitude, attached a letter to his registration, insisting that the blank "does not in any way constitute an admission by registrant that he is subject to the Act."

Last year, according to the statement, the NAHB spent $58,592 on lobbying. Compared with the NAREB's $32,976 expenditure for just the first three months of this year, this makes the Home Builders mere "pikers." The Natl. Savings and Loan League says it only put out $581.66 the first quarter of 1948.

Electrical Union Okays GM Plan

Essentially the same formula as that accepted by UAW negotiators with General Motors has been agreed to by CIO Electrical Workers officials for the 40,000 employes in the GM electrical division.

If accepted by the membership an 11c hourly raise will be effective as of May 29.

25 BUCKS PER MONTH

A fellow we know has decided—most definitely—not to retire and try to live a life of ease on his Social Security pension.

He figured it out this way:

He could provide decent shelter with his pension but would have to go naked and starve to death.

A fairly good room in Washington, you know, rents for $25 a month—the exact amount of the pension he would draw.

And 25 bucks a month is the average now being paid retired workers under the Social Security System.

That isn't enough, President Truman said in a message to Congress the other day. That's what the CIO has been saying for a long time.

Back in 1935, when the CIO was born and the Social Security Act was passed, there were millions of persons who considered the SS pension schedule was a reasonable one.

And maybe it was.

But today it takes nearly as much money to buy a basket as was required for a basketfull of groceries in those days.

The Social Security Act was amended back in 1939 to make the pension provision more liberal.

It should be amended again—to make it reasonable and realistic in the light of today's high living costs. ★ ★ ★

UAW'S VICTORY MAY OPEN WAY

The "yes" which General Motors gave to the United Auto Workers was sweet music compared with the chorus of sour "no's" with which industry had been meeting many of labor's wage increase requests.

In agreeing to raise the pay of its 225,000 workers, GM accepted two important arguments advanced by the union:

1. Wage earners need pay hikes to compensate for the increase in the cost of living.

2. Workers should benefit financially from the increased productivity of the company which employs them.

Gaining recognition for these two points was a victory in itself.

We think the UAW officers who reported on the GM negotiations should be commended for the forthright manner in which they attempted to show their members—and the public—exactly what the union was getting from GM.

They hailed the agreement as a major victory but added that "it can be termed a victory only in the context of today's economic and political reaction."

They said GM could and should have made a better settlement.

They stated they had accepted the proposal for tying wage adjustments directly to the Government cost-of-living index "only because most of those in control in government and in industry show no sign of acting in the public interest."

They ended their report with, "In spite of these criticisms of the settlement, we believe that in accepting it the GM workers will be making a substantial contribution to the economic health of the nation and to the welfare of their fellow Americans."

A number of CIO unions have been chipping holes in the "no wage hike" front of industry—and there's a good chance that the UAW-GM settlement will break it wide open.

If this happens, the UAW victory will be of outstanding significance.

Found Guilty--By Association!

Communist Party Violently Opposed to Mundt-Nixon Bill and So Am I

By ALLAN L. SWIM

MY OLD friend and Commie-fighting companion, Pres. Harry Martin of the Newspaper Guild, was really on the spot a month or so ago.

He was sweating it out—and why not?

The State Dept. had turned thumbs down on his serving as a U. S. delegate to a world meeting in Switzerland on freedom of the press.

Harry was found guilty of the awful "crime" of having donated a small sum to help found an organization which some folks now list as being left-wingish.

The White House intervened after some of Martin's newspaper friends turned on the heat—and Harry finally got to the Geneva parley.

MARTIN'S crime was only a misdemeanor compared with the terrible thing I did a couple of weeks ago.

I came out flat-footedly in opposition to the Mundt-Nixon "Subversives Control" Bill, which is No. 1 on the Communist hate parade.

The Reds oppose the measure because it, for most practical purposes, would outlaw the operation of the Communist Party in the United States.

I oppose it because it seriously threatens the civil liberties of all Americans and gives a powerful weapon to those who are trying to establish that damnable business known as "guilt by association."

Part of my opposition stems from my belief that you can't beat an idea to death with a club. Then, I'm afraid of what might happen to me—and to you—if the measure becomes law.

INVESTIGATORS like those employed by the House Un-American Actvities Committee could dig up a lot of circumstantial evidence to prove that I'm a dangerous character.

They would start checking down in Memphis, where they eventually would come across a couple of cops who don't know the difference between Communism and rheumatism. These gendarmes, no doubt, will say that I had "Red tendencies."

After all, didn't I raise a lot of sand about the manner in which the police department sat on its collective hump while CIO organizers were being beaten into bloody pulps back in the '30's?

And didn't I throw my meager support behind those "dangerous foreign agitators" who sat up CIO unions at the Ford and Firestone plants?

Even worse than that, I helped break a few race segregation laws.

THE investigation shifts to Milwaukee, where I had a drink at a bar one night and engaged in earnest conversation with a man who, I learned later, was a state leader of the Communist Party.

I'm quite sure that a couple of men I took a train trip with one day were fellow travelers.

And, then, I'm the friend of a woman whose ex-husband used to stick pins into the rumps of policemen's horses—so the horses would rear and permit CP photographers to get photos of "vicious capitalistic cops running down the proletariat."

A good snooper could soon determine that I read the Daily Worker. (How else could I learn about the nasty things the Worker calls me?)

DON'T get the idea that I'm kidding about what could happen to me if the Mundt-Nixon Bill becomes law and "guilt by association" becomes the accepted method of dealing with people.

Remember what happened to Harry Martin?

Recall the Commerce Dept. official with a clean record who felt compelled to submit his resignation because his young daughter became a teletype operator for the Russian news agency. (The fact that he later withdrew his resignation doesn't make the matter less serious.)

How about the Oak Ridge scientist who was suspended on charges such as, "A neighbor has stated that she believes a close relative by marriage is a Communist?"

And don't forget those State Dept. employes who were fired as "bad security risks" and were not given an apportunity to confront their accusers?

MOVE over, you radicals and liberals, I'm heading for the doghouse—though I don't know whether there will be room for both me and my Red-baiting machine.

And, once on the inside, I'll laugh and laugh and laugh—and reserve a nice dark corner for Col. Bertie McCormick.

He's guilty, too—and don't forget it. His Chicago Tribune followed the Party Line in its bitter fight against the European Recovery Program.

Herald Tribune Blasts Labor Board Ruling

The Republican N. Y. Herald Tribune in a recent editorial attacks the ruling of the Natl. Labor Relations Board—that management may make anti-union speeches at a meeting on company time where attendance is compulsory—as being weighted too much in favor of employers:

"The Wagner act laid heavy restrictions on the right of management to present its case to employes and to use ordinary methods of persuasion. It was proper that the balance should be redressed.

"The Taft-Hartley law provides that the expression of any views, arguments, or opinions by management does not constitute an unfair labor practice unless it contains a threat of reprisal or promise of benefit.

"A decision just handed down by the National Labor Relations Board, interpreting this provision, holds that anti-union speeches may be delivered by management even at a meeting on company time where attendance is compulsory.

"It is questionable, it seems to us, whether such a decision does not swing the balance too far in the other direction. The wording of the act may leave the board no choice but to hold that an anti-union speech is permissible regardless of the circumstances in which it is delivered.

"But traditional concepts of freedom and fair play suggest the contrary. Americans have always felt instinctively that freedom is effective only when both sides have an approximately equal chance to exert persuasion and when the individual addressed has a right to listen or not as he sees fit.

"The right of the employer to make his views known in perfect freedom must be safeguarded. But it seems reasonable to expect that in future decisions, or in a future amendment of the law, the right will be defined anew.

"What can be said by management at a voluntary meeting may well be unfair at one where the worker's attendance is enforced."

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP By YOMEN

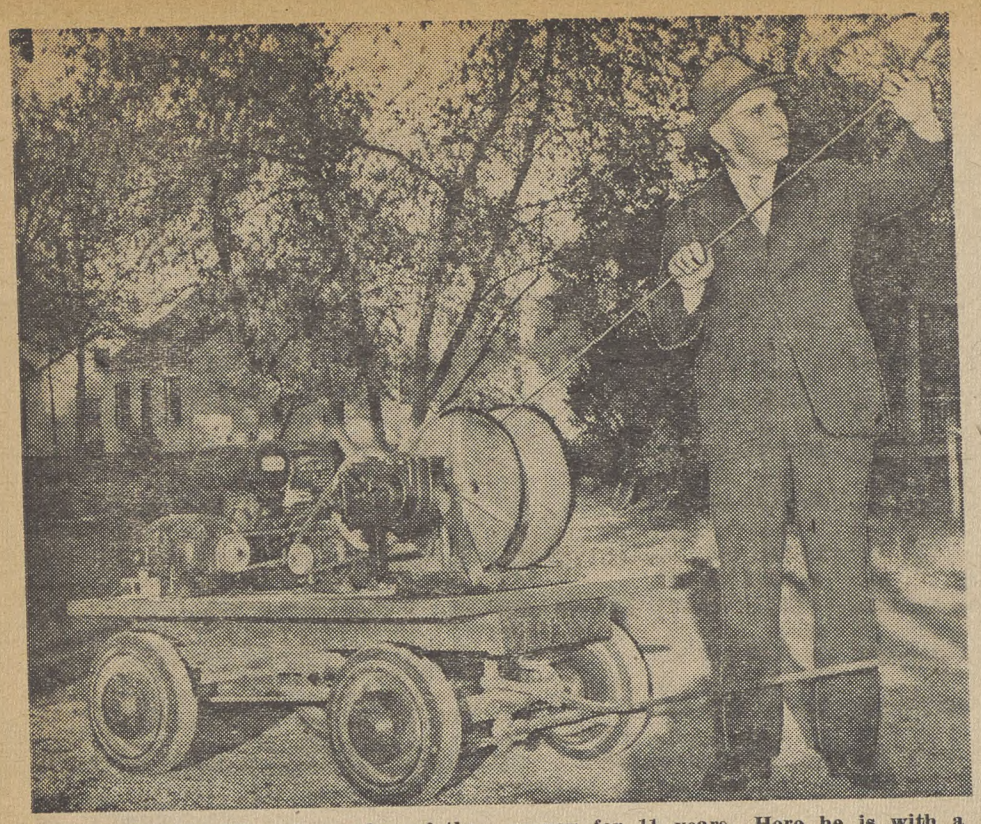
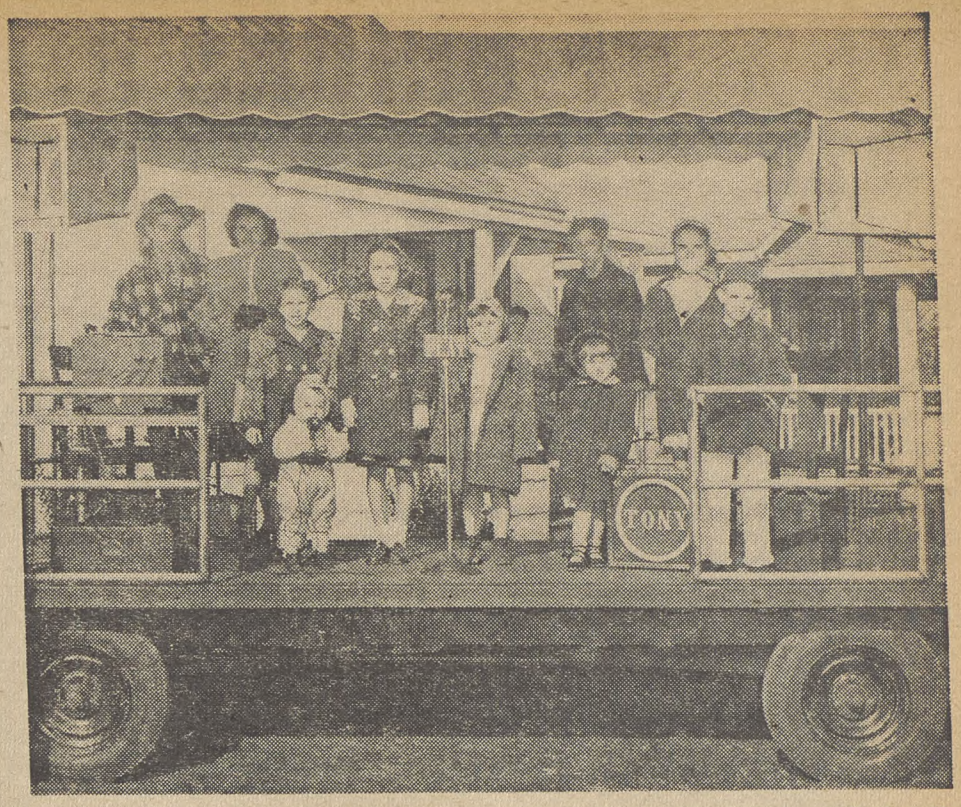
"Tell me, Dripp, that was your idea, wasn't it?"



TONY ZIEGLER: A member of the CIO United Paper Workers in Monroe, Mich., Tony has been making toys and playground equipment for children on his own time and money for 11 years. Here he is with a portable power plant which he uses to light up his trailer stage. With the winch he lets out and reels in giant kites. It's certainly fun, he says.



TONY'S LITTLE THEATER: The kids sure go for this, Tony Ziegler says. The tiny stage trailer, complete with record player, microphone and amplifier, is wheeled around to all the city playgrounds. The children sing, dance and play their instruments on the stage while one of them acts as announcer. It's great experience.

A CIO Member's Hobby: Keeping Children Happy

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

TONY Ziegler's backyard was full of children. Fifty or more of them in assorted sizes, from diaper age to 14-year-olds, were having a wonderful time.

Every day kids from the neighborhood and beyond raced to Tony's as fast and as soon as they could.

The attraction was the complete playground which Tony had built for them. Merry-go-round, teeter-totters, sand box, hobby horses in three sizes, swings, slides and other play equipment—all built by Tony's hand were there for the children's pleasure.

Tony belongs to the CIO. He's a member of Paper Workers Local 1006 in Monroe, Mich., and a delegate to the Monroe County CIO Council. He works for Consolidated Paper Co.

The backyard playground was only the beginning of Tony Ziegler's work for kids. He later built a complete playground at the Monroe Community Center.

First he bought a four-wheel rubber-tired farm wagon, covered it with a green-topped metal canopy, and fitted it out as a portable stage, equipped with two large speakers, an amplifier, a microphone, record player and more than a hundred children's records.

Ziegler tours his little theatre around to all the playgrounds in Monroe. Two evenings a week from 8:30 to 10:30 teen-agers dance at St. Mary's Park to the music from the stage. The children sing and dance on the stage on all occasions, with one of them acting as announcer.

BUILDING and flying kites for the kids is another of Tony Ziegler's hobbies. He made one enormous fellow that releases a full-sized man-dummy in a regulation sized 28-foot parachute, which comes floating to the ground nearly a mile or so away. The kids run and bring it back. Once the big kite pulled an automobile across the field, Tony says.

His kite building brought him such fame that he was asked to conduct kite making classes in thes chools. He has toured all the playgrounds in town with his big kite act, and made out-of-town trips to Willow Run, Belle Isle in Detroit, and Birmingham, Mich.

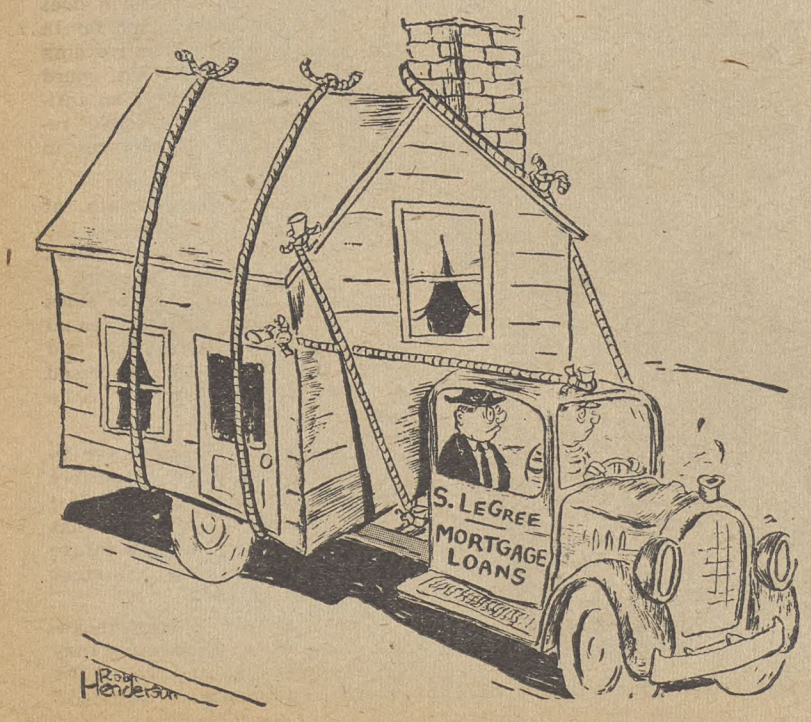
For a long time, Tony Ziegler paid all the expenses connected with the children's projects, himself. He figures that this came to about $1,500 in 11 years. Then finally as his reputation spread, unions and other community organizations began contributing to the work.

CIO unions gave nearly $400, two AFL unions each contributed $50, the Monroe Recreation Dept. gave him $100, and the Firemen's Association of Monroe, $25. The Elks presented him with a plaque and the Community Center's Youth Board gave him a badge engraved, "Tony—Monroe's Youth Entertainer."

The Monroe County CIO Council is very proud of Tony Ziegler. "He has been doing things for the children of Monroe and surrounding communities for the last 12 years," says the Council's president, Floyd R. Hoffer. "Children are his biggest interest in this day and age when we forget too soon about the welfare and enjoyment of the younger set."

Hoffer expresses the hope that Tony Ziegler's good work will interest other CIO members in starting a similar program in their localities.

KITE BUILDING: Each spring Tony goes around to all the schools conducting classes in making kites. "Kite flying is my hobby," he says. He still remembers the thrill he got 30 years ago when some big boys made kites for him.



Charges GOP Plot Against Housing

Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., national housing chairman of the American Veterans Committee, charged that "a few powerful House Republican leaders are making a last-ditch attempt to kill the public housing section of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner Bill."

Roosevelt declared that it was reported in the press that "a Republican wrecking crew of Martin (Mass.), Halleck (Ind.), and Wolcott (Mich.) had presented an ultimatum to Senator Taft that unless he accepted the TEW Bill without public housing they would attempt to prevent House action on any housing legislation this session."

Taft rejected the ultimatum in no uncertain terms, Roosevelt said.

With Congress scheduled to adjourn June 19, TEW proponents were frantically trying to obtain the necessary 218 signatures to Discharge Petition 6, which would wrest the bill out of House Banking Committee Chairman Wolcott's hands and bring it to the floor.

More Signers

The list published by the CIO News May 24 has been supplemented by the signatures of the following:

Albert Rains (D., Ala.); Wilbur Mills, James W. Trimble (D., Ark.); Max Schwabe (R., Mo.); Katherine St. George (R., N. Y.); Michael J. Kirwan (D., O.); James E. Van Zandt (R., Pa.); Joe L. Evins (D., Tenn.); J. Percy Priest (D., Tenn.); J. N. Combs (D., Tex.); Charles Plumley (R., Vt.) and Thor C. Tollefson (R., Wash.).

Chief abstainers are the Southerners, Pearson pointed out, who explain they do not sign such petitions on "principle," but who nevertheless rushed to sign the oleomargarine discharge petition.

This inconsistency was called to the attention of Rep. Carl Durham (D., N. C.) last week by CIO Textile Workers Leg. Rep. John Edelman.

Durham had written Edelman on March 8 that he had never signed a discharge petition since becoming a member of the House.

Wrote Edelman: How do you reconcile your refusal to sign the petition with the fact that you signed the OLEO petition?

75% OF UNIONS HIT 3d PARTY

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

FOLLOWING the example of CIO industrial union councils, nearly 75% of the CIO's international unions and organizing committees have indorsed CIO's policy against a third party in 1948.

The returns also make pathetic the claims of Sen. Glen H. Taylor (D., Ida.), Henry A. Wallace's third party running mate. Taylor, in a speech at Salt Lake City, made this comment on the CIO's stand against his new party: "Labor never has been so misled. I predict that a good many new labor leaders will take control in the next few years."

(CIO Councils Dir. John Brophy, commenting on Taylor's statement, quipped: "I predict there'll be many new Senators taking control in the next few years.")

More than 90% of CIO's industrial union councils have approved CIO national policy on the third party and ERP. Here is how the affiliated unions have acted:

Amalgamated Clothing Workers: convention indorsed policy.

Auto Workers: Board has indorsed.

Barbers & Beauty Culturists: from Lilyan Moscowitz, natl. secy-treas.—"our board unanimously reaffirmed policies."

Brewery Workers: From Gen. Cor. Sec. Karl F. Feller—"We have supported CIO policy in this respect."

Communications Workers: no reply.

Electrical Workers: Its officers have resigned from PAC board in protest against CIO's anti-third party stand. Its president, Albert Fitzgerald, is co-chairman of the Wallace Labor Committee.

Farm Equipment Workers: special convention indorsed Wallace. Its President, Grant Oakes, running for Governor on third party ticket in Illinois, has been disavowed by CIO.

Fishermen: no reply.

Food, Tobacco: Board indorsed third party.

Fur and Leather: Convention approved third party.

Furniture Workers: no reply.

Gas, Coke: Board backed CIO policy.

Glass Workers: From Intl. Vice Pres. Leland Beard—"Our union has not taken any active participation for or against a third party."

Lithographers: From Sec.-Treas. Martin Grayson—"Our organization by tradition has not mixed in political matters."

Longshoremen: Board indorsed third party; Pres. Harry Bridges dismissed as CIO Northern Calif. director for refusal to abide by CIO policy.

Maritime Union: From Pres. Joseph Curran—"NMU constitution forbids commitment to any party." At the CIO Board meeting, Curran voted for CIO stand; NMU Sec. Ferdinand Smith voted against.

Mine, Mill: board voted to support third party.

Newspaper Guild: board voted for CIO stand. Two large locals whose officers had indicated support for third party had a turnover in leadership, with new officers and members backing CIO policy.

Office & Professional: convention resolution praised Wallace, stating it was making no indorsement, but urged members to consider his candidacy.

Oil Workers: From Secy-treas. T. M. McCormick—"Board concurred unanimously with the Bill of Particulars concerning the Marshall Plan and Third Party."

Optical & Instrument: Backed policy.

Packinghouse Workers: too busy with strike to act.

Paperworkers: Board assailed third party.

Playthings, Novelty: from Dir. of Org. Morris Stone—"Unanimously for CIO policy."

Public Workers: Took no definite stand at convention.

Retail, Wholesale: Board backed CIO program.

Rubber Workers: Board voted to withhold action until after national conventions.

Shoe Workers: Board voted for CIO stand.

Steelworkers: Convention backed the policy of Pres. Murray and the CIO.

Stone Workers: from Sec.-treas. John C. Lawson—Board for CIO policy.

Telephone Workers: Board backed CIO stand.

Textile Workers: Convention voted for CIO program.

Transport Service Employes: from Secy-treas. Eugene Frazier—"All action taken with regard to issues was administrative in support of national CIO."

Transport Workers: No reply. Its president, Michael Quill, resigned as head of the Greater New York City CIO Council in protest against that body's failure to follow CIO policy.

Utility Workers: Board backed CIO policy.

Woodworkers: from Sec.-treas. Carl Winn—"executive board, by two-thirds majority, opposed third party."

(CIO industrial union councils are direct agencies of CIO officers and executive board and, as such, have a constitutional obligation to follow policy laid down by the convention, the officers and the executive board. Affiliated unions are autonomous and, as such, have a "moral obligation" to follow CIO policy, according to Pres. Murray.

Missouri Repudiates 3d Partyites

The Missouri PAC has voted to repudiate three CIO members who are candidates on the third party ticket in that state. PAC has also dropped two board members who have announced support of the Wallace party.

The candidates repudiated are: Robert R. Logsdon, candidate for governor; George Kimmel, for state auditor, and Clarence Ringamann, for 12th District Congressman. In Illinois recently, CIO repudiated the candidacy of Grant Oakes, president of the CIO Farm Equipment Union, who seeks the governorship on the third party ticket.

Missouri PAC board members dropped are: William Sentner, president of District 8 of the Electrical Workers, and Leonard Douglas of the Mine, Mill union.

Labor Help Wins In Po

SOFT-spoken Dorothy McCullough Lee not only is the first woman ever to be elected mayor of Portland, Ore. (1940 census pop. 305,394), but she also is the first candidate for that job who has had solid labor backing.

MRS DO

The CIO, AFL and Rail Brotherhoods found Mrs. Lee's legislative and city council work to their liking. So, they helped her win a clear majority over six opponents—including incumbent Mayor Earl Riley—in Portland's non-partisan primary. Thus, she just has to walk over the course in the fall election and will take office as Her Honor Jan. 1.

Why was Mrs. Lee, 47, backed by labor? Well, here are some pertinent facts:

She favors a wage rise for city employes (AFL-affiliated) and voted for one in city council against Riley's opposition.

She opposed a traction fare increase and fought against Riley's proposal in the council. The increase won, which was a big factor in her vote.

Like many other Portland citizens, she was aroused by mounting racial tensions in the area and was incensed over Riley's failure to do anything about it.

SHE favors FEPC. Like Mayor Humphrey, of Minneapolis, she believes that all persons should have an equal break for positions to which they can qu pledge during her service both in the State House and Senate.

She favors legislation to achieve social betterment.

SHE is definitely not a representative of the "feminine viewpoint." Rival politicians pay her the rather dubious compliment that she "thinks like a man."

In her five years in City Council (her public career began 20 years ago with election to the Legislature), she has directed improvements in the the city water system, in traction development, in mosquito controls and many other things.

THE Oregon CIO and PAC, unlike neighboring Washington State, is united in support of national CIO policy against a third party in 1948 and in favor of the Marshall Plan.

The Brotherhoods had never before indorsed a candidate for mayor. The AFL and the CIO had never before indorsed the same candidate. Since Mrs. Lee won a clear majority, a rather rare occurence, it looks as if labor united paid off.

Mrs. Lee was born in Oakland, Calif., daughter of a Naval officer. She took her law degree at U. of Calif. During a summer vacation, she met her husband, W. Scott Lee, while both were waiting on tables at Yosemite Park. He is now an oil executive.

They have two adopted children, a girl and a boy.

3 BIG OREGON VICTORIES FOR PAC

THE state of Oregon grabbed the political limelight last week.

We don't mean merely because Tom Dewey stopped Harold Stassen in the Republican delegation race. What we mean is the success of PAC.

In the Democratic nomination contest for U. S. Senator, Manley J. Wilson, editor of the CIO International Woodworker, won handily over Lewis A. Wood thereby arousing hope in the hearts of a lot of labor editors.

● In the Portland mayoralty primary, Mrs. Dorothy McCullough Lee, backed by CIO, AFL and Brotherhoods, won a clear majority over all her opponents and thus is certain to be the city's first woman mayor, come Jan. 1.

● In the race for Democratic national committeeman, Monroe Sweetland, former director of the CIO Allied War Relief Committee, was the victor.

Sweetland

Wilson, a member of the Woodworkers, Local 5-35, and of the Portland Newspaper Guild, will face incumbent Sen. Guy Cordon (R.) in November.

Cordon, in the first session of the 80th Congress, had a voting record which inluded only one "right" vote. His legislative career is distinguished by nothing outstanding, even on the conservative side and he looks extremely pale beside the dynamic public service of his colleague, Sen. Wayne Morse (R., Ore.).

Wilson, of course, faces a tough uphill fight in the fall, since Oregon is normally Republican.

During four terms in the legislature, Wilson won the esteem of political observers for his sound, constructive policy.

His record includes fights against anti-labor bills and against sales taxes. He has fought for improved working men's laws—including more liberal industrial accident and unemployment compensation and campaigned to liberalize old age and welfare assistance payments and for the elimination of pauper clauses and other unduly embarrassing restrictions.

He has not devoted his entire attention to labor problems. He also was in the front of the fight for conservation of the state's natural resources, particularly forests, grazing lands and fisheries. He argued for better schools and for decent pay for teachers, for strong civil service in the state employment system, for an adequate hospital building program and for much other social legislation.

He carried the full indorsement of PAC.

SWEETLAND is now editor of lumber district papers in Molalla (the Pioneer) and Newport, Ore. (the News). He is one of the few publishers in Oregon—or any where else, for that matter—to oppose the Taft-Hartley law.

He editorialized against the sales tax and fought the Oregon legislature's anti-labor proposals.

Members of Woodworkers' Local 5-40 inserted an ad in the International Woodworker "without it having been suggested by Monroe Sweetland" because they "want all IWA members to support him."

It looks like they did.

MEANWHILE, the California National CIO-PAC is completing plans for its conference of June 20. A preview was held at the Southern California Regional CIO office in Los Angeles. CIO officers, stewards, committeemen, etc., from all locals formulated plans to get out the primary vote this week.

Irwin DeShetler, Southern California regional director; Morris Zusman, state director for Calif. National CIO-PAC; George Roberts, western area representative of National PAC and George Richards, liberal attorney, addressed the meeting.

The importance of a big primary vote was stressed.

The meeting also emphasized that the following indorsements had been made for Congress in the Los Angeles area (*denotes incumbent):

12th District, Stephen I. Zetterberg; 13th, Ned R. Healy (former member of Congress); 14th, *Helen Gahagan Douglas; 15th, Lawrence A. Peifer; 16th, no recommendation; 17th, *Cecil R. King; 18th, Clyde Doyle (former member of Congress); 19th, *Chet Holifield; 20th, Ludwig H. Gerber.

The June 20 conference will be held at Moose Hall, San Francisco. It is expected PAC Dir. Jack Kroll will attend.

IN Florida, Fuller Warren, 43, a Jacksonville lawyer, who had CIO-PAC support, won the Democratic nomination for governor in a runoff.

Warren defeated Dan McCarty, a Fort Pierce citrus grower, 296,176 to 275,262. The nomination assures Warren of election in the fall. He ran once before for governor, but was defeated. He will succeed Millard Caldwell.

LA CIO Backs 'Foe Of Rep. King

Rep. Cecil R. King (D., Calif.) has been in the 78th, 79th and now the 80th Congresses. He represents the 17th District part of Los Angeles.

In the 78th, the CIO News issued no "voters' guide" on how Congressmen voted. In the 79th, with 12 key votes analyzed, King voted "right" 11 times, was absent once. In the first session of the 80th, with 12 key votes listed, King was "right" all 12 times.

Last week, the Los Angeles CIO Council—which refused to adhere to CIO national policy against a third party in 1948—studied the question of indorsements for the 1948 Congressional elections in the 17th District. It indorsed one Louis Stark for the Democratic nomination against King and also for the Independent Progressive Party (Wallaceite) nomination. (This Louis Stark is no kin to Louis Stark, N. Y. page ad in the New Orleans Times Picayune stated:

"Beer is the workingman's drink. He positively cannot afford to pay 5c more for beer!"

Let State CIO Dir. Fred Pieper, who acted as moderator of the radio program, tell what to do:

"In Baton Rouge, talking with your legislators, we were told that if you, the people back home, do not want these taxes and told them so, they will vote against them. But, if they do not hear from you—FAST—they will vote for them. So, it's up to you."

(The proposed taxes are doubling of the sales tax to make it 2%; addition of a five-cent tax on each bottle of beer and raising of the gasoline tax from seven to nine cents a gallon. The Gov. Earl Long Administration says the extra revenue would be for a soldiers' bonus and other benefits.)

Several of us went on the air for CIO with Pieper. Here are typical bits of the script:

Anthony Meyn, a member of Local 161, Brewery Workers: "It stands to reason that a nickel increase on a bottle of beer is going to mean that a lot of guys can't afford it, Fred. You know what I mean—sometimes after work a guy stops by a bar and has a couple before he goes home.

"Well, if he has two beers—at a nickel tax on each one—that's an extra dime and a lot of men can't afford that today. The first thing I know, my boss will be saying: 'Well, Tony, it's too bad. You've been here a long time, but we just don't have any business any more."

Dave Finn, Jr., a telephone worker: "I'm worried. I don't drink much beer, but I don't want to see anyone out of a job—or having to take what amounts to a pay cut.

"I just don't see how this sales tax is going to help the majority of the people. The average working man spends most of his money for food—for clothing—for the necessities of life.

"Maybe they'll think I'm just drumming up business—but this is it. Go to the telephone—or grab that pen and pencil and let your elected representatives know that you don't want these unjust, unfair new taxes. That's all!"

Next came Jackie McCullough—that's me. I'm a housewife and a mother and also editor of the Louisiana Labor News Digest:

"I've just been figuring out right here in black and white what the doubled sales tax will mean to me and my family. Our income is $60 a week . . . but after federal taxes, its $57.90. Of that, $15 goes for rent—I know that's high, but with two children and my mother living with us, well, it's difficult to find a place to live.

"After that, I have $42.50 a week—to cover food, clothing, utilities, medicine, insurance.

"The 2 per cent sales tax would double our weekly tax expense from $4 to $8 a week. Why that's ridiculous. That would buy shoes for my children—or better food.

"Why, just today my mother said: 'I've seen a lot of new taxes go on in my day—and I just don't recall many of them ever coming off.'"

Pieper: "We should have had your mother on the program."

McCullough: "She's done her part. She spent the whole afternoon composing letters to her senator and representative."

James F. Leonhard, a veteran who is not a union member: "I was a master sergeant with the 379th Bombardment Group—28 months with the 8th Air Force. I was born right here in New Orleans. If they're passing out bonuses, I wouldn't mind.

"But it looks to me that under this proposed tax program I'll be taking it out of one pocket and putting it in another. However, I won't put as much in that second pocket, because the state will have to have something to pay for the administration of the program."

As soon as the program was over a flood of wires and congratulatory messages came in to Pieper and the others.

The broadcast, in addition to WNOE, was heard from Shreveport, New Iberia, Alexandria, Baton Rouge, Monroe, Lake Charles, Lafayette, Houma and Hammond.

In a hearing at the state house in Baton Rouge, Pieper told a legislative committee that "our people resent this tax and resent it bitterly because we are the ones who will pay it."

(New Orleans is famous for night clubs and chummy saloons.)

THE VOTE ON UPHOLDING ATOMIC PROBE

Here's the record of the Senate vote which upheld Pres. Truman's veto of a bill permitting Congress to ask for an FBI probe of any persons named to top atomic energy jobs.

It was opposed as invasion of the executive branch of government by the legislators. A two-thirds vote was necessary to override the President's veto, but the 47-29 vote on May 21 was four short of the two-thirds mark.

38 Republicans and 9 Democrats voted to override the veto (W); 2 Republicans and 27 Democrats voted to sustain (R). Senators not present but paired to override are indicated by (PW); to sustain by (PR). NV indicates not voting and not paired. Just look down the alaphabet for your state.

Utah CIO Spurns GOP Bid

AN attempt by a Republican state chairman to "sell" CIO members on the beneficence of the Taft-Hartley Act failed completely at the Utah State CIO convention.

About 100 delegates listened patiently as Vernon Romney, Utah State GOP chairman, painted a rosy picture of his party's friendship for labor. As evidence, he went back to 1890 to cite enactment of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, passed during Benjamin Harrison's administration.

Apparently unmoved by the display of friendship, the convention passed a resolution calling for repeal of the law and defeat of Utah congressmen who supported it.

CONVENTION speakers and a resolution condemned the third party. Support of the new party would insure the defeat of many progressive candidates, CIO Councils' Director John Brophy reminded the delegates.

Cabbage-Hoeing Bill Buys A Horse

Some of the folks in North Georgia say Bill Gupton will try almost anything in an effort to set up a new CIO union.

They recall the story of Bill and the cabbages.

They remember the terrible beating he was given.

And now they're talking about the horse that he and his boys ride throughout the Hogansville area.

Bill, sub-regional director for the CIO Organizing Committee, was given a tough assignment during the early part of the Southern membership drive.

It was like ramming your head against a stone wall. Finally Bill learned that a certain fellow was considered the "key man" in the tire fabric plant he was trying to organize.

Bill went out to this fellow's house late one afternoon and found the man working in his garden. Bill reached over, picked up a hoe and went to work among the cabbages. He talked as he chopped.

He won the confidence of the man and — eventually — an election at the plant.

Bill learned last August just how tough organizing can sometimes become.

He and his pretty young wife stopped in LaGrange, Ga., one evening for dinner and a movie.

After they walked from the theater they were accosted by a group of men. Mrs. Gupton was knocked into the street and the men beat Bill brutally.

When he recovered from his injuries he returned to his job and to a new problem—the sticky, red clay roads in the Hogansville region, where he's trying to organize workers at the U.S. Rubber Co. cord fabricating mill.

Even a Jeep will balk at some of these "back" roads after a heavy rain.

The problem of getting around seems to have been solved, however.

Bill bought a horse for himself and his crew. Bill is shown astride the nag in the accompanying photo.

Rule Gives Big Steel Jitters

STEEL company moguls and their lawyers are feeling more than a little uneasy.

The U. S. Court of Appeals in Chicago has ruled for the Federal Trade Commission against the Rigid Steel Conduit Association on a basing point case, a case very similar to the one that FTC is preparing against the big steel companies and the American Iron and Steel Institute.

The circuit court said the practice of a number of companies using the same basing-point price system constitutes an "unfair method of competition" even if full-fledged conspiracy cannot be proved.

It followed the recent Supreme Court decision against the cement trust that said FTC has the power to prohibit such practices even when the conduct of the individual companies fall short of clear violations of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

TWUA $50,000 Fund Rising; Rayburn Told Of Needs

THE CIO Textile Workers' $50,000 campaign to aid the 365 victims of the McKinney, Tex., tornado is hitting on all 12.

However, the victims—all members of the TWUA—are having many difficulties. Last week, John Edelman, Washington representative of the union, wrote Rep. Sam Rayburn (D., Tex.) this letter:

"On behalf of the victims of the McKinney disaster, I wish to express thanks for your valuable cooperation in seeking to obtain some critically necessary emergency assistance.

"At the same time, may I call your attention to a very disturbing report from a TWUA Representative in McKinney administering the relief program.

"Most of the men in McKinney who worked at the Texas Textile Mills have been put to work on salvage operations and are being paid the minimum union rate applying in that situation. Some men and women workers from McKinney are being transported in busses to Waco or Dallas, where they are manning a third shift in those plants of the parent company.

"There are, however, a number of women employes left in McKinney who, because they have families to look after, or for other reasons, can't take jobs out of town. These women have applied to the Red Cross for emergency food orders. In all such cases the Red Cross has insisted that the women apply for jobs at the local laundry, untouched by the storm and still operating. The regular pay rate for female employes at the laundry is 32c an hour. Apparently Red Cross is willing to provide relief to make up some of the difference between what it costs to live and the 32c.

"We strongly recommend that you join with us in protesting this practice. A moment's reflection should convince top Red Cross officials that what they are doing in such a case is subsidizing an employer who pays substandard wages.

"If the Red Cross finds itself unable or unwilling to issue outright relief to thrifty people who are not malingerers but simply the unfortunate victims of a freak disaster, the TWUA will assume the responsibility for issuing emergency food orders.

"As of today, there are about 100 families in McKinney who are living in tents supplied by the Army.

"It has been raining a great deal and the ground around these tents is almost a quagmire. Hardly any tents have wooden floors. Most of the families haven't even any rubbers. This is something we feel that the Red Cross should certainly attend to.

"In conclusion may I recommend that you seriously give consideration to the introduction of legislation which would create a disaster fund to be administered by some agency of the federal government."

An Oversight

The current issue of the Economic Outlook, published by the CIO Research & Education Dept., inadvertently omitted the name of Sen. James E. Murray (D) of Montana as a sponsor of the Thomas-McCormack bill to lift minimum wages from 40c an hour to 75c, and to extend wage-hour coverage. Sen. Murray has been a consistent supporter of every move to improve the wage-hour law.

Radio Death Probe Asked

A full investigation of the murder of George Polk, Middle East correspondent of the Columbia Broadcasting System, in Greece, has been demanded by the Representative Assembly of the Newspaper Guild of New York. The Assembly is the governing body of the Guild local.

Polk, a Guild member, was found in Salonika Bay on May 16, a bullet hole in the back of his head, and his hands and feet bound. He was scheduled to return soon to the U. S. and spend the next year at Harvard University as a Nieman Fellow. The Guild resolution said:

"In view of the obvious reluctance of the Greek Government to get at the facts in the murder of George Polk, the Newspaper Guild of New York demands a full investigation . . . by a qualified team of correspondents and government officials sent out by the U. S.

"That immediate efforts be made to put into effect the Geneva proposals (of the UN Commission on the Freedom of the Press) guaranteeing unrestricted movement and protection to all foreign correspondents."

While CBS was conducting its own investigation of the murder in Greece, a group of top-flight Washington writers formed their own committee to probe Polk's death. Headed by columnist Walter Lippman, the group said General "Wild Bill" Donovan, head of the wartime Office of Strategic Services, would conduct the investigation.

CORRECTION

The voting record on the Mundt-Nixon bil, published in last week's CIO News, incorrectly listed Rep. Stephen Pace (D. Ga.) as having not voted on the bill. Actually Rep. Pace voted for the Mundt-Nixon bill.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

Reg. Dir. Frank J. Bender, Baltimore, Md. advises the Brewery Workers Local 10 having jurisdiction over the following breweries in Baltimore—National, Gunthers, Glove and Free State—won a union shop election in these breweries by a vote of 1197 to 11. The local also won a union shop election in the Clinton L. Gray plant by a vote of 6 to nothing. Luke Helm and John Eckmier were in charge of the campaigns. The Rubber Workers won a union shop election in the Frank Schenuit Rubber Plant by a vote of 112 to 14.

Reg. Dir. Ewald Sandner, Newark, N. J., reports an election victory at Beattie Mfg. Co. at Little Falls, N. J., manufacturers of rugs and carpets. Eligible to vote 576, voted 498, Textile Workers 274, independent 214. Reg. Dir. Sol Stetin of the Textile Workers Union was in charge, assisted by Reps. Bernard Daly and Walter Plata.

Reg. Dir. John B. Easton, Charleston, W. Va., advises that an overwhelming victory was won for the Chemical Workers in a union security election held at the Air Reduction Sales Co., Huntington, W. Va. Nine voted the union shop out of a total of nine eligible to vote.

Brother James A. Tinsley, vice president, Muncie Local No. 93, Federation of Glass Workers, CIO, reports that in a union security election held at the Ball Bros. Co. 2154 votes were cast for the union shop, 57 against and 5 void votes.

Reg. Dir. Delmond Garst, St. Louis, Mo., reports in a union shop election at Allen Industries, Inc., Local 986, UAW-CIO, 169 votes were cast for the union shop, none against.

As reported last week in the CIO News, UAW-CIO came through with a smashing victory over the AFL Auto Workers at the Caterpillar Plant, Peoria, Ill., in a run-off election, after the AFL got a big start and polled every vote they could get in the first election. Hard work by the Auto Workers and CIO representatives resulted in this smashing victory. The vote was 7,702 for CIO, 5,644 for AFL.

President Truman's Board of Inquiry appointed in the Long Lines case against A. T. & T. met in New York last week and adjourned to June 3. The company has agreed to restore the contract and negotiate with the union. If no agreement is arrived at by June 8, the board will move in again.

Negotiations are also going on with the officers of the American Communications Equipment Workers and the company, as well as with the Federation of Telephone Clerks of Illinois. CWA, an independent union, signed up for three years without a wage increase but provided for a wage reopening after one year.

The UAW-CIO came through with a substantial wage increase at plants of General Motors, without stoppage of work. The Chrysler strike continues but it is expected that company will fall in line and come to terms with the Union.

Harold Decided To Get Himself Elected

ALL of the odds were against Harold's succeeding—but he made the grade with flying colors.

Many of his friends thought he had bit off more than he could chew and that he would make as much progress if he batted his head against a stone wall.

They told him this, too. But he just smiled and said, "Well, it might work out. You never can tell."

His "board of strategy" was pretty skeptical about it and nobody knew exactly whether Harold was serious or was merely making motions.

But, when the votes were counted Harold was declared the winner.

IT'S doubtful that Harold knows when he first got the idea or what actually prompted him to toss his hat into the ring.

Perhaps that campaign put on by the city CIO Council was responsible. Anyhow—

A small group of skilled glassworkers formed a CIO union and elected Harold as president and as Council delegate.

He came into the Council at about the time it was conducting a drive to get CIO representation on various civic groups, such as the Council of Social Agencies, Red Cross and Community Chest.

He listened attentively as the Council president and other speakers explained that such representation would help tear down the anti-CIO feeling that had been built up by the local political machine and the city administration it bossed.

One night, following a meeting, Harold went to the Council president and asked his advice about joining a certain organization.

"I know that the name of the organization indicates that it merely represents the business and professional men of the town, but it's more than that," Harold said. "It fights for a lot of things the CIO stands for.

"I have an idea that if I joined I could make the other members understand our problems a little better."

The Council president said he could see no serious objection and added, "On second thought, I suggest you try it and see how it works out."

Harold joined.

A YEAR or so later Harold called the Council president by 'phone and said he was seriously considering running for president of the group he had joined.

"I may get my ears beat off, of course, but I've got an idea for a campaign that might put me over. I'd like to tell you about it."

He explained his plan in detail—and with enthusiasm. Finally he asked, "What do you think about it?"

The Council president said the plan was an "interesting" one, that he thought it might possibly work. He offered to help Harold if he could.

Within a few days Harold was out campaigning.

THE "unusual" plank in Harold's platform dealt with discrimination, and it's the one he credited with responsibility for his victory.

It pointed out the organization spent much of its time and effort trying to wipe out race prejudice and discrimination. It asked members not to discriminate against Harold because he headed a labor union affiliated with the CIO.

This, coupled with Harold's personality and ability, led him to victory.

And this is the story of how Harold Jamison, head of a tiny Glass Workers local, became president of the Memphis Negro Junior Chamber of Commerce.

A REFLECTION--ON YOU!

America Holds the Hope of the Future---Murray

Phil Murray learned his unionism early. Phil was just six years old when his dad — president of a coal miners' local in Blantyre, Scotland—took him along to his first union meeting.

"I am a trade unionist and a labor organizer. But above all else I am an American," he writes in a highly interesting article—If We Pull Together—in the current issue of American Magazine.

"I love this country, its people and its institutions. I came here as an immigrant, made good as an American. Everything I possess, everything I have achieved, I owe to the United States."

In Scotland, the senior Murray was an expert miner, but his pay was meager and the work unsteady. One day Phil heard his parents talking:

"We've got to take him out of school."

"It's not right, William. Neither is it the will of God. I'll not allow a lad of 10 to go down into that mine.

"What I earn is not enough. Phil can work as my helper. We badly need the three shillings a day he can earn."

"I'll make a good miner," Phil broke in. "You see if I don't."

"Philip," his father said, "I know you're big and strong for your years, and you want to help your father. But I wish it wasn't necessary."

They were lean years in Scotland, Phil Murray recalls. "Layoff followed layoff; and there were times when the 13 Murrays lacked enough to eat. At last, when I was 16, the family made a momentous decision: We would all pack up and seek a new life in the America about which my Uncle Philip had written us such glowing accounts."

The arrival in America in December 1902 was anything but auspicious.

"From New York my father and I took the train to Irwin, Pa. We arrived on Christmas day, and, lugging our bedrolls, trudged four miles on foot to my uncle's home through a howling snowstorm. It was hardly the sort of welcome to America that I had anticipated.

"Then it was back to the mines for my dad and me. We had to earn the money to bring the rest of the family over, and, once they'd joined us, to make a living for us all."

Five years later, after studying in after-work hours, Phil Murray stood in a dark-paneled courtroom in Pittsburgh, swore true faith and allegiance to the United States, and became a full-fledged citizen. And a good one, too.

"Next to my contribution to the cause of trade unionism, I am proudest of my 24 years' voluntary service as a member of the Pittsburgh Board of Education," he writes.

Human dignity, equality, opportunity mean much to Phil Murray. He loves America because it "holds forth the promise of freedom, justice and opportunity"; because, "despite shortcomings" it offers its citizens so much.

The U. S., he says, looking back over the years, "is growing better all the time. There is less racial and religious discrimination now than when I arrived here back in 1902. There are fewer children in mines and factories and more of them in classrooms than there were 46 years ago . . . Working conditions have notably improved . . . We have at least the meager beginnings of a system of social insurance. And the right of workers to organize and bargain collectively is upheld by federal law, though still not universally observed in practice . . ."

Communism obviously isn't the answer for America, Phil Murray writes; he "hates the things (the Communists) stand for . . . I shall continue to fight them as long as I breathe . . , However, it will avail us little to fight Communism abroad only to lose out to reactionary forces at home."

Phil Murray has a program — not a "class" program but one for all Americans. He wants stronger civil liberties; federal aid to schools; adequate housing for every family; social security coverage for every worker; a curb on prices and profits; a higher minimum wage and a guaranteed minimum wage for all.

Working together on such a program will build a "better country and a better world tomorrow."

"I Believe . . ."

"As an American and a Christian I spurn the barbaric notion that the boom-burst cycle represents the will of God.

"As a Democrat, I believe that our strongest defense against totalitarianism consists of a sound and equitable economy.

"I believe that the way to beat the Communists is not by speeches or by bullets, but by offering people something better—a democracy that really works."—Philip Murray, in the American Magazine.

Asks Holiday Be Ruled For Election Day

BELATED returns on the CIO anti-third party in 1948, pro-Marshall Plan policy, and other political matters:

Harrisburg, Pa., Regional Council: from Sec. Sidney Barson—"concurred without a single dissenting vote."

Oil Workers, Local 210: from Sec. Dave Herring—"We have urged Rep. Raymond Madden (D., Ind.) to take steps to have general election day made a national holiday and to have polls remain open for two full days."

Electrical Workers, Dist. 8: from Gen. Vice Pres. William Sentner—"Be it resolved that this meeting do all in its power to defeat the efforts of John Brophy and others, who by their dictatorial powers could destroy the fundamental principles upon which the CIO was founded." (John Brophy, CIO Director of Councils, has been a labor leader for more than 40 years and was one of the founders of CIO.)

Auto Workers, Local 661: from Pres. Jack Coffey—"Calls upon CIO to intervene in the affairs of the Nassau-Suffolk, N. Y. council and to appoint an administrator to place the council in support of CIO policies."

Woodworkers, local 2-191: from Sec. Antone Johnson—"went on record unanimously to reject and repudiate Mr. Brophy's letter." (Brophy had sent a letter to CIO councils, pointing out that they were bound, under the unanimously-adopted CIO constitution, to follow CIO policy.)

From Carl Holderman, president, New Jersey CIO: "The following councils have indorsed CIO policy:

Passaic County.

Bergen County.

Union County.

Central Jersey.

South Jersey.

Note—more than 90 per cent of the CIO's industrial union councils have indorsed national CIO policy concerning the third party and ERP.

Milwaukee Mayor Greets CIO Meet

After a bit of confusion in sorting out delegates, the fifth and last of the National CIO's regional education conferences got off to a good start May 21, in Milwaukee, Wis.

The confusion came from the fact that three organizations were meeting at the same time in the same hotel. One of the CIO delegates was startled to find that he was eating dinner with the Wisconsin Press Association.

Mayor Frank P. Zeidler of Milwaukee in a speech welcoming the CIO'ers, told them that education was the most important job facing unions today. Zeidler, a Socialist, was backed by CIO-PAC.

Another featured speaker was Arthur J. Goldberg, general counsel for the CIO and the Steelworkers, who reviewed the recent steel negotiations. The conference was sponsored by the National CIO Department of Research and Education.

TWO-IN-ONE POSTER: Here is one side of a poster issued by the CIO Research and Education Dept. Dept. On the other side is a picture of the statue in the Lincoln Memorial along with Lincoln's words: "All that harms Labor is treason to America. No line can be drawn between these two. If any man tells you he loves America, yet hates Labor, he is a liar. If any man tells you he trusts America, yet fears Labor, he is a fool. There is no America without labor." The poster may be ordered from the department, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C. at 25c a copy, 8 copies for $1, 100 copies for $10.

CIO Opens CARE Campaign

GIVE

THE CIO this week launches a nation-wide campaign to start a flood of CARE food packages to European workers and their families.

The drive is being conducted by the CIO Natl. Community Services Committee "in support of the men and women striving to rebuild a free democratic trade union movement." The appeal for contributions will be carried to every member, local, council and international in the CIO.

Indorsing the project, CIO Pres. Philip Murray said: "I am certain that when CIO men and women understand the stake they all have in the strength and progress of their fellow workers abroad they will not fail to contribute to this campaign."

Indorsements have also come from other CIO leaders and from international conventions. The CIO CSC is a member agency of CARE and was one of the 26 leading American welfare organizations that set it into motion two years ago. CIO's support has been an important factor in CARE's delivery of 5,000,000 food and clothing textile packages to individuals and groups in 17 European countries.

UNIONS making contributions may designate a parallel union in any of the countries served by CARE as a beneficiary. Or it may specify the country to which the packages shall be sent.

Individual contributors may designate a friend or relative abroad as the recipient of the aid, provided the designation is accompanied by a minimum donation of $10—the price of a CARE package. All collections should be sent to the Overseas Food Fund of the CIO Natl. Community Services Committee, 1776 Broadway, New York 19, New York.

CARE packages purchased with CIO funds will be delivered to CIO's own labor trustees in Europe for distribution to those who need help. All shipments will be covered by CARE's guarantee of delivery, and under agreement with the various governments the recipients will be required to pay no taxes or customs duties on the packages, nor will they suffer any loss of their regular rations.

CARE now operates in Austria, Belgium, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria, Finland, Hungary, Italy, Eire, France, Greece, Netherlands, Poland, England, Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland, and Germany (American, British and French Zones and all Berlin).

Local Leaves AFL To Join CIO-UAW

Dissatisfaction with the AFL Auto Workers has led Local 433, Wilcox-Rich Division of the Eaton Manufacturing Co., Saginaw, Mich., to affiliate with the CIO Auto Workers.

Originally an affiliate of the CIO in 1938, Local 433 swung to the AFL with Homer Martin in 1939.

The swing back to the CIO resulted from "dissatisfaction of the membership with the International Union-AFL, because the AFL has failed to support Local 433 in the handling of grievances with the employer of its members and has failed, and still fails to afford effective leadership, support and direction to Local 433 and its members," said Louis Duby, Local 433 President.

Ross Lauds Austrian Unions

AMERICAN workers have watched "with admiration" the quick rebuilding of Austria's unions, a CIO representative told 500 delegates to the first post-war Congress of Austrian Unions.

Michael Ross, CIO director of international affairs, praised Austrian workers for making their unions "once again a fortress for economic justice, liberal thinking and progressive action."

Voicing hope that Austria will soon be "re-established as a fully independent self-governing unit, free from the heritage of war," Ross said American labor admires the record of Austrian unions between the end of World War I and the destruction of civil liberties by the Dollfuss regime in 1934.

"The events of February, 1934, when the Austrian trade unionists rose up in protection of their rights as free men, helped mobilize public opinion in America against fascism," he recalled. "We salute you for your courage and your magnificent resistance to fascism."

EVEN before the war's end, Ross said, CIO decided to take its place in the international labor movement.

"We are interested in and sympathetic with the aspirations and needs of the European workers," he said. "We are prepared, both at home and abroad, to work cooperatively to insure a better, more peaceful world for all of us.

"We are particularly interested in the economic recovery of war-devastated countries. We hope to have a voice in guiding the destinies of ECA to achieve the most successful operation of the program for the peoples of Europe."

Representatives of the AFL and of labor groups in 14 European countries also addressed the week-long convention in Vienna.

Southern Solons Put On Spot

During a recent debate in Washington's National Press Club auditorium, Reps. Ed Gossett of Texas and William Jennings Bryan Dorn of South Carolina, both Democrats, were put on the spot. Up for discussion was the President's civil rights program. Members of the audience were curious to know why the two representatives were so opposed to the abolition of the poll tax.

Gossett and Dorn were very coy, sputtering the usual stuff about states rights.

It couldn't be that Gossett, whose district has a population of about 300,000, got 17,714 votes in 1946. Or that Dorn, whose district has more than 300,000 population, received only 3,527 votes the same year.

The very idea!

More Jobs Expected

Washington (FP)—Production for the Marshall plan and military expansion will demand greater activity from the U. S. Employment Service in coming months, Labor Dept. officials told a Senate appropriations subcommittee. They put the case for leaving the USES in the Labor Dept. instead of moving it to the Federal Security Agency. They also appealed for sufficient money to carry out their job.

THE ADVENTURES OF JIM BARRY

AS A RESULT OF HER INTENSE WORK IN ORGANIZING POLITICAL ACTIVITY IN PREPARATION FOR THE COMING ELECTIONS, MARGIE WILSON FORGOT HER PERSONAL PROBLEMS - UNTIL HER SWEETHEART DECIDED TO WALK OUT ON HER!

I THINK SHE'S HAD HER CRY, JIM, WHY DON'T YOU TAKE HER HOME .... SHE'S TIRED AND UPSET....

I...I WOULDN'T KNOW WHAT TO SAY.... NOT AFTER THE WAY PETE DELLY WALKED OUT ON HER.

RECKON YUH WON'T HAVE TO SAY MUCH, JIM. SHE'LL DO THE TALKING... AND IF YUH DO SOME CAREFUL LISTENING... IT'LL DO HER MORE GOOD THAN PREACHING A SERMON ON THE WAYS OF THE WORLD!

OKAY... I'LL TAKE THE KID HOME!

GEE... I DON'T GET IT! WHY SHOULD PETE DELLY WALK OUT ON A SWELL GIRL LIKE MARGIE? IF IT WAS ME, NOW ...I'D GIVE MY RIGHT ARM TO MARRY HER!

WELL, I'VE BEEN AROUND THE LABOR MOVEMENT FOR A LONG TIME, WOODY... AND THERE'S A FEW THINGS THET CAN BE SAID FOR PETE'S SIDE OF THE STORY!

THIS JUST GOES TUH SHOW YOU THAT THERE'S A LOT OF TEARS AND TROUBLE THET GOES INTO BUILDING TRADE UNIONS. THAT GIRL WAS WORKING TOO HARD...

THE REASON WE BUILD UNIONS IS SO WE CAN LIVE A BETTER LIFE... IT'S ALL RIGHT FOR OLD TIMERS LIKE ME TO WORK DAY AND NIGHT... BUT YOUNG FOLKS - WELL, IT'S DIFFERENT FOR THEM....

IT'S A NICE NIGHT, MARGIE... HOW ABOUT TAKING A WALK WITH ME?.... THE AIR WILL DO YOU GOOD....

ALL RIGHT...

HOW ABOUT GOING DOWN TO THE RIVER, MARGIE. IT'S QUIET THERE.... AND WE CAN WATCH THE LIGHTS ON THE BRIDGE... AND THE STARS.....

NICE, ISN'T IT? A GUY CAN... OR A GIRL, THAT IS.... CAN THINK A LOT OF THOUGHTS DOWN HERE....

I GUESS SO... (SOB)

FUNNY... PETE AND I.... ALL WE USED TO THINK ABOUT IS FIXING UP A PLACE OF OUR OWN... IF WE COULD FIND AN APARTMENT... BUT THERE NO APARTMENTS... AND I HOPED - IF SOME DECENT MEN WERE ELECTED TO CONGRESS... MAYBE....

OH... JIM... (SOB).... JIM....

Asks Senate To Abolish Polltax

CONGRESS'S time is running out—but there's still time to abolish the polltax.

In a letter to six leading Senators, CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan warned that "Congress will have suffered a grievous loss of prestige" if the anti-polltax bill hasn't been passed when the legislators pick up their marbles and head for home on June 18.

The tax repeal bill has already been passed by the House and been approved by the Rules Committee of the Senate.

Recalling platform promises by both parties, Cowan said "it clearly behooves the Senate to bring HR 29 quickly to the floor for action; and to enforce cloture rules to forestall filibustering delay by that small group of Senators whose personal interests are closely linked to the maintenance of a small, unrepresentative electorate in their states.

"If the anti-polltax bill is brought up, we feel certain that cloture can be obtained and the bill enacted into law."

He called upon the Senators to use "every resource at your command" to force action on the measure, which was introduced in the House by Rep. Bender (R. O.).

Cowan's letter was addressed to Senators Vandenberg (R., Mich.), Taft (R., O.), Wherry (R., Nebr.), Barkley (D., Ky.), Sparkman (D., Ala.) and Pepper (D., Fla.).

Say Truman Wants 75c Base

Pres. Truman—according to Democratic leaders in Congress—is "tremendously interested" in a rise in the minimum wage to 75c an hour.

He's likely, in addition, to be tremendously surprised if the Republican - controlled leadership does anything about it.

The President conferred with leading Democratic Senators and Congressmen at the White House, and indicated his hope for action to improve the 1938 Fair Labor Standards Act.

Republican leaders accused the President of putting the question "into the realm of politics." Sen. Ball (R. Minn.) told reporters he doubted if either House would vote to lift the minimum at this session.

Hearings have been held by both Senate and House Labor sub-committees on labor's demands for an increase in the present 40c minimum. Neither sub-committee has issued a report, though the chairman of the House group circulated an "anonymous" memorandum which called for complete repeal of the wage-hour law.

Opposition to improvements in the law came from both Republicans and southern Democrats during the course of the hearings.

Recalls Attacks on PAC, Urges Mundt Defeat

BACK in 1944, the House Unamerican Activities Committee tried to pin a "communist" tag on CIO and the CIO-Political Action Committee.

Under the Mundt-Nixon bill—now under study in the Senate—such charges could easily lead to registration of all CIO members, penalties and set-backs—although the charges were false.

For that reason the CIO last week voiced strong criticism of the Mundt bill and asked the Senate Judiciary Committee to turn it down. The Committee held three days of hearings and may report in the near future. The bill had previously been passed in the House.

Sponsored by the House Un-American Activities Committee, the bill is formally aimed at regulating and controlling Communist political and front groups.

But Nathan Cowan, CIO Legislative Director, in a letter to Chairman Wiley (R., Wis.) of the Senate Judiciary Committee, warned that the bill will imperil civil rights of thousands, perhaps millions, of patriotic Americans.

"We are strongly opposed to this bill because it seriously threatens the existence of bona fide labor unions and because it substantially curtails civil rights guaranteed to every American by the Constitution." Cowan wrote.

"We object to the Mundt Bill because it violates the very freedom of speech, press, and assembly which it purports to safeguard.

COWAN said CIO is opposed to requirements that "so-called "Communist front organizations keep membership lists available for inspection."

"Such a requirement would obviously invite blacklisting thousands of patriotic Americans solely on the basis of their beliefs and associations" he said. "Labor organizations have had a long and bitter experience with this form of reprisal against individuals for executing the Constitutional right of freedom of association.

An analysis of the bill prepared by the CIO legal department and submitted to the Senator by Cowan charged that the House Un-American Committee has through the years made "indiscriminate use" of the Communist tag.

"Both the CIO and CIO-PAC have been repeatedly and wrongfully denounced as 'Communist front' and 'totalitarian organizations,'" the memorandum pointed out. It recalled that in 1944 the Un-American Committee said CIO-PAC was subversive and sought to impose totalitarian rule on the U. S

"This bill is not just another law," the statement added. "This bill is in fundamental conflict with out constitutional form of government and with the premises of a democratic society."

THE Senate Judiciary Committee's three days of hearings started with testimony by supporters of the bill. They included Donald Richberg, Washington corporation lawyer, and Paul Griffiths, one-time American Legion commander.

In the House there were indications that the Keefe Rider, which is opposed by the CIO, might be eliminated.

The Keefe Rider, added to the Federal Security Administration Supplementary Bill, would bar payment of federal salaries to persons belonging to unions which have not signed the non-Communist affidavits of the Taft-Hartley Law. It was aimed at the CIO Public Workers, but also affected the AFL Typographical Union.

Last week the House eliminated a similar provision from the Interior Dept. Appropriation Bill.

NAM Sings Same Tune About T-H

THE NAM boys sang their same old song last week at Sen. Ball's hearings on suggested changes in the Taft-Hartley Act.

The tune was the same they repeated during the first half of '47 when T-H was moving through the Congressional mill.

The lyrics were scarcely changed.

The NAM witness—dapper Raymond Smethurst, the organization's general counsel—repeated the same criticism of industry-wide bargaining that had been voiced by NAM and by many Congressmen a year ago.

Smethurst acknowledged that union shop elections—98% of them being won by labor—are clogging up the Natl. Labor Relations Board's machinery. He offered an easy solution: make all forms of union security illegal, and then union security elections won't be needed.

Smethurst was questioned closely by Rep Augustine Kelley (D., Pa.), a staunch opponent of the T-H law.

DISAGREEING with Sen. Ball—who thought the NAM's anti-union shop proposal was "a sound one"—Kelley asked how workers can get a uniform national wage in an industry without industry-wide bargaining.

"I am not so sure that is desirable," Smethurst said.

"Well, that is the only way some regional differentials were corrected," Kelley reminded him.

CIO's already well-known views will be placed before the committee June 4, and a number of CIO unions are also scheduled to testify around that date. Hyman Blumberg, vice-president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, will appear June 1.

CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan called a meeting in Washington May 28 to plan the organization's general line of approach to the bill.

However while the hearings give a chance for expression of views, few people in Washington expect any action on Taft-Hartley to come out of the Congress during the few remaining crowded days of the session.

THE hearings opened with testimony by Robert Denham, NLRB general counsel, in favor of the Ives-Landis bill. That proposal would eliminate the necessity for special elections before unions can ask an employer for maintenance of membership or union shop clauses in their contracts.

Denham complained that the thousands of union shop elections gives the Labor Board little time for handling "important sections" of the T-H law. 72% of the Board's cases have been the union shop polls.

Rep. Kelley, during the question period, forced Denham to concede that the election results had given the lie to claims that workers are seeking to free themselves of union "domination."

Denham testified that "the union shop is not obnoxious to the overwhelming majority."

CP Admits Setting Up Wallace Party

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

LAST month, CIO Pres. Philip Murray told the Textile Workers' convention (and repeated the charge later): "I charge that the Communist Party is directly responsible for the organization of the third party."

Immediately there were anguished screams of denial from the Wallace neighborhood. Murray was called a red-baiter, a warmonger and (by the Daily Worker) friend of the bosses.

Well, Murray certainly had his facts straight, as was attested last week by none other than the Communist Party itself.

The Sunday Worker of May 20, 1948 (we give the full date for historical reasons), carried the full text of a "Draft Resolution for the National Convention of the C.P.U.S.A. to be held Aug. 3 to 6; submitted by the National Committee." Amid six full pages of type and amid dialectic presentation of the party position on many things, there appeared these words:

"The Communist Party was the only force in American political life which instantly grasped the reactionary, imperialistic essence of the Marshall Plan and without waverings and vacillations, undertook the struggle for its exposure and rejection. (CIO News Editor's note: "The CIO is happy to be a supporter of the Marshall Plan.")

"The Communist Party, from the earliest days after the end of the war, understood that its traditional fight for a new people's party directed against a two-party system of the monopolies had once more been placed by events as an immediate, practical question before the American people, and, acting upon this understanding, it boldly proclaimed the need for such a new people's party.

"Because of its correct line, the party (CIO Editor's note: The C.P., that is) was able to carry on effective mass work and make significant contributions to the struggle for peace and democracy and to the forging of the new political alignment and people's coalition.

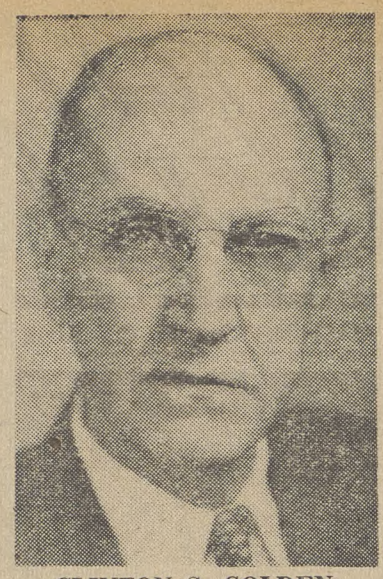
"The Communist party alone, long before it had become clear to wider sections of the people, signalized the rise of a fascist danger in the United States, and exposed the ominous drive toward the transformation of our country into a police state."

THE party, as it often does, was in a self-criticism mood. "We were slow to recognize and counteract the new political role of the Murray forces in the CIO in connection with the Marshall Plan and tended for a short time to continue the old policy of Left-Center unity even after the political basis for it began to disappear," the resolution asserts.

"Nor did we move quickly and decisively to overcome the opportunist vacillations of certain Communist leaders in the trade unions and the people's movements."

What's ahead? "We must guard against the fatal Right-opportunist mistake of failing to treat the struggle for the immediate tasks in the light of the strategic needs of the struggle as a whole and of the coming stages."

As we went to press, we had noted no denials from third party quarters. (The CIO, of course, is strongly opposed to a third party in 1948.)



CLINTON S. GOLDEN

C. S. Golden Named ECA Adviser

CLINTON S. GOLDEN, former vice-president of the United Steelworkers, has been named as adviser on labor policies to Paul G. Hoffman, Economic Cooperation Administrator.

Golden returned a few weeks ago from Greece, where he had served in a similar capacity with the American Mission for Aid to Greece.

Appointed at the same time to a similar post was Bert Mark Jewell, international representative of the Railway Labor Executives Association and a former president of the AFL Railway Employes Dept.

Their job, an ECA announcement said, will be to advise Hoffman on matters of policy, "particularly in the labor field, both in the United States and in the participating countries of Europe.

"In addition, they will assist Hoffman in the selection of the American labor advisers on the staffs of the missions to the industrial countries of Europe participating in the recovery program."

Hoffman said that ECA—which handles the European aid program voted by Congress a few months ago—is "particularly fortunate" to obtain the services of men "with such distinguished reputations and stature in the labor field and with such outstanding background and experience.

"It is obvious that the success of the economic recovery program greatly depends on the active participation of labor, both here and abroad, and on its understanding of the problems and operations involved.

"Mr. Jewell and Mr. Golden will play an important part in guiding and developing this essential aspect of the recovery program."

Boris Shishkin, AFL research head, has been named to head the ECA's labor set-up in Europe, with offices in Paris, France.

Local Expels Sentner

William Sentner, president of District 8 of the CIO Electrical Workers has been expelled from his own local by a membership vote. Local 1102 tried Sentner on charges of using the union to further Communist political ends and found him guilty. Sentner continues, however, to occupy the district post.

$64 Question: Will Mundt Bill Pass?

WILL the Mundt-Nixon bill be rushed through the Senate?

Or will it be held up in the end-of-session legislative log-jam that is now smothering a dozen important bills?

The question was being widely asked in Washington last week, and nobody had a clear-cut answer.

The bill, attacked by numerous labor and liberal groups as a prime threat to civil liberties and due process of law, was passed two weeks ago in the House. Prepared by the Un-American Activities, as a means of curbing subversive actions and organizations, the bill has been condemned as threatening the rights of union labor and of all liberal groups.

The Senate Judiciary Committee—headed by Sen. Wiley (R., Wis.)—held three scheduled days of hearings on the measure and then conducted an almost-unprecedented extra hearing on Memorial Day, in order to hear spokesmen for the large number of groups voicing opposition.

CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan sent the committee a letter voicing strong opposition to the bill. He said it "seriously threatens the existence of bona fide labor unions and because it substantially curtails civil rights guaranteed to every American by the Constitution."

WITNESSES at the hearing represented CIO and AFL unions, racial and religious organizations, singer Paul Robeson, candidate Henry Wallace and spokesmen for the Communist and Socialist parties.

All of them—for a variety of special reasons—sharply criticized the House Un-American Activities Committee bill as promoting the theory of "guilt by association."

Two days later a group of several thousand people—from several sections of the east and middle west—converged on Washington to voice protest against passage of the bill. Headed by Jerry O'Connell — former liberal Congressman from Montana—the protesters filled up the Capitol and coursed through Senate and House Office Buildings.

Over 3,000 of them picketed the White House with placards attacking the Mundt bill and calling for action on civil rights legislation, which the Congress gives evidence of pigeon-holing. The picket line was set up after leaders of a non-partisan committee on civil rights said they had been unable to see White House officials.

THE demonstration, however, was viewed with less than enthusiasm by some opponents of the Mundt-Nixon bill.

Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the United Automobile Workers wired the Senate Judiciary Committee: "Don't be suckers for the left hook of Henry Wallace and his Communist collaborators who seem to be trying to provoke you and the Senate into passing the Mundt-Nixon bill."

He urged that the Senate keep the Communist party, together with its "front organizations, its stooges and dupes above ground and out of the cracks in the woodwork so that they can be dealt with by fact, reason and existing law . . ."

Leon Henderson, head of Americans for Democratic Action, charged that the Communists actually were seeking passage of the bill, despite their announced opposition to it, in order to achieve "martrydom." He asked the Senate not to be "stampeded" into falling into such an alleged "trap."

BUT what the Senate and its Judiciary Committee will do with the bill still is Washington's $64 question. Two members of the committee—Langer (R., N. D.) and Cooper (R., Ky.)—have criticized the bill. Others are known to favor more complete study of it.

If the Judiciary Committee reports the bill out, however, chances of its passage would be strong, even though liberal Senators will raise determined opposition on the floor of the Senate.

Fearing Petition, GOP Speeds TEW

SPURRED on by a last-minute avalanche of signatures to a discharge petition to wrest the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill out of the Housing Banking & Currency committee, House Republican leaders suddenly roused themselves into motion.

As the CIO News went to press, Rep. Jesse Wolcott's committee appeared anxious to escape the petition shotgun by quickly reporting the measure out. Just previously the House GOP leadership, eyeing warily the flood of petition signatures, belatedly slapped housing on its "must" list. Commented GOP Speaker Joseph Martin: "We have intended right along to pass a housing bill."

In one day, last Wednesday, TEW supporters were reported to have obtained 30 names to the petition, which then came within about 40 signatures of the goal. Discharge petitions require 218 signatures. Pressure from voters back home and by the Democratic leadership were said to be responsible for the last-minute rush

The measure has been sleeping in Wolcott's committee for two years. An unswerving foe of the public housing section of the bill, he refused to hold hearings on it until passage by the Senate forced his hand. Hearings have been conducted since May 3 and the Michigan Congressman seemed prepared to continue conducting them until Congress adjourns June 19.

COMMENTED the conservative New York Herald Tribune last week: "For the last three days the committee has droned along, beguiled by one solitary witness of negligible importance. In considering a well-threshed bill like this one, that has been before Congress for nearly four years, such behavior appears designed more to obstruct than to illuminate the House."

Once on the House floor, the measure seems assured of passage, although a bitter fight over the public housing section will undoubtedly flare up.

That date in '48

Here's a reminder to CIO members:

There are only 148 days left until Nov. 2—the date on which Americans go to the polls

Too Many Brokers ERP Advisers-Carey

The European recovery program needs advisory committees "broadly representative of the whole American people," CIO Secy.-Treas. James Carey said last week.

Testifying before a Senate committee on trade treaties, Carey said such committees should be appointed "at once."

"Just now, it appears that the advisers being named comprise none but members of the rich men's club, and yet the major scene of the struggle in Europe is taking place at the level of the working people," Carey testified.

"Businessmen, brokers, and members of the Union League Club cannot win the full confidence of working people.

"If maximum results are to be obtained, the appointments to the Advisory Committee must comprise persons fully informed on workers' problems in whom the workers of the European countries will have first-hand confidence."

Negro Rights Are Backed

SOUTHERN professional politicians are riding the circuit just bursting with their protestations of adherence to "Southern tradition" and opposition—'til I die, suh!—to Pres. Truman's civil rights program.

Their noise hasn't made much impression on non-politician Sonutherners, if North Carolina University can be taken as an indication.

At Chapel Hill, the Students for Democratic Action—an affiliate of the Americans for Democratic Action—took a poll of graduate students on whether they would object to attending classes with Negro students.

Approximately 70% of the students would not object, the poll showed.

SDA interviewed the vast majority of graduate and professional students. Only the Pharmacy Department (85 objections to 58 no objections) and the Zoology Graduate Department (4 to 3) were opposed.

Twenty-seven departments were polled.

Grow Your Own

If you want a turkey dinner for Thanksgiving, 1948, you'd better raise your own.

The Agriculture Dept. predicts prices will be at least 10% higher than last year, because growers are raising about one-fifth fewer turkeys this year than last.

CIO Tells Watchdogs T-H 'Tragic Mistake'

THE Congressional "watchdog committee" on the Taft-Hartley Law last week held hearings which were designed to see whether something should be done to amend the act. Chief dog-watcher is Sen. Joseph Ball (R., Minn.)

The CIO, however, one of the main witnesses, declared: "We are opposed to the act as a whole. Its passage was a tragic mistake and its repeal will enormously benefit not only the 60,000,000 wage-earners of this country but our entire people."

Main CIO testimony was presented by Arthur Goldberg, CIO general counsel. Representatives of several other CIO internationals were on hand to state their positions and file statements.

They included Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers, a CIO vice-president; T. A. Johnstone and Irving Levy, Auto Workers; Isadore Katz, counsel, Textile Workers; Henry Mayer, counsel, Telephone Workers Organizing Committee; and Tom Owens of the rubber union, who filed a statement for URW Pres. L. S. Buckmaster.

Earlier in the week, Vice-Pres. Hyman Blumberg of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers had testified about health and welfare funds, a subject which Goldberg also emphasized.

The auto union witnesses cited several examples of how companies had adopted anti-union policies since passage of the T-H law a year ago.

Knight told the commitee "it's quite apparent that substantially the entire act is approached from the point of view of preserving the employer's interest—regardless of the effect it may have upon the interests of the employes. With such an approach, either chaos in industrial relations will be created, or workers' rights and collective bargaining will be destroyed."

The CIO attorney re-affirmed the organization's basic faith in American democracy, but warned that "repressive" laws weaken the democratic structure. He warned that the security of older workers must be improved, and that collective bargaining should be permitted full rein to permit solutions to the problem.

GOLDBERG noted that the committee wanted testimony on five major points:

1. Union shop elections: "Having placed the Labor Board in a hopeless mess by requiring union security elections which experience has demonstrated are wholly unnecessary, it is now proposed that this situation be remedied by outlawing all forms of union security . . . The CIO is convinced that all limitations are unwise . . . The existing statutory limitations upon the scope of union security agreements in preventing discharge for any reasons other than non-payment of dues have made a mockery of the union shop agreement."

2. Speed in handling of cases: "Critics of the Taft-Hartley law, including the President, freely predicted that the act would stultify the board's procedure. This is precisely what has occurred . . . The board's delays have operated primarily to the detriment of unions."

3. Industry-wide bargaining: "One would think the least this committee would care to do would be to preserve the right of working people to strike—a right which is indispensable to a free society."

4. Union welfare funds: "We deny that there is a 'problem' in connection with union welfare funds, except the problems created by the T-H act."

5. Contractual strikes: "There appears to be an invitation to make the law more restrictive with reference to unions and the rights of their members."

GOLDBERG then went into an analysis of the law and its effects on the American scene. Observing that "it is not possible at this time to present a balanced picture of the overall impact of the act," he declared:

"In considering the effects of T-H we cannot mechanically view this law as merely changing the pre-existing rights and obligations of employers and labor organizations.

"The act has in effect completely altered the course of labor relations.

"In its most fundamental aspect, this law has changed and is changing our industrial mores (customs) with incalculable effect upon labor-management problems at every stage of the organizational process and collective bargaining relationship.

"We cannot ignore the mutual hostility between labor and management this act has bred.

"We cannot ignore the chaos and resentment at the plant level which this act has brought into being.

"We cannot ignore the fact that this act has strengthened the hands of the most anti-labor portion of American industry in its determination to destroy labor organizations and to lay the basis for the revival of an open-shop industrial America.

"Everywhere in the industrial scene today there is eloquent testimony to this strengthened determination.

"It may be found in the unprecedented accumulations of unresolved grievances in the plants. It may be found in the provocations and arrogance of plant managements who now feel that their long-cherished hopes of destroying the unions of their workers may be easily realized. It may be found in the growing number of established collective bargaining relationships which have been destroyed by employers. It may be found in startling statistics relating to the use of the labor injunction."

Other highlights of the testimony:

Strikes: "In evaluating the effect of the act, it is obvious that it would be extremely dangerous to attribute virtues to the law in direct proportion to its success in repressing strikes. The fact that a law forces individuals to work against their will, to take 'no' for an answer or a reasonable wage demand, is hardly something in its favor.

"But, in the report issued by the majority of this (Watchdog) committee in March, the claim was made that the act had succeeded in reducing strikes.

"This claim was made primarily upon the basis of a comparison of the first part of 1947 with the last part of 1947, in disregard of the fact that in the latter part of every year since 1927 the strike figures declined with reference to the first part.

"The strikes figures are now available for the first quarter of 1948.

"In the first quarter of 1947 there were 3,670,000 man-days of idleness as the result of work stoppages. During a comparable period in 1948, there were 7,730,000 man-days of idleness because of work stoppages."

Union unfair labor practices—the cornerstone of a new anti-labor technique: "There are few labor disputes today in which some employer cannot find a basis or a claimed basis for invoking the intervention of the federal government. Even a picket-line scuffle, normally the subject of police court action . . ."

Coercion by unions—and by employers: "Employer sponsors of charges of coercion against unions are not interested in obtaining punishment of particular individuals for illegal misconduct. They are far more interested in bringing to bear the force and power of a federal official—namely, the General Counsel (Robert Denham) of the Labor Board — for strike-breaking purposes."

One-sided administration: "It is not entirely accurate to condemn the general counsel and the board for their one-sided administration. The statute itself makes one-sidedness in administration inevitable."

Improper rule-making by the office of the general counsel: He recalled the famous "proceed at its own peril" statement, ascribed to Denham, which occurred in the Remington Rand case. Though Denham claimed he had been misquoted, "we think it unfortunate that he should have made a statement at all under circumstances which inevitably strengthen the hand of one of the parties to a labor dispute."

"The Taft-Hartley law is not serving the ends of industrial peace. It is bad for business, for labor, for the public. It has turned the clock back on progress in the field of industrial relations. It should be repealed."

END STRIKE: With the signing of a two-year contract giving 75,000 Chrysler employes a straight 13c hourly increase, the two week's strike came to an end. Shown at the conclusion of negotiations are, l. to r., Art Hughes, UAW; Norman R. Matthews, president, UAW Chrysler division; Robert W. Conder, Chrysler labor relations director; John Leery and George Huth, company officials. Standing: UAW representatives William Lineberry, Harold Julian and Richard T. Leonard, company officials Gerald Atkinson and Cass Miller.

Chrysler Strikers Win 13c Hourly Increase

TWO weeks on the picket lines ended for Chrysler workers with a 13c hourly raise and the satisfaction of knowing they had helped shatter industry's solid "no wage increase" front.

To the 75,000 CIO Auto workers at Chrysler the victory means a total annual gain of $23,700,000. Coupled with the General Motors settlement completed earlier the same week it may set a pattern for peaceful settlements in the rest of the industry. Talks with Ford—last of the "Big Three"—begin June 15.

Following acceptance of the agreement by the membership, UAW Chrysler Division Director Norman Matthews hailed it as "an important gain for the Chrysler workers themselves and an important contribution to the whole economy of the nation at a time when the continued increase in cost of living makes imperative an increase in purchasing power.

"The Chrysler strike and the militant spirit of the Chrysler workers," he continued, "contributed to the substantial gain won by the General Motors workers, and their victory in turn made possible the settlement won in Chrysler today."

Matthews, however, said he considered the size of the increase and the other concessions insufficient from the standpoint of the workers' need, the company's ability to pay without price boosts or the national economy's need for increased purchasing power in lower income groups.

"In view of the Chrysler Corporation's refusal to pay one penny of increase without a strike," he said he considered the agreement a "resounding victory."

HE EMPHASIZED that the settlement could not "honestly" be used by the corporation as an excuse for boosting prices again. In fact, said Matthews, Chrysler could afford to pay the increase to all its employes, including executives, clerical and supervisory workers, reduce prices $120 per car and still make 6% on its investment.

In addition to the 13c hourly pay hike, effective May 31, the union won the following concessions:

- Adjustments on wage inequities, including a 3c hourly rise in the minimum rate, a 5c hourly boost for firemen-powerhouse; a 5c hourly gain for mechanical repairmen (garage); 5c for operators of Greenlee drills and 10c for cutter-setters.
- Increase in 1949 vacation pay, which would give workers with 1 to 5 years' seniority $62.20, a $5.20 rise over their present $57 vacation pay. Workers with 5 or more years' seniority, now receiving $114, will get $124.40.
- Salaried workers receive a 9% boost with $20 monthly minimum.
- The contract expires August 1, 1950, and may be reopened after June 15, 1949.

Meanwhile, on the GM front, UAW spokesmen last week took issue with the company's explanation of its 11c hourly settlement.

IN WASHINGTON, D. C., to testify before a Congressional committee on the Taft-Hartley Act, T. A. Johnstone, assistant director of the union's GM division, told reporters that GM had "desired very much to conceal the fact that 6c had been added to the base rate."

GM officials, who in negotiations had confided they would be hard-pressed to explain the increase to "some very important people," had publicized the breakdown on the figure as a 3c hourly productivity increase and an 8c cost-of-living increase, he said.

Actually, explained Johnstone, the productivity increase amounted to 6c an hour the first year of the contract and 3c the second year, totaling 9c during the life of the agreement.

The contract permits a 1c hourly wage increase or decrease for each 1.14-point change in the Bureau of Labor Statistics index beginning in September. The wage cannot be cut by more than 5c an hour in the event of a cost-of-living decline, however. Subtracting this from the total 11c increase just granted, GM workers remain with a flat 6c hourly boost added to the base rate not contingent on the cost-of-living, rather than 3c, he said.

. . . BUT THIS IS CERTAIN

Not being psychic, we can't tell you whether Dewey, Taft, Stassen, Warren or some "dark horse" will be given the GOP job of trying to sell the public on the idea that he should have a four-year "lease" on the White House.

Neither can we tell you whether Truman or someone else will be in their pitching from the back of the Democrat donkey.

However, there's one thing political we know for sure, and it's this:

Unionists are going to have to do a lot of hard work if the anti-labor complexion of Congress is changed in November.

Grousing and griping won't do the job. Neither will sitting around and thinking nasty thoughts about those who killed OPA and enacted the Taft-Hartley Act.

Only an effective political campaign could turn the trick—and when you're in the CIO and talk about politics you talk about PAC.

That's the organization through which you can make your efforts count.

PAC is picking up steam for the campaign just ahead. It's becoming well organized in the places where organization really means something—where the voters live and cast ballots.

You can make two valuable contributions to the PAC campaign—your time and your money.

How about giving a buck or two now?

And how about becoming a block or precinct worker if you haven't already done so? ★ ★ ★

VICTIMIZED BY NON-DEFLATION Say, what in the world happened to that campaign to halt disatrous inflation and put an effective anchor on the skyrocketing cost of living?

You know what we're talking about—that drive to stop what began happening after Congress listened attentively to the NAM and then put the skids under OPA.

We seem to recall that President Truman came out with a 10-point anti-inflation program which we partially approved.

Our recollection is that the GOP leadership in Congress said "nothing doing' to the Man from Missouri, passed a miniature anti-something-or-other program of its own and then declared:

"The President now has enough power to control inflation. If it isn't controlled it's his fault."

It was like telling a guy to bail out the ocean with a leaky bucket.

We remember the stock market "crash" of a few months ago, which, the experts said, marked the beginning of a downward price trend.

We recall what a couple of big industries said about bringing down the cost of living when they went through some price-cutting motions a few weeks ago.

Pardon us if we're a bit cynical about the whole thing. We just got through buying a week's supply of non-deflated groceries. ★ ★ ★

HEIGHT OF STUPIDITY We think the height of stupidity was achieved last week when several thousand persons—who asserted they favored defeat of the Mundt-Nixon Bill—picketed the White House.

It is obvious that all—or most—of those who joined in this demonstration are pro-Wallace and therefore opposed to Pres. Truman. But oppose Truman or not, there is one principle on which he has held firm. That principle is civil liberties, which, as the CIO has stated, would be seriously imperiled by passage of the Mundt-Nixon Bill. And he has indicated he will veto the bill if it is passed.

You can't defeat vicious legislation by stupidity. The White House picketing was disgustingly stupid.

'Operation Dixie' Affects The Nation

Doubling Membership in Two Years Was Only One of Major Accomplishments

By ALLAN L. SWIM

YOU can't use cold statistics to tell the entire story of "Operation Dixie"—the CIO's membership campaign in the South.

It's a warm, human story—a story of courage, coercion, violence, accomplishment, temporary set-backs, grueling work and pleasant surprises.

At best, you can tell only part of the story because the final chapters won't be written for years to come.

And the final chapters will be distorted by the passage of time and by the varying viewpoints of the historians.

THE Southern membership drive began in June two years ago with a staff composed largely of men and women who had had no real organizing experience.

At that time CIO membership in the South was about 400,000. Today it is about 800,000.

This means that the CIO in Dixie grew as much in the past two years as it did in the 11 preceding years.

A major portion of this growth was in more than 800 new local unions which were established. The remainder was in existing unions which were only partially organized.

These figures do not take into consideration the thousands who have joined local groups which have not yet been recognized as bargaining agents.

THE economic impact of the campaign has been tremendous—and, some day, the political impact will be equally as great.

One of the favorite tactics of Southern industrialists who oppose unions is to grant unorganized workers the same wages that the organized ones achieve through negotiations.

This is particularly true in the textile industry—the basic industry of the South.

As a result, most Southern workers have received during the past two years wage boosts comparable to those won by the unions.

And the organized groups have made real progress in their fight to eliminate the North-South pay rate differential. They have eliminated it in some industries and whittled it down in others.

THE drive for new members in the South has also been a campaign to improve civil rights—and considerable progress has been made in this field.

Dozens of organizers were arrested on such charges as "distributing handbills," "using sound trucks" and "soliciting union members without a license." CIO attorneys won acquittal for all of them and obtained rulings that laws limiting freedom of the press and freedom of speech were unconstitutional.

Organizers now operate without fear and with complete freedom in dozens of towns and cities where "union agitators" formerly were molested and beaten.

There is still a lot of room for improvement, but a good start has been made.

VAN A. BITTNER, director of the Southern drive, and his associates correctly view their work as a national—not a regional—undertaking.

They know that CIO unions in the North, East and West will regain insecure until the South is solidly organized.

They know that real wage gains of unionists throughout the nation will be limited as long as a North-South pay rate differential exists.

They know that the entire nation will be better off—politically as well as economically—if the standard of living in the South is improved through unionization.

And they realize that the seeds they have planted in factories which were not ready for unionization will bear fruit later.

THIS is part of the story of "Operation Dixie"—and there's a good chance that it lacks much of being the most important part.

We may have to wait until the children of today's Southern industrial workers grow into adults before we can see the full effect of one of the greatest contributions the CIO has made to the South.

It will be interesting to learn what has happened to youngsters whose fathers gained dignity and independence through unionization—factors which are enabling the children to obtain better educations than they dreamed of a few weeks ago.

These children could easily change the course of Southern history.

Old Photo is Used To Discredit Strike

How an old photograph may be used by a newspaper to discredit a strike is told in this editorial in Work, publication of the Catholic Labor Alliance:

If you're planning to publish an anti-labor newspaper, here's a tip on technique.

Keep a file of pictures showing pickets beating police or pickets battling non-strikers. Photos of police beating pickets are no good—they might win sympathy for labor. These pictures can be old—just so they don't look old.

Then when some violence breaks out in a strike, don't worry if you have no picture of the current violence. Just pull one of the old shots out of the file and publish it with a headline about the current strike, as though the picture were current too.

You'll find this time-tested formula useful in swinging your readers to hate all strikers. (Be careful to label the strikers as rioters" or—better yet, that nastiest of epithets—"CIO goons.")

If you think that this formula isn't used, just thumb through the Chicago Tribune. The headline on its May 15 back picture page screamed: "Minnesota Guardsmen Armed Against Goon Squads." Below this was a four-column picture of one man clubbing another. Other headlines in this and previous issues linked the picture with meat strike violence in South St. Paul, where the Minnesota National Guard was called out.

But was the picture taken at the scene of this violence? Of course not. It was taken in 1934. Not in a meat dispute either—but during a teamsters' strike. And not in South St. Paul either—but in Minneapolis. These facts were printed in small type below the picture.

For variations on this technique, consult almost any issue of the Tribune.

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP By YOMEN

"Wage increase? Why James, what for?"

Hot Tip Turned Out To Be Dud

AN ex-rail bender, a false rumor, a mountain "hideaway" and a couple of newspaper reporters once provided the principal ingredients of a "big story" that turned out to be a complete dud.

The former rail bender still get a big laugh every time somebody mentions that Sunday afternoon in the mountains.

The reporters, however, never did appreciate the humor of the situation. No news man likes to go on a "wild goose chase."

None of the CIO members directly involved ever learned what the editors said when their reporters reported there was no story to write.

THE CIO's Political Action Committee had been established a short time, and a group of state CIO leaders voted to get together and discuss the new organization.

For some reason or other they decided to hold a meeting at a rather isolated spot atop a mountain. Perhaps they wanted to get away from the heat and the hustle of cities.

Naturally they wanted privacy but they weren't seeking complete secrecy. They intended to make a report on the meeting to the newspapers.

But their selection of a meeting place only whetted the appetites of the reporters who heard the false rumor.

SHORTLY before the meeting opened two reporters from papers unfriendly to the CIO arrived on the scene.

They wandered around among the delegates for a few minutes, then spotted a Newspaper Guild member, who was on the program for a talk on politics.

They got the idea that the Guildsman was on hand to cover the "big story" too —so they walked over to him.

"Say, this is really going to make a hot story, isn't it?" one of them asked.

"Oh, I don't know. There may be something on the program that will make news," the Guildsman replied.

"Make news, hell!" said the other reporter. "It will make headlines! Our paper has been itching for a chance to expose the PAC as a Communist front organization—and today we're going to get the dope we need."

The Guildsman looked steadily at the non-Guildsmen and then asked, "What in the world are you talking about?"

THE two reporters decided to share their big secret with the "uninformed" Guild member. They seemed delighted to do so.

"Why, hadn't you heard? The top guy of the Communist Party is going to speak here this afternoon. He's going to give these CIO people advice on how to run a political campaign."

"You don't know what you're talking about," said the Guildsman. "There's nobody from the Communist Party either on the program or at this meeting, insofar as I know."

"You just don't know, then," one of the reporters said. "Earl Browder is definitely scheduled to speak. I've got that straight."

THE Guildsman, who had helped arrange the program, laughed loudly, then grabbed the reporters by the arms and led them among the delegates.

Finally he found the man he was looking for.

"Earl," he said." I want you to meet a couple of reporters who have come way up here to cover our meeting.

"Gentlemen, this is Earl Crowder, a representative of the United Steelworkers. He used to be a rail bender down at Birmingham.

"The name is Crowder—not Browder: He's the fellow who's going to speak!"

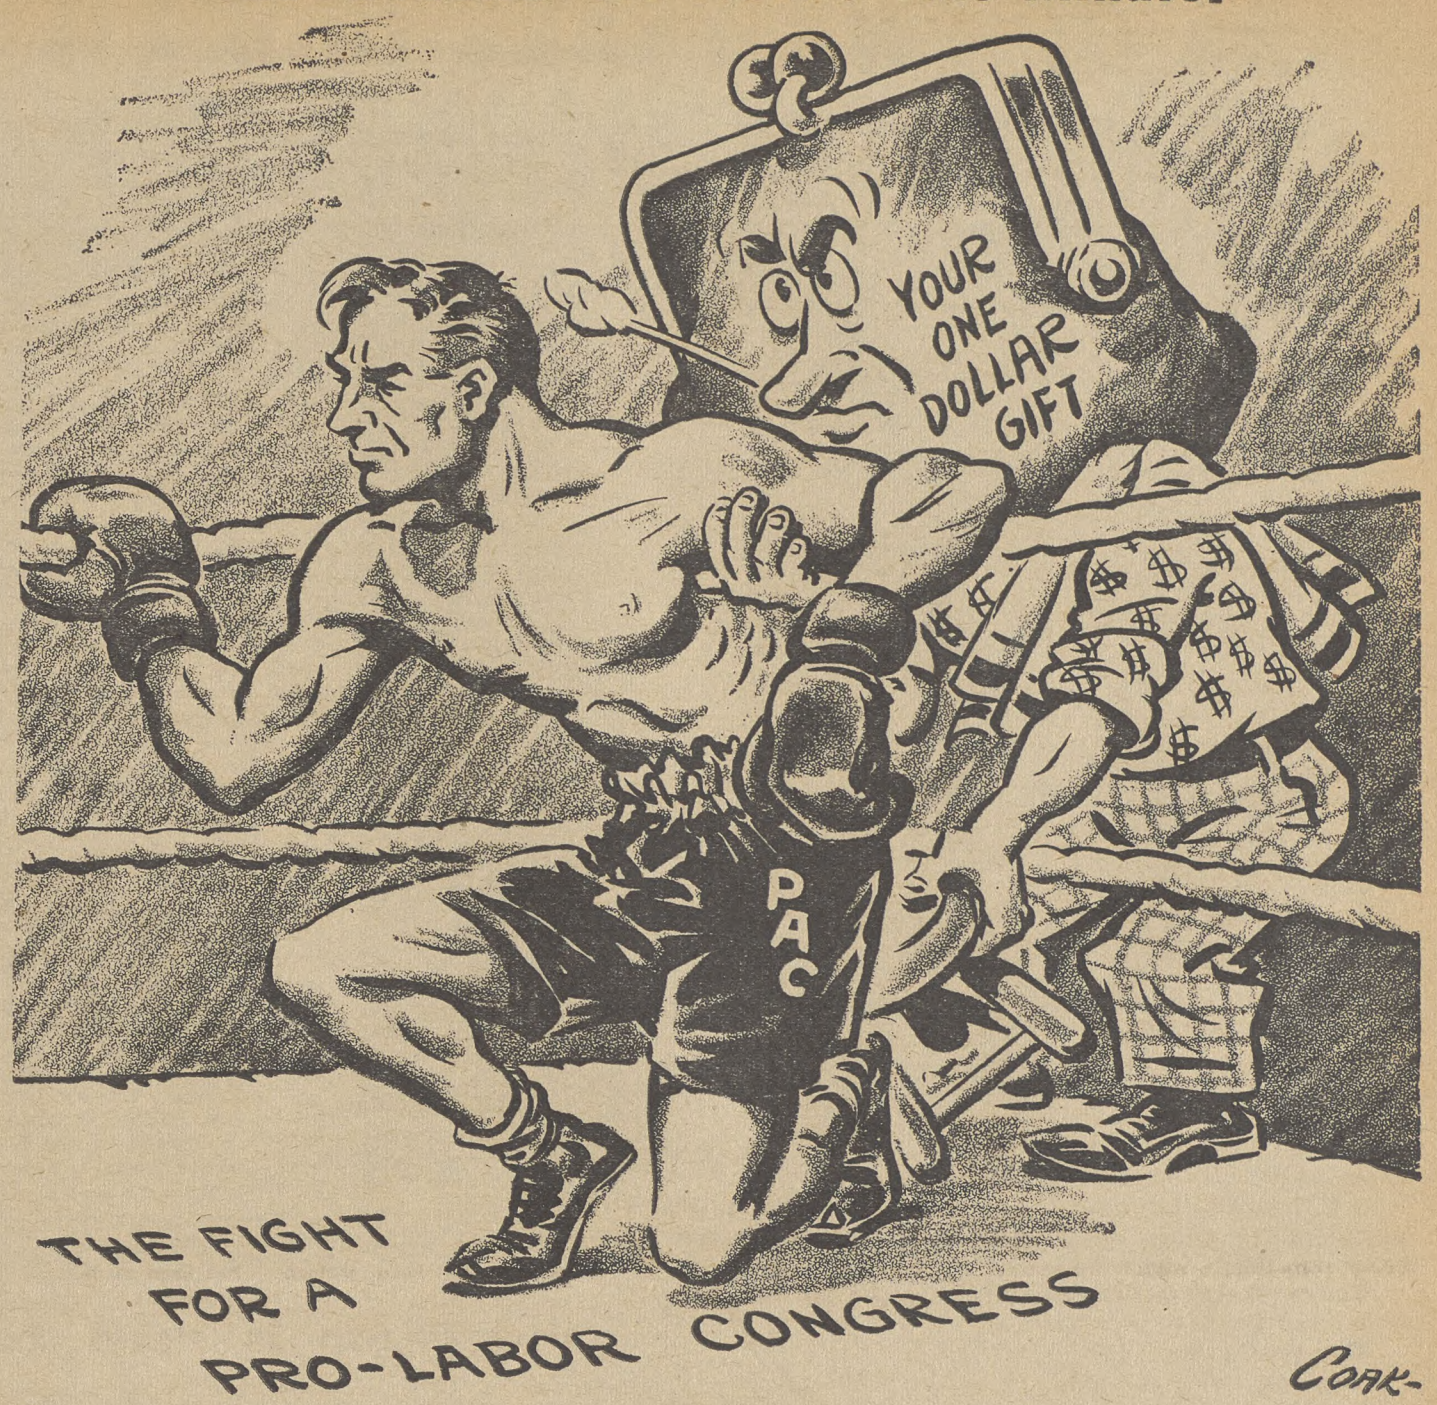
The 'Second' He Needs This Minute!



Research Throws New Light on Southern Labor History

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

WORKING conditions were terrible and pay was low on the construction job in Virginia where some 500 white and Negro workers were employed on the lower level of the canal. About two-thirds of the workers were white, mostly Irish.

The white men were restless and dissatisfied and grumbled to each other. They had to pay for their meals out of their meager wages and little was left to show for their backbreaking labor. It was plain that trouble was brewing.

Finally in May they staged a demonstration and struck for higher wages, but returned to work bitter and ashamed, after the president of the company took what he called "proper precautions to preserve the peace."

In June they threw down their tools and struck again, and this time returned only after their demand for a 20% increase was granted. Then a terrifically hot spell set in, and 20 or so of the Irish workers died of heat prostration. To keep the men from going out on another strike, the company was forced to grant some "fringe" provisions, including regular medical attendance.

THIS all happened, not during the southern organizing drive of recent years, but more than a hundred years ago, in 1838, when the James River and Kanawha Co., then the most powerful corporation in Virginia, was constructing a canal west of Richmond with a crew of free white labor and Negro slaves.

Prof. Richard B. Morris, author of a recent scholarly book, "Government and Labor in Early America," tells of this and other strikes of long ago in an article on "Labor Militancy in the Old South," in the May-June issue of Labor and Nation. (Address: P. O. Box 18, Ansonia Station, New York 23, N. Y.)

The article is part of a study of labor controls in the slave states which he is making under a grant from the American Philosophical Society. Labor and Nation states that Prof. Morris is dividing his time this year between visiting professorships at Princeton and Columbia Universities, and a membership at the Institute for Advanced Study, Princeton, where he is engaged in writing a book on freedom and labor in the slave states.

Since events and developments of labor today spring from roots buried in the past, Prof. Morris' investigation into pre-Civil War labor in the South should be of great interest in respect to the current Southern organizing drive. Morris seems to be a pioneer in exploring activities of white labor in the Old South, about which apparently very little is now known.

ALREADY through his research into old newspapers, documents and other original sources, Morris has discovered a number of serious omissions and errors in labor histories regarded as reliable. These in general have spread the idea that there was no trade union activity to speak of in the pre-Civil War South.

He points out that the monumental work of John R. Commons and associates, "History of Labor in the United States," was based exclusively for the pre-Civil War period, on the files of Northern newspapers and those of a few border states.

"But even these inadequate sources hold at least a hint of white trade union militancy in the slave states," says Morris, pointing out that Commons' History lists 23 different trade unions organized and 19 strikes called or threatened between 1833-37 in Baltimore, chief business center of the slave state of Maryland.

The number of unions organized in Baltimore "compares favorably with trade union activity in Philadelphia and New York during the same period," Morris states.

Also cited in Commons' History on the basis of these same Northern newspaper files are strikes in other Southern cities, including seven in Washington, D. C., and four in suburban Georgetown. Printers' strikes took place in Richmond, Va., in 1836 and in New Orleans and St. Louis in 1837, according to Commons.

MORRIS comments that the leads offered in Commons, however, were not followed up by American labor historians. John B. Andrews, he says, on the basis of tables appearing in Finchers' Trades Review in 1863-64, concludes that "unionism was confined, with one exception, to the region east of the Mississippi River and mainly to the northeastern and central part of that region."

As a result of his research into early sources, Prof. Morris has come up with the surprising discovery "of a fighting labor movement—sporadic and lacking in unity, to be sure—in such slave states as Virginia, South Carolina and Louisiana, where white laborers, as compared with slave labor, held an unfavorable and even degraded position, and where slave competition, traditional slave labor controls, and economic conservatism would be presumed to be powerful deterrents to such risky operations."

SAGA OF TWO YEARS IN DIXIE: CIO DOUBLES MEMBERSHIP

By ED STONE

THE Southern Drive, which enters its third year this week, has resulted in the establishment of more than 800 new local unions and added more than 400,000 names to the rolls of CIO, Van A. Bittner, national director of the CIO Organizing Committee, reports.

"This means the CIO has doubled its membership in the South in two years," Bittner said.

When the drive started in June, 1946, it was hailed by the nation's press as "Operation Dixie," an "Invasion of the South," and, in some quarters erroneously reported as a campaign to organize "one million members in a year."

The idea of organizing a million people in anything within a year is absurd, Bittner said.

"It would be a remarkable achievement for the government to organize an army of a million men within a year—even with the help of selective service," he said.

AT the onset of the drive, no goal or time limit was set. The object of the drive was, and is, to organize the unorganized in the South, regardless of how it takes.

Perhaps the most remarkable result of the drive is the rapidly changing attitude of small business men and the general public towards the CIO.

No one can write the whole story of the Southern Drive—it is too big. But it has already won for itself an important chapter in the history of the South. The impact of the Drive on the economic, political and the moral thinking of the South is just now being realized.

IN writing of the campaign some will chronicle the amusing incidents—how one organizer had to round up a man who could talk in the sign language in order to get the message to a group of deaf mutes in a textile mill. Some will dwell on the violence—how 22 organizers and local union leaders have been brutally beaten.

VAN A. BITTNER

Says Philip Murray: "You have completely justified our faith

The political repercussions, as the result of union organization are already resounding. While the Southern Drive has divorced itself from any political activity on strict orders from Director Bittner, it will naturally follow that when men and women start thinking collectively about their jobs they will start thinking in unison about their government and who they will elect to office.

To many, the strides made by the CIO in solving the South's race problem will appear outstanding. Churchmen, welfare workers and civic leaders freely admit that the CIO has done more to better the plight of the Southern Negro than the combined efforts of all of the "I-do good" organizations.

By insisting on equal pay for equal jobs, the CIO has improved the economic status of the Negro and thereby placed him in a position to improve his health, housing, educational and moral status.

HOWEVER, the benefits derived from the Dixie Campaign are not limited to the states below the Mason Dixon line. Unless the Northern wage differential had been whittled down, it is problematical that Northern union locals would have been able to negotiate the wage increases won in recent contracts. Northern manufacturers can no longer point to widespread unfair competition of Southern low wage areas as a reason for withholding pay increases. Nor can Northern manufacturers threaten to move their operations to Southern states rather than pay fair wages.

The Southern Drive has met every obstacles that the well organized manufacturer's organizations can bring into play. Management, with years of experience of fighting unions in the North, has hired renegade preachers to preach that unionization is anti-religious. They have cooperated with the Ku Klux Klan to spread word that unions are un-American. Terrorism, brutality, race intolerance and bigotry have all been met and—in most cases—overcome.

On the bright side of the picture is the fact that all of these barriers are being surmounted. The Southern press has not been totally unfriendly. News of the drive has been factually told and adverse editorial comment has been the exception, rather than the rule. Clergymen, with a deep understanding of good men working for the well-being of their flock, have been more than cooperative.

CHURCH and labor groups have been formed in a majority of Southern cities and regular luncheon meetings are held for discussion of the problems of working men and women. It has not been unusual to have clergymen call on members of their congregation urging them to join the union.

The Southern Drive is a crusade—a crusade against poverty hardship, suffering and economic bondage. It is now recognized by most Southerners not as an invasion, but as a "crusade of liberation."

Southern working men and women are awakening from the lethargy that has kept them at the foot of the economic ladder. Southerners have a heritage of independence and militancy that is fast coming to the front, with the result that some of the nation's strongest and most active locals are found as a result of the CIO Southern Drive.

'Dear Bro. Bi

Dear Brother Bittner:

As you mark the beginning of the third year of the CIO Organizing Drive in the South, millions of grateful CIO union members are expressing deep pride and sincere appreciation for the great job you and your excellent staff have done.

Your accomplishments among the workers of the South is being reflected not only in the ranks of our unions but throughout the entire country. The intelligence, hard work, and enthusiasm which the men and women of your staff are putting into the Southern Drive is bringing a new and better way of life to hundreds of thousands of working people.

We are fully aware of the great difficulties which face you in carrying out your mission. You have completely justified the faith we have placed in the

...ner' Strikes In South Prov... Workers Want Unions

THE number of strikes in Southern plants, where management has refused to bargain after an election has been won, bears mute testimony that Southern men and women want unions—and are willing to fight for them.

Members of the Textile Workers Union have been on strike 14 months at the Amazon Mill in Thomasville, N. C. Amazon is part of the Cannon chain and Cannon refuses to sign a con tract with the union.

Down in Cuthbert, Ga., some 1100 woodworkers have been on strike for nearly a year—another case of management refusing to bargain after an election was won. An interesting sidelight to the Cuthbert strike is that t... men took time out from th... picket line to help organize th... workers at an adjoining mill—and election was won.

IT took a two-year struggle an... a four-month strike to win ... contract at the Pee Dee Mill i... Rockingham, N. C. But th... union stalwarts stuck—and they won.

TWUA Local 43 has been on strike since December at th... Dallas Mill in Huntsville, Ala.

After winning an election a... the Ewing Mill in Prattvill... Ala., with more than 90% of th... votes going to the union, th... company refused to sign a co... tract. The workers struck.

Advance In Civil Rights

AN ORGANIZER was arrested in Georgia on a charge of soliciting union members without paying a ...ity license fee.

In North Carolina, several organizers and local union leaders were arrested on charge of "distributing handbills" and "using a sound truck."

There were other arrests on similar charges in other Southern states during the past two years—but no CIO representative was required to go to jail or pay a fine.

That's because the CIO Organizing Committee has been fighting as hard for preservation of civil rights as it has for the establishment of new unions.

Jerome Cooper of Birmingham, attorney for the Committee, has a 100% record of winning acquittals for CIO men and women arrested on "civil rights" charges in connection with organizing. Some of the charges were dismissed when Cooper made it known that he intended to challenge the constitutionality of ...ity ordinances under which arrests were made.

OTHER cases were won on appeals from city and county courts.

Miss Lucy Mason, CIO Southern public relations representative, has been successful in halting abridgement of civil rights in a large number of cases involving organizers. She has frequently served as "trouble shooter" in tense situations.

"While it is true that 22 of our organizers and local union leaders have been physically assaulted, there has been a very definite improvement in the civil rights' situation in the South during the past two years," Committee Dir. Van A. Bittner said.

WE distributed hundreds of copies of a splendid CIO pamphlet on civil rights among members of our staff, local union officials, law enforcement officers, judges and prosecutors throughout the South. This, we believe, had a good effect.

"We obtained good results from the publicity given us when we went into court to fight for civil rights and won."

Bittner said that civil rights violations in most portions of the South are "no worse and no more frequent" than in many other parts of the nation.

"It's about the same every place you go," he said. "You run into the violations when the union is new and weak. They cease when the union is established and becomes strong."

S. Carolina:

Franz Daniel, Director in South Carolina, says:

"The CIO organizing drive in South Carolina is keeping pace with the rapid industrial expansion taking place here.

"We have overcome many serious obstacles to reach the point where we can now see a growing trend towards organization on the part of the unorganized workers. The next year will bring us a good measure of the successes we have been striving so hard for during the past two years."

The Directors Say:

MISSISSIPPI
Robert W. Starnes

"With pardonable pride, I would like to assert that Mississippi has the finest organizing staff in the country—and we can prove it. The State legislature has just enacted a workmen's compensation measure that can serve as the model for the rest of the states. That would not have happened without strong union organization. We think we have a pretty good state—and the CIO is making it better."

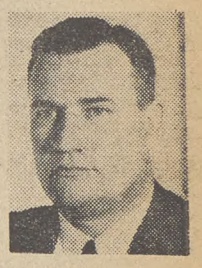
TENNESSEE
Paul R. Christopher

"In Tennessee, we believe the victories already won and the organizing campaign now under way make 1948 our best year in the Southern Drive.

"Our well-knit Tennessee staff is now made up of seasoned organizers who have made the necessary readjustments, in organizing procedures under the Taft-Hartley law, and we know just where we're going."

TEXAS
Robert Oliver

"In Texas, we have a big state and CIO is doing things in a big way. We are operating from the Panhandle to the Gulf and from the northern border to the Rio Grande. Although the gain in Texas have been remarkable to date, we are ready really to hit the jackpot in a dozen spots within the next several weeks. The news from Texas is good."



ALABAMA
Carey E. Haigler

"We in Alabama are concentrating on textiles—and we can report progress. We can safely predict that the membership in Alabama textile mills will be more than doubled before the end of 1948. In a number of plants, we have had to strike after winning elections in order to force management to bargain with us."

GEORGIA
Charles Gillman

"Georgia is fast becoming a CIO state. The progress of CIO in Georgia can be gauged by the ecomonic and political gains being made here. I think it is significant that the only Congressman from Georgia who consistently voted for labor during the 80th Congress, comes from an area that is more than 90% CIO-organized. The coming elections will reflect the heavy increases in CIO membership."

VIRGINIA
Ernest B. Pugh

"The studied and planned pattern of opposition to unions throughout Virginia is having an entirely different effect than that expected by the small manufacturer's group sponsoring it. It is serving to make wage earners mad—and when wage workers get mad they join unions. That is what is happening in Virginia. The future looks good for CIO in Virginia."

FLORIDA
Charles L. Cowl

"Although the Drive has only been in operation about a year in Florida, we can report definite progress.

"We are becoming well and favorably known and many of the erroneous opinions about CIO have been dispelled. We have elections pending in a dozen plants and organizational work is being conducted in a score more."

LOUISIANA
Fred C. Pieper

"Louisiana is happy to report that never in the history of CIO in this state has the future looked better. Our progress reflects credit on our efficient and hard-working staff. The work of the voluntary organizers, from the already organized locals, has been particularly noteworthy."

NORTH CAROLINA
Bill Smith

"We have the greatest concentration of industry of any Southern state, and although we have accomplished much during the past two years, a big task still faces us.

"We have laid the ground work in North Carolina for a CIO structure which promises to bring the union and better living and working conditions to thousands of textile, wood, tobacco and furniture workers soon."

ARKANSAS Lee Tucker

"The situation in Arkansas can be defined briefly as a long-term organizing project demanding a lot of hard work. With our limited staff we have made important gains, and we will continue to do so until the job is done.

Despite the hardships endured by members of my staff, their high morale and enthusiasm never waiver. With such organizers we can't help but succeed."

Tenn. CIO Hears Call To Organize, Vote

TENNESSEE is pretty much Boss Ed Crump's bailiwick. It has a poll tax, an anti-closed shop law and Jim Crow traditions.

But last week about 200 persons, both white and Negro, representing 110 local CIO unions in the state, made it quite clear that Tennessee's growing union population wasn't going to take some things sitting down.

It was the ninth annual Tennessee CIO convention, held in Chattanooga. There were 11 guest speakers, among them Assistant Labor Secy. John Gibson; Van A. Bittner, Director, CIO Organizing Committee; John Edelman, legislative representative, CIO Textile Workers; Anthony W. Smith, assistant director, CIO Councils; Carey Haigler, president, Alabama CIO Council; and Allan L. Swim, CIO publicity director.

All 11 emphasized primarily the effects of state and national legislative action on workers and inferred that labor's only recourse is further organization and increased political action.

GIBSON praised the CIO for the success of its Southern organizing drive. Those new members, he said, "will reap great benefits in improved wages and working conditions, and the economy of the South and the entire nation will be strengthened.

"When Southern workers ask for a raise, they are sometimes told that they ought to be satisfied with what they're getting, because their living costs are lower," he asserted. "When you get down to hard facts, these so-called regional differences do not actually exist except in someone's imagination.

"The hopes and aspirations of American workers and the whole of the American people, for that matter, are the same north or south of the 39th latitude and east or west of the Mississippi River."

MUCH the same point of view was expressed by Bittner. "Anything done to weaken the trade union movement is a move to weaken democracy and destroy liberty," he said—and Taft-Hartley is only the beginning.

Only a strong trade union movement—"particularly the CIO"—can change that trend, he continued. Thus he urged delegates to step up organizational work by forming or joining volunteer organizing committees.

The 80th Congress came in for another attack in Swim's address, when he charged the legislators had "almost entirely ignored the needs of the people" and "trampled on civil rights."

The "extreme leftists" are attempting to split the trade union movement from within and Big Business is trying to weaken or destroy it through sponsorship of such legislation as the T-H law and the Mundt-Nixon Bill, he asserted.

The U. S. is following closely the path that led the nation into a depression after the late 1920s, he pointed out. "As before, unreasonably high prices are drying up consumer purchasing power at a dangerous rate," Swim said.

A RESOLUTION urging enactment of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill stressed the necessity for a "large scale program of housing by the federal government . . . to house all Americans . . . without regard to race, creed or color."

Other resolutions sought abolition of the poll tax; restoration of price controls over basic necessities; federal aid to education; a national health insurance program; enactment of the Thomas-McCormack 75c minimum wage bill; repeal of the T-H law; and strengthening of local PACs through effective block and precinct organizations.

Approved in principle, but referred to the executive board for proper wording were resolutions condemning Tennessee anti-labor legislation and the Mundt-Nixon bill.

A resolution opposing the third party and pledging strict adherence to CIO policy was adopted with only four dissenting votes after the most spirited debate of the three-day meeting.

Earl A. Crowder, Steelworkers, was returned to the Council presidency for a second term.

CIO Tests Louisville Pay Tax

A CIO member has filed an "unfriendly" suit challenging the constitutionality of Louisville's new "occupational tax" on the grounds it is discriminatory and is actually an income tax.

(In legal circles, a "friendly" suit is one that is filed with the consent of the State attorney general in an attempt to determine the legality of some piece of legislation. An "unfriendly" suit—sometimes called an "adversary" suit—is one filed without the consent of the attorney general.)

The suit was filed by William Sebree, president of Local 1634, CIO Railroad Workers, who is an employe of the Louisville & Nashville. His attorneys are Edwin C. Willis, Lawrence S. Gratiman and Luther M. Roberts.

The suit—filed in Circuit Court—asks preventing the city from collecting the tax. It declares the tax discriminatory because:

1. Domestic servants are exempt, but what they receive for their work, including lodging and meals, is in many cases in excess of the average wage paid other workers.

2. It levies a 1% tax on gross income of workers, but when applied to professions and businesses it is 1% on net income.

Sebree's suit points out that he, as an L&N worker, does not receive his gross pay, since Social Security, federal and state income taxes and Railway Retirement assessments are deducted. Also, he must buy certain types of clothing and equipment necessary to his work.

But, continues Sebree, professional and business people can, under the act, deduct such items as expenses connected with their work, social security, income tax and "other license and taxes."

This, the suit contends, violates the uniformity clause of the State Constitution and another clause "which prohibits an absolute and arbitrary power over the property of free men."

SEBREE was accompanied to the court by PAC Chm. W. H. Beatty, CIO Reg. Dir. William B. Taylor, and other CIO leaders.

The CIO has asked employers to transmit payroll deductions to the city "under protest." Taylor told a meeting of union officials that several employers, including L&N, had agreed to pay under protest.

Senate Passes Bill To Admit 200,000 DPs

A BILL to permit 200,000 European displaced persons—under stringent rules of selection—to enter the United States has won approval in the Senate.

By a 63-13 vote, the Senate passed the measure on to the House for action. The DP bill has a top priority listing on the Republicans' action program.

The bill was amended by the Senate to double the 100,000 quota set by the Judiciary Committee. The 200,000 would be allowed to enter the U.S. during the next two years.

If enacted, the bill will help solve the problem of some 800,000 persons who have been living in refugee camps throughout Germany, Austria and Italy since the end of the war.

Sen. Pepper (D., Fla.) complained, however, that half of the 200,000 DP's to be admitted are refugees from the Baltic nations of Lithuania, Latvia and Esthonia—all of which were absorbed by the Soviet Union in 1940. This is a too high proportion, he said, since less than one-quarter of the DP's come from the Baltic countries.

In addition, he charged that Jews are practically excluded from the quotas, since the eligibility date for entry into German DP camps — Dec. 22, 1945 — preceded the influx of Polish Jews seeking to escape anti-semitic outbreaks in their country.

THE bill provides that half of the DP's must be farmers, that they must be screened for loyalty to American democratic ideals, that they have job skills needed in the community to which they move, and that they cannot displace any American from either his home or his job.

A three-man commission established by the bill will supervise details of the two-year immigration program.

CIO and other labor, liberal, religious and national groups have given strong support to the campaign for displaced persons legislation during the past two years.

Most of the displaced persons are former slave laborers imported to Germany by the Nazi regime who declined to return to their home countries because of Communist regimes; refugees from those countries; and Jews escaping persecution. Large numbers of the Jewish DP's have been seeking entry to Palestine.

Organizing Textile Pamphlet's Theme

The story of organizing efforts of America's textile workers from the time Samuel Slater opened the first textile mill in Rhode Island in 1793 down to the CIO Textile Workers Union of America today with its 450,000 members, is told dramatically in a pamphlet just issued by the TWUA.

Entitled "Building a Textile Union," the 33-page illustrated pamphlet begins with a brief account of the tremendous difficulties the TWUA faced when it took on the job of organizing textiles.

How they finally succeeded when the newly organized CIO went into textiles in 1937, and how the gains under CIO began piling up is described in the pamphlet. It cites the doubling and in some cases, the tripling, of wage rates; employer-paid health insurance programs; paid vacations and holidays; reduced hours and job protection, and other gains that have brought a better life for textile workers.

(Copies of the pamphlet may be obtained from the TWUA, 99 University Pl., New York 3, N. Y.; price, 15c each, $11 in lots of 100.)

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

In an election conducted under the auspices of the Utah Labor Relations Board amongst the employes of the American Linen Supply Co., the results were: Eligible to vote 134; for CIO 85; no union 34.

CIO Reg. Dir. Frank Bonacci was in charge, assisted by Pres. Clarence L. Palmer of the Utah CIO Council.

Dir. of Org. George Brown, Woodworkers, Portland, Oreg., reports that of the 25 eligible to vote, all voted for the Woodworkers. Brothers Harold Salter and Marion Bullock were in charge.

Congress is planning adjournment without any attempt to amend the vicious provisions of the Taft-Hartley Law and with an all-out effort to pass the Nixon-Mundt Bill, which the CIO has protested against. This Congress will be recorded in the future as the most reactionary that has ever assembled.

The CIO Auto Workers came through with an agreement with General Motors Corp., and then followed the Chrysler settlement where the workers were on strike. Other corporations in the electrical field have since made moves to settle. It is to be expected that some other industries will fall in line with this.

The Natl. Labor Relations Board has ruled that an employer has the right to compel workers to attend meetings called by the employer at the plant and listen to his harangue and condemnation of unions and its officers. This ruling is a strict violation of what every American has understood to be his freedoms.

The board also ruled that the plant protection men cannot be certified if they are affiliated with AFL or CIO. Where does the freedom of association come in? Some day, with an aroused public, labor particularly, these antiquated and dangerous decisions will be erased and the law amended to protect the sacred rights guaranteed in the Bill of Rights.

The answer to all this is—organize more and more, and keep the movement united. Let no political party divide you.

Harvard Mag Does A Good Job On NAM

THE malevolent structure behind the bright facade of the Natl. Association of Manufacturers is revealed in—of all places—the Harvard Business Review.

The Review is published by the Graduate School of Business Administration of Harvard University. The author of the critical article, "NAM: Spokesman for Industry?" is Alfred S. Cleveland, lecturer, School of Business, Univ. of California at Berkeley. Cleveland is also a business consultant.

Cleveland declares that NAM's structure is such that a comparatively few companies control what it does, that its policies are created without enough debate by the membership, and that, to put it bluntly, the NAM creates class conflicts.

Steamroller: Discussing how NAM maneuvers to present a "united front," Cleveland says:

"Complete unity can only be achieved through a program of meaningless generalities or rationalization of the narrowest of group interests. (To a large extent this course has been followed by NAM in the past under the apparent belief that public opinion can be similarly channeled through the use of advertising techniques.)

"The fallacy and tragedy of this type of thinking is that it solves no basic problems, introduces violent emotion into areas already split by and torn by such feelings, widens the gaps between economic groups, and forces society, acting through government, to make punitive legislation expeditions in an effort to hold the struggle within bounds.

"The final goal then becomes government itself—a tremendous battle for power in which each side, using the same weapons, attempts to conquer by creating public fear of other important and essential elements of society."

Little Democracy: Cleveland believes there is little democracy in the formulation of NAM policies. He states that "the association's formal structure is closely patterned along business lines, with the result that the rank and file members enjoy very limited participation in policy making."

He says that while the board of directors (in 1947 there were 153) and the executive committee have full authority for the policy formation there are six standing "policy" committees which "appear to be the basic institutional elements from which emanate the association's stands on various issues."

These committees make the recommendations on policy "with the approval by the board or the executive committee, or by independent action of either the board or the executive committee.

The university lecturer points out that while there are many executive offices. This group constitutes approximately 0.8% of current membership and has never exceeded 4%. The self-perpetuating characteristic of the active minority is indicated in the fact that yearly turnover of its members have averaged but 1.4% for the entire 14-year period, as compared to approximately 25% turnover for the association's governing hierarchy as a whole."

Cleveland declares that sometimes that state of affairs exists in "many group organizations, particularly of the pressure type; certain labor unions offer an obvious example in another field."

Big Business Dominates: The business consultant asserts, however, that "the identity of the inner policy-making group indicates that active leadership within the NAM comes primarily from among the very largest manufacturing corporations. Thus none of the 125 firms referred to employs less than 500 workers, and 84 firms, or 62.7% employ more than 2,500 workers.

"The NAM has frequently asserted that more than 70% of its members employ fewer than 500 workers. It is thus evident that in terms of size the firms and the industrialists that have dominated the association's governing elements have not been representative of the NAM's own membership.

"This conclusion is further substantiated by analysis of the balance sheet assets of the inner group. Of the corporations comprising the active minority, 90% have assets of $10 million, while the assets of 44% of these firms exceed $50 million."

'Most Damaging Indictment Of NAM Ever Published'

STATEMENTS by Alfred S. Cleveland in his article on the Natl. Association of Manufacturers in the Harvard Business Review are "somewhat less than flattering to the NAM," the Rev. George G. Higgins points out in his weekly column "The Yardstick."

Father Higgins is the assistant director of the Social Action Dept. of the Natl. Catholic Welfare Conference. He continues:

"As a matter of fact, considering its very respectable sponsorship and its thoroughgoing objectivity and scholarliness, we may fairly state that this article is the most damaging indictment of the NAM ever published—all the more damaging in view of the fact that the author himself is avowedly a friend and admirer of the free enterprise system.

"Mr. Cleveland quarrels with the NAM precisely because his painstaking research has forced him to conclude that the program of the NAM has been and continues to be seriously harmful to the cause of the free enterprise system. 'The extreme conservatism of the NAM,' he concludes, 'to the extent that it is due to the traditional practice of basing policy on the narrow and precarious base of limited and short-run self-interest, is reason for real alarm.'

"EVEN during the darkest days of the great depression, says Cleveland, 'the Association vigorously opposed the efforts of the national administration to alleviate the shocking distress of millions of unemployed and underprivileged citizens. The NAM was wholly lacking in a constructive program suited to the circumstances.'

"And mind you, he is writing under the auspices, not of the AFL or the CIO, but of the Harvard Business Review which even the NAM will not be able to brush aside as a prejudiced or irresponsible witness.

"'Professional associations,' Cleveland says, 'and some labor organizations are able to prescribe group ethics and to discipline members who violate them. At present the NAM cannot, and this lack of effective sanction explains in part the sterility of many of the Association's platforms and its failure to recognize or propose remedies for specific deficiencies in the management of industrial affairs.'

"This very timely article, then, is anything but carping in its outlook. On the contrary, it's a public service to American industry—a service in the form of a very frank and very forthright challenge to the intelligence and the good will of American businessmen.

"American businessmen, organized into their own free associations, are challenged to 'define economic abuses and act against them within their own community.' They are challenged, in effect, to concentrate less on the reform of the labor movement—for which the NAM has never had a fondness, anyhow—and more on the reform of their own associations and their own economic and industrial practices.

"Let them remember that the American labor movement, with all its faults, has been, as Bishop Sheil remarked very recently, 'a most constructive force in the country.' 'It was the unions, not free enterprise,' the Bishop said, 'which brought the concept of justice into our industrial system . . . thereby elevating the entire moral tone of our economic system'."

31 Acts Opposed By NAM Are Laws

Of 38 major legislative proposals enacted into law between 1933 and 1941, the NAM opposed all but seven, the Harvard Business Review declares. Here is the score card:

Legislation opposed by the NAM: Securities Exchange Act, Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, Natl. Labor Relations Act, Agricultural Price Parity, R. R. Pension Act, Public Works, Social Security Act. Emergency Work Relief, Banking Act of 1935, Guffey Coal Act, Public Utility Holding Company Act, Emergency Transportation Act, Walsh-Healy Act (government contracts), Robinson-Patman Act, Anti-Strike Breaking Act, 1936 Revenue Act (corporate tax section), Guffey-Vinson Coal Control Act, Copeland Food and Drug Act, Fair Labor Standards Act (wages and hours), Executive Reorganization, Agricultural Adjustment Act (1938), unallocated relief appropriations, Federal relief measures (FSA, NYA, PWA and pump priming), undistributed profits tax, Trust Indenture Act, Natl. Guard Act (rehiring provisions), Transportation Act of 1940, extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act (1940).

Legislation Approved by the NAM: RFC (loans to small business), Housing Authority Act, direct loans to business, Natl. Housing Act, Corporate Reorganization Act, Wagner-Steagall Housing Act of 1937, Miller-Tydings Act (resale price maintenance), reduction in capital gains and corporate surtax (1939).

Peek Behind NAM Smoke Screen

DO you get nervous when the corporation man across the table starts to spout fancy economics—and winds up saying 'no pay increase'?

Then the May issue of the Economic Outlook is just what you need to throw the facts back at him. The CIO Research & Education Dept. publication is chockfull of material on "What's Behind the NAM Smoke Screen."

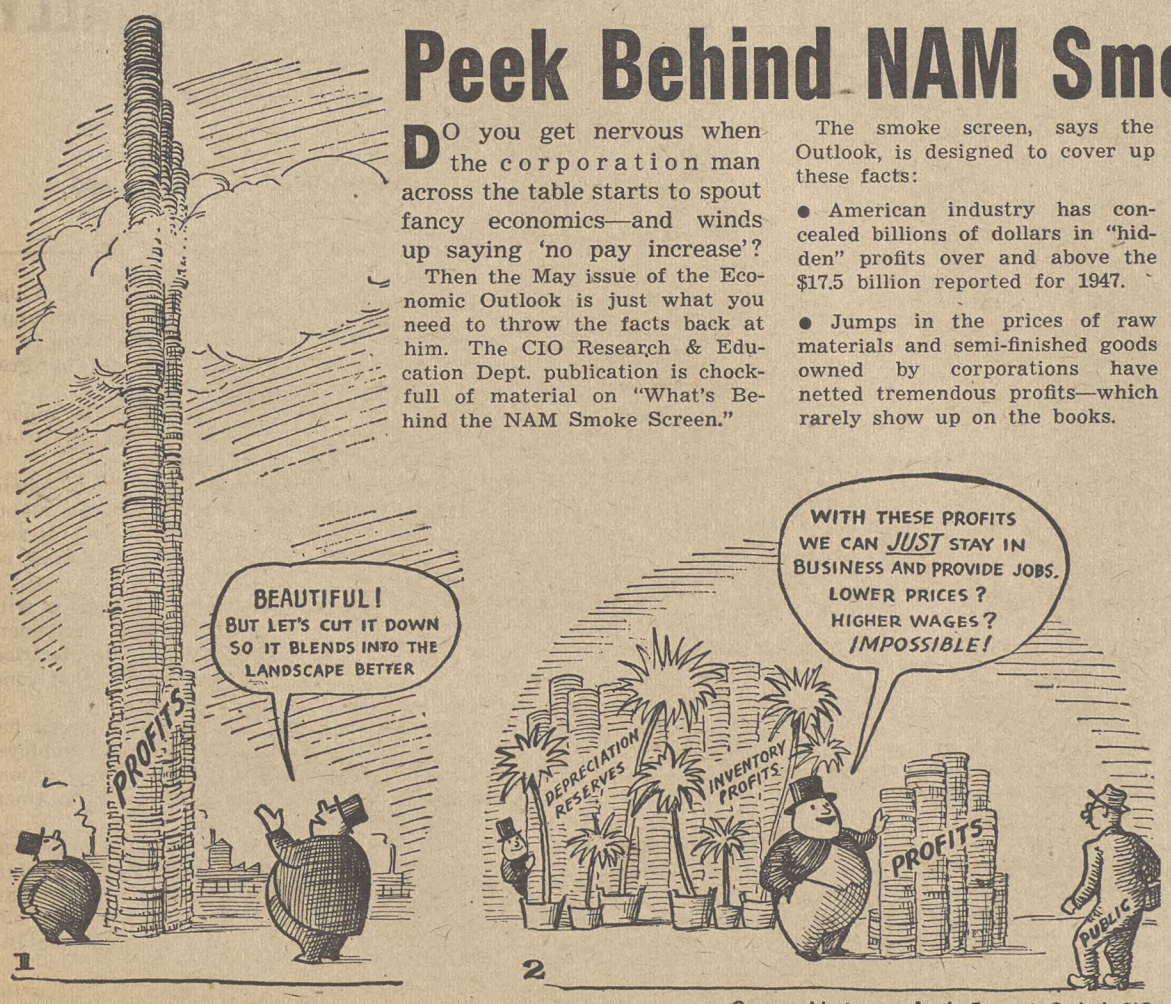
The smoke screen, says the Outlook, is designed to cover up these facts:

- American industry has concealed billions of dollars in "hidden" profits over and above the $17.5 billion reported for 1947.
- Jumps in the prices of raw materials and semi-finished goods owned by corporations have netted tremendous profits—which rarely show up on the books.
- Fancy accounting practices, that make Sonja Henje look like a stumblebum in comparison, prevent the public from knowing how much the corporations really make. (Many keep separate, confidential records for Uncle Sam's tax men.)
- Despite pleas and tears that taxes keep investors from buying stocks and bonds, American industry has so much capital that "we are literally swimming in it."
- Corporation advertisements that capital makes jobs (" . . . corporations have to find $8,000 before providing a worker with a job") are often interesting reading but they're poor economics. There was plenty of capital in 1932 and not much work.

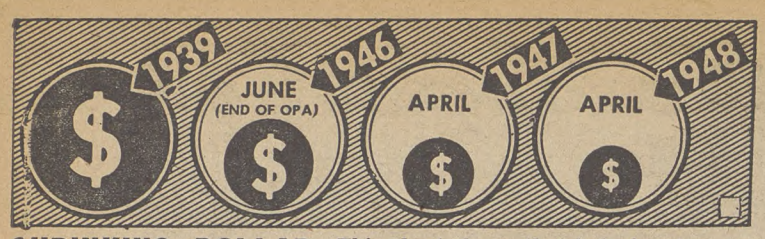
PRINCIPAL purpose of corporation advertising to justify profits is designed to build new confidence in the idea that "what is good for business is good for us," the Outlook says.

"From past depressions we know that what business thought was good for itself proved almost disastrous for our nation. These conditions have not changed."

Meanwhile, corporations have abandoned the practice of seeking money from the public or from banks, and are building up big reserves for future expansion.



Guernsey-Montgomery for the Economic Outlook, CIO.



SHRINKING DOLLAR: This chart shows that today's prices are far, far higher than in 1939. The new peak puts consumer costs 71.9% above '39. And that means the 1948 buck is now worth 58c in 1938 pennies.

A Report: U.S. Steel May Up Price Again

"The cost of living rose to a new high in April — 30% above January, 1946; 69.3% above 1935-39."

Thus spoke the oracle last week. The oracle is the U. S. News, published by David Lawrence and unblushingly pro-business.

Thus ended the brave crusade launched in January, 1948, when the soothsayers gleefully shouted that here indeed was the end of high prices; that the commodity market price break bespoke a new era; that no "third round" of wage increases was needed; that everything was just ducky.

The data on living costs is provided by the strictly non-partisan Bur. of Labor Statistics. What the bureau will say of May is obviously unknown, but there are ominous signs that, even if May showed a slight decline — which hardly seems likely—the future will be on the up and up—and we don't mean the up-and-up.

THE most ominous sign was a carefully worded story in the financial pages of the New York Times. That story reported that U. S. Steel—reluctantly, if you'll pardon the use of the word—has just about decided that it'll have to raise prices again. It seems that the famous steel "price cut" was a mistake. It was a mistake, reported the Times, because U. S. Steel now thinks it needs more cabbage.

(Need we remind you that U. S. Steel is the same U. S. Steel that just a month ago refused a wage increase to the CIO Steelworkers, expressing the pious hope that its refusal would be a blow to inflation. Who's inflating now?)

What has this increase in the living cost done to your pocket book?—assuming you occasionally have a dollar or so left in it.

Well, take the value of the $1 greenback. Using 1939—last pre-war year—as a yardstick, the $1 which was worth $1 in 1939 is now worth about 58 cents.

In arriving at that figure, we are using BLS' index of 200-odd basic commodities. However, that index contains some items which haven't varied too much in price and which aren't bought too often.

So, if you apply your dollar value to food — which has sky-rocketed far above other items—your 1948 dollar is worth only about 45 cents. For example, the amount of food you bought for $10 in 1939 now costs $22.

The clothing dollar has shrunk to about 51 cents. When you remember that it is estimated that a worker spends 65% of his weekly salary for food and clothing, you can realize where inflation has carried you—and where it may wind you up.

(A Presidential committee once said of BLS' index: "The widespread opinion that the BLS index grossly understates the cost of living is justified, if the cost of living is taken to mean the amount of money a family spends for the commodities and services it buys.")

Brother, can you spare 22 cents?—A.R.

Road to the Jungle

Textile Wins 13½c From Rug Firms

AGREEMENT on a 13½c hourly package increase has sidetracked a threatened strike by 20,000 CIO Textile Workers in the carpet and rug industry. Of the amount, 11½c represents a flat wage increase, the remaining 2c to be used for fringe benefits.

The new contract will add over $5½ million to the workers' purchasing power, and will bring average hourly earnings in the industry up to $1.37½, while the minimum rate jumps to $1.08.

Companies involved are the Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Co., Alexander Smith Carpet Co., Karagheusian Carpet Co. and the Mohawk Carpet Co.

For some 15,000 workers in the dyeing and finishing industry in the New York City area the union is seeking a 20c hourly boost plus a number of fringe benefits.

Benefits sought by the union include company-paid illness and hospitalization insurance, a seventh paid holiday, an additional 5c an hour for workers on "wet" jobs, and groundwork for a pension plan.

FE Board Votes To Sign Affidavits

The CIO Farm Equipment Workers' executive board last week voted to sign the non-Communist affidavits required for use of the Natl. Labor Relations Boards' facilities under the T-H Act.

FE Pres. Grant Oakes said the move was necessary to protect the union from "vultures in the labor movement."

Four board members resigned rather comply with the act. They are: Secy.-Treas. Gerald Fielde; Vice Pres. Ajay Martin; Organization Dir. Milt Burns, and Board Member At Large Pope Huff.

TWUA Will Hold So. Wage Meet

Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers has announced that a wage conference of TWUA local unions in southern cotton and rayon weaving mills will be held in Atlanta, Ga., on Sunday, June 20.

Delegates at the conference will represent 125,000 workers employed by 190 mills in Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas, Rieve said. They will review present wages of southern textile workers and will adopt union policy with regard to wage demands.

NOV., 1947: SHARON ON HER BED OF PAIN

Remember the kid in the picture above?

Yes, that's Sharon Meenehan, who was one of the first patients in the Franklin Delano Roosevelt Children's Wing, which was donated to the Georgetown University, Washington, D. C., by the CIO.

Sharon made headlines all over the country when Pres. Truman, who dedicated the wing, visited her and sent her a Mother Goose picture book. Sharon, three-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. Frank Meenehan, had suffered fractures of both legs and also of the pelvis in an auto accident. She also had severe head injuries. She was in the hospital for two months and then went through a long period of recovery. It was at least eight weeks more before she could walk again.

Now, Sharon is able to walk, with only a slight stiffness —and doctors assure the Meenehans she'll be as fit as a fiddle within a year. She is able to play and ride her tricycle and helps tend her little sister, Diana, 11 months. (See picture on page one.)

Truman wasn't the only one who sent her a gift, Mrs. Meenehan reports presents were sent from all over the country by people who saw her picture in the papers. A large number of get-well messages came in, too, and the Meenehans are building up quite a scrap book.

The FDR wing is now caring for scores of children, suffering from a variety of ills. The CIO made the donation because the hospital is one of the very few in the Nation's Capital which practices no discrimination in the admission or care of patients.

The hospital, which was built with the aid of a government grant, is one of the most modern in Washington. It is situated in the Georgetown district and is part of the university's medical center. The CIO contribution was $55,000.

The Very Rev. Lawrence C. Gorman, S. J., president of the university, said the CIO contribution was the largest one received. He was particularly gratified that it came from representatives of the people. He also noted that Pres. Roosevelt had signed the legislation which authorized the fund. The university is still collecting its share—30%—of the cost of construction.

Maritime Fact-Finders Picked

AS the maritime industry continued last week to say "no" to union demands, Pres. Truman appointed a fact-finding board under the T-H Act to investigate the dispute which is headed for a possible strike June 15.

Harry Shulman of the Yale University Law School is chairman of the board. Other members are Andrew Jackson, New York City attorney; Arthur P. Allen, University of California institute of industrial relations; Jesse Freidin, New York attorney, and George Chaney, San Diego labor relations consultant.

CIO maritime unions stalemated in negotiations are: American Radio Association (newest CIO national affiliate); Natl. Maritime Union; Marine Cooks and Stewards; Marine Engineers Beneficial Association, and the Longshoremen & Warehousemen.

ARA membership last week voted 12 to 1 in favor of a strike on or after June 15 if satisfactory agreement is not reached with the companies whose contracts expire at the mid-June date.

NMU and MCS strike ballots were being counted as the CIO News went to press. Protesting the lack of progress in the contract talks, the Joint Mobilization and Preparations Committee, composed of the negotiating maritime unions, began regular picketing of the offices of the American Merchant Marine Institute

To the CIO Shipbuilding Union's proposal for "substantial" increases, Bethlehem Steel Co., which operates nine shipyards, immediately protested "wage increases are completely unwarranted at this time."

THE ADVENTURES OF JIM BARRY

MARGIE IS BROKEN-HEARTED WHEN PETE DELLY BREAKS HIS ENGAGEMENT TO HER....

OH, JIM! WHAT'LL I DO NOW?

PETE LOST HIS HEAD, MARGIE. HE'LL COME BACK TO YOU WHEN HE COOLS DOWN A BIT!

DO...DO YOU REALLY THINK SO? YOU... YOU'RE NOT SAYING THAT JUST TO CHEER ME UP?

PETE'S ALWAYS BEEN A GOOD UNION MAN, MARGIE. HE'LL REALIZE THAT YOU HAVEN'T BEEN SEEING HIM SO MUCH RECENTLY BECAUSE YOU'VE BEEN SO BUSY WORKING FOR THE ELECTIONS...

BUT HE KNOWS THAT! HE KNOWS THAT I AM DOING THIS SO WE CAN IMPROVE CONDITIONS... AND...AND PETE AND I CAN GET MARRIED....

HE KNOWS THAT, ALL RIGHT - BUT HIS RESENTMENT IS SORT OF CLOUDING HIS MIND RIGHT NOW... I'LL TALK TO HIM... OR WORK SOMETHING OUT TO MAKE HIM WAKE UP....

YOU WILL, JIM?

SURE, MARGIE! GIVE ME A CHANCE TO THINK OF SOMETHING! NOW, I BETTER TAKE YOU HOME... BEFORE PETE FINDS OUT YOU'VE BEEN GOING OUT WITH ME AND BECOMES JEALOUS AND....

THAT'S IT, MARGIE! JEALOUS! THAT'LL WAKE HIM UP!

MEANWHILE, AT THE OFFICE OF THE UNITED LABOR PRESS....

SOMETHING'S ON YOUR MIND, PEGGY! WORRIED ABOUT MARGIE?

YES... AND... AND NO... WELL, YES...

NO WHUT KIND OF AN ANSWER IS THAT, YOUNG LADY? YES...NO...YES... LOOKS LIKE YORE MIND IS A BIT CONFUZZLED!

WHY, NO, POP! MY MIND'S CLEAR AND I KNOW JUST WHAT I'M THINKING!

RECKON I'M TOO OLD TO BE FOOLED BY THET, LASSIE! IF YORE MIND'S CLEAR, YOU'D HAVE NO TROUBLE KNOWING IT... AND YOU WOULDN'T BE SAYING "YES...NO...YES"- WHUT'S TROUBLING YUH?

NONSENSE! NOTHING IS TROUBLING ME....

LIKE I SAID, PEGGY- YUH CAIN'T FOOL AN OLD TIMER LIKE ME....

ARE YUH A MITE JEALOUS?

I... I.... YES, I AM!

Even Passage Of GOP 'Must' Bills Uncertain

REPUBLICAN leaders of the 80th Congress have settled on a "must action" list of Three D's — Draft; Displaced Persons; Dough for Uncle Sam.

With adjournment less than two weeks off, prospects are dim as a Kansas dust storm for important reform and civil rights legislation.

Housing, health, social security improvements, outlawing of lynching, ending of the polltax, lifting of minimum wages—none of them will pass, unless a miracle happens. And GOP leaders, heading into the party's tense nominating convention, aren't inclined towards miracles this year.

Sen. Taft (R. O.)—whose chance for the Presidential nomination depends in some measure on the record of Congress, of which he's a top leader—voiced hope that a "substantial number" of other measures might come up for action.

Next day, Speaker of the House Joe Martin (R. Mass.) sought to undo some of the damage to GOP public relations by averring that the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill has been on the action list "all along." But the House Banking Committee is still moving at snail's pace. (See Story Page 2).

Other Republican leaders said privately there's little chance of more than one or two of the other bills moving through Congress.

HERE'S the status of the three main items in the GOP "must" list:

Draft bill—opposed by church, labor and liberal groups—is due for vote in the Senate next week. It may face rough going, and Sen. Langer (R., N. D.) has promised to offer an amendment to bar racial segregation in the military service.

Such an amendment might cause long and bitter debate.

Displaced Persons bill—to permit entry into the U. S. of some 200,000 war refugees from Europe—was passed by the Senate June 2 in a watered-down form. House leaders have promised action in the near future.

Dough for Uncle Sam—appropriations bills for government agencies are scattered all over the Congressional pasture. It will take intensive work to get them passed before the June 19 adjournment date.

Although Congress has snipped here and pinched there, it's unlikely the legislators will be able to run the government for $37.2 billion, the goal they set early this year. That figure was $2.5 billion under Pres. Truman's estimate—but big new military appropriations have off-set "economy" cuts for civilian departments.

Thus, about one third of the budget—$13 billion—has been earmarked for the Army, Navy and Air Forces, and for new planes. More will be needed if the draft bill passes.

In contrast, the House made heavy cuts in the Labor Dept.'s funds, although these were partially restored by the Senate. There's been no final agreement on that item between House and Senate, nor on the Federal Security Agency money bill.

The House used a sharp axe to pare down FSA funds, transferred and weakened several social security bureaus, and inserted a Keefe rider barring payment of salaries to any government worker belonging to a union that's refused to sign Taft-Hartley non-communist affidavits.

The Senate has not yet acted on these matters. In handling the Interior Dept. appropriations bill, however, the House knocked out the anti-union rider and it may take similar action later on the FSA bill.

Reciprocal Trade

Back in the 1920's, Republican Congresses lifted tariffs sky-high. As a result, international trade dropped off to a trickle, helped make the depression worse.

Pres. Roosevelt and Sec. of State Cordell Hull reversed the trend through reciprocal trade agreements, designed to rebuild international trade. Now the GOP seems bent on bringing back the high tariffs of the 20's.

Testifying last week before the Senate Finance Committee, CIO Secy.-Treas. James Carey accused the House of "playing political football with vital issues." The House agreed to only a one-year extension of the trade pacts, and gave Congress the right to veto any trade pact within 60 days.

That provision, Carey told the Senate group, would bring "a return to the log-rolling and tariff bickerings of the old days. This would be disastrous."

He recalled that only three tariff treaties have ever been approved by Congress, for "special interests . . . have always descended upon Congress to plead their personal and individual cases."

Carey said tariff barriers are "artificial obstructions to international cooperation" and unnecessary to the success of the European Recovery Program.

"Re-erection of trade barriers would certainly undermine the confidence of the people of Europe in our proclaimed determination to help them re-establish themselves," Carey warned.

Equal Rights

A constiutional amendment giving equal rights to women has been reported out of the House Judiciary Committee.

CIO and other labor groups have fought the amendment. They charge it would destroy many federal and state laws to improve working conditions and pay for women, while giving them only "theoretical" equality. Unions have supported instead an equal status bill, which would preserve past gains.

Constitutional amendments must be passed by two-thirds of each branch of Congress and be ratified by thirty-six states—so there's little chance of anything drastic happening in the near future.

CIO Continues To Fight Draft

The CIO quickly nipped rumors last week that labor had given up its fight against a peacetime draft.

In a wire to key Senators and Congressmen, CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan declared:

"In view of the rumor circulating . . . that labor is not opposed to the present draft bill, we wish to advise you that the CIO has in no way changed its opposition to either peacetime conscription or peacetime draft.

"We do not feel there exists at the present time a threat to safety or security of our country which would justify any kind of draft legislation during the present session of Congress."

6 of 7 World War II Vets Have Jobs

Employment of World War II male veterans reached a new postwar peak of 12,262,000 in April, Perry Faulkner, chief of the Veterans Employment Service, announced.

Faulkner said latest Bureau of the Census employment estimates showed six out of every seven male veterans were gainfully employed.

He explained that student veterans are leaving colleges and universities in increasing numbers as they complete their educational courses. "It is estimated a minimum of 100,000 veterans will graduate or leave college in June," he said. "Over the next few years jobs will have to be found for more than a million student veterans."

Education Plan Flaws Cited

ARE the Reds trying to corrupt the country's teachers and school children?

Congress must think so, for it has appropriated $250,000 for a new program called "Zeal for American Democracy" designed to fight Communist influence in the school system.

The ZAD program, conducted under the direction of Dr. John W. Studebaker, U. S. Commissioner of Education, will be in full swing early next fall, according to plans. All teachers will be urged to give their pupils an understanding of the principles of democracy, and to tell them how to recognize the propaganda of Communists and "fellow-travelers."

National CIO Research & Education Director Kermit Eby, a member of Commissioner Studebaker's Federal Advisory Committee on Education, proposed at a recent meeting of the Committee that study material on the President's Civil Rights Report be prepared for the ZAD program.

Learning that no such material on Civil Rights had been prepared or planned, Eby urged that the ZAD program be used for "truly implementing democracy," by promoting the principles of freedom and equality outlined in President Truman's report "To Secure These Rights."

Finally, Eby protested the nominations of the Advisory Committee's slate which included Vice-Pres. Robert S. Wilson of Goodyear Rubber, as vice-president, pointing out that no labor people were included among officer nominees. This protest was successful, Eby said, as Wilson's name was withdrawn, and John W. Corbett, legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, was elected.

George L-P Weaver, director of the National CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, in a letter to Commissioner Studebaker, followed up Eby's objections to the negative slant given the ZAD program. Weaver urged that study materials on the Civil Rights Report be prepared for public school teachers on all grade levels and that the report be summarized and made available in discussion form for citizenship and adult education groups.

Urges More TVA's

Former OPA chief Chester Boyles said last week that if world-wide prosperity and peace are to be achieved, world-wide use of the TVA plan of river valley development will be necessary. The TVA technique could make land reform plans in the old world work, Bowles explained. It is needed to increase total food production.

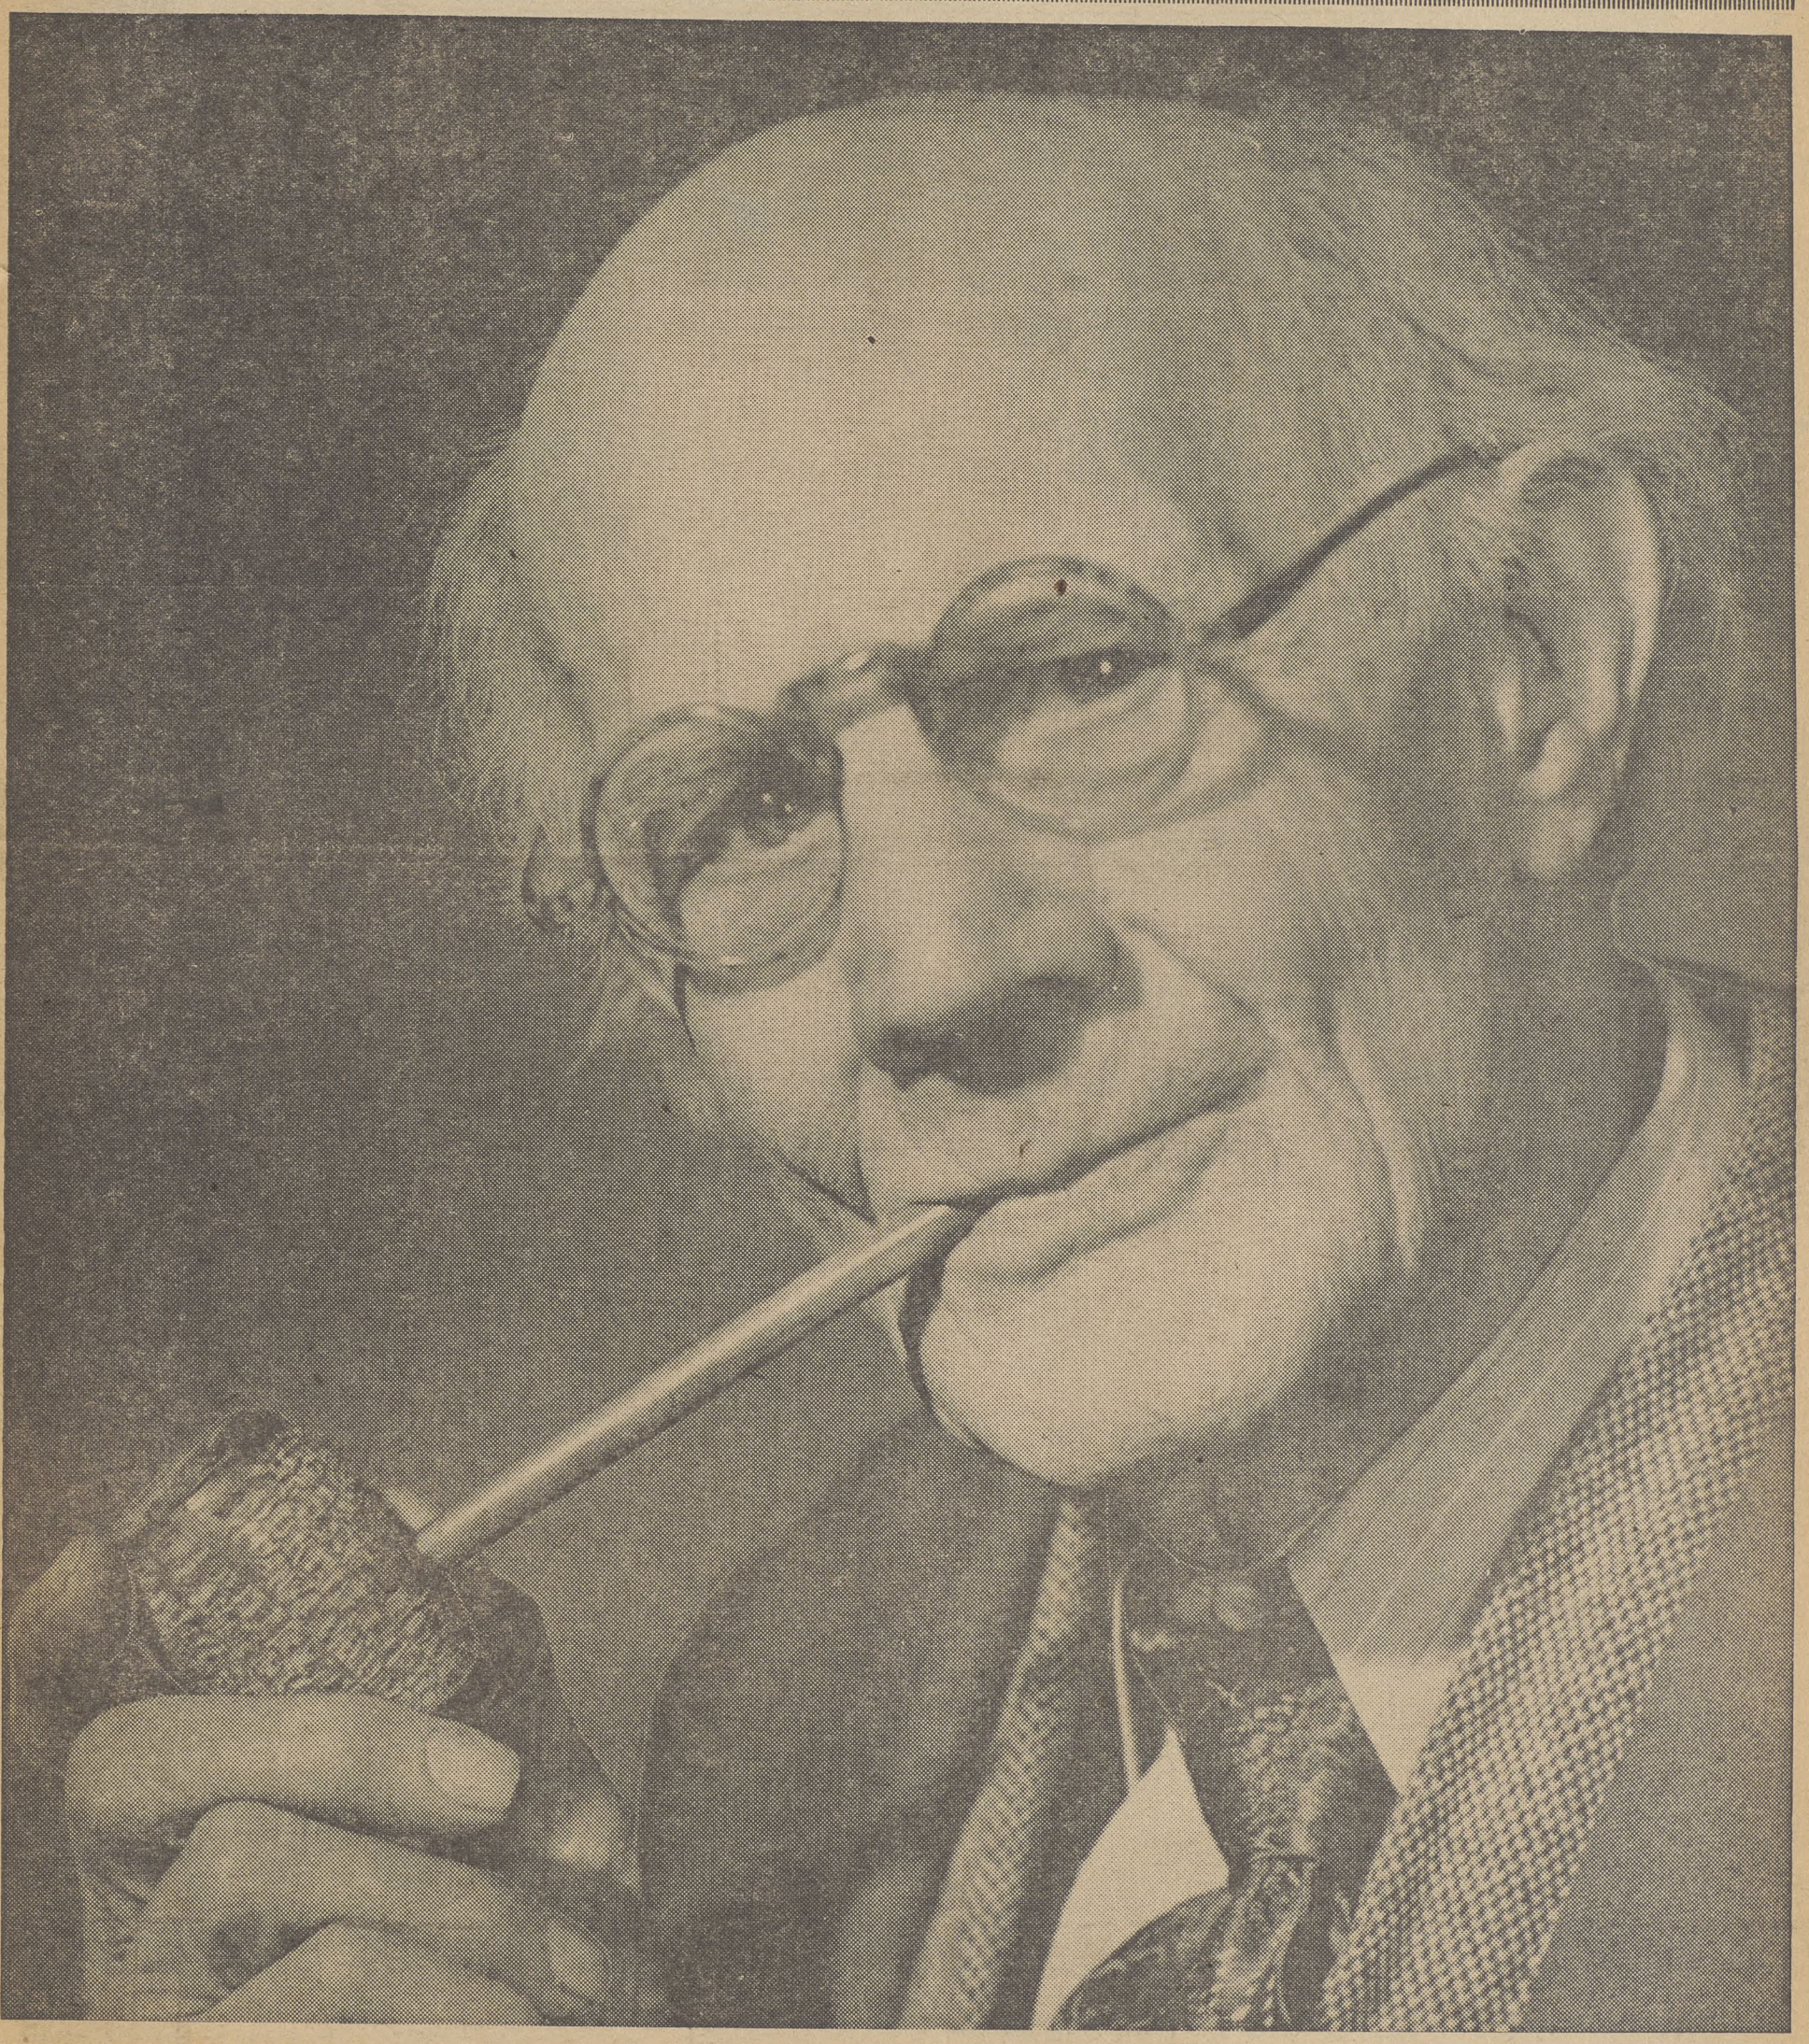
Vol. 11 WASHINGTON, D. C., JUNE 14, 1948 82 No. 2[illegible]



"SECURITY ON $25?" There are thousands of men like this, "enjoying" Social Security benefits of less than $25 a month. CIO is attempting to improve his lot. It is pretty obvious that cost of living has made that $25 inadequate. See pages 6 and 7.

5 Sea Unions Await 'Real' Pact Offer

FIVE CIO maritime unions are preparing to walk out together June 15 if ship owners on the Atlantic and Gulf Coasts and the Pacific Coast Waterfront Employers Association don't make an acceptable offer by that time.

As the CIO News went to press, a fact-finding board, appointed by Pres. Truman, submitted its report to the President on the dispute involving three of the unions — the Natl. Maritime Union, American Radio Association and Marine Engineers Beneficial Association.

Union witnesses before the board condemned the shipowners for taking a "downright dishonest" position in negotiations, and charged the President with appointing a board with "indecent haste."

NMU Pres. Joseph Curran told the probers that the operators had made no offer except to "do away with everything we have gained in the past 10 years." It would be possible to avert a strike, he said, if the owners would offer "something above the status quo instead of below."

He suggested that the government exert pressure on the companies to make them "sit down and get an agreement." Curran added, however, that he was positive an "injunctive order is on the desk" regardless of which way the board reports.

THE fact-finders also heard Harry Bridges, president of the CIO Longshoremen & Warehousemen which has pledged to stop work with the sea-going unions. If an injunction is obtained against his union, Bridges said, it could not force his men to load and unload foreign ships.

Further emphasizing their opposition to the inquiry, heads of four of the unions wired a strong protest to Pres. Truman.

Major points at issue in the contract talks are union hiring hall retention and wage increases. Involved in the maritime dispute are some 200,000 employes.

Following a heated contest within the union, Curran announced that an agreement with tanker operators has been ratified by the NMU membership. The two-year pact provides a $5 monthly raise, retention of the hiring hall, increase in maintenance and cure benefits from $3.50 to $6 a day, and free administration of penicillin in all vessels.

Writes Song Hit

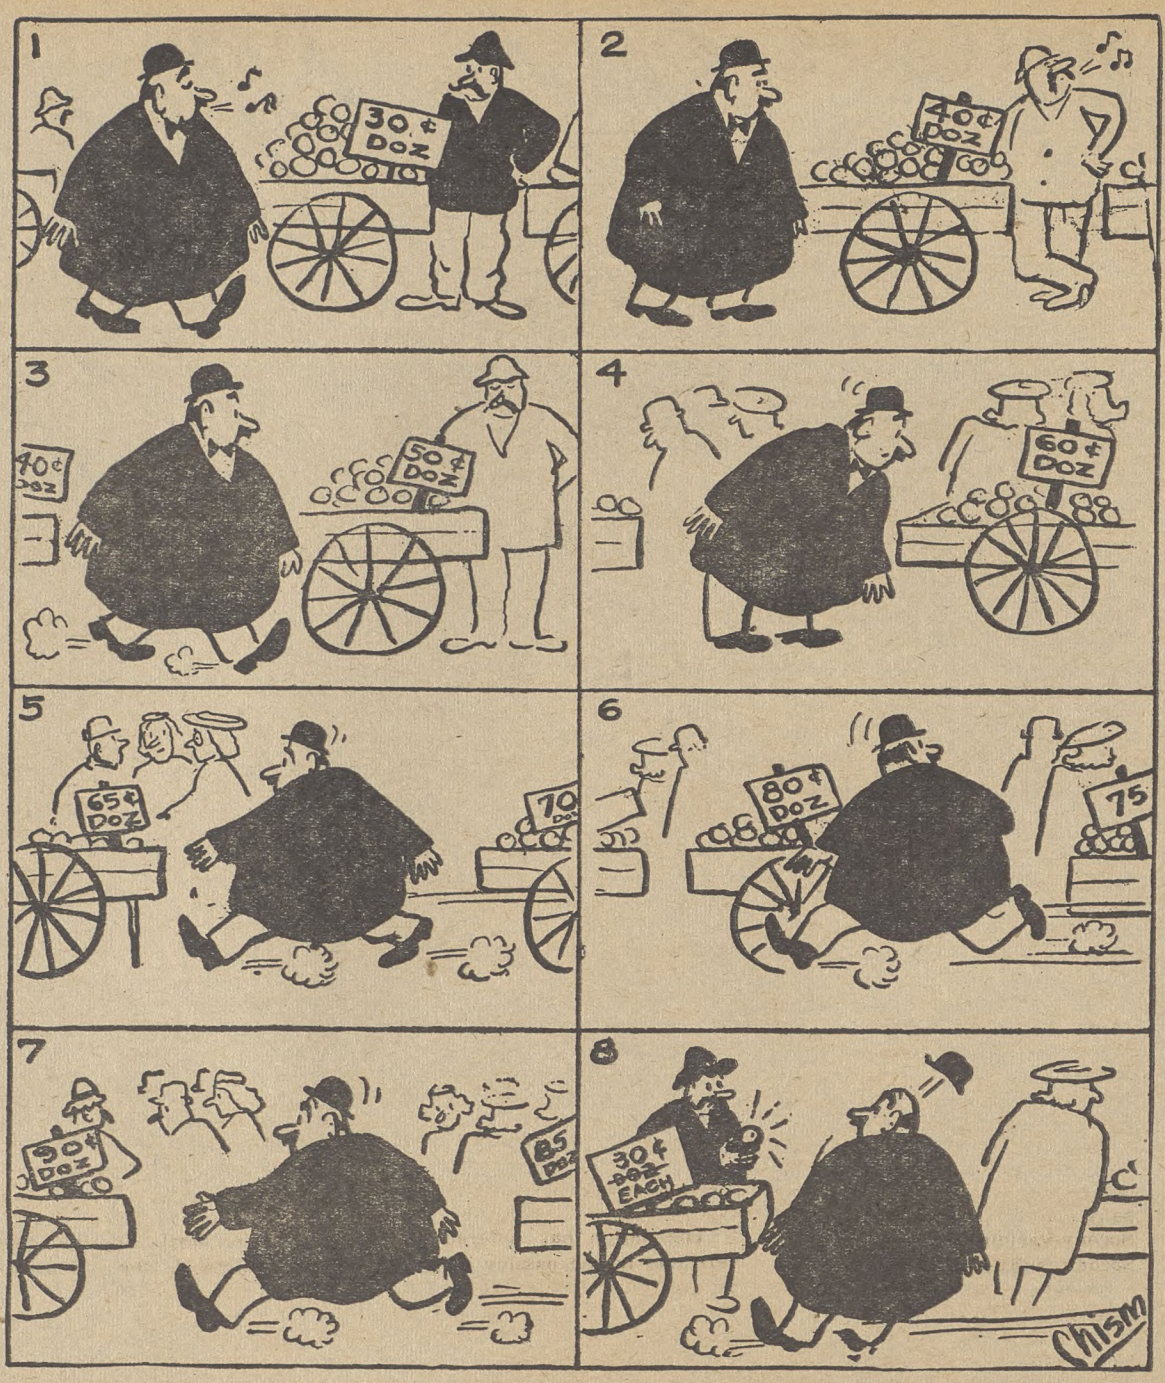
If you should happen to hear "Now You Have Broken My Heart," sung on the radio or elsewhere, be sure to listen, for it was composed by a CIO member—Ralph J. Norris of South Bend, Ind.

Norris belongs to two CIO unions. He's a member of Bendix Local 9, Auto Workers, and is secretary-treasurer of United Musicians Local Industrial Union No. 1091, in South Bend.

For the last 19 years, Norris, 53, has been employed by Bendix Corp. He has also been plugging away at his music for a long time, playing in bands and writing songs.

The song was featured recently on the Hit Parade, and may be played over the air any time as it is an ASCAP tune.

THE COST OF LIVING



Congress Studies Bill to Limit Overtime After Longshoremen Win Court Victory

A SUPREME COURT victory for 20 AFL Longshoremen, acting as individuals over the objections of their union, is expected to pave the way for some 1500 CIO walking bosses and terminal employes on the West Coast to win overtime pay claims now pending in a federal court.

In a 5-to-3 decision the court backed the longshoremen's contention that pay for time worked over 40 hours a week should be computed as 1½ times the premium wage if the overtime occurred during "inconvenient" hours.

The employers—Bay Ridge Operating Co. and Huron Stevedoring, Inc.—the Justice Dept. and the claimants' own AFL union claimed the men were seeking "overtime on overtime." The premium rate paid for inconvenient hours of the night and early morning could not be termed "overtime," the justices held.

Stevedore contracts specify the rate applying to each hour of the day worked.

In filing their suits over the protests of the AFL union, the longshoremen claimed that overtime pay after 40 hours should be computed on the basis of 1½ times what they would normally receive for those hours and not on a basis of 1½ times the "regular" rate.

As soon as the decision became known, some Congressmen turned eyes on the Goodwin-Wiley bill, now in the House and Senate Judiciary committees, as a means of overriding the ruling.

This legislation would outlaw all suits for overtime claims except the few specifically mentioned by the bill itself.

Said the CIO in an analysis: "It demonstrates a cavalier unconcern for and ignorance of the historic right of a laborer to enforce his right to wages when an employer fails to pay his just debt. It is almost without precedent in Anglo-American law."

In addition to frustrating the purpose of the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Walsh-Healy Act and the Eight Hour Law, the proposal would "upset the legal situation upon which many labor contracts are explicitely or implicitly based . . . It would make it possible for employers completely to eliminate any and all real overtime premiums," the analysis revealed.

No hearings have been held by either Judiciary committee.

Requesting time for the CIO position to be aired before action is taken on the proposed legislation, CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg warned in letters to members of the House and Senate Judiciary committees:

- The bill would "defeat objectives achieved by the Fair Labor Standards Act."
- It would "do away with uniform overtime standards."
- "It would inject complex and confusing methods for working out the regular rate."
- It would "invite nullification of the legislative purpose by evasion."

Profits? They Are Just 'Emotional'

Chairman Alfred P. Sloan of General Motors told stockholders at their annual meeting in Delaware, according to the Wilmington Morning Star, that the "profits of the industry in general are more emotional than economic."

He said "no true investor is particularly interested in what happens in any one year or any particular quarter of any particular year."

The net profits, after paying all bills and taxes, of General Motors in the particular first quarter of the particular year 1948 were $96,500,000. In the particular first quarter of the particular year 1947 they were $60,800,000. The net profits for the first three months of this year were 60% above the boom first three months of last year.

Steel Union Begins Test Of Affidavits

THE CIO United Steelworkers has set the stage for another test of the constitutionality of the Taft-Hartley law—this time on the act's provisions for filing of "non-communist" affidavits by union officials.

The union, headed by Pres. Philip Murray, asked a Circuit Court of Appeals in Chicago to remove qualifications in a Natl. Labor Relations Board order that the Inland Steel Corp. bargain on pensions with the USA-CIO. The Board has made its order conditional on the union's filing the affidavit. The union declined.

The petition—signed by General Counsel Arthur Goldberg and Associate Counsel Frank Donner—charged that the affidavit requirement contained in Section 9 (h) of the Taft-Hartley Act is "illegal, unconstitutional, void and of no effect."

It said the affidavit requirement is a bill of attainder; violates Constitutional guarantees of free speech, free press and free assembly; constitutes "arbitrary discrimination" against labor organizations, and deprives union members of "valuable property rights and of the opportunity to obtain enforcement" of their rights.

The case arose on complaints of Locals 1010 and 64 of the steel union at the company's plants at Indiana Harbor, Ind., and Chicago Heights, Ill. A trial examiner's report, on Jan 8, 1947, recommended that the company be ordered to bargain on pensions.

Steelworkers' Board Opposes Affidavits

The CIO United Steelworkers executive board last week reaffirmed the union's decision to refuse to sign non-Communist affidavits under the Taft-Hartley act.

The board, meeting in Pittsburgh June 9, also endorsed the union's decision to test the constitutionality of the T-H affidavit section in the Inland Steel Corp. case. Papers were filed the same day in the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Chicago.

In other actions, the USA-CIO board set up a union civil rights committee of five district directors, and another five-man group to adopt a safety code for the steel industry.

The board also announced mergers involving four of the union's districts. It merged District 14 (McKeesport, Pa.) with District 15 (Homestead, Pa.), with James Thomas, head of District 15, retaining his post. John Gresula, director of the former District 14, resigned that post and was named an international representative.

District 18 was combined with District 16 to form a new District 16, headed by John Murray. Murray formerly headed District 18, and Frank Burke resigned as director of District 16.

Memorial Dedicated

In a Memorial Day program at the Painesville, O., plant of Industrial Rayon, Local 482 of the CIO Textile Workers dedicated a monument to the plant's 15 employes who lost their lives in the last war. Mrs. Irwin Baxter and Mrs. Russell Garvin, mothers of the first two employes at the plant killed in action, unveiled the monument.

GE, Three Auto Firms Offer Pay Increases

GENERAL ELECTRIC, which led industry's big crusade against wage increases in 1948, has had to eat its own words.

Forced to reconsider its widely-trumpeted claims that it would grant no raises this year, the giant corporation bowed to earlier settlements in the automobile industry and to demands of the CIO Electrical Workers for increases. Thus if the company's offer is accepted by the UE membership, some 125,000 GE workers will receive an 8 per cent increase, amounting to from 9 to over 15c an hour.

Three more automobile manufacturers late last week came through with a 1948 wage boost—Packard Motor Co., Studebaker Co., and Kaiser-Fraser.

Following the pattern set by Chrysler recently, the three companies offered a 13c hourly raise and a two-year contract. Studebaker's CIO Auto Workers have already accepted the settlement, Packard and Kaiser-Fraser employes are expected to do likewise.

Ignoring the union's insistence that wage increases could be provided out of record high profits and would not necessitate a price rise, Packard simultaneously announced it is upping the price of its cars $75 to $200, effective this week.

Meanwhile, Ford, which begins wage talks this week, and General Motors announced they were laying off employes from one day to a week because of steel shortages.

At the Bendix Aviation Corp. in South Bend, Ind., and at the Briggs Manufacturing Co., Detroit auto supplier, slow-moving wage talks were creating unrest among the workers.

The GE offer followed two proposals by the union, which previously had set no figure, but had insisted on a "substantial increase." UE negotiators suggested a settlement paralleling the General Motors formula of an 11c increase, 5c of it geared to the cost-of-living index, or a straight 13c hourly boost as accepted by Chrysler workers.

GE turned down both plans, insisting it was "unsound" for every employer in the country to follow the pattern set by one or two other large concerns.

Although GE's reversal in itself was considered a union victory, UE's General Electric 125-man conference board was reluctant to accept the offer.

In announcing its proposal, GE counseled workers to put the full amount of wage increases into savings. Purpose of this would be to stem inflation, it said. Asked whether the corporation would boost its prices following the wage increase, GE Vice Pres. L. R. Boulware said it would necessitate "a prompt price review."

The union has consistently maintained that substantial wage hikes could be paid out of the company's record profits, which last year hit $95 million, without raising prices.

Westinghouse Electric, second largest electrical manufacturer, meeting with the union last week after a six weeks lapse in talks, offered an increase and other benefits totaling 12.4c an hour. The plan provides a 6% wage hike plus an expanded pension and insurance plan costing an additional 4c an hour.

CIO Oil Workers locals throughout the country have been busy winning offers of 17½c and 18c hourly wage increases, following the pattern recently set by Sinclair.

In Beaumont, Texas, the Magnolia oil company's 2,500 CIO employes received a 17½c boost, 8c of which is retroactive to Feb. 1. The remaining 9½c was effective June 1. The present 10c cost-of-living bonus was continued for another year.

Improvement of classifications netted about 200 workers another 3 to 10c an hour.

For its 500 pipeline workers at Magnolia the Oil Workers won an 18c boost. Of this amount, 10c is incorporated into the base rates and the remaining 8c is a cost-of-living bonus.

The Magnolia settlements are expected to pave the way for similar agreements in the company's other plants as well as at Socony-Vacuum. Magnolia is a Socony subsidiary.

Elsewhere oil companies were making similar offers. The OWIU Gulf local at Port Arthur, Texas, has accepted a 10c hourly boost. This is in addition to 8c won the first of the year.

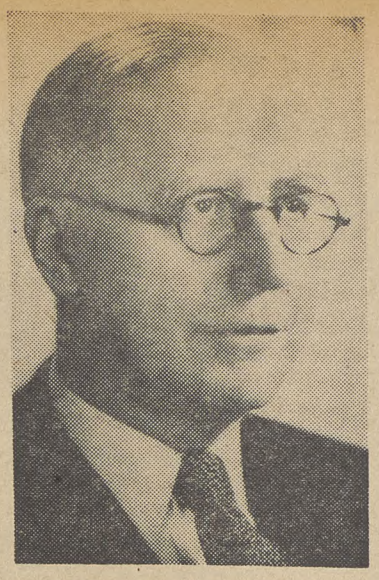
Other companies which have made offers of 17½c are: Bay Petroleum at McPherson, Kans.; Continental Oil Co.; Carter Oil at Billings, Mont.; and Ashland Oil at Ashland, Ky.

At Pure Oil in Toledo and Port Neches, Texas, the union won a 10c boost on top of 8c earlier put into effect.

Transport: Pay raises of 12½c an hour for 1200 CIO Transport Workers in Louisville, Ky., removed the threat of a strike against the Louisville Railway Co.

Ship: A two-year contract providing a 5c hourly increase has been ratified by CIO Shipbuilding Workers at Todd shipyards in Brooklyn, N. Y., and Hoboken, N. J.

If approved by the union's executive board June 17, the new agreement will become effective upon expiration of the old contract June 23.



Lewis B. Schwellenbach

CIO Mourns Death Of Labor Secy.

Secy. of Labor Lewis B. Schwellenbach, who was stricken ill while returning from a trip to Panama in April, died June 10 in the Walter Reed Hospital, Washington, D. C. He was 53 years old.

Schwellenbach was sworn in as Senator from the State of Washington the same day in January, 1935, as Harry S. Truman. He resigned his Senate seat in December, 1940, to become U. S. District judge in Washington state, a job he later gave up to accept the Cabinet post in July 1, 1948.

Though a foe of the Taft-Hartley law, he advised workers not to disobey the act.

Both CIO Pres. Philip Murray and CIO Secy-Treas. James B. Carey voiced grief over the Secretary's death.

"The nation has suffered a severe loss in the passing of Secretary of Labor Lewis B. Schwellenbach," Murray said. In the Senate of the United States, on the Federal Bench and in his position as Secretary of Labor, he rendered brilliant, self-sacrificing service to his nation and to the people.

"His conduct and administration of the affairs of the Department of Labor won for him the respect and admiration of organized labor. I had the honor to know him personally and I know, as millions of others know that our country has suffered a great loss.

Carey declared: "Workers throughout the nation will be grieved by the death of Lewis Schwellenbach. He was a fine public servant, as a Senator, as a judge, as head of the Department of Labor. Throughout his entire career, Lewis Schwellenbach was always loyal to a deep sense of humanitarianism. He wanted to see our country always better for its people. He cherished our finest democratic ideals; and he toiled unceasingly for the improvement of our people and our institutions."

House Unit Reverses Itself, Passes T-E-W

HOUSING legislation for the homeless and slum-ridden appears possible this session.

The prospect improved as the House Banking and Currency Committee, after a hectic, all-day session, reported out a bill including the main provisions of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill.

Early last Thursday the bill almost succumbed to Committee Chairman Jesse Wolcott's razor-edged knife, when the committee accepted, by a 14-to-12 vote, his proposals as a substitute for the TEW bill. Wolcott's measure omitted public housing, aid to rural housing, slum clearance and Federal funds for research into new building processes.

In the afternoon, on a motion of Rep. Hale Boggs (D., La.), the Congressmen decided to reconsider. This time the Democratic members managed to muster the votes of Republican Rep. Hardie Scott (Pa.) and Democratic Rep. John Folger (N. C.), bringing the vote to 14 to 12 in favor of adding the omitted TEW features to the Wolcott bill.

The bill now goes to the House Rules Committee, where it will await clearance by some staunch public housing opponents. Predictions, however, were that the committee would send the bill to the floor, where it is fairly assured of passage. The Senate has already approved it.

Oil Workers Accuse NLRB Of Falsely Smearing Local

The Natl. Labor Relations Board last week was accused of deliberately spreading false information about the CIO Oil Workers in an effort to feather its political nest in a statement by OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight.

"Apparently the labor board, now armed with the anti-union Taft-Hartley law and the largest appropriation in its history, thinks it can get more and more of the taxpayers' money and more and more pats on the back from its Republican masters by spreading malicious lies against a respectable labor union," said Knight.

Knight's blast at the labor board followed the release to newspapers by the board of a story saying that the International Union had "fronted" for a local union that had not filed non-Communist affidavits.

"The implication was strongly made that our union had attempted by subterfuge to evade the law," said Knight. "That is far from the truth."

The NLRB press release said that OWIU "fronted" for Local 128 in Long Beach, Calif. The board said that this local had not complied with T-H by failing to file non-Communists affidavits.

The alleged "fronting" consisted of the International Union's filing a petition for certification as bargaining agent for Lane-Wells Company employes in California, instead of permitting the local to file in its own name.

"The press release by NLRB was in error on two points" said Knight. "In the first place, our Local 128 had filed the necessary affidavits. But the board dismissed our case simply on motion of the employer, without even checking its own records to find that Local 128 had filed the affidavits well in advance of the decision.

"Then, after making this error in its decision, the board released a story to newspapers accusing our International of fronting. In the decisions, there is absolutely no reference to any fronting activities.

"As for our filing the petition in the name of the International Union instead of in the name of the local, this is a policy that has been in effect since 1943. We have filed hundreds of petitions in this fashion and the board has never objected to this procedure. There is no subterfuge intended.

"Instead, this is a procedure to check wildcat strikes and promote industrial peace by putting certifications and contracts in the name of the International Union."

Knight wired Sen. Joseph Ball, Chairman of the Joint Labor-Management Committee, requesting that he investigate and demanding a public apology from the NLRB.

No Change Expected in T-H Act This Year

THE Taft-Hartley Act was praised and criticized at the final week of hearings conducted by Sen. Joe Ball's joint Congressional watch-dog committee—but nothing's going to happen to T-H in '48.

The Minnesota Republican—who faces a tough contest from Mayor Hubert Humphrey of Minneapolis this fall—said no legislative changes would be asked of the 80th Congress.

Business witnesses, not content with the victory last year, pressed for a ban on industry-wide bargaining between unions and employers, and some urged that all forms of union security be outlawed.

An exception to the industry view was taken by the head of Hart, Schaffner & Marx—men's suit makers—who held that industry-wide bargaining with the CIO Clothing Workers has brought stability and better conditions.

John Paradise, counsel for the CIO Brewery Workers, said the Taft-Hartley law is "one-sided to the point of being lop-sided" in favor of employers. He charged that closed shop and hiring hall agreements established by the union during 60 years of negotiations had been badly disturbed by the T-H law.

"The T-H law has worked havoc with our contract negotiations," Paradise declared. "As a result, increasing friction, strikes, threats of strikes, endless days in contract negotiations, and in general a deterioration of labor-management relations have ensued."

The same criticism was voiced by John Green, head of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers.

"I was perfectly normal until my business acquaintances ostracized me for giving my employes a raise."

ATTEMPTED SABOTAGE

It was a bit like socking a guy in the teeth when he wasn't expecting a fight.

Congress spent months discussing the need for a program that would help war-torn Europe get back on its feet. The issues involved were debated at length.

Then, finally, a European Recovery Program was approved by both the House and Senate and an agency to administer the plan was created.

At this point most Americans thought the government could settle down to the delicate and difficult task of making ERP work.

But, no.

They hadn't taken into account the scheme being hatched by the House Appropriations Committee. They hadn't realized the House itself would go along with the committee on a plan to sabotage ERP.

Here's how it happened:

The newspapers were telling the nation about the Congressional logjam that our lawmakers were trying to break so they could adjourn June 19.

GOP presidential hopefuls were demonstrating their best oratory. President Truman was on a junket designed to win prestige and influence voters.

Then, bingo!

The House Appropriations Committee, headed by GOP Rep. Taber, announced it wanted to cut the heart out of ERP by slicing its appropriation by nearly $2 billion.

Then, almost before the country realized what was happening, the House approved the reduction by a voice vote.

If the House had been a branch of the Kremlin it could hardly have done more to bring joy to Joe Stalin. Hadn't it done a fine job of proving what the Reds had been saying—that Western Europe couldn't depend on "unreliable" America?

If the Senate should go along with the House, ERP will have two strikes on it before its entire team is on the field—because Taber et al threw a fast curve. * * *

IT NO LONGER DOES THE JOB

Ironic news is coming from Europe these days. Nations which are trying to pull themselves out of the mire of the worst war the world ever knew are restoring and improving their social security programs.

Ironic news is coming out of the great City of Washington these days, too. In that center of prosperous America, Congress is paying little or no attention to improving the nation's now out-dated Social Security system.

A worker with no dependents gets less than $25 a month if he retires at age 65. When you figure that $25 is worth only $15 in 1939 purchasing power, you can realize why we call our Social Security system outdated.

Not long ago, Congress increased the pay of Supreme Court justices to $25,000 yearly. When a justice retires, having fulfilled the legal conditions, he can get a pension of $25,000 a year. That we are for. But, we also submit that $25 is appallingly low for a workers' pension.

Retired workers have to eat, sleep, be housed and have medical care, too.

Certainly, This Is Red-Baiting!

Daily Worker's Fiction About P. Murray & Co. Prompts Our Criticism

By ALLAN L. SWIM

GEORGE Morris, Daily Worker columnist, is becoming one of the nation's most prolific fiction writers.

And the word "fiction," according to Funk & Wagnalls dictionary, is "that which is feigned or imagined, as opposed to that which is true."

Morris, unlike most fictioneers, follows the same plot week after week and writes about the same characters.

Hero No. 1 of his stories, of course, is the current party line policy.

The villains are Phil Murray, Jim Carey, a guy named Swim who edits the CIO News, and other right-wingers in the CIO.

Right now Murray is Villain No. 1. The rest of us are merely minor villains—small fry, that is.

THE Morris plot, as fantastic as a Sax Rohmer mystery yarn, is designed to make the gullible reader believe that there's a Wall St. firm named P. Murray & Co., Inc.

Philip Murray, of course, is president and Jim Carey is secretary-treasurer. A fellow named Swim edits the "house organ" of the firm and writes about the "dirty capitalistic lies" which the officers peddle here and there.

This "firm," Morris would have you believe, is engaged almost exclusively in the business of selling the working man down the river.

What other business could it be in, Morris reasons, if it opposes Henry Wallace and indorses the European Recovery Program?

MORRIS, although he frequently writes beautiful fiction, doesn't dream up his own plots. They're hatched by top CPers and they're an important part of the party line.

The current plot is the most interesting one the Commies have designed since that campaign entitled "The Yanks Aren't Coming." You remember—that's the campaign which was dropped like a hot potato when Uncle Joe Stalin and Adolph quit playing military footsie.

Purpose of the current drive is to discredit the leadership of the CIO, sow dissention in the ranks of labor and elect H. Agard Wallace to the presidency.

In such a campaign the lefties—like other groups—turn their biggest pop guns loose on their most powerful opponent. In this case, the guy they're trying to scalp is Phil Murray.

ANY resemblance between Red-baiting and what is written here is purely intentional—and make no mistake about it!

We're not talking about that despicable type of "red-baiting" which consists almost entirely of branding as a Communist anybody who advocates a liberal or progressive idea. There's been too much of that.

We're merely using the Commie's pet phrase for those of us who feel compelled to criticize them—and if giving a Red hell for doing something you don't like is Red-baiting, then we're proudly guilty.

We're guilty of a lot of NAM-baiting, too!

And, furthermore, we intend to "bait" any group which engages in activities we consider harmful to a majority of the CIO membership.

MORRIS, if he's as human as the boys around the press table say he is, will denounce me for writing this—and he'll probably say something about my being a "dirty so-and-so."

He couldn't be blamed for that.

The term "fiction writer" as used here isn't exactly a compliment, you know.

But, ho-hum . . .

Why go on?

Films Available To Pep Up PAC Work

A number of 16mm films which may be used effectively in PAC campaigns are available for rental or purchase from the National CIO Film Division, 718 Jackson Place, Washington, D. C.

The films explain where, how and when to vote, how to learn about a candidate's record, how to ring doorbells and plan a block campaign and give other useful information.

"Political Parties" (13 minutes, rental $3) shows organization of campaign on precinct level—collecting money, ringing doorbells—and has a special trailer of Pres. Philip Murray speaking on PAC. It is recommended for mixed meetings with non-labor groups.

"They Said Labor Didn't Count" (eight minutes, $1.50) gets across the message that in November, labor must show that it does count. The movie was produced by District 3, United Packinghouse Workers, in Iowa, and shows 25,000 members of organized labor demonstrating against anti-labor legislation at the state capitol.

Also available are "Powers of Congress (13 min., $3); "You, the People," (25 min., $3) and some film strips, both with sound and silent.

CSC, YWCA Sponsor Italian Project

Modern dental and medical clinics, a nursery for working mothers and reading and recreation rooms are some of the welfare services being planned jointly by the CIO Community Services Committee and the YWCA as a demonstration center in Italy.

The project will be run side by side with the clothing factory in Carrarra, donated by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers to help the people of Italy re-establish their war-shattered economy.

Mrs. Sherwood Anderson of New York will head the welfare division of the project, which was made possible by a contribution of $29,000 from the CIO-CSC. Mrs. Anderson has been in Italy for several months working on plans to set up the demonstration center.

A health director will be employed at the center, Mrs. Anderson says, and summer camps and other recreation centers will be opened if the workers want them.

O'Connor To Write Oil Union History

Harvey O'Connor, publicity director of the CIO Oil Workers International Union since 1945, who retired from his job June 1, has been commissioned by the OWIU executive board to write an official history of the union.

His successor is Ray Davidson, experienced newspaperman and former International Representative of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

They Thought He Was Somebody Else

THERE was a report that the manager of the dye plant had hired some strong-arm boys to beat up the organizers who were trying to form a CIO union among his employes.

Although there hadn't been any real trouble, the situation was tense and growing more so by the day.

The company had set up and was financing a "citizens' association" which was fighting the union.

A couple of big guys with bulging muscles showed up nearly every time organizers passed out handbills. They stood nearby, threatened the organizers and called them dirty names.

The union was doing everything it could to avoid an open clash—but violence seemed inevitable.

Then the "mysterious stranger" arrived in town. He was accompanied by one of the country's best-known labor reporters.

THE reporter, naturally, was after a story. The "stranger" was after something else. He carried a camera and shot pictures here and there.

Word soon got around town that a couple of "big shot" news men from Washington were preparing a feature story on the union-company struggle.

However, the citizens began to wonder about the "stranger" after the reporter returned to his headquarters.

The man with the camera continued to wander around town. He took pictures of "association" representatives who were passing out anti-union leaflets.

He asked a lot of questions and talked with a lot of people—ministers, the local publisher, store operators.

He seemed to know the union organizers but wasn't particularly friendly with them. Sometimes he'd pass them on the street without speaking.

At night he strolled the streets unaccompanied — something the organizers dared not do.

WITHIN a few days after his arrival there was a sudden change in the atmosphere of the town—a change easily sensed.

The organizers got word they no longer need fear the possibility of being beaten up.

The two big guys with the muscles and nasty tongues became silent, then disappeared from the scene.

The situation became less tense—and the organizers became more worried.

What kind of trick was the company hatching up? What had happened?

They got the answer late one night as they and the "stranger" sat in a restaurant drinking coffee. They overheard a conversation between two waitresses.

ONE of the waitresses declared, "Boy, has the company got its pants scared off!"

"How come?" asked the other.

"Because of that FBI man over there in the booth," she replied, nodding in the direction of the "stranger." "He's going to send somebody to jail if the company doesn't behave itself."

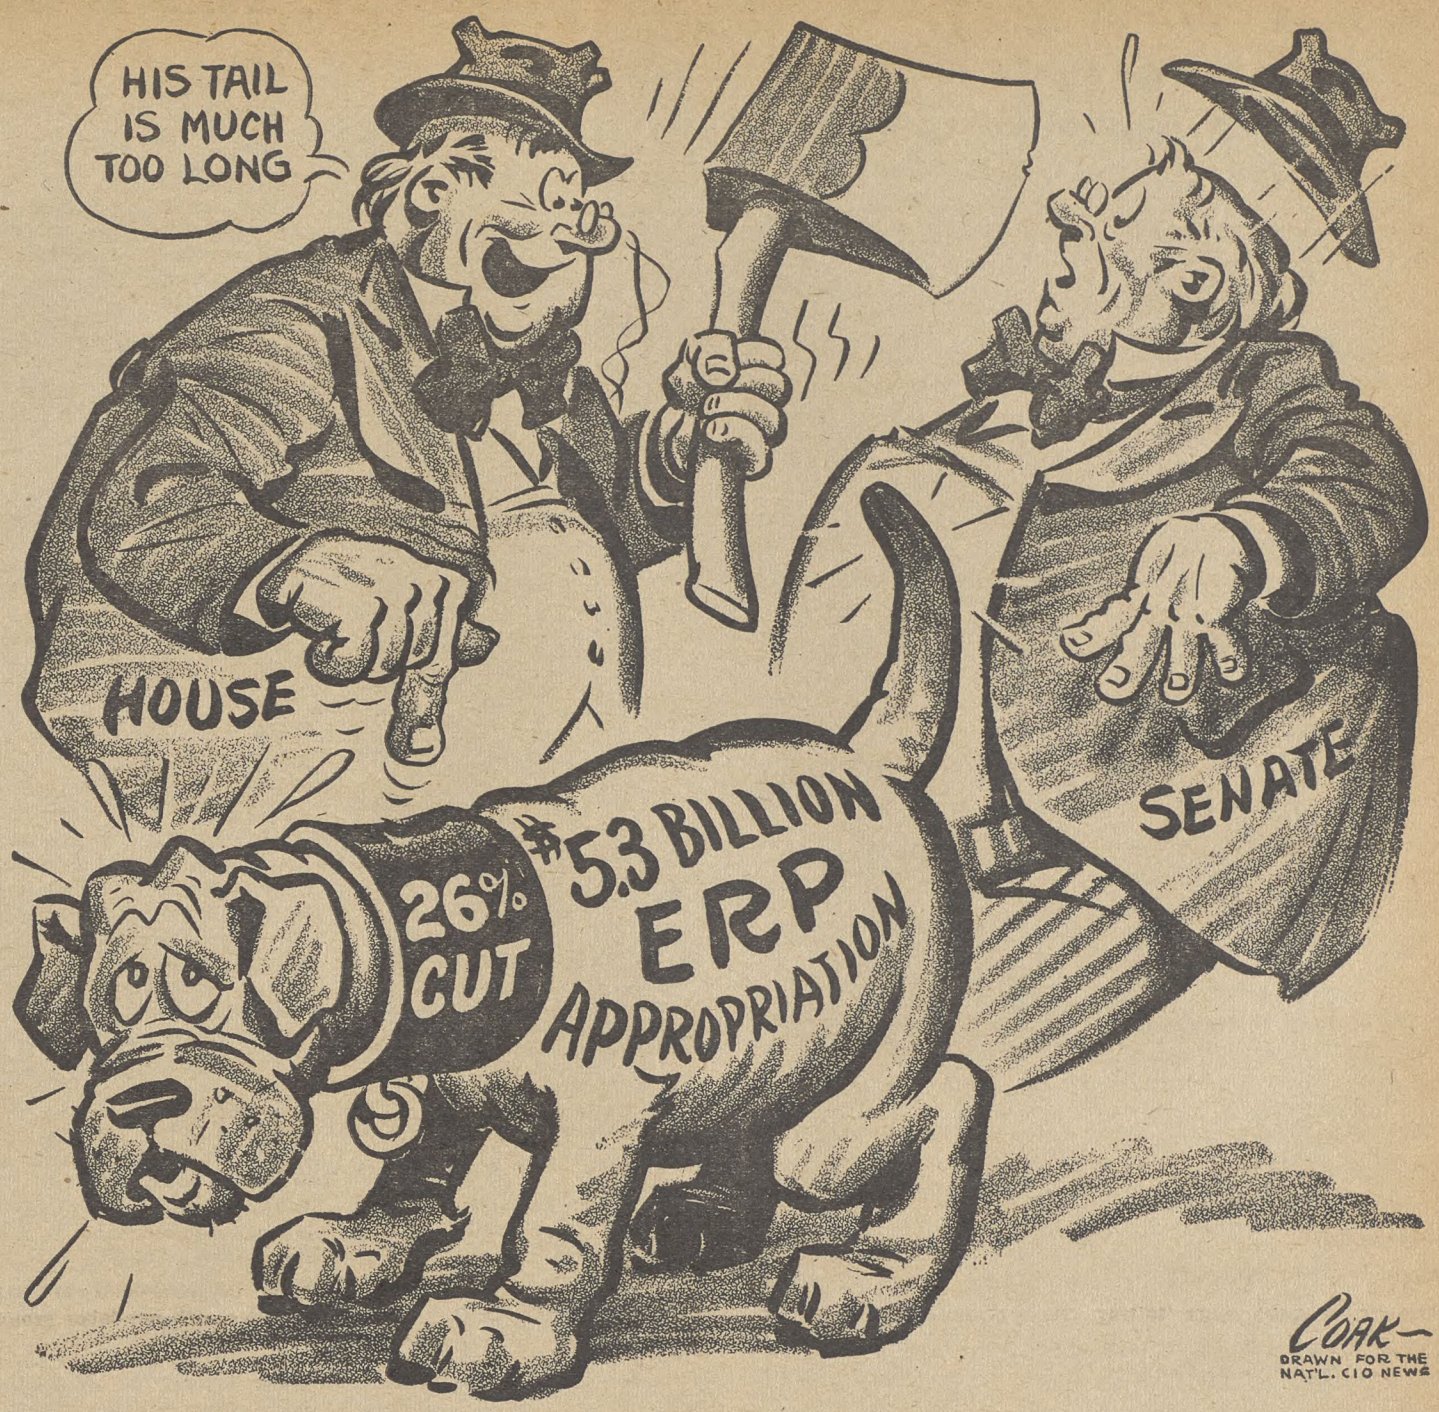
"The stranger" left town the next morning—and before boarding his bus he told the director of the organizers:

"Tell your boys not to say one word about me to anybody—not a single word—until after the election is held."

The driver started his motor—and a CIO organizer who had been mistaken for a news photographer and a G-man headed for another assignment.

He had what he went after—evidence of undue company interference with the right of employes to organize. A. L. S.

Let's Cut It Off a Little--About Here!



Pamphlet Tells Why Indifference is Democracy's Foe

IF WE want to make democracy work, we must work at democracy. In brief, this is the point hammered home in a 72-page booklet, "Good Citizen," issued by the American Heritage Foundation, the organization conducting the tour of the Freedom Train.

The AHF is a group of citizens who got together early in 1947 to fight "the rising tide of indifference and cynicism toward the privileges and responsibilities of American citizenship." CIO Pres. Philip Murray is one of the vice-chairmen of the Foundation.

The booklet lists the major fundamental rights of the American citizen guaranteed by the Constitution and its amendments, by the common law and by decisions of the Supreme Court, and describes the "working tools" of good citizenship, telling how to use them.

"Whether you call it a Democracy or a Republic," states the booklet, "whether you judge its benefits by the car in your garage or by freedom to worship at the church of your choice, by the food on your table or by your freedom to speak out in public without fear, you are living under a system of government based on the dignity and freedom of the indvidiual, that derives its powers from the bottom up rather than from the top down.

"This system of living together has been achieved after generations of struggle against the doctrine that some men have the inherent right to rule others. It is based on the oldest written constitution in the world still in force. It has been preserved through great idealism — great human sacrifice."

Indifference, neglect and cynicism weaken democracy's bloodstream, says the booklet. "Clearly we must work at democracy to make democracy work—we must work for the freedom that works for us."

A section on the right to vote explains in detail how to exercise this "inherent right of American citizenship" and quotes the 15th Amendment to the Constitution which says that the "right of citizens of the U. S. to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

Although it does not mention the poll-tax states which prevent millions of Negroes and poor white people from voting, it does point to the fact that some unscrupulous politicians have adopted the "divide and conquer" technique of dictators by stirring up hatred and suspicion among various racial and religious groups.

"Such politicians are undermining democracy and must be fought both inside and outside their parties," declares the booklet.

Another section, "Live and Let Live," also makes a plea against discrimination, intolerance and group prejudice:

"Jew and Gentile, white and Negro, Catholic and Protestant, skilled and unskilled, rich and poor, intelligent and dull, tall and short, man and woman, blonde and brunette are all members of this club, the United States of America, and furthermore are members of the human race.

"Tolerance is not merely 'putting up' with the other fellow. It's the spirit of trying to understand him. It is judgment of people as people rather than as classes.

"Intolerance and group prejudice are a resentment of anybody that's different, a manifestation of insecurity and ignorance, and a form of bullying akin to that of chickens picking on the one with part of its feathers already off.

"Intolerance whispers and listens to gossip and rumor. The intolerant is one who has a mob or a safe majority with him and is mean enough to take advantage of it, which is why appeals to intolerance are so generally used by rabble-rousers and demogues."

Ever Have A Job As A 'Squeak'?

Do you know what a toothpick builder is? Or a squeak? Or a hog operator? Or a shower bumper?

Well, they are all job titles, and they don't mean what you might think, unless you happen to be one, yourself, and know.

These and numerous other colorful or peculiar terms are among the more than 100,000 job titles listed in the Occupational Dictionary used daily by the Ohio State Employment Service. Here are the definitions of a few of them:

A toothpick builder is a radio parts maker.

A squeak or grunt, hands or hoists tools to a linesman.

A hog operator is not a pig farmer—he grinds scrap rubber articles.

A shower bumper molds gun-powder into pellets for loading ship emergency signals.

$25 A MONTH OLD AGE PENSION IS NOT SOCIAL SECURITY!

BY ARTHUR RIORDAN

Did you know that:

• A federal judge can retire at full pay after 10 years' service if disability is the reason for his retirement? Or that he can retire at full pay, after 10 years' or more of service, provided he has reached the age of 70? (Federal judges' salaries range between $15,000 and $25,500.)

• A member of Congress (Senator, Representative, territorial delegate or Puerto Rican resident Commissioner) can, if disabled, retire after five years of service, regardless of age, with a pension of at least $1563 a year? Or that, at age 62, he can retire (even if defeated) with a pension of up to three-quarters of his last yearly pay? Congressmen now get $12,500 a year.

• That Generals of the army (and generals, lieutenant generals and major generals) can retire, after 30 years' service, with a pension of at least $550 a month, which is $6600 a year (and get service of aides, too).

(All the above may take other jobs—except that a man reelected to Congress must forego the pension while serving—and still receive the pension.)

• That an enlisted man in the armed forces would receive, if he retires as a first grader after 20 years' service, a pension of $107.25 a month—$1287 a year—or, if he serves 30 years, a pension of at least $185.63 a month—$2267.56 a year.

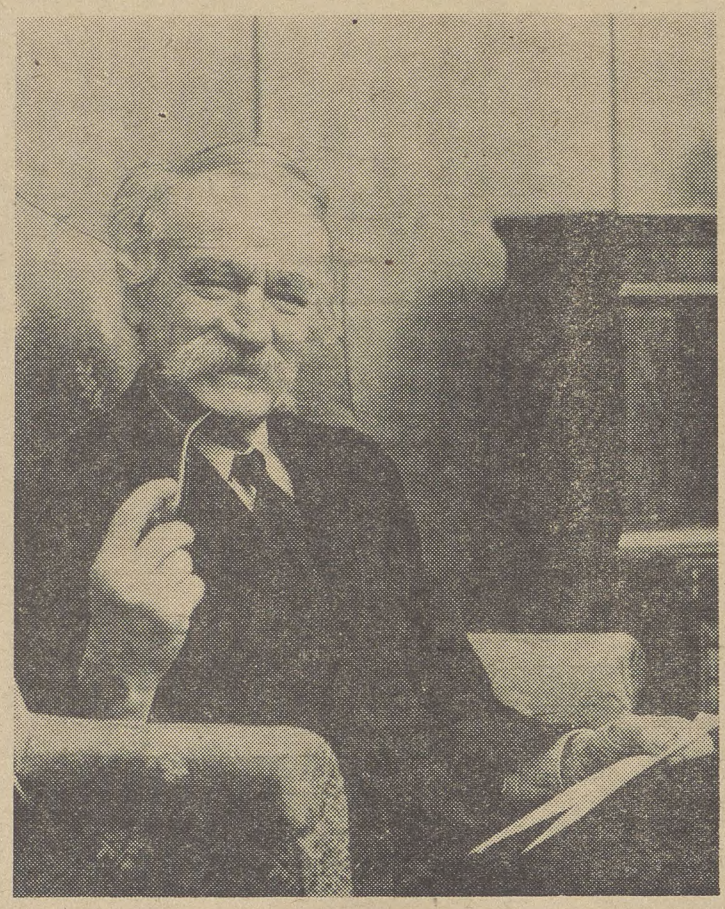
An enlisted man, upon taking his pension, can assume other employment and still receive the full pension. However, he obviously gets no service of aides.

Now, the CIO has no objection to pensions. It is in favor of them.

But, did you know:

That a worker covered by the Social Security Act, if he retires today at age 65 would receive a "primary pension" averaging less than $25 a month — which is less than $300 a year? (A primary payment is the pension all who retire at 65 can receive—if they are covered by Social Security; additional sums are paid for wife, dependents, etc.).

The pensioner differs considerably from the judge, the Congressman, the general and the sergeant in more respects than just the amount he receives. For instance, his pension if he made more than $14.99 a month from any other source. The current bill in Congress increases that figure to $40, but the pensioner still would be hard-pressed.



The primary pension sum of $25 is so low (it's worth less than $15 in 1939 purchasing power) that the CIO and other groups have been appealing to Congress to increase Social Security; the condition has become so onerous that CIO unions are stressing contractual pension plans—to supplement Social Security.

THE CIO's appeal for greater Social Security must be made through the House Ways and Means Committee—which is chaired by Rep. Harold Knutson (R., Minn.), who has been in the House since Mar. 4, 1917. What kind of a pension do you think this man—who has turned a deaf ear to pleas for higher pension benefits—would receive if he retired today?

Well, taking it for granted Knutson is over age 62 (he very carefully leaves out his age in his biographies), you can figure out his pension roughly this way (assuming of course he has made himself eligible under the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946):

Knutson has been in Congress for 32 years—or will have been by the end of the 80th Congress next January. That means he has collected pay checks totalling at least $295,000. Under the rather complicated method by which the Government figures pensions, Knutson could be eligible for an annual pension of close to $7500.

The ranking minority member of the Ways and Means Committee—who has been just as deaf to social security needs as Knutson has been—is one Rep. Robert L. Doughton (D., N. C.), who is 85. Doughton, known i and out of Congress as "Muley," could also get a pension of somewhere around $7500.

There's a lot of dollars between $300 and $7500. Yet, those two men and the majority of the Ways and Means Committee have resisted all efforts to set up a realistic Social Security system. What little changes that have been made are a drop in the bucket; some changes actually harm the setup.

IS the CIO the only one to point to the crisis in Social Security and pension affairs? No, other labor groups and liberal organizations are fighting, as are a number of liberal Congressmen.

But the danger can be best shown, perhaps, by a quotation from David Lawrence's U. S. News—an unblushing apologist for Big Business. Here is what U. S. News says:

"The situation for people who are drawing old-age benefits and for those on relief is officially classed as a 'crisis.'

"The situation is developing in the midst of a boom, of record prosperity. Employment is at an all-time high. But the number of those getting Government checks for annuities or for relief is growing steadily, already totals a record 6,400,000.

"At the same time, purchasing power of those checks is shrinking. Buying power of the average annuity check under old-age and survivors' insurance already has dropped to less than $15 a month in 1940 dollars.

"Already nearly 1,000,000 workers have retired. Average check received each month by a retired worker and his wife is for $39.20 (which includes that "primary" payment). Actually, purchasing power of that check is $23.48 in 1940 dollars. Result is that less than half the workers who have paid their insurance and who have reached 65 are actually retired; they are continuing to work for a living."

HERE is what CIO wants, as outlined in the 1947 convention resolution and as explained by Van A. Bittner, chairman of the CIO Social Security Committee:

History: the Social Security Law was passed in 1935, became effective in 1936, was last materially changed in 1939—last pre-war year.

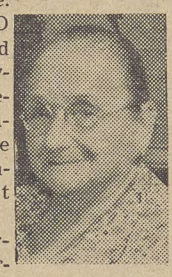
The cost of living has increased 69.3% since 1935.

Medical care: There is no federal insurance to cover this.

The CIO supports the principles incorporated in the Wagner-Murray-Dingell Bill.

Unemployment insurance: Protection is handicapped by a complex variety of laws in various states—payments are inadequate, periods of payment are too short. Also, too many persons are disqualified for picayune reasons.

Public and general assistance: The CIO wants the Government to increase its payments to states so that they can improve this vital service.



USES: The CIO wants the United States Unemployment Office returned to the supervision of the Federal Government, where it belongs.

Disability: Payments for permanent and temporary disability are far too small.

Overall coverage: hundreds have been barred from the various aspects of Social Security—such as agricultural workers, members of non-profit organizations, domestic workers, self-employed small businessmen and farmers, and government workers.

The action of Congress in extending coverage to some of these in inadequate, since the maximum benefits are small.

As you will note in adjoining columns, other nations, even those which are in desperate straits because of the war, have put social improvements high on their recovery program. But, here, Big Business and Congress argue that there is no need for any major betterment, that the pension payments and the pension fund are high enough.

There are also many employers who still are trying to kill the entire program. However, the American people have taken the program to their hearts.

Too Little

According to U. S. News, the "reasonable monthly budget for an aged couple in a medium-cost city" should be $136 a month.

But, the average monthly payment to a couple is $39.20.

$136 minus $39.20 leaves a deficit of $96.80.

SOLOMON

Proudly displays his Amalgamated C part of it to the Sidney Hillman Fund.

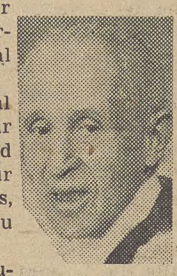
SEVERAL CIO unions have pension systems, or are in the process of attempting to negotiate such systems. (The Natl. Labor Relations Board has ruled that pensions are matters of collective bargaining.)

Most outstanding CIO pension plan is that of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, which is outlined in adjoining columns.

What CIO members can do about improving social security:

1. Engage wholeheartedly in political action. Pay your PAC dollars. Volunteer for PAC chores. See to it that the Congressman elected in your district—and the Senator for your state—pledge themselves to the Economic Bill of Rights.

2. Ask your union for information on social security.



3. Talk social security in your neighborhood groups, in your church circles, everywhere you can.

4. Get community leaders and clergymen back of the drive to improve social security. Stress the fact this will be good for the community, good for business.

5. Be sure you receive all the benefits coming to you.

6. Be sure to give your next of kin your social security number, since that number is needed for that relative to collect survivors' insurance in case of your death.

AMALGAMATED RETIREMENT PLAN MATCHES U. S. FUND

"THE government didn't provide adequate pensions, so we decided to do something about it."

That's how Hyman Blumberg, executive vice president of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers and chairman of that union's pension fund, began to describe Amalgamated's pension setup.

All of Amalgamated's 150,000 suit and coat workers are covered by the pension plan, which at present matches primary Social Security payments after age 65. This is in addition to the 2% payroll tax which goes to a health and welfare fund. Thus, if the average retired worker received about $30 a month from the Government, he would get another $30 from the pension fund for a total of $60.

"We hope that can be improved in the future," said Blumberg, "because $60 doesn't go very far these days."

The pension fund, which was set up Dec. 1, 1945, is maintained ,under the present contract by a 3% payroll tax, all of which is paid by the employer. The fund as of March, 1948, consisted of $25,186,969. If all the 8000 ACWA members who are eligible, but who are still working, applied for the pension now, $40,000,000 would be needed.

On Jan. 1, 1947, the first persons became eligible for pensions under the plan. Then, a member had to be age 70 to take his pension. On Jan. 1, 1948, the age requirement was reduced to 65.

As of last week, 1431 persons had taken the pensions.

UNDER the Amalgamated plan, there are these five eligibility requirements to receive a pension (in addition to being age 65 or more):

1. You must have reached your 65th birthday or will reach it within three months of application;

2. Continuous employment for 20 or more years.

3. A member of ACWA for 10 or more years;

4. Continuously employed for not less than two years preceding application by an employer who during that period was a contributor to the Retirement Fund of Amalgamated Insurance Fund (that's the official title), and

5. Have made application to the Federal Social Security Board for an Old Age Insurance benefit under the Social Security Act.

Once you have fulfilled those requirements, the ACWA insurance fund will purchase an annuity for you from the Amalgamated Life Insurance Co., Inc.

Monthly annuity payments will be mailed to your home address, payable as of the last day of each month, provided you personally complete a continuation form during that month and did not earn more than $15 or more.

Actuaries estimate that once a man reaches age 65 he has a life expectancy of at least 12 more years.

ACWA has a detailed definition of what is meant by continuous employment.

The union, according to explanations by Blumberg and Hyman Bookbinder, assistant research director, does not mean that a person must have worked every day for 20 years. Limited periods of unemployment do not make a person ineligible.

Definition of unemployment differs for the two periods (a) the two years prior to application and (b) the 18 years preceding that date.

For the first 18 years, employment would be deemed continuous if (a) you worked at least 26 weeks of each calendar year (but, if you worked less than that, you still could be eligible, if it can be proven that you took all the employment that was available to you); (b) any break in employment was caused by total disability, followed by resumption of unemployment; (c) there was not more than one break of not more than 24 months' duration and if any breaks were caused by armed forces service.

The two year period differs mainly in the requirement that the employer had to be a contributor to the fund for the entire period.

Blumberg, who has been a union officer since 1916, will himself retire from office at the end of two more years, since under Amalgamated rules an officer becoming 65 retires automatically at the end of the term he is then serving.

He recalls working for $9 a week when he was a tailor in Baltimore back in 1907.

But European Countries Are Progressing

THERE's heartening news from the International Labor Office's Social Security section.

While the American Congress ignores the critical need for major improvements in the U. S. Social Security system, ILO reports that European nations, rebuilding from the war, have re-established and enlarged their postwar social security programs.

A release from ILO Director of Information Edward Allen, who is a former officer of the CIO Newspaper Guild, reveals these facts which were collected by Dr. Rudolf Aladar Metall, secretary-general of the International Social Security Association:

Several governments-in-exile were making plans to modernize and improve their national social insurance programs even while their countries were overrun by the Nazis.

For instance, Belgium, from the beginning of 1945, was able to put into force the provisional plan prepared in secret under the occupation

As soon as they were liberated and their governments reconstituted, the countries of Europe set about the reform of their social insurance programs. The survey reveals that France, Britain, Sweden and Yugoslavia already possess social security legislation providing complete coverage.

THESE systems embrace practically the whole population of employed and self-employed, with their wives and children. They cover the risks of sickness, maternity, invalidity, old age, death and family responsibilities, and, for the employed, the risk of employment injury.

Sweden is revising its social security system, branch by branch. In Switzerland, national old age and death insurance is about to begin. Yugoslavia has adopted a social insurance code of wide scope replacing the act of 1922.

In Czechoslovakia, Greece and Poland, plans for the reform of social insurance are being drafted.

In many countries, the organization of unemployment insurance has lagged behind other branches. Compulsory insurance schemes are working in Britain, Greece, Ireland, Poland, and some Swiss cantons. Provision is made for the introduction of insurance in the legislation of Belgium and Yugoslavia.

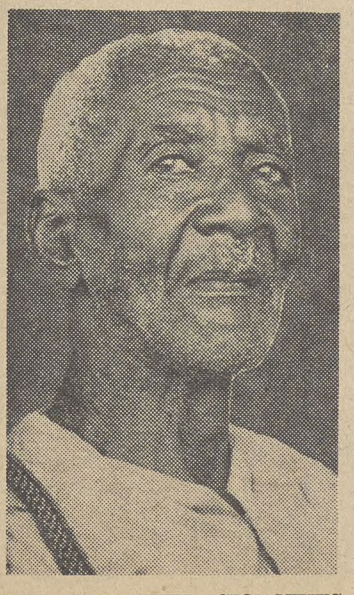
France possesses an unemployment assistance program. Czechoslovakia, Denmark, the Netherlands and Sweden have been content with subsidized voluntary insurance, but Sweden is preparing to pass over to compulsory insurance. In Yugoslavia, insurance is applied to the self-employed through cooperative societies of craftsmen and other producers.

SEVERAL countries have complete social security systems so far as employed persons are concerned. These include Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Ireland and the Netherlands.

The survey shows that the problem of the self-employed is particularly difficult in countries where the peasant class experiences risks and conditions of life very different from those of the urban population.

In the U.S.S.R., where a great mass of the population works on collective farms, the farmers themselves are responsible for the social security of their members and have set up mutual benefit societies.

Wherever in Europe there existed before the war special programs of pension insurance for salaried employees, there is a tendency to assimilate this class in the mass of employed persons.



Whereas before the war some countries had as many as three different medical services, the ISSA survey shows a post-war tendency to place medical care in a single service.

The ILO keeps a constant survey on social conditions throughout the world. Its report makes interesting reading over here.

Social security programs have been in effect for years upon years in various parts of Europe. The Scandinavian countries pride themselves on their success. England, even under the Conservative governments, made rapid advances in its program.

Survivors

Be sure you understand your rights under the survivors' insurance provisions of the Social Security Act.

The CIO, in a forthcoming issue, will carry a full explanation of survivors' rights and advise you on how to protect those rights.

ACW Gives $10,000 To Hospital

THE Amalgamated Clothing Workers has donated $10,000 to Memorial Hospital, New York City, to endow two beds in the children's wards in memory of Dorothy J. Bellanca, former ACW vice-president, who died at the hospital

Mrs. Bellanca, who is survived by her husband, August Bellanca, also an ACW vice-president, started her work in the clothing industry as a sweatshop worker in Baltimore and rose to a position of high leadership in the union, serving as a member of the union's general executive board from 1916 until her death.

A close co-worker of the late Sidney Hillman, Mrs. Bellanca was an ace organizer, known for her union activity in clothing centers throughout the East and South. She also served in numerous public capacities under New York Mayor LaGuardia, Gov. Lehman and Pres. Roosevelt.

FIGHT TAXES: Here is how the CIO filed a suit against Louisville's new "occupational" tax. William B. Sebree, fourth from left, is filing the suit with Mrs. Alma Cheatham Schively, extreme right, deputy circuit court clerk. Sebree is president of Local 1634 of the IUMSWA United Railroad Workers and an employe of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad. With him are (left to right) CIO Reg. Dir. William B. Taylor; Walter Pollard, international representative of the Railroad Workers; W. H. Beatty, PAC chairman for Jefferson County, Ky.; Edwin C. Willis, one of three attorneys representing Sebree; PAC Dir. Dan Bedell; PAC Secy.-treas. Lillian Yadon, and Thomas Frazier, CIO Woodworkers. An early hearing date is hoped for by Sebree and the CIO.

Former Guild Officer Made Israel Aide

I. L. Kenen, a founder and former international officer of the CIO Newspaper Guild, has been named information director for the Israeli Mission to the United Nations.

Kenen, former executive secretary of the American Jewish Congress and of the Jewish Agency for Palestine, is a native of Canada. He is a graduate of the University of Toronto and of the Cleveland Law School. He worked on the Toronto Star and was an editorial writer for the Cleveland News. He was a vice president of the Guild from 1938 to 1940, when he left the newspaper business.

Only 145 of the 5,000 annual graduates from medical schools are Negroes.

3 Mass. Bills Aimed At Unions

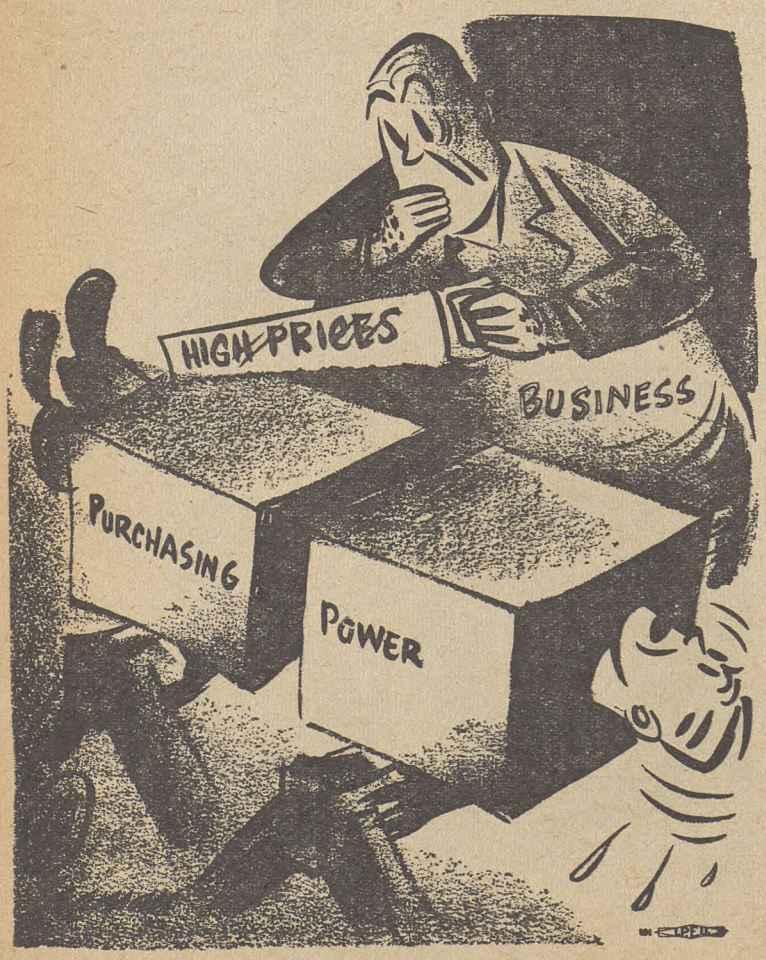
AN ANTI-LABOR outfit calling itself the Massachusetts Citizens Union has declared open war on organized labor in the State, reports the Massachusetts CIO Council. By circulating initiative petitions the MCU has introduced into the General Court three bills aimed at smearing and harassing unions.

This procedure means that if the State Legislature fails to act on the bills, they must appear on the ballot next November.

Most vicious of the bills, No. 1745, seeks to take away union security by making it illegal to require a worker to belong to a union.

The other two bills (1746 and 1747) are more vicious in intent than in content, as they call for steps that most major unions take anyway under their own constitutions—election of union officers by secret ballot, and a vote before striking.

'What Do I Do Now?'



AUTW Accepts AT&T Pact Correcting Wage Inequities

A 21-month agreement, considered by the union to represent a "dent in the Bell united front," has been reached by the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and the American Union of Telephone Workers, CIO.

Although the proposed terms do not include a general wage increase, as sought by the long lines union, they permit wage reopening at any time during the life of the contract after 60 days' notice. If no wage agreement has been reached, the contract may be cancelled after a year.

In 100 cities the union won wage increases of from $1 to $4 a week to correct inequities, and nationally gained better night differentials, improved seniority, maintenance of membership contingent on an NLRB-conducted vote and strengthening of contract on 12 other points.

"We do not look upon this as a great victory for the union," commented AUTW Pres. J. J. Moran. "However, it represents a dent in the Bell united front . . . In this year's bargaining we were faced not only with the resistance of a united industry against us, but also by the infamous capitulation of the unaffiliated Communications Workers of America which, with indecent haste, rushed to sign off all around us, thereby undercutting our every effort."

Moran further denounced CWA for hailing the three-year, no increase contracts accepted by that union as a "pattern" for the industry. "Under the CWA contracts," said Moran, "it is entirely possible that one single small increase can freeze wages for three years."

The AUTW settlement permits negotiations twice within two years. Moran said he would reopen on wages "as soon as circumstances permit."

Telephone workers' pay has declined from 7th place to 22nd place among the nation's industries since 1939, he emphasized. Moran said AT&T has not denied its ability to pay increases, nor had the union forfeited its right to increases.

"We shall continue the fight," the union head concluded.

Result of the housing shortage: The number of married couples living with other families has increased by 1,000,000 since 1945, reaching a total of 2,712,000.

Dismiss Many Charges In Packing Strike

Kansas City, Kans., dockets are being cleared of contempt and police court cases arising out of the recently settled CIO Packinghouse Workers' strike.

Police Court Judge J. Earl Thomas dismissed charges against 41 defendants, including Intl. Rep. Edward Chevlin of the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union, picketing sympathizer. Chevlin was charged with blocking traffic by obstructing a truck. Five former strikers were fined from $5 to $100 on charges of intoxication, possession of liquor and using obscene language.

County Court Judge Willard M. Benton dismissed a suit by the Cudahy meat packing plant for an anti-picketing injunction. He also dismissed contempt citations against 14 Armour workers and three union officials, Regional CIO Director James J. Leary, CIO Field Rep. W. E. Lewis and Chevlin. The dismissals left about 50 more cases on the docket.

N. Y. C. Council Names Durkin

PRES. James H. Durkin of the Office and Professional Workers has been elected president of the Greater New York CIO Council.

DURKIN

Durkin succeeds Pres. Michael J. Quill of the Transport Workers Union, who resigned because the council refused to adhere to CIO policy against a third party and in favor of the Marshall plan.

Durkin was elected unanimously after eight other nominees declined in his favor.

A native of New York City, Durkin became the UOPWA's first national representative when the union was founded in 1937.

Durkin was serving on the union's general executive board and on its administrative council when the board elected him president to succeed Lewis Merrill, who resigned in June, 1947, because of poor health.

The Greater New York Council has been shorn by CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll of the right to represent CIO in politics.

NLRB Rules

Firm's Refusal To Bargain 2 Years Not Unfair Practice

INNOCENCE may be attractive, but not in a government agency. Take the NLRB, for example.

The board ruled that although an employer stalled for two years when asked to bargain by a union he isn't really guilty of refusing to bargain.

In September 1942 Local 77A of the United Shoe Workers won an NLRB bargaining representative election at the Sport Specialty Co.'s Chaffee, Mo., plant. A one year's contract was conceded by the company in January, 1943.

For nearly a year the company refused to bargain further, and then in December, 1943, challenged the union's status, which was reaffirmed when it won another election in February, 1944.

In April the union had to strike, because of continued company refusal to bargain. The War Labor Board stepped in and set the terms of a new contract.

Although the company more or less abided by the contract, it was never formally accepted.

When it ran out in March, 1946, the company again questioned whether the union, which had won two NLRB elections, represented its employes.

The union then filed unfair labor practice charges against Sport Specialty, which another two years later reached the NLRB. And the board ruled that the employer is not guilty of refusing to bargain under the terms of the law. A turnover in the working force, during the course of his stalling, entitled him to raise the representation question all over again, NLRB thinks.

PAC Helps Beat Iowa's Anti-Labor Bloc

STOP us if you've heard this one before.

Third party strategists have been trying to spread the word that PAC is coming apart at the seams, that the old zip of 1944 ain't there any more, that all the best political actioneers have gone over to Wallace.

PAC'll be the first to say—and say it with pleasure—that the old glamour of 1944 doesn't live here any more. No, today PAC is a professional organization.

In State after State, hundreds of thousands of block and precinct workers are lined up for registration and vote-getting work. PAC organization in State after State is the envy of local politicians.

There is none of the musical comedy-like atmosphere that was so necessary to PAC in its infancy in 1944. In 1944, Sidney Hillman had the wisdom to plan that by 1948 the professional touch would be needed. Jack Kroll has carefully carried out Hillman's policy.

Think up another rumor, Mr. Third Party.

ALL this leads to the rolling state of Iowa, where the tall corn grows and provides fodder for the beef we eat.

In the last year or so, labor and farmers in Iowa have been beset by the administration of Gov. Robert D. Blue. Laws hostile to the interests of both were pushed through by the Blue administration. Last week, Iowa had enough.

Blue was roundly defeated for renomination—beaten by William S. Beardsley, a druggist-farmer of New Virginia, Ia. Blue carried only 13 of the state's 99 counties.

Different John L.

John L. Lewis is running for state legislature in Rhode Island!

But, we hasten to add, this John L. Lewis is president of a CIO Steelworkers' Local and is not a United Mine Worker.

Here's what Jack Kroll had to say about Iowa:

"The people of Iowa are fed up with reactionary government. The coalition of labor and farm forces is to be congratulated for joining the ranks of fighting liberal and labor forces in other states who are succeeding in restoring government to the people."

Two other Iowa Republican primary results were heartening to the CIO, AFL and the Farm Bureau:

1. Rep. John D. Gwynne, dean of the State's Congressional delegation, whose district includes Waterloo, where the Packinghouse Workers were on strike, was defeated by H. R. Gross, former radio newscaster. Gwynne had served in the 74th to 80th Congresses.

The CIO Voters' Guide listed Gwynne as having voted "right" only once on 12 key issues in the first part of the 80th Congress.

2. Arch McFarlam, Republican floor leader in the State Senate and a member of the body since 1916, failed to win renomination. He had sponsored the anti-labor legislation for Blue. He is from Waterloo.

ANOTHER place where CIO support helped was in Richmond, Va., which was choosing a city council, under a new charter.

Among the nine councilmen elected was Oliver W. Hill, a Negro attorney, who became the first member of his race to be elected to the council since 1895.

WILLIAMS S. BEARDSLEY
Won in Iowa

Hill, who had the full backing of CIO, is a veteran of World War II in which he served overseas. Last fall, he failed by only 190 votes of nomination on the Democratic ticket for the State House of Delegates.

He is active in the Natl. Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The Richmond Times-Dispatch, edited by Virginius Dabney, commented thus:

"Mr. Hill is a valuable citizen who is well-qualified by education and background to sit on the Council. Trained in the law, he is highly regarded by the Negro community, and competent to pass upon the issues which will come before him on the municipal legislative board.

"Since the population of Richmond is nearly one-third colored, it is altogether natural and proper that this large segment of the city's life should be represented on the new Council by a man of Mr. Hill's character and capacity. His presence on the lawmaking body should give our Negro citizens a sense of participation in municipal affairs here that they have not had during this century, and should promote better interracial relations."

ONE of Hill's most ardent supporters was 90-year-old Edward Carter, Negro, who served in the city council in 1888. The New York Times noted that Hill ran ahead of 17 white candidates in the all-white 40th precinct.

One of the defeated candidates for council was T. D. du Cuennois, of the CIO staff. The Times-Dispatch noted that "some opposition had been heard to his candidacy because of the fact that he is an area director for the CIO."

Costly For Taft

It cost nearly 200 grand for Sen. Robert A. Taft (R.,O.) to find out that a lot of the Ohio Republican voters prefer Harold Stassen to him.

The Ohio Republican campaign committee spent $98,018.31 "for Republican candidates for delegates and alternates to the Republican National Convention." That double talk means that every cent went for pro-Taft candidates—not a red cent for Stassenites. The Ohio Taft for President Club spent $49,945.52, still owes $16,894.60. That all adds up to $4000 for each delegate Taft won.

But, how much Bob and Mrs. Bob spent personally in their miles of touring of the state was not filed with the State House. It doesn't have to be.

LITTLE attention was paid by papers outside Florida to another labor victory. In a runoff vote for state superior court, CIO-backed Judge Frank Hobson defeated Tom Watson, whose anti-labor record was under bitter attack from both AFL and CIO.

Watson had come in first in the regular primary.

IN CALIFORNIA, the stock of Helen Gahagan Douglas, who has been under heavy fire from the Wallaceites, was at a high level. The Los Angeles CIO Council, which had refused to comply with CIO policy against a third party in 1948, gave Mrs. Douglas "qualified" support for the Democratic and Republican Congressional nominations. It gave wholehearted support to a candidate on the third party—Independent Progressive Party—ticket.

Paradoxically, the LA Council announced it was withholding full indorsement from Rep. Douglas for fear she might violate CIO policy by backing universal military training!

Rep. Douglas, in last week's primary, won the Democratic nomination overwhelmingly. She also came out ahead in the Republican primary by 152 votes. Her nearest opponent there, Wallace Braden, has filed for a recount. However, some 400 absentee ballots were yet to be counted.

Mrs. Douglas had six opponents in the Democratic primary and 11 in the Republican.

FROM Canada comes news that the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, which is indorsed by the CIO-affiliated Canadian Congress of Labour, has emerged as the country's second largest political party as the result of provincial elections for parliament.

In the last session, CCF had only 8 seats. After this election it had 22. The oddly-named Progressive Conservative Party, which won 66 seats in the 1945 balloting, fell to 53 seats. The Liberals, long the second party, fell to 12 seats.

CCF's upsurge caused the defeat of Premier George Drew, who was beaten in a normally Conservative district of Toronto by CCFer William Temple. Two other cabinet ministers also fell.

Drew is expected to follow the Canadian system of getting some other party member to quit his seat in a safe district and have himself elected there.

CCF has control of the Provincial Government of Saskatchewan, where it has won a number of economic reforms. CIO in Canada is heartily for CCF.

Murray, Carey Wire Liebman's Widow

Shock and grief over the death of Rabbi Joshua Liebman of Boston, at the age of 41, were voiced last week by Pres. Murray and Secy.-Treas. Carey.

In a wire to Mrs. Liebman, the CIO officers said workers "knew Rabbi Liebman as a devoted friend of the rights of working men and women, a vigorous foe of intolerance and a champion of democratic progress. His loss will be keenly felt."

Rabbi Liebman was a guest of the CIO convention at Boston last fall. He was author of the book, "Peace of Mind," sales of which have topped 700,000 copies.

OLIVER W. HILL
Won in Richmond, Va.

Asks 'Eat Less' Taft To Eat His Words

Sen. Robert A, Taft, of Ohio, a candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination, was invited to "eat his words" by Chester Bowles, who proved that it costs too much to eat almost anything else.

"In June 1946 I said that if controls were destroyed, prices would rise between 25% and 30% to the discomfort of the public," the former federal price administrator told an Americans for Democratic Action meeting. Taft called his prediction "absurd" and said "I would have to eat my words," Bowles recalled.

(The Senator's solution for rising prices was to eat less.)

"Records show that prices are 25% higher than they were when Sen. Taft and his associates killed price controls in the stated belief that 'natural economic forces' would bring prices down. And prices are still going up," he warned.

Many observers think Taft's "Eat Less" crack is due to the fact he is so skinny himself.

The motto of CIO and others is: "Eat Less? Less Taft!"

AFL is Told CIO to Stay in WFTU

MATTHEW WOLL is a disciple of old Sam Gompers, founder of the AFL.

He wears a wing collar, often talks like a conservative businessman, and has recently taken to writing six-page letters to CIO Pres. Murray.

Point of the letters is that the CIO should "prove its respectability" by withdrawing from the World Federation of Trade Unions—after which the AFL might be glad to get together with the CIO.

To a Washington press conference last week, Secy.-Treas. James Carey voiced a resounding "no" to the Woll invitation.

"We are not going to be isolationists," Carey said. He added that Woll seems to be prepared to give the labor movements of Czechoslovakia, Italy and other countries over to the Soviet Union, but the "CIO is not so prepared to do. We will stand with those European trade unionists."

Carey recounted CIO successes at the WFTU meeting at Rome.

During the sessions, he said, he told Vassily Kuznetsov, head of the Soviet trade unions, that Kuznetsov "was the most conservative leader of labor I've ever met. He accepted conditions—miserable conditions—offered by their government, which no other union movement would accept.

"By comparison," Cary said, "Leon Jouhaux (of the French Workers Strength movement) is doing a magnificent job."

Asked his views on the appointment by Economic Cooperation Administrator Paul Hoffman, of AFL research director Boris Shishkin to a position described as head of ECA's labor set-up in its Paris office, Carey said:

"If an agreement had been reached and was being observed with regard to labor's role in ECA, I would be glad to comment on it. In reply to your question, I have no comment. The CIO will issue a statement on the administration of ECA in a few days."

"The light goes on when a speaker lies about labor."

Supreme Court Finds

Sound Truck Ban Curbs Free Speech

A city ordinance which gives the police chief arbitrary right to say who can use a sound truck and who can't is a denial of free speech, the U. S. Supreme Court decided June 7.

The high bench split closely, 5 to 4, with Justices Felix Frankfurter, Stanley Reed, Harold H. Burton and Robert Jackson in the dissenting minority. The case in point involved a Lockport, N. Y., preacher of the Jehovah's Witnesses sect who used a sound truck for Sunday sermons in the park. Denied a renewal of his permit for sound truck talks, he continued without the permit until he was fined and jailed.

Writing the majority opinion, Justice William O. Douglas harked back to the Hague vs. CIO case of 1938, in which Jersey City ordinances used to hamper union organization were thrown out. He said:

"The present ordinance has the same defects. The right to be heard is placed in the uncontrolled discretion of the chief of police . . .

"Loud speakers are today indispensable instruments of effective public speech. The sound truck has become an accepted method of political campaigning. It is the way people are reached.

Frankfurter defended the Lockport ordinance on the ground that it protected people from annoyance. But Douglas, saying the law gave the police chief uncontrolled discretion to suppress communication of ideas, remarked:

"In this case a permit is denied because some persons were said to have found the sound annoying. In the next one a permit may be denied because some people find the ideas annoying. Annoyance at ideas can be cloaked in annoyance at sound."

VICTORY AT ALLIS-CHALMERS: The long dispute of the CIO Auto Workers with Allis-Chalmers for recognition at the West Allis, Wis., plant was ended when a count of disputed ballots in an NLRB election gave the UAW the majority of the votes cast. Announcement of the results by Michael Essin, NLRB examiner, left, brings smiles of relief and joy to leaders and members of the UAW local.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

Reg. Dir. G. George DeNucci, Columbus, Ohio, reports CIO victories in two NLRB-conducted union-shop elections: Moores & Ross Milk Co., CIO Dairy Workers, 311 to 5 against; National Biscuit Company, Dayton, Ohio, RWDSEA-CIO, 107 out of 108, with one vote void. Intl. Rep. Jerry Hughes was in charge.

Dir. Martin Gerber, Region 9, UAW-CIO, New York, N. Y., advises that in an NLRB election conducted among the employes of the new division of the Ford Motor Co., Metuchen, N. J., resulted in UAW-CIO 1538, no union 24. This represents an all-time record for a majority obtained in a representation election in a plant of this size. The organizational drive was conducted by Asst. Reg. Dir. George F. Cranmore and Intl. Rep. George Morgan.

Thomas E. Andert, Chairman and Dir. of Org., Optical and Instrument Workers Organizing Committee-CIO, St. Louis, Mo., reports that at Webster Lens, Boston, Mass., 107 votes were cast for the union security and 10 against. Organizer Joe Duggan was in charge.

Reg. Dir. E. D. Hodson, Wilmington, Del., reports that in an NLRB election at Wilmington General Motors Assembly, the vote was UAW-CIO 952, no union 194. This was a great victory.

Reg. Dir. Irwin L. DeShetler, Los Angeles, Calif., advises that an election at East Idaho Brewing Co., Pocatello, Idaho, was won by CIO Brewery Workers. The vote was CIO 11, Teamsters 4. Brother George Bauer of Los Angeles Brewery Workers assisted in campaign.

Dir. of Org. George Brown, IWA-CIO, Portland, Ore., reports that in an election at Consolidated Water Power and Paper Co., Newald, Wisc., the vote was IWA 37, no union 29.

Field Rep. B. T. "Hank" Wolford, Huntington, W. Va., reports that in an election held among the employes of Standard Ultramarine Co. of Local Union 180, United Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers of America, the vote for union security was 392 and seven opposed.

Reg. Dir. George Craig, Philadelphia, Pa., reports two election victories: Penn Wax Works, Inc., Philadelphia, CIO Oil Workers 38, against 20; the CIO Brewery Workers 482; Teamsters 435.

Two years ago the Teamsters, with help from the employer, raided the Brewery Workers in Philadelphia and signed a back-door agreement. The election was the first chance the workers had an opportunity to express themselves. Since joining the CIO the Brewery workers have taken back a number of the breweries that the Teamsters had taken from them. By being a part of the CIO, brewery workers can protect themselves more forcefully and advance organization everywhere. Intl. Rep. Lindberg and his staff, assisted by Craig and CIO representatives, brought about this victory.

North Carolina CIO Dir. William Smith has announced that more than 90% of the employes of the Jefferies and Smith Lumber Co., at Washington, N. C., voted for the IWA. The election, conducted under NLRB supervision, made the 20th victory for the Woodworkers in the South since the start of an intensified organizing campaign one year ago.

I regret to announce that Joe Dernoncourt, our Regional Director in Oklahoma, died Sunday, June 6. Joe has been a member of organized labor since a boy, when he joined the Miners' Union in Illinois. He was an honest, sincere, conscientious trade unionist. Our sympathies and that of his many friends go out to his family. He was buried in his home town, Springfield, Ill.

Furniture Votes 'No' on Affidavits

REJECTING the recommendation of the union's international executive board, delegates to the fifth biennial convention of the CIO Furniture Workers voted against filing non-communist affidavits and financial data under the Taft-Hartley Act.

The vote—22,495 against signing, 17,164 for—followed a day of heated argument during which UFWA Pres. Morris Pizer pleaded for compliance, while Secy.-Treas. Max Perlow argued against it.

The week-long convention in Chicago was scheduled to hear Sen. Glen Taylor, vice-presidential candidate on the third party ticket; CIO Electrical Workers Pres. Albert Fitzgerald, chairman of the Natl. Labor Committee for Wallace; and CIO Maritime Union Secretary Ferdinand C. Smith.

In his opening address, Pizer sharply attacked raiding by other unions as harming the entire labor movement and urged the national CIO to halt such practices within its ranks.

The officers' report also lashed out at raiding of the union, particularly by the AFL Upholsterers. Despite having to devote much time and money to beating back these attempts, the report said, the union had increased its membership by 10,000 since the last convention. This brings the total to a new high of about 56,000 members.

Explaining their support of the third party, the officers accused both major parties of doing "everything in their power to help out employers and hurt our membership."

The report continued: "The only way we can register our belief in our own UFWA program is by voting for Wallace who stands for that program . . ." It accused "some labor leaders" of "vainly trying to tie the labor movement to the Democratic Party kite."

Here We Go Again

New York City's retail food prices rose 3.7% from March 15 to April 15, bringing them to less than 1% below January's all-time high.

NAM is Scared Congress Might Pass A Social Bill

WITH Congress rounding the last lap of this session, the NAM cast about a "weather eye" and decided there is danger ahead —danger Congress might pass a social measure.

Lamented the Manufacturers' Association in its May 29 NAM News:

"The Republicans want to elect a President and are confident that they will do so. As one Senator said: 'We're tired of moral victories.'

"This feeling produces great pressure within Republican ranks to have Congress make a 'popular' record—a record that will appease various groups and minority blocs.

"Thus the demand arises for bigger appropriations. There are appeals for enactment, without thorough examination of the cost, of plausible social measures.

"Measures pushed by various groups include modification of the Taft-Hartley Act and huge outlays for education, housing and other 'causes' and projects. . . ."

What would be the result of all that "extravagant spending?"

Full of fear and trembling, the NAM hazards the guess it might mean higher taxes "including an excess profits tax."

NAM advice to Congressmen is to ignore the pressure from home. It might cost money.

CIO Organizing AVC Labor Unit

Representatives of CIO unions are taking the lead in organizing a Labor Chapter of the American Veterans Committee in Los Angeles.

One of the group, CIO Field Rep. George Douglass, at a recent meeting of Los Angeles Chapter 1, AVC, served notice that the CIO in Los Angeles will "not support any chapter or group that is completely aligned with any totalitarian ideology."

Probers Asked To Fix N.J. Blast Blame

A demand that the responsibility for the recent explosion at the Koppers plant in Kearney be fixed was made by Pres. Carl Holderman of New Jersey CIO Council.

In an editorial published in the June issue of the New Jersey CIO News, Holderman stated that if the investigating authorities did not reveal who was responsible for the blast which resulted in the death of 10 CIO workers, the State Council would conduct its own investigation of the tragedy and "publish the results with no regard or concern for the tender sentibilities of those who do not like to hear the truth."

Packing Signs Affidavits

THE CIO Packinghouse Workers have filed non-communist affidavits and financial statements as a prerequisite to obtaining the services of the NLRB under the Taft-Hartley Act.

Two board members resigned their positions rather than sign what one termed "the yellow dog affidavits." They are Herbert March, district director in Chicago, and Meyer E. Stern, district director in New York City.

Temporary appointees to fill their places until the union's convention names permanent directors are Arthur Kampfert, Chicago, a former national director of the union, and Lemuel Ward, New York, field representative.

Announcing the board's action, UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein pledged to "continue the union's fight for the repeal of the infamous Taft-Hartley Act and defeat at the polls of those reactionary Congressmen who seek to destroy democratic freedoms in their zeal to shackle the progress of working people."

THE ADVENTURES OF JIM BARRY

NOW THET'S SOMETHING I RECKON I DIDN'T EXPECT.... YOU GETTING BIT BY THE JEALOUSY BUG.

AND WHY SHOULDN'T I BE JEALOUS? JIM HARDLY SEEMS TO NOTICE I'M ALIVE....

GOP Leaders Can't Agree on Adjourning Congress

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

YOU couldn't tell, last weekend in Washington, where the 80th Congress was going, how fast it was getting there, or when it was due to arrive.

● Out West, Pres. Truman described it as "the worst Congress in the United States you've ever had" — then amended his statement to include only those Congresses in the President's lifetime.

Leading Congressmen replied with some choice epithets about the Chief Executive.

● A welter of bills were moving through the Congressional hopper. "Must lists" set up by the Republican leadership were subject to daily change.

● Leaders of the Senate and House seemed in utter disagreement about the date for adjournment. Sen. Taft, GOP leader in the Senate, talked with his colleagues, then announced that the Senate seemed unable to finish its business by the projected June 19 deadline. He recommended a recess until after the Republican convention, which opens June 21.

But Speaker of the House Joseph Martin (R. Mass.) thought otherwise. He said the House would be through by June 19, and wondered why the Senate couldn't do likewise.

If the Republican and Democratic leaders were confused, the general public was even more so.

Here's a hit-and-run survey of Congressional action on some of the bills in which labor is interested, as of the CIO News press time:

Funds For ECA

The House, which had been raising cain about American propaganda overseas, pulled the neatest trick of the year in behalf of foes of the European Recovery Program.

Following the lead of Rep. Taber (R.N.Y.), head of the House Appropriations Committee, the House nipped about 25% off the appropriation for ERP's first year. (Congress had earlier "authorized" $5.3 billion—but now the House is voting on actual allotment of funds). Pres. Truman, Sec. of State Marshall, most of the leading GOP presidential candidates, labor officials and others complained in no uncertain terms. They asked the Senate to undo the House-voted fund cut.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey asked the Senate Appropriations Committee to restore the full amount which had been "deemed necessary to meet the problem of European recovery.

"The well-being of mankind and our own future security against war make it imperative that the peoples of Europe be taken out of a relief status and be helped to help themselves and each other. That was the design of ERP and it must not be prostituted."

Appropriations

ECA was not the only agency to feel the GOP economy axe.

The House Appropriations Committee knocked $48 million—some 10%—off the budget for the important Atomic Energy Commission, and knocked similar chunks out of the funds for the Veterans Administration, the Office of Housing Expediter and some other agencies.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics, which had been handed a crippling $2½ million cut by the House, wound up with its funds at the same level as for the past 12 months. Most other Labor Dept. agencies came out with funds considerably lower than recommended by Pres. Truman in his budget message.

Most serious feature of the Labor Dept.-Federal Security Administration money bill, however, was the provision to switch the important U. S. Employment Service from the Labor Dept. to a position where it's under the supervision of the Bureau of Employment Security of the Social Security Administration of the Federal Security Agency.

Union spokesmen had argued bitterly that USES—with its employment agencies around the nation—clearly belongs in the Labor Dept. But Congress paid little heed to their arguments.

Mundt-Nixon Bill

What was going to happen to the House-approved Mundt-Nixon bill, members of the Senate Judiciary Committee either didn't know or weren't saying.

The bill—prepared by the House Unamerican Activities Committee as a "check on subversive activities"—was soundly condemned by labor, liberal and legal groups as a prime threat to civil rights.

Some members of the Judiciary Committee hinted it might come up for action. Others said "no" to reporters. Some of its sponsors may try to ease it through in the final rush of the session.

Civil Rights

The civil rights program looked like Casualty No. 1 of the 80th Congress. With only a week to go before the June 19 target date for adjournment, nothing was happening—in a big way—on bills to outlaw the poll tax, make lynching a federal crime, or set up a Fair Employment Practices Committee to curb discrimination in industry.

Rep. George Bender (R.O.), sponsor of the anti-poll tax bill which passed the House months ago, sent a "Dear Bob" letter to Taft urging action in the Senate. " . . . The Republican party cannot afford to face the country in November without at least one major accomplishment in this Congress in the field of civil rights legislation," Bender wrote.

Afford it or not, the GOP seemed destined to do so. The anti-poll tax was getting little support from top Republicans, who blame their own inaction on the threat of a filibuster by Southern conservative Democrats. But the GOP seemed unwilling to face the issue of limiting debate to pass the bill.

The anti-lynching bill was still in Senate Judiciary Committee, where it has been locked for months. The FEPC bill hadn't been heard from in weeks.

Only half-step towards a civil rights measure was an amendment tacked on to the draft bill by Sen. Langer (R.N.D.). It provides that members of the armed services (totaling just over a million under the draft authorization) won't have to pay voting fees if they come from poll tax states.

Social Security

Congress's accomplishments in the field of social security aren't enough to get excited about.

One bill scheduled for passage by the House (HR 6777) was described by Van A. Bittner, chairman of the CIO Social Security Committee, as a "few teaspoonfuls of improvement." He told Sen. Millikin, head of the Senate Finance Committee, that more is needed.

HR 6777 provides that persons receiving old age pensions may earn up to $40 a month—rather than $15, as in the past—without forfeiting the pensions. It permits, under difficult conditions, some groups of workers not now covered to get less-than-average social security benefits, and raises benefits for the first child in a family by less than a buck a day.

The Gearhart Resolution—which will bar hundreds of thousands of workers described as "independent contractors" from security coverage—was dressed up with amendments to increase donations from the federal government to the states for relief for old folks. On that basis, it whizzed through both branches of Congress.

No important health legislation even came near the floor of the House or Senate.

Immigration

A scheme to give the U. S. Immigration Service an "out" from its present embarrassment was sharply criticized last week by CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan.

He asked members of the Senate Judiciary Committee to turn thumbs down on S. 2755, a bill permitting the Service to escape the provisions of the Administrative Procedures Act—under which government agencies must conduct their hearings and issue their rules.

The Service's deportation cases against a number of aliens—including several CIO union officials — bumped to a halt when lawyers for the men charged the Service was not acting in conformity with the Procedures law. While the case was being argued, the bill to get the Immigration Service exempted from its procedures was introduced.

CIO "strongly opposes this bill," Cowan wrote. The Immigration Service, he said, "operates in an area which vitally involves the rights and liberties of human beings. Its orders are of a quasi-criminal character.

"I do not know of any federal agency in which it is more important that safeguards of the Administrative Procedures Act be fully maintained than in connection with immigration and naturalization matters."

80 Leaders Ask Aid For Schools

EIGHTY leading Americans have asked Congress to pass the widely-supported U. S. aid-to-education bill—but the House Labor Committee hasn't shown much enthusiasm.

The $300 million bill, which would permit Uncle Sam to help finance improvements in state-controlled school systems, was passed early this session by the Senate. The House Labor group—headed by Rep. Hartley of Taft-Hartley fame—has sat on the proposal for months.

The 80 prominent Americans sent their plea for action in a wire to Speaker of the House Martin. They said the sum for education is "insignificant" in comparison with grants for national defense and European recovery.

Among the signers were CIO Pres. Murray, Pres. James Patton of the Natl. Farmers Union, Pres. Dwight Eisenhower of Columbia University, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and former Gov. Ellis Arnall of Georgia.

Give Potofsky Award

Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, last week received a citation for his work in human and industrial relations, from the Natl. Conference of Christians and Jews.

The award was presented in New York City given by leaders in the apparel and related industries.

In accepting the citation, the Amalgamated president hit out against discrimination in industry and education and cited his own union as an example of a community in which many different racial strains live in peace.

Senate DP Bill Blasted

KEY supporters of the plan to bring into this country 200,000 Displaced Persons from the refugee camps of Europe, lined up last week to blast the Senate bill on DP's passed two weeks ago.

The Fellows bill — considered much better by supporters of the Displaced Persons cause—was up for action in the House as The CIO News went to press. If it passes, a joint Senate-House conference committee may remove many of the worst discrimination features of the Senate bill.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, in a wire to Speaker of the House Joseph Martin, charged "obvious bias and prejudice" is written into the Senate bill. He said its provisions on jobs, housing and administration are "unworkable and calculated to exclude, not admit, displaced persons."

The bill was termed a "booby trap for Americans and for DP's" by Dean Earl Harrison of the Univ. of Pennsylvania Law School, who heads the Citizens Committees for DP's.

A YEAR OF TAFT-HARTLEY

Transport Service 10 Yrs. Old

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

THE first decade is over. Last week in Chicago, 100 delegates had indeed occasion to be proud of that decade as the CIO United Transport Service Employes met and held its sixth biennial convention in Chicago.

Still ringing in the ears of old timers at the convention, even after a decade, were these words spoken by Pres. Willard Townsend Jan. 14, 1938, at the first constitutional convention of UTSE:

TOWNSEND

"We are here to stay! And we have the supreme task of building a strong progressive movement among the railway service employes of this country."

Last week, it was certain that USTE is here to stay. The decade had been a tough one—and tough years are ahead, too. The convention was reminded, in a convention book edited by Educational Director Ernest Calloway, of these milestones in its history:

Jan. 14, 1938: The year of UTSE's birth.

Oct. 1941: The independent Brotherhood of Dining Car employes unanimously voted to dissolve and affiliate with UTSE.

Feb. 9, 1943: Culman Laundry workers joined UTSE.

May 17, 1942: UTSE joined CIO.

Last week, those dates were much in the minds as the delegates did these major things:

- Saw Pres. Townsend weep unashamedly as they gave him a heart-pulling demonstration after electing him—their first and only president—by acclamation. Sec. Eugene E. Frazier and John L. Yancey, who are the other executive officers, also won reelection by acclamation.
- Elected other officers with almost no opposition.
- Heard addresses by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey (on the President's Civil Rights program and his experiences abroad) and CIO Vice Pres. and Organization Dir. Allan L. Heywood (on ways and means to complete UTSE's organization.)
- Passed, by a vote of 36 to 32, a resolution calling for a referendum of the membership on an assessment of $5 to be paid this year and another of $5 to be paid next year.

(Delegate Cecil Patrick was one of the leaders of opposition to holding the referendum. He was named a teller on the roll call vote. When it was completed, Townsend named him to announce the result. "This is mental torture," quipped Patrick. Later, Patrick, pointing out that he is a frequent opponent of Townsend, placed Townsend's name in nomination for reelection.)

- Adopted constitutional changes which provide for proportional representation in election of executive board members.
- Adopted an oath of office for officers that showed the deep religious feeling of the union's members by ending with these words: "I make this oath in the sight of God and my fellowman." (For instance, Townsend is active in Protestant affairs, Yancey is an active Catholic.)
- Approved a resolution which declared it "shall be mandatory upon every local within the UTSE and every international representative, elected officer or designated representative to any and all labor, religious, political or civic bodies where the name of the organization is used, to defend, maintain and in every respect adhere to the established policy of this union." (This and most of the other resolutions were adopted unanimously.)
- Passed a strong foreign policy resolution.
- Though few of its members are covered by the Taft-Hartley Law, denounced the law.

(UTSE's members—the vast majority of them—are covered by the National [Railway] Mediation Act.) (An example of UTSE members covered by Taft-Hartley: "Skycaps," who work for concessionaires at La-Guardia and other airports.)

- Heard Hugh Will, former secretary to Sen. Robert F. Wagner (D., N. Y.), and now a representative of the American Veterans' Committee, urge that UTSE help AVC's organization drive.
- Because the convention was running away behind schedule—there was full discussion on a number of issues—referred the political action resolution and some others to the new board for action. There is almost unanimous opposition to a third party in 1948 among UTSE members, officers report.
- Adopted policy resolutions on a variety of subjects, ranging from the Palestine crisis to establishment of regional eastern offices.
- Praised Pres. Truman for his Civil Rights program.

The following vice presidents, in addition to Yancey, were elected:

John A. Bowers, James A. Cannady, Clarence Ivey (he defeated Charles Finlayson, 39 to 16), Earl C. Adams, Earl Davis, Henry G. White and J. P. Covington. (All were reelections.)

The following board members were elected:

Edward Bell (his daughter died the second night of the convention), Sylvester Corrothers, Charles M. Dickson, Roy C. Edwin, Richard Hamme, Willie Massey, Ethel McCoo, Cecil Patrick, Otho Robinson, George L-P Weaver, Josof Grayson, Elbert D. Koelman, William Daniels, William Winchester.

The officers' report declared that UTSE "occupies an enviable position in the CIO." It noted that Pres. Townsend had made three important trips for CIO, the government and the World Fed. of Trade Unions, to Cuba, to Mexico, to Japan, and that UTSE officers serve on major CIO committees.

UTSE has 14,000 members, 93 locals in 34 states and 58 cities. Covered are redcaps, dining cooks and waiters, Pullman laundry employes.

Thus does UTSE start its second decade.

Education

The Transport Service union is one of the most highly educated in the American labor field.

Of the 100 delegates to the convention, 68 had attended college, most of them winning degrees.

UTSE Pres. Willard Townsend took pre-medical courses for two years at the Univ. of Toronto, then took his degree in chemistry at Canada's Royal Academy of Science. He has taught in American and Canadian high schools. He also has an honorary law degree from Wilberforce Univ.

Should Workers Go Back to Diet Of Cornbread and Dried Peas?

SHOULD people who in the last few years have begun eating fresh fruit, vegetables, milk and meat go back to a diet of cornbread and dried peas?

That simple question, the CIO Economic Outlook said this week, is at the hub of some involved economic arguments that are often spouted by corporation executives when they meet with unions as collective bargaining tables.

Unions and companies have frequently debated—both locally and nationally—the question of whether labor is now well off, or whether workers are behind an economic eight-ball.

Corporations like to point to average earnings in pre-war 1939. They point out that even though living costs have risen, workers are still ahead of the game compared to conditions in '39.

Unions, on the other hand, point to the fall in buying power of workers' pay-checks since the 1944-45 period before prices began going crazy.

THE Outlook—published by the CIO Dept. of Education & Research—says "the problem is very simple."

"It's a question of whether, once the people have attained a decided improvement in real earnings, as they did by 1945, they should ever turn the clock back?

"The Natl. Association of Manufacturers, the Chamber of Commerce, and other organizations engaged in the big business propaganda drive, say 'Yes.'

"The CIO says 'NO!'"

But, the Outlook reminded its readers, companies that want workers to be no more prosperous today than in '39, show little enthusiasm for 1939 corporation profits.

While weekly wages—before taxes—have jumped 106% since pre-war days, corporation profits before taxes have zoomed up 342% in the same nine years.

The first two rounds of post-war wage increases, the CIO said, left real earnings "16% below their 1944-45 level.

"The basic question is whether we want to return to the 1939 level or whether we want to retain whatever increase in real earnings and living standards we have been able to secure, and progress from there."

Mundt Bill Dead—For Present

THE widely-criticized Mundt-Nixon bill appeared likely to die on the books—at least so far as the 80th Congress is concerned.

At CIO News press-time, the Senate Judiciary Committee had issued no report on the bill—the most widely-discussed civil rights issue since the Taft-Hartley proposals came up in Congress a year ago.

The bill was sponsored by the House Un-American Activities Committee and was widely heralded by that committee as the best means of combatting subversive activities.

But labor, liberal groups, students of laws and many newspapers joined to warn that the Un-American Committee's cure was worse than the disease.

In addition, Washington's oft-quoted "usually informed sources" were reported in the daily press as believing that Attorney-General Tom Clark whose power to list organizations as subversive would be increased by the bill—had decided to turn thumbs down on the Mundt-Nixon proposals.

Perhaps the sharpest criticism of the bill came from elderly Zechariah Chaffee, Harvard Law school professor and world-renowned expert on constitutional rights.

CHAFFEE said, in a letter to Chairman Wiley of the Senate Judiciary Committee, that he saw "no necessity . . . of elaborate regulations of the opinions of private citizens and exceedingly drastic penalties for entirely novel offenses."

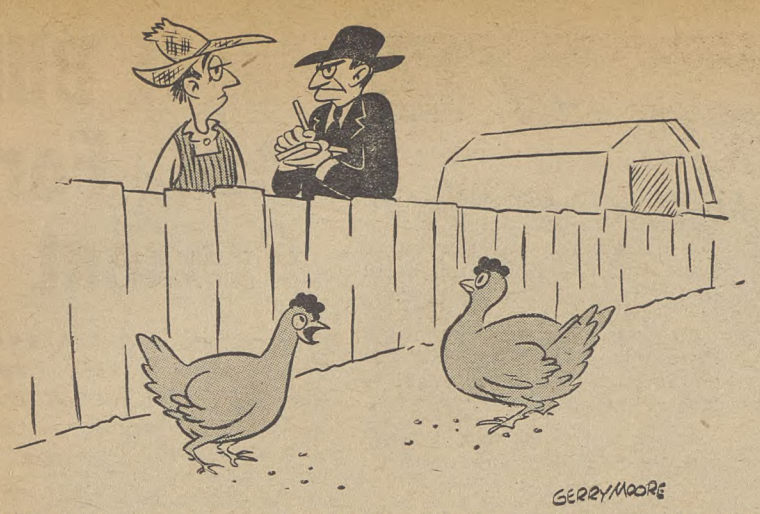
Chaffee said that "although he dislikes the Communists very much," they're far less dangerous today than after the Russian revolution in 1919-20.

If the country were really menaced by Communism, Chaffee said, "surely there would have been somewhere or other an outburst of unlawful acts or at least tangible evidence of an unlawful conspiracy."

He said the question is more than whether American Communists should be forced to register. It's whether "American citizens who have not been proved to be dangerous individuals should be made liable to heavy fines and long prison sentences, in large measure because of the activities of other people. A good deal of the bill creates guilt by association."

Such "novel penalties" as the bill provides, Chaffee continued, should not be used merely because "Communists are pestiferous people or indulge in big talk about taking over our government. The question is whether they are within a million miles of doing so."

The Harvard professor said he agrees with Thomas Jefferson that the American government is the strongest on earth, and for that reason the Senate committee should "reject this un-heard-of bill."



"That's a government loyalty investigator. He heard Farmer Brown was keeping some Rhode Island Reds."

Wage Round-up

Firestone, Goodyear Offer 11c Increase

THE rubber industry has taken on the "new look."

Firestone Rubber Co. last week led the way with an offer of 11c an hour to its 23,000 CIO Rubber Workers in eight plants across the country. Goodyear followed shortly thereafter with the same proposal affecting its 30,000 employes.

Negotiations continue, meanwhile, with U. S. Rubber, while employes at Goodrich have taken a strike vote. Discussions at Goodrich have broken off, but settlement in the rest of the industry improves the outlook for agreement there.

The Firestone company-wide agreement eliminates the last major holdout against company-wide bargaining in the industry. Until this year Firestone has insisted on plant-by-plant contracts.

Firestone average wages are thus increased from $1.57 to $1.68 an hour, but the raise "will not justify any increase in prices," according to URWA Pres. L. S. Buckmaster. The agreement expires April 14, 1949, when either side may seek a reopening on 60 days notice.

The two-year contract with Goodyear will run until Feb. 10, 1950, with wages subject to reopening after one year. Also provided are three week vacations after 15 years continuous service, and pay for holidays not worked.

Steelworkers: Some 20,000 Aluminum Co. of America employes were preparing to strike at midnight June 20 unless a last-minute change-of-heart forced Alcoa to up its wage offer to 13c an hour.

The CIO Steelworkers originally asked an increase of between 25 and 30c an hour, including elimination of job wage rate inequities. Later this was scaled down to a straight 13c boost.

Countering, the company made its "final" offer of 8% with a minimum of 9c an hour. The CIO union held this unacceptable and set a strike deadline. The tieup would affect seven plants.

Steelworkers' Vice Pres. James Thimmes described the company's profits last year as the highest in its 59-year history outside of the war years. Not only was the amount of the wage offer unacceptable, he said, but the company's insistence on a two-year contract to run until May 31, 1950, was equally so. He said the union intends to ask for a pension program, a guaranteed annual wage and increased social benefits next spring. A two-year contract would prohibit such discussion.

In making its offer, the company refused the union's request for elimination of job inequities, as was provided in the steel industry, and a proposal for an improved social insurance program.

Electrical: The CIO Electrical Workers have turned down as inadequate a 6% wage increase offered to UE and two other unions by Westinghouse Electric Corp.

About 80,000 Westinghouse workers are represented by UE. The Westinghouse offer marked abandonment of its previous "no raise" policy which it had maintained through 16 weeks of negotiations with the unions. In a letter rejecting the offer, UE Intl. Rep. Edward Matthews called for daily negotiations to speed an early settlement.

At a press conference Matthews and UE Director of Organization James J. Matles accused the company of "handing out a measly proposition with one hand and taking it back with the other."

They said the "so-called 6%" offer actually amounted to only a $2 a week increase for workers in the lowest pay brackets and $4 for those in the higher brackets. Matles said UE "will not be satisfied" unless its 80,000 members get wage increases similar to those already granted by General Motors and General Electric. He said the GE offer provides $3.60 to $8 additional weekly take-home pay for each worker, while the GM hike gives each employe $4.40 more.

Auto: A social security program won at Kaiser-Frazer last week was described by Edward Cote, co-director of Auto Workers Region 1A, as "the first major step in the automobile industry toward meeting the workers' need for an adequate social security program which asures medical and hospital care for the employe and his family, payments during periods of disability and death benefits."

Under the agreement, which also provided a 13c hourly increase, the company pays 5c an hour to finance the plan. This constitutes the highest boost won in the industry this year.

Another precedent was set in the industry last week by the UAW local at the Metal Moldings Corp. in Detroit, when it won a contract providing a guaranteed annual wage. The plant produces chrome strips for automobiles.

Under terms of the agreement workers with 10 or more years seniority are guaranteed 50 weeks of work a year at the regular hourly rates. About 25% of the 425 employes can thus qualify.

TEW Bill Target of GOP Blitz

WITH the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill teetering on the brink of passage, House Republican leaders pulled a series of quick parliamentary tricks designed to doom the legislation this session.

Passage by the House late last week of the substitute Wolcott bill, which omits all aids to low-income housing, apparently killed chances for Senate-House accord on a bill.

Senate leaders said they would stick firmly to the TEW bill already approved by them.

The House shenanigans provoked a bitter battle between the two houses of Congress as Senate tempers exploded at what Sen. Charles W. Tobey (R.N.H.) termed "the dication of six men in the House Rules Committee" to the U. S. Senate.

Chronology of the swift-moving developments:

The House Banking and Currence committee handed Chairman Jesse P. Wolcott (R.-Mich.) a severe blow when it approved the TEW bill a week ago.

The bill then moved to the House Rules Committee, headed by Wolcott's friend, Rep. Leo Allen, Illinois Republican. In order to reach the floor, where it was conceded the bill had the support of a majority, it required a "rule" from Allen's committee.

Instead, however, the Rules Committee tabled the TEW bill, and requested Wolcott to send it another without the public housing and other features opposed by the real estate lobby.

AFTER whipping his committee into line, Wolcott won approval of his emasculated version by a vote of 15 to 11. Previously the committee had voted 14 to 13 for the TEW bill.

With Congress hoping to adjourn June 19, the House Republican leadership worked fast. It called for a suspension of the rules, which would permit the Wolcott bill to by-pass the Rules committee, come directly to the floor, where it could not be amended or recommitted to committee. Over the objections of the Democrats, the GOP won this point too. The following day the House passed the bill, 317 to 90.

As the CIO News went to press, it was uncertain whether Congress would adjourn June 19 or recess until after the Party conventions.

The possibility of a Senate filibuster was hinted by Sen. Allen J. Ellender (D-La.), a co-author of the TEW bill. If any other housing bill is sent the Senate by the House without a House vote on the TEW bill, he said, "I will talk till doomsday with plenty of help on both sides."

Deaf 'Hear'

Even deaf and hard of hearing textile workers in Knoxville, Tenn., can now get the CIO's organizing message, thanks to Paul Christopher, State CIO Director. When Christopher found that 15 workers at the C. B. Atkin Co. couldn't follow proceedings at union meeting because of deafness, he solved the problem by getting T. C. Ray, an Atkin worker, to stand beside him and relay his words in sign language.

BITTER-ENDERS: As the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill moved into the last lap of its bitter obstacle race in the House, these "never-say-die" CIO members from Michigan and Ohio converged on Capitol Hill to do some last-minute lobbying for the bill. Shown talking with Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D., Cal.), a leading fighter for the bill, are l. to r.: Exec. Sec. Paul D. Fessenden of the Akron, O., CIO Council; Sec.-Treas. Bill Lavelle and Vice-Pres. Ray Sowder of the Ohio CIO Council; Rep. Douglas, author of petition to discharge the TEW bill from the House Banking Committee; Joseph Shapiro, Veterans Committee, Ford Local 600, UAW, Detroit; Arthur Dega, UAW Veterans Dept., Thomas N. O'Neil, Veterans Committee, Ford Local 600, and Leo Goodman, director, CIO Natl. Housing Committee.

3/4 Million 'Exempted' From Social Security

CONGRESS last week again overrode Pres. Truman on legislation affecting the Social Security program.

The first overriding was on a bill to exempt "independent" news vendors from coverage of Social Security. (In 1947, Truman pocket-vetoed the same bill).

Last week, the overriding was on the Gearhart Resolution (ironically, the other legislation was called the Gearhart Bill) which exempts some 750,000 salesmen working on commission, piece workers, truck drivers and taxi drivers from coverage.

One group whose status is beclouded by the issue is the large number of laundry workers who are members of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers. They work on a percentage of the laundry bill.

The Gearhart Resolution also increases benefits for the aged, the needy, the blind and dependent children, but only to state levels, which vary considerably and which are in some cases extremely low.

The House vote to override was 297 to 75; the Senate vote was 65 to 12.

THE Gearhart Resolution had been passed a few days before the veto under a suspension of the rules which allowed no amendments and limited debate to 40 minutes. Proponents of increased Social Security thus were refused an opportunity to improve the bill. They charged that a survey made for the Congress by the Social Security Advisory Committee was completely ignored.

Truman, in his veto, said he was tempted to sign the bill because it increased aid for dependent children by $3 a month (to $27) and $5 a month for the needy and blind (to $50). But, he declared, the bill permits employers to decide in which categories to place workers, thus enabling the employer to escape any Social Security payments.

TRUMAN made the Social Security legislation an issue in his western tour. In Los Angeles, he said:

"You know how Congress had broadened the base of Social Security? They have just taken 750,000 people off Social Security, and sent me a bill to that effect and tied a rider to it increasing old-age assistance, hoping that I would take the bait and let them get away with wrecking Social Security.

"I didn't do it. I vetoed the bill this morning."

Rep. Herman P. Eberharter (D., Pa.), commenting on Congress' attitude toward Social Security, declared: "The House is being denied an opportunity to vote for a real constructive Social Security measure."

DANGEROUS AND BAFFLING

The Taft-Hartley Act is a very bad law. We don't like it.

We've said that time and time again. Perhaps—just for emphasis — we should repeat some of our favorite charges against T-H now that its first anniversary (June 23) approaches.

Instead, we're going to discuss a couple of the less obvious angles—the possible future of collective bargaining and Congress' bad habit of talking out of both sides of its mouth.

We'll start out by saying—

Free collective bargaining ceases to be collective bargaining when it ceases being free.

And in the extremely complex and sometimes cockeyed field of management-labor relations we're going to have collective bargaining or a substitute for it.

It's the substitute which worries us.

It worries us a lot—because we see in the substitute a major step toward eventual government control of both industry and labor.

ATMOSPHERE IS WRONG

There were strong indications a couple of years ago that collective bargaining was "moving out of the jungle" and that unions and management groups would soon be negotiating in good faith on the basis of workers' needs and industry's ability to meet these needs.

Now there are strong indications that the nation may be headed toward some of the most bitter management-labor strife it has ever known.

The Taft-Hartley Act has created an atmosphere and a type of thinking on the part of management which would make such strife possible.

It has encouraged management groups to assume a "get-tough-with-the-unions" attitude and to disregard employes' economic needs.

It has removed much of the freedom from free collective bargaining and has replaced it with "negotiation by injunction."

If the trend progresses too far there will be trouble—serious trouble.

Those responsible for T-H would say at this point that they have a cure for such trouble—legislation which would make T-H look like a weak sister by comparison.

If such legislation was enacted it might prevent or halt strife—but the nation would no longer have free trade unions.

OVERSEAS BUT NOT AT HOME

This brings us to one of the darndest situations we've come across in a long time—the move to strengthen free trade unions abroad while tearing them down at home. It doesn't make sense.

There is a growing feeling in official Washington that the establishment and preservation of non-totalitarian governments in Europe depends to a large degree on the growth of democratic trade unions.

Congressmen, Senators and administrative officials recall that one of Hitler's first moves was to abolish the trade union movement in Germany.

They know that the success of the European Recovery Program hinges to a large extent on the building of a strong democratic trade union movement overseas.

It is strange logic—or an appalling lack of it—which causes men to try to tear down at home what they are trying to build up abroad.

Pop Tells Junior About Congress

And Offspring, After Being Paddled, Throws The Hooks Into Pop

By ALLAN L. SWIM

JUNIOR, the little dope who believes what he reads in the NAM ads, is eating off the mantle again!

His old man whaled the tar out of him the other evening after he heard Junior tell a little neighbor that the 80th Congress had done a wonderful job.

Junior had declared, "Boy-o-boy, Congress really took care of the smart guys and the big shots—and I'm for 'em because I'm going to be a big shot when I grow up."

He added that the "poor suckers like Pop" really got it in the neck "but they asked for it, didn't they?"

Thereupon Pop grabbed Junior by the scuff of the neck and hauled him off to the garage to demonstrate his belief in "spare the rod and spoil the child."

POP then took Junior into the front room and gave him a fatherly lecture on Congressional behavior.

"Junior, Congress did OK on the European Recovery Program, and it did extend rent control, though in a weakened form," Pop began.

"It increased on-the-job benefits for war veterans and it cut income taxes. The way taxes were cut, however, gave a better break to the rich than to the poor.

"I guess, Junior, we can put these things on the 'credit' side of the ledger. But you ought to look at the other side!"

Junior, for a change, listened attentively as Pop gave forth on legislation and lack of it:

"Congress really socked the working man in the seat of the britches when it passed the Taft-Hartley Act, and I'm afraid it got way off the beam when it enacted the draft law.

"It didn't really do anything to combat inflation.

"It didn't do anything constructive about Social Security and it refused to increase the minimum wage.

"It didn't provide any civil rights legislation—like setting up an FEPC, abolishing the poll tax and making lynching a federal crime. It didn't even pass an equal status law for women.

"Why, Junior, Congress didn't really do anything about flood control measures—you know, like another TVA—and it didn't take any anti-monopoly action.

"Oh, I could list a lot of other things Congress should have done but didn't."

JUNIOR thought these things over for a minute and then shot one straight at his Pop:

"How come?"

"Well, Junior, that's an easy one to answer. Most of the men in the House and Senate were more friendly to Big Business than to the working man."

"Yeah, but how come?"

"I suppose it's because they were elected by support from Big Business."

"Yeah, I know—but how come?"

"Well, er, I guess it happened that way because too many working men and women stayed away from the polls at the last election."

Junior then sunk his hooks in Pop where it hurt.

"If I remember correctly," he said, "you were 'too busy' to vote in the last election. You and a couple million other guys like you stayed away from the polls.

"Just like I said before—you suckers got what you asked for!"

CIO Improves Life In North Carolina Town

THIS is the story about some hard working people in a small North Carolina town who were mighty tired of things the way they were and jumped fast when a chance came to do something about it.

Ray Schnell, a CIO representative in North Carolina, tells the story. It started when the CIO Organizing Committee sent an organizer to Elizabethtown—population about 3,000 to get some 275 employes of a lumber mill in the town to join the CIO Woodworkers.

It was easy enough to get the workers organized, for they were pretty sore about their wages and working conditions, and in a month just about all of them were in the union. The hard job came later—trying to get the company to recognize the union and sign a contract.

The management hired a lawyer and stalled four months before finally consenting to an election. When this was held in April 1947, the company thought the workers could be induced to vote against the union by a liberal distribution of $5 bills and quarts of whisky, Schnell said. "The men took the liquor and the money, and voted for the union—tickled pink to get something free from the company."

THE union won the election by a landslide. And then the real struggle began—to get a contract. The fight has been going on now for more than a year. The men have never lost faith or hope and today there are 214 dues paying members. They're sure they'll get that contract some day.

With their union strongly established, the Elizabethtown workers, grumbling bitterly about how hard it was to make ends meet, decided to set up their own union store. J. D. Lewis, Tom McDowell and F. F. Williams got the idea while standing on the street corner chewing the fat about high prices. The idea was put up to the members at a union meeting and adopted enthusiastically.

The store opened in February 1948 with $200 worth of goods purchased with money loaned by local union members. In four months the original investors had been paid back and the store had stock on hand valued at $1,500.

A complete line of groceries, tobacco, candy, soft drinks and hardware supplies are sold in the union store, and plans for expansion in the near future are in the making.

For the convenience of its worker-customers, the store is open from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. and at night from 6 to 10. The store buzzes with union talk continually. Tom McDowell, Jim Curry and Emory Hill are always ready to talk CIO as they wait on the customers.

It's not only at the store that talk about the CIO goes on. The whole town is full of it and the benefits it has brought to the community in spite of opposition from the company, local and state police and the merchants.

A saying often heard in Elizabethtown is that few of the workers there ever go to sleep at night without first thanking God for bringing the CIO to their town.

CONGRESS DRIPP By YOMEN

"If anyone comes while I'm out, take his fingerprints."

He Finally Sold Radio Time To CIO

HE kept saying "no," but for some reason or other he didn't sound convincing.

Even after he'd lied about the situation, the organizers got the idea that he wasn't really opposed to them and that he would say "yes" if he thought he could get by with it.

So they decided to turn on the pressure.

After a while he changed his position, then switched back to his original stand and issued a "flat, final no."

It was at this point that the organizers worked out a plan for taking the radio station manager for a "buggy ride."

There are some indications that he secretly enjoyed what followed.

THE "Battle of Wits" began when the organizers walked into the radio station of a comparatively small town that was considered to be strongly anti-union.

They told the station manager—as matter-of-factly as possible—that they'd come to buy some radio time.

He said he was awfully sorry that he couldn't sell them any—that he already has commercial commitments for all of the station's time.

The organizers thought they were getting the brush-off. They knew it a couple of days later after they had checked the station's programs and found there was considerable time available.

But not to the CIO.

THE organizers and the station manager got down to brass tacks in a hurry the next time they met.

They told him—bluntly—that he had lied to them. He admitted—with equal bluntness—that he had.

He was really on the spot, he explained. The principal stockholder of the station was tied up closely with the operators of the company the CIO was trying to unionize.

He said that he "personally" thought the CIO should be permitted to tell its story over the air but that his hands were tied by the "higher-ups."

The organizers said they could appreciate his position, but this didn't solve their problem. They said they thought they might distribute handbills all over town, denouncing the station.

Well, if that was the case, he said, he "guessed" it would be wise to sell the CIO some air time.

LATER the station manager called up a CIO representative and said he was sorry that "orders from up above" made it necessary for him to change his position again.

There was some heated argument, then the manager said his final answer was a "flat no."

The organizers, however, weren't beaten yet. They decided to put the station manager directly on a spot from which it would be almost impossible to crawl.

Their next step was to visit a well known local minister who had indicated he could be called on in a pinch to do something really worthwhile for the CIO.

THE minister went to the radio station and told the manager he wanted to go on the air "with a message of real importance to the people."

He said he intended to "speak most favorably of the CIO" and denounce those "who are trying to falsely use the church to defeat the efforts of the workers to form an organization of their own."

Then he said:

"And I don't believe either you or the station owners will find it advisable to deny the right of free speech to a minister of the gospel—even if the CIO is paying for the time on the air."

The next day radio listeners heard the minister speak on a CIO-sponsored program.

I Have a Little Shadow That Follows Me About

'Telling Battle In Cold War Won By James B. Carey'

THIS editorial, entitled "U. S. Labor Leader Jams Red Sounding Board," appeared in the June 19 issue of the Saturday Evening Post.

Although the Kremlin is seldom too bashful to attack those who mess up its plans, Moscow maintains a discreet silence about the activities of one spry and impudent little picador who goes to Europe every so often to sink poisoned darts in the hide of the Red behemoth and then dashes back to threaten the position of the Reds in American organized labor. Yet it can be said with confidence that few Americans are doing more to frustrate the Politburo's plans for international communism than James B. Carey, National Secretary-Treasurer of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, and spokesman for the CIO in the Soviet-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions.

Until very recently, this WFTU looked like the most effective sounding board for communist propaganda that Moscow had yet invented. The CIO received caustic criticism for joining up with it. Every major labor organization on earth, except the American Federation of Labor, adhered to WFTU, even the anti-Red British TUC. With Soviet stooges controlling the representatives of captured unions behind the iron curtain and outside it, Russia could call the turn. It was a beautiful set-up, but little Jim Carey whose eviction from the presidency of the United Electrical Workers delighted our domestic commies, has made it worse than useless to the Muscovite dictatorship. Instead of letting WFTU function constantly as the Kremlin's medium of expression, Jim Carey has made it a major concern of the Kremlin that it shall not function at all.

His six week's tour of Europe in February and March was inspired by the CIO's anxiety to tell a gathering of WFTU delegates that the Marshall Plan was not concocted by "banker-generals," but was a benevolent recovery program which had American labor's wholehearted support. His mission enabled him to discredit Soviet publicity without uttering a Red-baiting word. All he asked was that the representatives of the executive council of the WFTU meet to hear him say that anyone who alleged that the Marshall Plan was a "Wall Street plan" was a liar. He buttonholed Giuseppe di Vittorio, head of the Red Italian Confederation of Labor, in London, and said this to him—for international publication. He rebuked Louis Saillant, the French communist Secretary General of the WFTU, for meddling in the affairs of American unions. Then he barged right into Moscow and right up to the desk of Vasili Kuznetsov, supreme master of the make-believe Russian trade-unions, and told him that anyone who said that American labor did not support the European Recovery Plan was a liar.

Now, if any spokesman for the United States Government had said that in Washington, the whole great Red propaganda machine would have erupted vilification. But Kuznetsov's reaction to this bearding of Red bureaucracy in its own den was a concession that the CIO should have a chance to explain its support of the Marshall Plan to the WFTU. Finally, at Rome, the federation's executive committee voted to end attacks on ERP, rather than see the British units of WFTU take a walk. All in all, a telling battle in the cold war won by James B. Carey!

Help Flood Victims

A joint committee to aid CIO members who suffered loss of their belongings in the flood in Vanport, Ore., has been set up by the Oregon CIO Council, the Portland CIO, the CIO regional office and various International unions. Herbert McCreedy, named as CIO relief director, has his office in the Myler Bldg., Portland.

CIO unions in the area have petitioned Congress to provide permanent housing facilities, medical attention, jobs and compensation for the flood victims, and to undertake a flood control program to prevent disastrous floods in the future.

Women Pioneer

"So cruelly were they exploited that one of the first strikes which took place in this country, in an attempt to better conditions, was by women working in the needle trades.

"The next move that women of this nation should make is to organize for equal pay for performing the same work as men. There is no such thing as real equality between the sexes unless there is economic equality.

"It was only by the most intensive agitation that women secured political equality. They must now engage in the same tactics to secure economic equality."

A Year of T-H Shows Growing Wreckage of Collective Bargaining

By ARTHUR J. GOLDBERG
CIO General Counsel

THE Taft-Hartley Act, which became law a year ago this week, has completely altered the course of labor relations in this country.

In order intelligently to survey the effects of this law we must do more than look at the strike picture or the wage-profit relationship.

We cannot ignore the mutual hostility between labor and management which this Act has bred.

We cannot ignore the chaos and resentment at the plant level which this Act has brought into being.

We cannot ignore the fact that this Act has strengthened the hands of the most anti-labor portion of American industry in its determination to destroy labor organizations and to lay the basis for the revival of an open-shop industrial America.

Everywhere in the industrial scene today there is eloquent testimony to this strengthened determination. It may be found in the unprecedented accumulation of unresolved grievances in the plants. It may be found in the provocations and arrogance of plant managements who now feel that their long-cherished hopes of destroying the unions of their workers may be easily realized. It may be found in the growing number of established collective bargaining relationships which have been destroyed by employers. It may be found in the startling statistics relating to the use of the labor injunction.

Moreover, the anti-labor role of the federal government made necessary by the T-H Act has stimulated similar activities on the state level. The anti-labor aspects of the T-H Act have set in motion other forms of repression on local levels.

It is not merely the Federal courts who are engaging in a flood of injunctions. In the state courts as well we find that the issuance of anti-labor injunctions limiting and frequently outlawing all picketing is now becoming routine under the stimulus of the T-H. We find on the state level an increasing resort to troops and state police for strike-breaking purposes and a growing tendency to use many of the instrumentalities of government to repress the organizational activities of working people and to break strikes.

It is not possible at this time to present a balanced picture of the over-all impact of the Act.

The period of time which has elapsed since the passage of the Act is not sufficient to supply the basis for representative experience. Employers have deliberately refrained from exploiting to the full the Act's anti-union potentialities — partially out of a fear of creating too widespread an awareness of the Act's true implications, and partially because industry has had the most prosperous profit period ever enjoyed in peacetime. The enormous profits of industry and the perspective of a continuing harvest of profits have made it unwise to use the Act to its fullest potentialities against labor organizations.

The Act already has had a significant impact in preventing the closing of the gap between workers' living costs and earnings. It has made it easier for American industry to deny wage increases. The true impact of the law will make itself felt in its increasing use to stifle the growing protest over the wage-price-profit relationship.

IT would be extremely dangerous to attribute virtues to the law in direct proportion to its success in repressing strikes. The fact that a law forces individuals to work against their will, to take "no" for an answer to a reasonable wage demand, is hardly something in its favor.

The claim has ben made that the Act has reduced strikes. This claim is made primarily upon the basis of a comparison between the first and last parts of 1947, in disregard of the fact that in the latter part of every year since 1927 (with the exception of 1940) the strike figures declined with reference to the figures in the first part of the year.

Strike figures are now available for the first quarter of 1948, and a comparison with the first quarter of 1947 is significant. In the first quarter of 1947 there were 3,670,000 man-days of idleness as the result of work stoppages. During a comparable period in 1948 there were 7,730,000 man-days of idleness because of work stoppages. During these comparable periods, one prior to and one subsequent to the T-H Act, man-days of idleness doubled.

A most significant index of the efficacy of a law in promoting industrial peace is its effect upon organizational strikes, upon strikes for union recognition, and for bargaining rights. Obviously unless a law provides a substitute for economic warfare by promoting organization and collective bargaining, it has failed in a most fundamental way.

YET there are increasing signs that this failure must be laid at the door of the T-H Act. During the first six weeks of 1947 (before T-H was in effect) 13.6% of all stoppages was attributable to organizational strikes. During the second six months of 1947 the percentage of organizational strikes rose to 17.2% of all strikes.

Organizational strikes have been on the increase this year. A larger number of employers are using the Act as a pretext for repudiating the unions in their plants and evading the collective bargaining obligation.

The inequality of bargaining power between employer and employe, the host of anti-union pressures which employers are in a position to generate in most American communities, the willingness of state and municipal governmental agencies to adopt employer theories of the merits of a labor dispute, all serve to intensify the one-sided character of the Act.

This can be most readily seen in connection with charges of unfair labor practices against unions. There are few labor disputes today in which some employer cannot find a basis or a claimed basis for invoking the intervention of the Federal government under the T-H Act.

Upon the filing of a charge a swarm of investigators descends upon the locale of the labor dispute. The very fact of investigation is used by employers to impair the morale of the strikers and to break a strike. To the employe the Federal government has taken sides.

If and when a complaint issues, another blow is dealt the strike and its support. In an appropriate case, of course, the employer can induce the NLRB General Counsel to obtain an injunction prior to the issuance of the complaint. And even when a complaint issues, an injunction may still be forthcoming.

If no injunction issues and only a complaint is issued, the employer promptly uses the complaint to misrepresent the facts and to set in motion other forms of pressure. These include local injunctions and widespread discharges of strikers who may or may not be covered by the allegations of the complaint. Now, it may be that ultimately the NLRB Trial Examiner will rule in favor of the union and dismiss the complaint, as a number of them have done. By this time the damage is done.

It is possible that an injunction obtained by the General Counsel against picketing or even against the strike itself for an indefinite period of time will be set aside by a ruling of the Board dismissing the complaint. But here, too, the damage is done, for no strike can survive these types of pressures. Moreover, the injunction obtained by the General Counsel is proof against appeal, for by the time the appeal can be prepared by the union the issues have become moot.

Unequal 'Equality'

Section 8 (b) (1) (A) of the Act makes it an unfair labor practice for a labor organization or its agents to restrain or coerce employes in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them under the Act. This section of the Act became law in the face of repeated warnings by labor experts who had opposed similar "equalizing" amendments in the past on the ground that this provision would be used as a dragnet device to destroy or hamper the exercise of labor's legitimate rights.

Before the Act was passed this section was amended to limit its scope.

The worst fears of the opponents of the section have been realized. In cases of so-called "union coercion" on the picketline, the Act has been used in situations in which, if misconduct did in fact occur, obviously appropriate forums would be the local courts and law enforcement agencies.

This provision has had the effect which was freely predicted by labor of imposing upon unions not merely a double liability but a triple liability. The same course of conduct which would give rise to local police action is now being used to ground state court injunction and federal cease and desist orders. Moreover, in proceeding against these so-called union unfair labor practices new standards of liability are being improvised by the Board's agents which are reminiscent of those resorted to during the most anti-labor periods in our history.

Employer sponsors of charges of coercion against unions are seldom interested in obtaining punishment of particular individuals for illegal misconduct. They are far more interested in bringing to bear the force and power of a Federal official—namely, the General Counsel of the Labor Board — for strike-breaking purposes. They know that in such a forum a far lower standard of proof is required than in an ordinary criminal or equity case, and that the General Counsel will be satisfied with theories of agency as a basis for imputing liability to the union which enlarge traditional concepts of agency as known to the law.

Repeal It!

In its zeal to undermine the protections of labor organizations, Congress has created an administrative monstrosity. The cure for the situation which has been created is not labor courts—courts, whatever their virtues, have never distinguished themselves for speed—nor is the cure an elimination of this or that type of election requirement such as the union authorization election.

The cure is rather the revival of a Federal policy which serves to encourage self-organization, to foster speedy industrial elections. In short, the cure is the repeal of the T-H Act.

Standards Lowered

The Taft-Hartley Act has placed in the hands of employers new instruments of power for breaking strikes.

Nobody familiar with the industrial scene can deny that these instruments have been used to force workers to accept lower living standards.

Rule By Injunction

In some cases the NLRB General Counsel has obtained injunctions restraining acts which were held not to be illegal.

Not only has the doctrine of government-by-injunction been revived, but it has been revived in such form as to be as oppressive as possible in its impact upon unions.

plete impunity under the statute. The employer's right of free speech has all but devoured the employes' right of free choice.

The experience of unions as respondents under the Act serves as more than a significant contrast to the Board's treatment of employers. Fundamentally, the double standard which the cases on coercion spell out means that the right to join a union has fallen victim to the right not to join a union and the right to organize is rapidly being supplanted as an object of Federal solicitude and protection by a "yellow-dog" principle under which employer attacks on the fundamental rights to form labor organizations and engage in concerted activities are endowed with Federal sanctions.

Liability

It is important to take under consideration parallel interpretations of the T-H Act dealing with problems of agency and the responsibility of unions for alleged illegal acts.

The need for the Norris-LaGuardia Act arose out of the practice of federal courts to impose as a theory of responsibility in labor cases the "illegal purpose" doctrine which applied the law of conspiracy to strikes and other union activities—that is, the union and each of its members were held responsible or liable for each and every act of their associates on strike.

The Senate Report dealing with this provision of the Norris-LaGuardia Act points out that "it has often occurred that employers themselves have secured the services of detectives, who, under the guise of labor men, have gained admission into labor unions. When this happens these detectives are usually doing everything within their power to incite employes who are on strike to commit acts of violence, and such detectives, contrary to the definite instructions of labor union leaders, sometimes commit unlawful acts for the considered and only purpose of laying the foundation for injunctive process, for bringing discredit upon the union, and making its officers and members liable for damages."

Apart from the protections of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, it is accepted legal doctrine that in order to hold a union liable for a wrongful act of a member acting on its behalf it must be shown that either the union authorized or ratified the wrongful act or the physical movements of the member were subject to the control of the union.

It was presumably the purpose of the agency provision of the T-H Act to impose common law rules of agency upon both employers and unions to deprive unions of the important protections of the Norris-LaGuardia Act. We believe that this amendment of the Act is unsound, unfair to unions and unrealistic.

In the Mine Workers injunction case, decided last April 19, Judge Goldsborough announced what he termed a novel principle of liability that "a union that is functioning must be held responsible for the mass action of its members." Under Judge Goldsborough's ruling all forms of concerted activities are attributable to the union

Taft-Hartley Injunction Halts Seamen's Strike; Fact Finders Blame Act

While longshoremen in food-scarce London freely walked off their jobs to obtain what they considered due them, 100,000 maritime workers in this country were forced by federal restraining orders to ignore their strike deadline and continue working.

Immediately upon issuance of the 10-day restraining order, the seven maritime unions—five CIO, one independent and one AFL—agreed to obey the injunction and then set a new strike date, June 24, at 10 a. m. This is the time at which the injunction expires. The strike was originally set for June 16, expiration date of the contracts.

Issuance of the temporary injunctions followed receipt by President Truman of his fact-finding board's report, hurriedly drawn up after only two days of hearings on the complicated disputes. The report ended with a veiled recommendation for an injunction, saying:

"And if the status quo can be continued, real and sincere collective bargaining may finally avoid the disruption."

A hearing to determine whether the restraining order is to be supplanted by an 80-day injunction was set for June 21.

NMU Pres. Joseph Curran said that if an injunction was granted at that time, his union would not defy "even if we do think the law favors the employers."

The report verified many of the unions' previous contentions.

- It pointed out that there had been no collective real bargaining in the industry, even though contract talks began in April.
- It agreed that the Taft-Hartley Act was largely to blame for the dispute, since employers were using it as a means of weakening the union by contending the hiring hall violates the anti-closed shop provision of the T-H Act.
- It pointed to the many advantages of the hiring hall.
- It recognized the truth of the unions' charge that the employers, buttressed by their anticipation of an injunction against a strike and by the President's appointment of a fact-finding board, felt no necessity for bargaining with the unions. The board said this prospect had "alleviated for the time being the pressure for settlement which a threatened strike would otherwise impose."
- It verified the unions' claim that the companies had refused to discuss the union's wage and working conditions proposals, focussing instead only on the hiring hall.

Involved in the situation are the five CIO maritime unions—Natl. Maritime Union, Longshoremen & Warehousemen, Marine Engineers Beneficial Association, Marine Cooks & Stewards and the American Radio Association — the independent Pacific Coast Marine Firemen, Oilers, Watertenders & Wipers and the AFL Electrical Brotherhood.

All seven unions are parties to an agreement to walk out and remain out together until settlement is reached in each union.

Largest of these are the ILWU with 20,000 members on the West Coast and the NMU with 40,000 seamen on the East and Gulf Coasts. Although the problems in each of these unions differ, settlement with the two largest is expected to set a pattern.

You Never Knew Whether You Had a Job or Not

By GLORIA CAPLAN

THE newspapers, the ship owners, the waterfront employers and the NLRB are doing a lot of talking about the "hiring hall" these days.

And 100,000 longshoremen and seamen are doing a lot of reminiscing.

To really understand what they're reminiscing about, you have to pretend a little bit—pretend you're a longshoreman for a while back in 1933.

* * *

Back in 1933 there was no hiring hall. You got your job—if you got one—through the "shape-up." That's something you don't forget easily.

When you woke up in the morning, you never knew whether you had a job or not. You went down to the pier early to make the first shape-up at 7:55 a. m.

But which pier should you go to? There's no central agency to tell you where or when a ship is coming in. You depend on a rumor or your own hunch. Or—and this is just about as good a way as any — you just say "eeny-meenie-minie-moe."

So you join your fellow workers in a semi-circle near the pier. You're in life-or-death competition with each of them. Perhaps the hiring foreman, standing there in the middle of the semi-circle, will pick you; perhaps he won't. Chances are you haven't worked for weeks and will be passed up again today. The fellow next to you has been working steadily. He'll be picked again today. He "greased the right palm"; you didn't.

AND that starts a long, bitter chain of memories.

To you the shape-up was synonymous with graft and racketeering. Your security lay in "kicking back" part of your meager earnings to the hiring foremen, sometimes to some petty union official who stood alongside the foremen to make sure the "right men" were hired.

But there were other variations. Operators of some bars or barber shops, frequented by stevedores, were "in the know." They could help or injure your chances of getting a job. You patronized them. If they operated a gambling racket, you played along, or else. The opportunities for corruption were endless, and men competing for the lucrative "boss" spots have been killed in the struggle for those spots.

In 1933 Boris Stern made a study of longshore labor conditions for the U. S. Dept. of Labor. He found "conditions of employment in the industry . . . more chaotic than ever" and earnings of longshoremen, even among the most favorably situated, lower than in the 1927-29 period.

Said Stern: "In normal times, only a small part of this supply (of longshoremen) is earning what may be considered a decent wage. Probably a larger proportion is earning a subsistence wage, i.e. just about enough to make ends meet on a comparatively low standard of living. The balance is always on the brink of starvation and depends largely on outside support, chiefly charity." About 50% were on relief rolls, he said.

As a longshoreman you remember that only too well.

Well, you didn't get hired at that 7:55 shape-up. Better luck, maybe, at the 12:55 shape-up. There's a rumor a ship's coming in at another pier; you'll try your luck there. In the meantime, you have several hours to kill. You hang around a saloon until it's time to go.

And if you missed out at the 12:55 p.m. shape-up, there's still another at 6:55 p.m.; you hang around some more.

* * *

There was a long and bloody strike in 1934. The West Coast longshoremen threw off the oppressive shape-up and substituted the hiring hall. The East Coast seamen were soon able to do likewise. In place of the shape-up here's what they got and still have today. Let's take the NMU seamen this time. There are variations in the operation of the hall, but the principles remain the same.

The NMU hiring hall is operated entirely by the union. (It is jointly operated on the West Coast.) Priority is given to union members, but if there are insufficient union men to satisfy the employer's needs, non-union seamen may be employed. They cannot be compelled to join the union. Nor can the union compel an employer to discharge an employe. If an employe is unacceptable to the employer "for cause", he may demand a replacement of the dispatcher, who will send him another instead.

Testifying before the Senate Labor Committee on the proposed Taft-Hartley bill last year, NMU Pres. Joseph Curran described the attitude toward the hiring hall this way:

"For seamen the union hiring hall is the sole guarantee against discrimination, against blacklisting, and against the destruction of their trade-unions. . . . Without it, chaos and demoralization in the industry are the inevitable consequences, as they were during the period between 1921 and 1934."

* * *

Pretending again, you're an East Coast seaman in 1948 this time.

You've just come into port. If you want to ship out again soon, you head right up to the union hiring hall, where you "throw in" your card. This amounts to your application for a job, and the time it was "thrown in" is noted on it.

The dispatcher, in charge of hiring, is a union man. There's no point in trying to bribe him. The system doesn't permit it even if he were willing. A system of rotation is in effect—you call it "first in, first out"—which automatically eliminates favoritism or discrimination.

Your name goes on the hiring register. It is called in the order in which it was "thrown in." If you decide not to take the job when it comes up, your name goes to the bottom of the register and must wait its its turn again. Special provisions are made for sickness, legitimate leaves of absence or vacations.

You know you have a job when your turn comes. And you don't have to degrade yourself to get it.

* * *

Now the employers have begun another drive against the hiring hall, this time using the Taft-Hartley Act as an excuse. On their side is NLRB General Counsel Robert N. Denham, who recently ruled the hiring hall illegal in a Great Lakes case.

To their arguments the union replies:

In the maritime industries, jobs are of short duration. A sea voyage may only last a month. Longshoremen, rotating from one employer to another, may change jobs more frequently than that.

The T-H provision for the union shop, one of the proposals made by the steamship owners, would therefore affect almost none of the employes.

Neither the ILWU nor the NMU operates what amounts to a closed shop. Although the NMU contract permits union members to receive preference in getting jobs, non-union personnel are hired in the absence of available members, and these cannot be forced to join the union. The ILWU agreement makes no mention of union preference.

But what irritates the unions most is that the employers did not wait for a court decision on whether the hiring hall is illegal or not. They simply insisted on "altering" it.

Until the courts rule on this point, CIO maritime workers are prepared to fight tooth and nail for their hiring hall.

They remember life without it all too well.

Industrial Union Councils:

Their Rights Have Not Been Violated By CIO

By JOHN BROPHY

CIO Director of Industrial Union Councils

SINCE the CIO Executive Board decided to oppose the third party in 1948, the overwhelming majority of CIO industrial union councils voted to back this policy.

The same councils also approved the CIO's stand in favor of the Marshall Plan.

The executive board's decision, arrived at in January, caused considerable discussion in some circles over the question of "autonomy." The national CIO was accused of being undemocratic; I was called a "dictator."

Such charges are, of course, ridiculous, as the following will prove.

Under the CIO's constitution, our annual conventions are the final authority on all policy questions. The conventions are made up, of course, of democratically elected delegates sent by the various international unions and IUC's which make up CIO. The word of these delegates is law for CIO until changed at a later convention.

The executive board and officers, and the various National CIO committees, have the responsibility of carrying out these policies and applying them to particular situations as they arise. That was what happened when the National Board and PAC issued their January statements against a third party in 1948.

Pres. Philip Murray, PAC Director Jack Kroll and I several times after that pointed out the obligation of Councils to follow CIO policy when spelled out by these democratic processes. It was our obligation, as officers of the CIO, to get these policies carried out.

DURING the executive board's discussion of the third party question, Pres. Murray gave a sharp and clear definition of just what is "autonomous" in CIO and what isn't.

He explained that as members of this federation of internationals, our affiliated unions are autonomous. Their obligation to follow CIO policy is not a legal one—it is moral.

But, explained Murray, we get a completely different picture when we come to IUC's. Industrial union councils are chartered by the national CIO—they are creatures of CIO. They have a duty—a duty outlined explicitly in our constitution and IUC rules—to support and carry out CIO policy with positive action whenever they are called upon to do so.

Some people felt that when we insisted that our Councils should support the CIO's position against a third party in 1948 we were infringing upon the autonomy of our Councils. This was held to be a violation of democratic principles.

The criticism overlooked the fact that the democratic policy-making bodies of the CIO are its convention, its board and its committees, each acting within its proper field. To take the position that decisions made by these agencies could be voted or countermanded by subordinate bodies like the Councils would lead to a breakdown of all concerted action. Two of the fundamental principles of unionism are majority decision and concerted action thereafter to carry out such decisions.

MUST we look on our Councils, then, as administrative agencies in the sense that our regional directors are administrative officials, receiving their instructions only from the National office?

Not at all, because our Councils also have conventions or delegate meetings, and their officers are given instructions by these conventions or meetings. The truth is that our councils do have a great deal of autonomy, but not without certain boundaries. Perhaps the best way to explain this is to say that the Councils have a limited autonomy.

What sort of limitations are placed upon the autonomy of our Councils?

I am planning to answer that question in a series of short articles in the CIO News, because in reality very few limitations have ever been placed on the activities and decisions of our councils, and I hope that this will always be the case.

Our Councils should be centers of honest, democratic analysis of CIO policy and constructive criticism, and at the same time they should be a strong arm of the National CIO and its affiliated unions, which can be relied upon to go to bat for our policies, particularly in times of crisis, the very times when such help is most needed.

I shall go over the various fields of Council activity in succeeding articles and show how the principles I have outlined apply in each case.

O Tempora, O Mores!

Nat Ganley is an admitted member of the Communist Party. CIO has declared a policy of opposition to a third party in 1948. Ganley is one of the most ardent supporters of Henry A. Wallace's third party in Michigan and has frequently denounced the national CIO stand as "dictation" and has declared that it is not binding, either legally or morally.

In 1945, reports the Wage Earner, Ganley rose to his feet when the Detroit PAC was debating indorsement of Victor Reuther as a candidate for the Board of Education. Cried Ganley:

"Support of Reuther is a violation of the no-strike pledge . . . imagine having our children educated by someone who violates CIO policy . . . I want the children in our schools to get nothing but CIO policy . . . Reuther is anti-CIO." (Victor Reuther has been an active CIO leader for years.)

CIO Counsel Reviews First Year Under Taft-Hartley Act

whether authorized or not, whether repudiated by the union or not, and whether ratified by the union or not.

The T-H Act contains provisions for three types of injunctions. Under Section 10 (j) the Board has discretionary power upon the issuance of a complaint to apply for temporary relief or a restraining order. This relief may be sought both against employers and against unions, although up until the present it has been used almost exclusively against labor organizations.

UNDER Section 10 (1) the Board is required, where reasonable cause exists to believe that a charge is true and that a complaint should issue, to petition a Federal Court for injunctive relief. This provision is directed exclusively against unions and implements the unfair labor practice provisions dealing with secondary boycott and related matters.

Under these injunctive provisions, the Board is empowered to obtain relief pending the administrative disposition of the controversy. This means that the controversy may be settled on the employer's terms by an injunction for a prolonged and indefinite period, This also means that in every situation in which an employer can induce the Board or its General Counsel to obtain an injunction he has, for all practical purposes, secured a legal shortcut for the attainment of his ends. It would be a hardy union indeed which could resume a controversy with an employer after the long process which might give rise to a Labor Board order in its favor.

In its applications for injunctions, both under Section 10 (j) and Section 10 (1) of the Act, the Board through its General Counsel has refused to permit the labor organizations involved to defend themselves. And the Board through its General Counsel insisted that the only factual question is whether, in the case of Section 10 (1), the Board's agent has reasonable cause to believe that the charge is true and that a complaint should issue, and, in the case of Section 10 (j), it is probable that the charges and complaint are supportable.

The injunctive provisions of the law have been invoked almost exclusively against unions. From August 22, 1947, through March, 1948, the Board petitioned for injunctions in 19 cases. In all of these cases but one the injunctions were sought against unions.

The Board has petitioned for injunctions under its discretionary powers in five of these 19 cases and four of them have been against unions.

There is, of course, a third type of statutory injunction. This is provided for in Section 206 of the Act, the so-called "national emergency" injunction. It authorizes the Attorney General to obtain an injunction to forestall a strike endangering the public health or safety. It has been used in the Mine Workers' and the Atomic Energy Workers' disputes. The CIO has already put itself on record as vigorously opposed to this provision, which authorizes the government to intervene in a labor dispute on the side of the employer and to strip an employe of the right to obtain adequate living standards.

THIS provision of the law makes second-class citizens of the workers in our essential industries precisely because they are so important to our economy.

The Act has been responsible for widespread issuance of injunctions on both the state and the federal level at the instance of private employers. The legislative history of the Act makes it clear that it was not the intention to give to employers new grounds for obtaining injunctions but the plain fact is that both directly and indirectly the T-H Act has produced an ever increasing number of injunctions obtained at the instance of private employers.

One of the most shocking consequences of the law is the manner in which it has stimulated a wide variety of lawless acts and attitudes on the part of state and municipal authorities.

The actions of state executives in summoning the state police upon the demand of employer interests, the viciousnesss of many law enforcement agencies such as the Tennessee state police and the Kansas City police in manhandling strikers, the readiness of state court judges to issue injunctions banning pickets—all of these sinister developments are definitely related to the Taft-Hartley Act and its impact upon American labor relations.

One of the most indefensible aspects of the T-H Act is the provision for damage suits in Federal Courts in case of violation of labor agreements.

Apologists for this measure have sought to minimize its destructive effect by insisting that it has been invoked with relative rarity. But suits totaling at least $5,000,000 have been brought against both AFL and CIO unions, and there are increasing signs that the damage suit has received growing emphasis by anti-labor employers.

Because damage suits pose such a tremendous threat to the very existence of a labor organization, they embitter industrial relations. Where a strike is accompanied by a damage suit, as is not infrequently the case, the striking union is forced to prolong its contest with the employer until adequate provision is made for the settlement of the damage suit.

Today the NLRB's backlog of cases is twice as large as it has ever been before. A number of factors have contributed to this. The first of course is the great variety of new proceedings authorized under the T-H Act. (There are no less than six different types of elections provided for under the Act.)

In addition, the Board's backlog has swollen because the Board itself has indiscriminately assumed jurisdiction in areas from which it formerly remained aloof. Another contributing cause of the backlog is the incentives which the new Act offers to employers to insist upon elections, and the Board's increasing failure to make it clear that a certification is not necessary for bargaining.

State Council To Oppose Pressman's Bid

THE New York State CIO Council and the New York State PAC have announced they will oppose the candidacy of Lee Pressman, former CIO general counsel, for Congress.

Pressman last week announced he would be the American Labor Party candidate in the 14th District, Brooklyn. The Regional PAC has been designated as CIO's official political action group for New York. Louis Hollander, president of the New York State CIO, said the council would also oppose O. John Rogge, former U. S. assistant attorney general, who is reported about to announce for ALP nomination.

"We shall be as much concerned with where a man stands on the European Recovery Plan as with his attitude toward the Taft-Hartley Law, the fight against inflation and all the pressing problems of the home front," Hollander said. The ALP is opposed to ERP. Pressman is an active supporter of Henry A. Wallace, who is opposed by CIO.

The 14th is now represented in Congress by Rep. Abraham J. Multer (D.), who was elected at a special election last fall to succeed Rep. Leo Rayfiel (D.), who resigned to become a judge.

Leaves Wallace; Sticks With TWU

AFTER a conference with CIO Transport Workers' Pres. Michael Quill, John Cassidy, international TWU representative for Omaha, resigned as chairman of the Nebraska for Wallace Committee.

Quill, who also conferred with Reg. CIO Dir. Frank Cronin, TWU Local 223 Pres. R. A. Hayes and TWU Local 228 Pres. J. T. Miller, asked Cassidy whether he wished to remain as TWU representative, or whether he wished to drop that and keep the Wallace post.

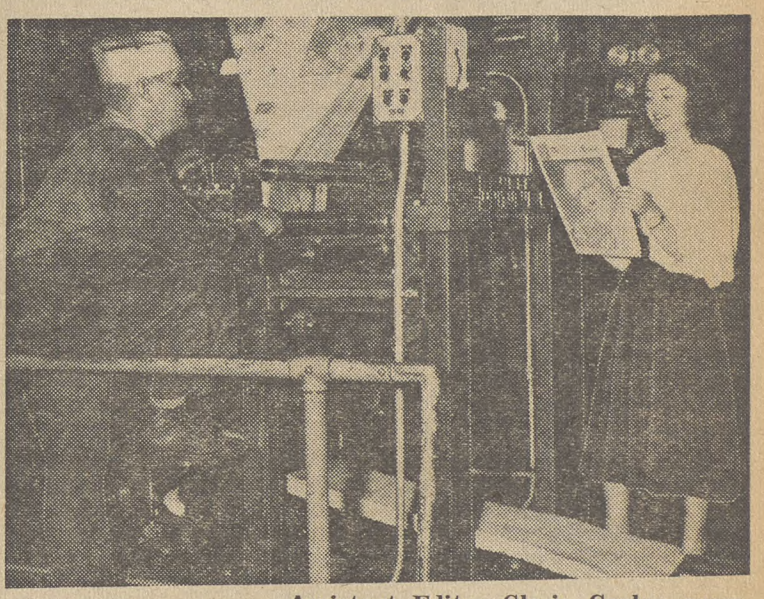
CIO News Goes To Press

PLANNING: It takes a heap of planning to select and fit into a 12-page paper the stream of information that comes into the CIO News office. Editor Allan L. Swim (right) and Assistant Publicity Director Henry C. Fleisher lay out a page "dummy," while Swim's secretary, Kathryn Vrataric, takes a phone call.

HARD AT IT: Assistant Editor Hollace Ransdell, seated, turns out a story, while Mary Ference of the office staff files a picture. Hollace Ransdell is the dean—in point of service—of the staff.

A BIG JOB: Keeping the subscription list of the paper up to date requires constant application. Marguerite O'Connor of the office staff is filing subscription cards as Business Manager Richard E. Bauer supervises the job. (Below) Mary Yurcic, left, and Kathy Capps of the office staff are checking some of the various editions of the CIO News. Besides the national edition, there are several papers issued for international unions and CIO Councils.

MAKE UP: No matter how well the paper is planned there are always last-minute developments that upset the apple cart. Some stories must be cut and others must be eliminated to make room for last-minute news. Here Assistant Editors Arthur Riordan (center) and Fred Ross are telling Clyde Hampton, assistant composing room foreman at Mercury Press, what stories to put into the paper.



FINAL PRODUCT: Assistant Editor Gloria Caplan examines the paper while Claude Kidwell, assistant press room foreman, stands ready to stop the press if she finds any major errors. As soon as one edition is off the press, the CIO News staff starts preparing the next one from information furnished by two labor press services, a wire service, international unions and Newspaper Guildsmen throughout the country.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

Reg. Dir. Irwin L. DeShetler, Los Angeles, Calif., reports victories in the following elections: Perfecto Products, Los Angeles, UAW-CIO 26, no union 17; UAW Intl. Rep. Donald Garriga was in charge. Studebaker Plant (office workers), Los Angeles, UAW-CIO won by a small margin, UAW Intl. Rep. Stanford Douglas was in charge. O'Rossen of California, Los Angeles, ACWA-CIO 29, ILGWU-AFL 4, Jerome Posner, Manager, Joint Board, ACWA-CIO, was in charge.

In addition to the representation elections won by the UAW-CIO that union scored the following union security election victories in the Southern California area: Willard Battery, yes 119, no 7; California Spring, yes 98, no 4; Laher Spring, yes 15, no 1; American Foundry, yes 54, no 3; Diamond Precision, yes 19, no 6; Globe Union, yes 38, no 4; National Automotive Fibres, yes 360, no 9; Solar Battery, yes 47, no 4; Hollister, yes 60, no 15; Cambria Spring, yes 22, no 1. Manuel Garriga, Bus. Agent of Local 509, UAW-CIO, was in charge. All the UAW-CIO representation and union security victories were reported to Director DeShetler by Noah N. Tauscher, Assistant Director, UWA-CIO.

Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone, New Haven, Conn., reports CIO victories in two union shop elections: New Haven Quilt & Pad Co., PJNWU Local Union 462, 19 to 8 against. Thirty people were eligible to vote.

Armstrong Rubber Co., West Haven, United Rubber Workers, Local 93, for 701, 8 against and 6 void. 785 people were eligible to vote.

Field Rep. Gobel F. Cravens, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, reports a CIO victory in a union shop election at the Fruehauf Trailer Co., Oklahoma City, UAW-CIO, 10 for, 1 against, with 13 eligible.

Robert J. Davidson, Area Director, UPA-CIO, Cincinnati, Ohio, reports a union shop election at the Gebhardt Folding Box Company, Local 1239 UPA-CIO, Dayton, 62 yes, 2 no.

Thomas J. Gallagher, Dir. of Org., IUM&SWA-CIO, reports CIO victories in the following union shop elections: Ceramics Plant, Brighton, Pa., Local 277, PMC, for 47, 1 against; Michael J. Walsh Boiler Scaling Co., New Orleans, La., Local 29, for 58, 8 against; Drake Thompson & Co., New Orleans, Local 29, for 36, 0 against; Marine Welding, Scaling & Sales Co., New Orleans, Local 29, for 34, 2 against.

Pres. Harry Sayre, of the United Paperworkers, advises they defeated an AFL raid on Local 697, Halifax Paper Co., Roanoke Rapids, N. C., by a vote of 240 to 123. UPA Area Dir. Harry Scott, Rep. Robert Turner, CIO State Director Bill Smith and Rep. Toby Mendes assisted in the campaign.

In addition to the representation elections won by the CIO Paperworkers, that union scored the following union shop election victories:

American Coating Mills, Elkhardt, Ind., yes 473, no 6; International Paper Co., Chicago, Ill., yes 172, no 17; Fort Wayen Corrugated Paper Co., Chicago, Ill., yes 113, no 2; Shelby Craftco Co., Chicago, Ill., yes 66, no 12; Tell City Furniture Co., Tell City, Ind., yes 458, no 87; Tell City Desk Co., Tell City Ind., yes 128, no 16.

Field Rep. James T. O'Reilly, Optical & Instrument Workers Organizing Committee-CIO, reports the following election at the Roehlin Engraving Co., Rochester, N. Y., O&IWOC-CIO 26, no union 12. Although Rep. O'Reilly attended several meetings with this group and petitioned for the election, the major credit for this organization should be given to CIO Sub-Regional Dir. John Strobel.

Martin Gerber, Dir., Region 9, UAW-CIO, New York, N. Y., advises that in an NLRB election conducted among the employes of the All-Lite Metal Window Co., Bristol, Pa., the results were UAW-CIO 14, no union 3. The organizational drive was directed by Competitive Shop Rep. Lawrence McNally and a committee of Local Union 130.

Paul E. Miley, Dir. Region 2, UAW-CIO, Cleveland, Ohio, advises that in an NLRB election conducted among the employes of the United Screw and Bolt Plant, Cleveland, the results were UAW-CIO 192, no Union 9. Miley stated that it was one of the most impressive victories of recent months and shows that there is a decided trend toward further industrial organization despite the all-out attack of big business and the reactionaries of the nation to throttle the unions. Stanley Kwiat, Intl. Rep., conducted the organizational campaign.

A big no-union vote at the American Tobacco Co., Charleston, S. C., was interpreted by the CIO Food, Tobacco Workers as a victory for the CIO union. Barred from the NLRB ballot because it has not signed Taft-Hartley affidavits, FTA campaigned for a no-union vote. Result was 704 for no union; 474 for the AFL Tobacco Workers. FTA has held bargaining rights with the company for four years.

CIO State Dir. William Smith, Charlotte, N. C., reports that in an NLRB election conducted among the employes of the Armour Fertilizer Co., Greensboro, the results were RWDSU-CIO 57, no union 2.

I attended and addressed the United Transport Service Employes of America Convention on Tuesday, June 15, Chicago, Illinois. It was attended by the largest delegation in the history of the union. The union owns its own building, which is a credit to the organization. The delegates were in all-out support for CIO policies and are proud they are members of the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

Rubber Asks Defeat Of 'Subversive' Bill

Defeat of the Mundt-Nixon bill was asked last week by the CIO Rubber Workers' executive board.

In a letter sent to Senators, the union's Genl. Secy.-Treas., Chas. E. Lanning, said:

"The Board . . . feels that such a measure was not in the first place conceived in the interest of the general welfare of the great people but will in fact prove itself to be designed as the second step toward fascism in America, (the Taft-Hartley Act being the first step in this direction).

"Next and equally important are the implications of this proposed bill which imply that among the tens of millions of individuals and their families, who so recently sacrificed through blood, sweat and tears to conquer an enemy which enemy sought to destroy our form of government, and there are untold numbers who now seek to destroy that Government.

"The Board wishes to make it clear at this point that it calls upon the law enforcement agencies of the land to seek out and prosecute those guilty of treason against the Nation, if there be such, whether such are found among those who seek to destroy our democracy and its institutions by force or those who attempt to do so by sneak attack under the protection of well-designed and highly camouflaged attempts at legislation."

Fire Bombs Hurled At Zusman's Home

Crude fire bombs and a threatening note were hurled last week onto the porch of the house in Hollywood where Morris Zusman, state director of the California CIO Poltical Action Committee, lives with his son-in-law's family. No damage was done.

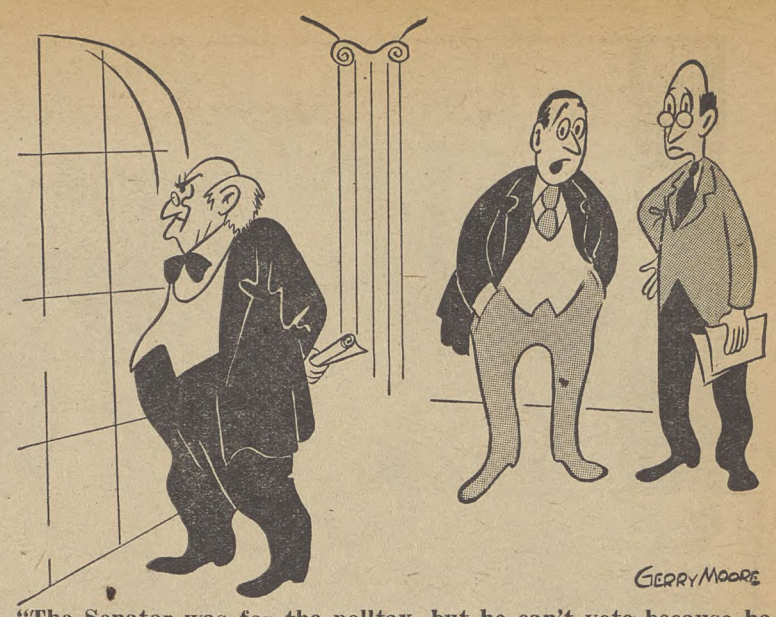
Zusman said he thought the deed was the work of juveniles and did not have anything to do with rival labor factions. He was not home when the fire bombs landed on the porch with a warning crudely lettered on cardboard: "Get out of town. Only two more weeks to go."

It was the second time fire bombs were thrown at the house. The previous week pieces of wood covered with gasoline-soaked rags were hurled on the porch and the Fire Department was called to put out the blaze.

Zusman resigned last February from the presidency of the California CIO Council in protest against the Council's failure to back the National CIO political policy opposing the third party. Later he was appointed State director of PAC by National PAC Director Jack Kroll.

Essay Contest

A scholarship to Fisk University's Race Relations Institute July 3-10 in Nashville, Tenn., will be given to the winner of an essay contest sponsored by the New Jersey CIO Council on the subject of how to promote civil rights in the state.



"The Senator was for the polltax, but he can't vote because he forgot to pay it."

Swedish Leader: Negroes' Fight For Equality in U. S. Tradition

THE fight for civil liberties was in the news this way recently:

- The Senate Judiciary Committee approved an anti-lynching bill, which was an idle gesture, because the GOP leadership wouldn't have taken the chance of having a filibuster by Southern Democrats interfere with plans for adjournment.

- Dr. Gunnar Myrdal, Swedish statesman, addressing the Committee of 100, declared the Negro's struggle for equality is facilitated not only by the Constitution and the laws of the land, but also by the "glorious American ideals of democracy, liberty and equality."

The Committee of 100 is the fund-raising organization for the Legal Defense and Educational Fund of the Natl. Association for the Advancement of the Colored People. Murdal, who is author of "An American Dilemma," shared the platform with Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, PM Publisher Bartley Crum, Walter White and Ray Wilkins.

Mrs. Roosevelt declared: "Discrimination against Negroes hurts our leadership in world affairs more than any other aspect of American life."

Randolph: A poll of Negro college students showed that there is wide support for the proposal of A. Philip Randolph that Negroes boycott the armed forces unless Jim Crowism is eliminated.

Baptists: The Northern Baptist Convention urged the end of segregation and discrimination in education. It also indorsed Pres. Truman's civil rights program.

Education: Mrs. Ada Lois Sipuel Fischer, who is undertaking a legal battle to force the Univ. of Oklahoma to admit her to its law school, received an invitation to study in Norway.

The Natl. Union of Norwegian Students asked her to study law at the Univ. of Oslo. "We want to help any student in the world who is persecuted because of racial discrimination," the union wrote her.

NAACP: will hold its 39th annual conference this week at Kansas City, Mo. Willard S. Townsend, president of the CIO Transport Service Union, will be among the speakers.

Super Seniority Bobs Up Again

A request for clarification of reemployment provisions of the draft bill was voiced last week by the CIO, which sent copies of statement on the subject to all members of the House and Senate. The fate of the draft bill was uncertain as the CIO News went to press.

The statement said versions of the draft bill now considered by both Senate and House "contain language which might be misinterpreted to accord 'super-seniority' rights' to new inductees."

It pointed out that such rights were not given the 14 million veterans of World War II, and that under present terminology of the bill, "peacetime draftees would have superior employment rights to the men who arrived in our armed forces during World War II."

The statement was signed by Nathan Cowan, CIO Legislative Director, and Meyer Bernstein, CIO Veterans Representatives.

Resigns Council Post

Michael Harris has resigned as president of the Philadelphia Industrial Union Council, and the Executive Board has named Cecil Bragg, a vice president, as acting president. Harris pleaded press of other business. Harris resigned last February as director of District 7, United Steelworkers.

CIO Halts Bus Fare Rise

AN ATTEMPT to hike the bus fares 33% has been blocked by the Montgomery-Chester (Pa.) Counties Industrial Union Council.

The Public Utilities Commission has suspended the increase for six months, and granted the CIO request for public hearings.

The bus company serves Norristown, Bridgeport and Conshocken. Of the 17,000 CIO members in the area, 7,000 and their families would be affected by any increase.

Council Pres. John J. Lynch filed the complaint with the PUC in the name of the Council and District 7, United Steelworkers.

CIO To GOP: You've Broken Promises to Labor

The Republican Party's Resolutions Committee, meeting last week to draft a 1948 Platform for the coming election, heard testimony by representatives of a number of national organizations.

Reprinted here are excerpts from the statement of the CIO's witness—Van A. Bittner, vice-president of the United Steelworkers and director of the CIO Organizing Drive in the south.

★ ★ ★

DURING the prosecution of the war, American labor, as patriotic citizens, contributed mightily to the successful conclusion of that gigantic struggle.

Working men and women served both in the armed forces and on the home front. The great productive record of American workers is now a matter of history. Our arsenal of democracy not only equipped an army of 15 million but also sent a steady stream of supplies overseas for our Allies.

This tremendous contribution of laboring men and women to the war effort was recognized in the 1944 Republican Platform in these words: "Now the Nation owes those workers a debt of gratitude for their magnificent productive effort in support of the war."

American labor did not ask, nor did it expect any reward for achievement. We were merely doing our duty as citizens devoted to our country and to its institutions and determined to defend it from aggression.

We did not expect, however, that this "magnificent productive effort," hailed with acclaim in the Republican Platform of 1944, would be rewarded by a wave of repressive legislation directed against labor when the Republican Party assumed control of the Congress in 1946.

The Republican Platform of 1944 not only praised American workers for their war effort but also purported to state the position of the Party in reference to legislation of interest and concern to labor.

Thus the Platform said: "The Republican Party accepts the purposes of the National Labor Relations Act, the Wage-Hour Act, the Social Security Act, and all other federal statutes designed to promote and protect the welfare of American working men and women, and we promise a fair and just administration of these laws."

The CIO charges that the 80th Congress, under the leadership of the Republican Party, has breached the solemn commitments made in the labor planks of the 1944 Platform.

Taft-Hartley Law

We submit that the Republican Party has repudiated the purposes of the National Labor Relations Act by the enactment of the Taft-Hartley Law.

We regard the Taft-Hartley Law to be destructive of the welfare of American working men and women. We condemn this law as one-sided, unconstitutional, and injurious to free collective bargaining.

The purpose of the National Labor Relations Act can be achieved only by immediate repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law. We therefore urge the 1948 Republican Convention to commit its Party and candidates to the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law.

Another Failure

The 1944 Republican Platform commits the Republican Party to the support of the purposes of the Wage-Hour Act.

The CIO charges that the 80th Congress, under the leadership of the Republican Party, has failed to honor this commitment to the American wage earners and to the American people.

To achieve the purposes of the Wage-Hour Act at the present time requires that the minimum wages established in the law 10 years ago be revised upwards to meet present living costs. The Republican majorities of the House and Senate have, despite their convention commitments, pigeonholed every effort to increase minimum wages and to strengthen the effectiveness of the law . . .

The purposes of the Wage-Hour Act can be achieved now only by the passage of the Thomas-McCormack Minimum Wage bill, raising minimum wages to 75c per hour, broadening the coverage and extending the protections of the law against child labor.

We therefore urge the 1948 Republican Convention to commit its Party and candidates to the enactment of this bill.

Labor Dept. Cut

The 1944 Platform pledged the Republican Party to strengthen the United States Department of Labor.

The Convention Platform plank dealing with this subject was as follows: "The Department of Labor has been emasculated by the New Deal . . . All governmental labor activities must be placed under the direct authority and responsibility of the Secretary of Labor."

The CIO charges that this plank has been flagrantly and ostentatiously repudiated by the Republican Congress. The Department of Labor has been reduced to ridiculously small size by unjustified slashes in its appropriations . . .

It is a sad commentary that under a Republican Congress the Dept. of Labor has been reduced in size and functions to the lowest point in history. And this at the hands of the Party which claims credit for having established "the office of the Secretary of Labor."

Social Laws Whittled

The 1944 Platform pledged the support of the Republican Party to "extension of the existing old-age insurance and unemployment insurance systems to all employes not already covered."

The CIO charges that the Republican Party has not honored this pledge. On the contrary, the 80th Congress has engaged in a consistent attempt to whittle away the protections of the existing Social Security Law.

The Gearhart Bill has deprived news vendors of the protection of the law. A resolution, likewise sponsored by Representative Gearhart and likewise enacted by the Congress over the President's veto, would deny to insurance agents and hundreds of thousands of other wage earners the much-needed protection of the statute.

The 80th Congress has likewise, as of now, failed to extend significantly the coverage of the law to millions of agricultural workers, domestic workers, government employes, employes of non-profit organizations, small businessmen and farmers.

The Congress has likewise taken no action to provide a health program vitally necessary for the well-being of our people and for our national security. We therefore call upon this Convention to honor its pledge, solemnly made in the 1944 Platform, to support a sound program on social security. We urge that this program should embody the following principles:

1. A substantial raise in the present level of old-age benefits and a reduction in retirement age . . .

2. An extension of the entire social security program . . .

3. A nationwide system of unemployment insurance . . .

4. The institution of sickness and disability insurance to provide a complete program (on a federal level) of health protection and insurance and disability payment.

OPA Knifed

The CIO is gravely concerned about the deepening inflationary crisis in this country.

Led by sky-rocketing food prices, the costs of everyday commodities have reached unheard of heights. Millions of Americans, in order to meet living expenses, have been forced into debt. Living standards are being seriously impaired, with families finding it impossible to take care of their health needs.

Real wages have decreased while the cost of living is steadily increasing. At the same time the profits of American industry are sky-rocketing to unprecedented highs.

These facts have given the lie to the false propaganda that wages have caused the economic plight in which the American people now find themselves. The plain truth of the matter is that the present high cost of living is directly attributable to the destruction of price control by the Republican leadership of Congress.

The CIO urges the restoration of price controls on food, clothing and other basic necessities of life. In view of the delay in providing adequate housing, we urge that effective rent controls be restored.

We charge that the Republican Congress, by the enactment of an inequitable tax law has contributed to the inflationary spiral which now exists. We ask for an adequate tax program to recapture present speculative, exorbitant and excess profits.

The Republican Party cannot escape responsibility for the inflationary situation which prevails.

Free Enterprise Is Not 'Right To Gouge Public . . . Exploit Labor'

"Our great organization of American workers believes that our strongest defense against totalitarianism consists of a sound and equitable economy.

"We believe wholeheartedly in the free enterprise, initiative and inventive genius of the American people. We do not believe that free enterprise includes the right to gouge the public, suppress competition, bottle up invention, or exploit labor. None of these practices has any place in our American system.

"As Americans we prize above all others our right to speak our minds about this country and its institutions, and to use the ballot freely for the correction of abuses. We do not believe that legislation designed to curtail those rights is in the interests of our people or within the traditions of our country.

"We believe that the best protection of our democracy consists of more democracy . . . Basic to a democracy and to our system of free enterprise is the free labor movement."

—Van A. Bittner, vice-president of the United Steelworkers of America, testifying before the GOP Resolutions Committee.

Congress DID Pass Bill To Lift Tariff on Limestone For Fertilizer

WHAT does Congress do in the final days of a session?

It passes bills—dozens and scores of bills.

It it's the 80th Congress, the chances are that the bills will do little or nothing for the average citizen. The bills that might do you good aren't being passed this session.

(The House Rules Committee, for instance, voted to table the Taft-Ellender-Wagner Housing Bill. The vote: 6-2. The winner: The real estate lobby.)

If housing, social security, health, civil rights bills never get out of Congress, what bills do?

One of them is HR 5596. It provided promotion from brigadier general to major general for Leslie Richard Groves. Groves is a lieutenant general in the emergency army, but the promotion applies to his regular army status. It means he'll get a better retirement pension.

HR 4881 authorized the Attorney General to give legal admission into the United States to one Dimitri Petrou, now living in New York. (A bill to give alien seamen who served in the wartime merchant marine a better chance at citizenship status, never got past the committee.)

HR 5275 permits the "free entry of crude or broken limestone to be used in manufacture of fertilizer."

HR 6318 means that a "certain portion of Idaho" is going to run on Rocky Mountain Time instead of Pacific Time.

A resolution (it's SCR 56) welcomes the Inter-American Bar Association to the United States for its conference in Detroit next May.

More important matters than these, of course, were also discussed and voted.

The Congress finally cleared most of the appropriation bills for the coming fiscal year.

It over-rode Pres. Truman's veto of the Reed-Bulwinkle. As a result, railroads can engage in certain types of rate fixing, with Interstate Commerce Commission approval, without fear of anti-trust action.

It over-rode Pres. Truman's veto of the Federal Security Agency's supplemental appropriation bill. As a result, the U. S. Employment Service is transferred—over the bitter protests of unions—from the shrunken Labor Dept. to the FSA.

It over-rode Pres. Truman's veto of the Gearhart Resolution. As a result, several hundred thousand people who are self-employed or have only a loose connection to their bosses, will lose all social security coverage.

It was preparing—as the CIO News went to press—to pass a peacetime draft—opposed by labor, liberal and church groups.

It hadn't acted on the federal aid-to-education bill—by which some $300 million would be given to the states by Uncle Sam to ward off what school experts predict will be the nation's biggest educational crisis.

Could Lincoln Vote GOP Now?

The Republican Party—"the party of Lincoln"—heard some Lincoln quotations that it doesn't often remember, when Van Bittner presented CIO's views to the GOP policy men.

Bittner finished his statement with these words from that great Republican President, Abraham Lincoln:

"All that serves labor serves the nation. All that harms labor is treason to America. No line can be drawn between these two. If any man tells you that he loves America yet hates labor, he is a liar. If any man tells you he trusts America and fears labor, he is a fool. There is no America without labor. . . ."

Turn Backward, Oh Time, In Thy Flight, Give Us Hoover, And Not Just For Tonight!

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

PHILADELPHIA is an ideal place to hold a Republican convention.

When the Grand Old Party gathered last week in the City of Brotherly Love, the delegates were drooling with anticipation of November victory—victory after 16 lean years in which the country was under the magic spell of Roosevelt.

So, with victory believed to be in the air, what better place to gather than the city which alone among the Nation's top metropolises resisted all attempts of New Dealers to take over the city government—a city which hasn't had a Democratic mayor since the year one?

To the practiced eyes of Philadelphia Republicans, the convention looked indeed like the Grand Old Party of the Good Old Days. That was because Only Living Ex-Pres. Herbert Clark Hoover received the biggest spontaneous ovation of the convention—an ovation which sounded completely sincere in comparison with the carefully-planned "spontaneous" demonstrations which greeted nominations of the various candidates.

Indeed, the clock had turned back to Hoover. All that was needed was the apples.

The convention had before it the shining example of Republicanism with a record.

(Philadelphia was carried by Roosevelt three times—and he probably was counted out in 1932. But, F. D. R.'s victories didn't worry the gang. For, municipal elections are not held in Presidential years and the party bosses knew they'd win in the off years.)

Here is some of the Philadelphia story:

• The city has for years been under the domination of powerful party leaders—like the fabulous Boies Penrose, Matthew Quay, the Vare Brothers (known as the "Band of Brothers"), the McNichols, etc.

• Philadelphia has for 10 years been held in the grip of a wage tax—a tax only on wages, not gross income of corporations.

• Philadelphia has what experts describe—your taste will attest to this—as the foulest drinking water in the Nation, if not the world. (Convention delegates were provided with distilled or spring water.)

CITY HALL: PHILADELPHIA
Millions Pinched

In addition to Hoover, main convention keynoters were Natl. Chm. Brazilla Carroll Reece and Illinois Gov. Dwight Green. They surprised no one—and even put a lot of delegates to sleep—by droning away about the New Deal and freedom and radicalism and such.

Said Reece: "There are two powerful political forces in the world today. One is the Republican party . . . the other is the Communist Party."

Said Green: "The Republican Party is a human institution. But it has never harbored anything like the motley collection of embittered failures, back alley revolutionaries and parlor anarchists with which the New Deal has disgraced the party of Jefferson and Jackson."

• Philadelphia's streets have been almost impassable for autos, with only a few minor repairs—and those near the convention hotels—being made after last winter's storms.

• A fabulous subway was built under Locust St., a main stem, and has laid idle for more than 10 years. Millions of dollars were sunk into the pockets of loyal contractors.

The Republicn convention had so many deals that the old smoke-filled room looked like a piker. Gov. Tom Dewey was—shall we say—the beneficiary of the most flagrant deal, which began with Pennsylvania GOP Boss Grundy (who let Sen. Ed. Martin, a faithful wheelhorse, take the public rap) and went on through Rep. Charles Halleck (Ind.) and others. But, though other candidates were publicly deploring Dewey's tactics, they, too, were frantically making all sorts of attempts at coalitions, no matter with whom.

• But, last month, Philadelphia — which Lincoln Steffens once described as "corrupt, but contented"—became aware of corruption so shocking that even the city's traditional contentment was shaken to its foundations.

A $3400-a-year chief of the Amusements Tax Division of the Receiver of Taxes was found in his cellar, hanging from a water pipe, a rope around his neck. There was no suicide note, but his wife, on opening a safe deposit box, found a note scrawled on a piece of yellow foolscap.

It was headed "How Shortage in Amus Tax Office was divided." It then listed names and splits and ended "this is true, everyone that workes (sic) in the amus tax, not including the women were involved."

Off was set a spark which led to grand jury investigation, a plea from Republican leaders that the whole thing be held off until after the convention, resignations, firings, etc. It all may lead to revelations of other derelictions, and convictions, though cynical Philadelphians scoff at the latter.

The Republican convention accused the Roosevelt and Truman Administrations of wasting the public funds. It called for Republican "efficiency" in the Federal Government.

It was revealed that the amusements tax chief had confessed to his original political sponsor, a deputy sheriff, that there was a shortage of $250,000. He offered restitution. The sponsor said he would do something about it. Nothing was done.

At least a million dollars is gone—at a time when city employes are asking for a long-delayed raise.

The reason why Philadelphians, long used to plundering politicians, are so cynical of the results of this:

(a) Richardson Dilworth, Democratic candidate for mayor last fall, made charges of corruption during the campaign. Nothing was done.

(b) Major grand jury investigations in 1928 and 1937 led to indictments (one for Mayor S. Davis Wilson) and suspensions of a number of police. The Mayor died during the investigation and his indictment was dropped. The police were restored to their posts.

So that was the picture as Republicans met in their convention in their model Republican city.

* * *

Here and there at the GOP meeting:

A steady mob of visitors poured through Dewey's headquarters in the hotel ballroom (rental alone, $1000 a day). Few stayed any length of time. It was observed that some visitors kept returning through the door several times. The reason: door prizes (silk underwear, television sets, etc.) were given out to every 50th visitor.

* * *

Saloon keepers were moaning about bad business. Cracked one: "I guess we need a fifth party."

* * *

There was an angel in front of convention headquarters. It was an angel smoking a cigarette and giving out cards for a hamburger restaurant.

* * *

A block and a half from the Bellevue-Stratford was the Philadelphia headquarters of the Wallace-for-President Committee. A number of GOP delegates reportedly made pilgrimages to the headquarters, to thank Wallaceites for their expected aid in the GOP carrying of several states.

* * *

Taft had his headquarters at the Benjamin Franklin Hotel, six blocks from Dewey's, which was at the Bellevue. A huge sign of the B. F. marquee read: "America Deserves the Best. Win With Taft." (Well, it was half right.)

* * *

Oh, yes, the convention picked Thomas E. Dewey for President, and Earl Warren for Vice President.

AN APPLE A DAY
That Was The Hoover Way

The Motor Age

The Ford dealers of Philadelphia were making hay out of the Republican convention and plan the same thing for the Democratic.

More than 150 bright new four-door '49 Fords were provided, complete with drivers, for use of delegates. An elaborate phone and loud speaker system was set up on Philadelphia's Benjamin Franklin Parkway. A call would bring the Ford to take the delegations anywhere around town. And, it also gave the Ford dealers chances for sales talks.

GOP Platform: Words, Words, Words

THE Republican platform for 1948 starts off with these noble words:

"To establish and maintain peace, to build a country in which every citizen can earn a good living with the promise of real progress for himself and his family and to uphold as a beacon light for mankind everywhere the inspiring American tradition of liberty, opportunity and justice for all—that is the Republican platform."

Here is how the GOP hoped to build that citizen's country:

Labor laws: Refers to Taft-Hartley Law as "a sensible reform of the labor law, protecting the rights of labor while safeguarding the entire community against those breakdowns in essential industries which endanger the health and livelihood of all."

Appearing before the COP convention's Resolution Committee, Van A. Bittner reminded that in 1944 the Republican platform had said: "Now the Nation owes those workers a debt of gratitude for their magnificent productive effort in support of the war." He then demanded, for CIO, that the GOP back repeal of T-H, support increased Social Security, fight inflation realistically.

Civil Rights: No mention of FEPC, only "right of equal opportunity to work." Stronger wording attacks lynching and poll tax.

Negro leaders generally thought the planks weak. "Lousy," was the comment of AFL Leader A. Philip Randolph.

Housing: ". . . We recommend federal aid to states for local slum clearance and low-rental housing programs only where there is a need that cannot be met either by private enterprise or by the states and localities."

The GOP-controlled House rules committee killed the Taft-Ellender-Wagner Housing Bill, which provided for public housing; the GOP-controlled House then passed a wishy-washy housing bill, with no public housing.

Inflation: "The Government has not effectively used the powers it possesses to combat inflation."

The GOP-controlled Congress killed OPA.

Other vague references: Health measures, armed forces, taxes, veterans.

Not mentioned: The GOP Congress' refusal to pass federal aid to education; the aid given railroads under the Bulwinkle Bill.

Eliminated: Cut from the original draft was a pledge that the party would "implement with appropriations any commitments made by legislative enactment." This was no doubt an attempt to cover up for the House's wrecking tactic in reducing the Marshall Plan appropriation. Luckily, the Senate was able to restore most of it.

No, suh!

Orville Bullington is president of a Texas railroad. He also is a Republican.

He also is violently opposed to even the Republicans adopting any planks setting up a permanent FEPC, for abolishing poll taxes and for outlawing lynching.

Last week, he made his fight at the GOP's convention.

The weak civil rights planks finally adopted must have been fairly acceptable to him.

CIO WINS 'FREE PRESS' LEGAL BATTLE

No Ruling By Justices On Legality

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE U. S. Supreme Court has given labor a major victory in its drive to preserve freedom of the press.

In a unanimous decison, the nine Court Justices upheld the dismissal of an indictment against the CIO and Pres. Philip Murray. The case arose when Murray used the July 14, 1947, issue of The CIO News to indorse a Baltimore Congressional candidate.

The Court's ruling held that labor newspapers which are regularly published and distributed, are not covered by the Taft-Hartley Act's ban on union political expendiutres.

The court's ruling held that rule on the constitutionality of that ban—nor did it say what it might do on other types of cases arising under the same section of the T-H law.

But the court did make clear that union papers—regardless of how they are financed—may say anything they want in connection with elections, election issues or candidates without regard to T-H. The government had maintained that Murray's political endorsement in The CIO News last summer was a form of "political expenditure in connection with an election"—and therefore, a violation of the law.

THE Justice Dept. secured an indictment against the CIO and Murray but before the case could come to trial, Judge Ben Moore tossed out the indictment. The Supreme Court action served to turn down the Justice Dept. s appeal that the indictment be allowed to stand, and that Murray and the CIO should go to trial.

Murray said the CIO is "naturally gratified" by the decision.

The court's decision was written and read by Justice Stanley Reed. It was devoted in large part to the "intent of Congress" in writing into the Taft-Hartley Act the ban on union political spending.

Talking of the CIO News article, the decision said:

"We are unwilling to say that Congress by its prohibition against corporations or labor organizations making an 'expenditure in connection with any election of candidates for federal offices, intended to outlaw a use of corporate or labor organization funds."

The justices continued that "we do not think" that Section 313 of T-H "reaches" the type of expenditure made by a union for its paper or publication.

"We express no opinion as to the scope of this section where different circumstances exist and none upon the constitutionality of the section," the court said:

THUS the Supreme Court—though not ruling on whether the law is valid—decided it does not affect labor papers.

If Section 313—which covers union spending—were construed to cover publication of periodicals, either by companies or unions, concerning political issues or elections, then "the gravest doubt would arise in our minds as to its constitutionality," the decision said.

Union members and corporation stockholders know that their organizations publish papers, the court pointed out, and it added:

"It would require explicit words in an act to convince us that Congress intended to bar a trade journal, a house organ or a newspaper, published by a corporation, from expressing views on candidates or political proposals in the course of its publication.

"It is unduly stretching langauge to say that the members or stockholders are unwilling participants in such normal organizational activities. . . ."

THERE's a difference, of course, the court said, between an organization paper, like the CIO News, and daily commercial newspapers. "But the line separating the two is not clear", the justices said, and "the location of that line" will have to depend on the facts in other cases that may arise.

It's one thing to say that regularly published union or corporation papers are legal, the court added, "and quite another to say that in connection with an election occasional pamphlets or dodgers or free copies widely distributed are forbidden."

What will happen in the case of a union political leaflet, the court may decide in the future.

THE High Court decision was unanimous. Four of the nine justices who supported that decision complained, however, in bitter words that the court should have gone further and ruled that the political section of T-H is unconstitutional.

These four—Justices Rutledge, Murphy, Douglas and Black, who are generally regarded as the court's progressive minority—argued that the intent of Congress was clearly to place a ban on political expressions in union papers. Quoting from supporters of the T-H act in Congress, the court minority said that this intent to restrict union liberties clearly made the section illegal.

Said the majority: "We find . . . definite indication that Congress did not intend to include within the coverage of the section as an expenditure the costs of the publication described in the indictment."

Said the minority: "He (Sen. Taft, co-sponsor of the bill) tested coverage . . . by applying the very criterion the court now discards, namely, the sources of the funds received and expended in making the political publication."

The four-man minority said that the court, in the face of clear legislative intent, had "set aside the one clearly intended feature of the statute." The court has probably never gone so far as to "override the plainly and introvertibly stated judgement" of the Congressmen who shaped the bill, the minority charged.

SUCH a method of ignoring what Congress clearly intended "is invasion of the legislative process by emasculation of the statute," and it was done solely to avoid ruling on the constitutionality of the law, the minority said.

Actually, said the minority, the intent of the law was "to force unions as such, entirely out of political life and activity, including . . . the expression of organized viewpoint concerning matters affecting their vital interests at the most crucial point where the expression would become effective."

However far the law was intended to go in curbing labor's political rights, the minority said, "it is difficult to conceive a statute affecting those rights more lacking in precision, more broad in the scope of doubt and uncertainty of its reach."

Such vagueness and uncertainty, the minority continued, are "wholly at war" with constitutional principles.

EVEN if Section 313 clearly does not apply to union newspapers—as the majority interpretation held—it would still be unconstitutional, the minority declared.

Concluding, the Justices said that a statute such as T-H's Section 313, which curtails "the very freedoms that make possible exercise of the franchise by an informed and thinking electorate" —and which does so by "indiscriminate blanketing" of every type of political expenditure—"cannot be squared with the First Amendment."

Murray Comment

Here are Pres. Philip Murray's comments on the Supreme Court decision upholding labor's right to freedom of the press:

"The CIO and its President are naturally gratified by this decision. We are pleased that the highest court has sustained the right of labor to enjoy a free press.

"By this decision a very considerable victory has been achieved not only for the CIO or labor alone, but for all of the American people. The right of a free press is indispensable if our democratic way of life is to be safeguarded and if our liberties are to be preserved. Fortunately, the Supreme Court has called a partial halt to the attempt by the 80th Congress to sabotage the Bill of Rights.

"The CIO labelled the Taft-Hartley Law as unconstitutional during the Congressional hearings before enactment. Our warnings were unheeded by the Congress in its foolish and shortsighted drive to hinder the organizations of working men and women.

"It became necessary for the CIO and its President to challenge this feature of the law purporting to limit labor's freedom of the press, by placing themselves in jeopardy of federal criminal proceedings. We were confident throughout, however, that our position would be ultimately vindicated by the courts.

"This case represents the successful beginning of our legal campaign against the Taft-Hartley Law. We regret that a majority of the Court did not deem it appropriate to rule at this time on the constitutionality of the entire political expenditures clause of the Act.

"We are confident that this clause and many other provisions of this law violate basic constitutional rights. We will continue to challenge these in the courts with all of the vigor and resources at our command.

"We are glad to have won this case. This proves once again that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

Log Of Justices

How the Supreme Court decision in the CIO Taft-Hartley case shaped up:

1. All nine justices agreed the indictment of CIO and Pres. Murray—based on a political indorsement in the CIO News—should be dropped.

2. Four justices—the liberal group—held that the ban on political expenditures in the T-H act should be declared unconstitutional. But the decision clearly did not rule on that constitutional issue.

3. Justice Frankfurter felt that the Supreme Court should not have ruled at all on the CIO News case.

Thumbnail of Legal Front

Here's a thumb-nail history of the CIO's victorious campaign to assure freedom of the press for union papers:

JUNE, 23, '47: Taft-Hartley Act becomes law over President's veto. Section 304 prohibits "expenditures" by unions "in connection with" political campaigns or elections.

JULY 14, '48: CIO Pres. Philip Murray, in test of the law, writes indorsement of Judge Ed Garmantz, Democratic candidate for Congress in a special election in Baltimore, Md. Endorsement is printed on front page of CIO News, and 1000 extra copies are sent to Reg. Dir. Frank Bender in Baltimore for distribution in the Congressional district.

FEB. 11, '48: Federal grand jury in Washington, D. C., acting on request of Justice Dept., indicts both CIO and Murray for violation of Sec. 304 of T. H. act. Indictment charges that publication of the Murray statement and distribution of copies in the Maryland district were a union "expenditure" in "connection with" an election.

FEB. 20, '48: Attorneys for CIO and Pres. Murray ask U. S. District Court to throw out indictment, on grounds it's based on an unconstitutional law. CIO argues that ban on union political expenditures is contrary to free speech, free press, free assembly and other provisions of the Constitution.

MAR. 13, '48: U. S. District Court Judge Ben Moore throws out indictment of CIO and Murray.

APR. 28-29, '48: Dept of Justice appeals Judge Moore's ruling directly to U. S. Supreme Court. CIO counsel renew their attack on constitutionality of political expenditures ban.

JUNE 21, '48: U. S. Supreme Court unanimously upholds Judge Moore's dismissal of indictment. Court, however, declines to rule on constitutionality of T-H political section; merely observes that regular issues of labor papers are not covered by T-H. Four justices argue Court should hold section unconstitutional.

WE WON, BUT---

An attempt by the 80th Congress to place a gag on a portion of the American press has failed—and in this failure the CIO won a real victory.

Now the CIO News and other union publications can print what they please about political issues and candidates without fear of Taft-Hartley Act reprisals.

This they couldn't do prior to June 21, when the U. S. Supreme Court handed down an important decision.

Congress' attempt to curb the labor press came last year when it wrote a "political expenditures" provision into the T-H Law.

The CIO decided to test the portion of this provision dealing with the union press. Last July 14 Pres. Murray's endorsement of a Maryland congressional candidate was carried on the front page of the CIO News.

Murray and the CIO were indicted. Federal Judge Ben Moore dismissed the case, holding the indictment was unconstitutional. The Dept. of Justice appealed to the Supreme Court.

The High Court, in effect, said Judge Moore had taken the correct action.

The Court went little beyond this, except to say that the political expenditures section did not apply to regular union newspapers.

SHOULD HAVE GONE FURTHER

The Supreme Court, we feel, could have performed an even greater service for the country had it seen fit to rule on the constitutionality of the entire political expenditures section.

It had an opportunity to do so, as was pointed out by four justices who favored such action.

By confining itself merely to the question of whether union newspapers can enjoy the freedom intended for the entire press the court left a number of important matters unsettled.

The ruling, for example, did not settle the question of whether it's legal for a union to pay rent on a hall in which union representatives discuss political candidates and issues.

And suppose the CIO Publicity Dept., which publishes the CIO News, should decide to issue a special political pamphlet. Would Phil Murray be subjected to arrest again if he authorized such a pamphlet?

Perhaps these questions will have to be settled the hard way—in the same way the case involving the CIO News was settled.

LAWMAKERS, NOT COURT, TO BLAME

Congress — not the Supreme Court—must bear the blame for the dilemma in which the trade union movement finds itself as the Fall elections approach.

Let's not forget that.

Congress enacted a piece of vicious anti-union legislation and then sought to protect itself from the possible consequences.

It was so determined to make itself "PAC-proof" that it trampled on basic civil rights.

It wrote into the T-H Law provisions designed to take away from unions two of the fundamental rights upon which democracy rests—the right to a free press and the right to freedom of expression.

This was in keeping with other activities of Congress, which seemed determined to serve special interests and ignore the needs of average citizens.

In the Supreme Court decision we won a real victory—but there are many more victories that must be won before unionism is secure.

We Think It Wise To Belong

CIO's Role In WFTU, However, Is Frequently Misunderstood

By ALLAN L. SWIM

IMAGINE what your reaction would be if your son came home some evening and declared, "I'm going to quit school because there are some boys in my class who say the government should take over the whole country."

Also imagine your reaction to a proposal that the United States boycott the United Nations because the Soviet government belongs to UN.

Or, if you want to carry the idea to the extreme, try to visualize Vermont seceding from the nation because its people object to the undemocratic restrictions placed on voters in seven Southern states by the poll tax.

KEEPING these things in mind, let's wade into the proposition of why the CIO retains its membership in the World Federation of Trade Unions.

WFTU, you know, has some members who think the government — the Soviet government, that is—should take over the entire world.

Why does CIO Secy.-Treas. Jim Carey, who's strongly anti-Communistic, play a dominant role in WFTU meetings?

Why does Phil Murray, who's being called a lot of nasty names by the Reds, back Carey's WFTU stand?

How is it possible for other right-wingers in the CIO to support CIO affiliation with WFTU, which many newspapers refer to as "Communist dominated"?

It is a bit baffling, isn't it?

IT IS baffling, however, only to those who do not understand the role the CIO has been playing in international affairs.

And don't let that term "international affairs" scare you off. The guys and gals who work in the factories of England, France, Italy, Holland, and other countries are basically little different from those who work in Detroit, Denver, and Birmingham.

Oh, sure, they speak "strange" languages and dress somewhat different from American industrial workers. But you'll find nothing strange in their desires for health, happiness, and security.

Because of the war, they're having more trouble making ends meet—and they're being pulled this way and that by conflicting ideologies.

The day-by-day problems of these people—how to buy shoes for the kids, how to find a place to live, how to pay the doctor bill—make up a large portion of the international affairs with which the CIO has been concerning itself.

CAREY once stated the proposition simply when he said, "You can't deal with 'em if you don't understand their problems—and you can't understand their problems unless you have some direct contact with them or the organizations to which they belong.

"And they can't understand us—or know what the American people really stand for—unless they have some fairly direct contact with us."

That need for direct contact in itself is good reason for CIO to belong to WFTU, he said.

But it goes further than that—much further.

WORKERS throughout the world have mutual problems which cut across all political and ideological lines.

However, the solution of these problems—or failure to solve them—will play an important part in the next year or two in determining the ideological direction in which much of the world will travel.

What's that got to do with the CIO staying in or getting out of WFTU?

If the CIO withdrew, the Reds would be in a good position to use the powerful WFTU to peddle their Communist doctrine as a solution to worker problems in a large part of the world.

That statement is based on the fact that the CIO position—not the Communist position — has dominated the WFTU since it was founded.

That may be interesting, you say, but what does it mean to the average Mr. Jones of the good old USA?

Mr. Jones pays taxes to liquidate our war debt, finance the European Recovery Program, and provide for our defense.

European workers could wreck ERP or provide it with a good chance of achieving success. Future peace or war might easily hinge on success or failure of ERP.

No group has done more than the CIO to provide European workers with an understanding and appreciation of ERP. No group has done more to obtain European worker support for the program.

And this would not have been possible had it not been for the connections the CIO had established as a result of WFTU membership.

Love The Boss —It's Cheap!

SOME tips to top brass in industrial concerns on how to give their workers a good time—cheap—and make 'em love their bosses, are given in an article "Employe recreation —on a dime!" in a recent issue of Modern Industry, slick-paper magazine for management.

"Yes, it's really true that wholesome employe recreation can be had almost for peanuts," says Modern Industry.

Here are some of the suggestions given for low-cost fun: Picnics held in forest preserves or privately owned grounds.

Fishing clubs (with employes paying rent for the boats and supplying their own equipment). Gardens planted and cared for by workers on idle land leased inexpensively by the company.

Riding clubs operated privately, with employes paying for their mounts. Excursions "arranged by management, but at no management expense other than administrative."

Bike club, "requires nothing from management but direction and planning."

Sure it's a fine idea, and mighty handsome of a company to encourage such good, clean fun—with the workers paying for everything but small nominal costs. There's just one thing. Wouldn't the workers rather plan their own fun through their union? Why should they let the company, "for peanuts," run the recreation that the workers, themselves, pay for?

Stooges Decided To Retreat Fast!

ODDS of about three to one aren't good if you happen to be on the "short" end.

At least that's the way some CIO organizers at Macon, Ga., figured it.

And that's what some company stooges learned when the odds shifted—rapidly and dramatically—against them.

As a result of this shift an explosive situation quieted down and violence was avoided.

AS PART of their unionization drive at Macon, three organizers handed out leaflets regularly as shifts changed at a textile mill.

This caused great displeasure for the mill superintendent, who said he intended to do everything he could to keep employes from joining the CIO.

The situation began growing tense and the organizers didn't know what to expect next.

Then they got word—dependable word—that real trouble was brewing. Eight or nine men, they were told, had been hired by the mill management to beat up the organizers.

They were scheduled to do the job when the organizers showed up to pass out leaflets.

VIOLENCE—regardless of who was responsible for it—would have seriously impeded the organizing drive.

And, then, no organizer likes to get his head bashed in!

Something had to be done—and in a hurry. And that "something" had to be so unusual and so effective that it would remedy a bad situation at one stroke.

The organizers figured it this way:

If they failed to show up for their regular leaflet distribution there would be talk around the mill that "those CIO guys haven't got any guts; they got scared away."

If they showed up and were beaten, the consequences would be equally serious.

THOSE most directly concerned with success of the Macon drive held a strategy meeting at CIO Organizing Committee headquarters in Atlanta.

They tossed ideas around for a while, then worked out what they thought would be the proper solution to their problem.

They figured their little scheme couldn't miss—unless the company stooges hired to do the beating were more stupid than men have a right to be.

They put their plan into motion and then sat back to await results.

THE three organizers showed up at the mill gate as usual with leaflets under their arms.

Workers started coming out of the plant. Among them were the eight or nine men the superintendent had hired to do his dirty work.

The organizers went about their job as if they expected nothing unusual to happen.

The stooges started moving in. They halted—then scurried away.

Thirty of the biggest CIO organizers in the South appeared on the scene suddenly and walked unhurriedly but steadily toward their three colleagues. They looked capable of handling the situation.

Not a blow was struck. No effort was made to reach the stooges. Within a few hours the "reinforcements" were on their way back to their regular posts.

There was no further threat of violence at the mill.

Youth Pays A Subsidy To Food That Covers Your Table

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

TREEBIE'S face was pinched and her eyes anxious, but she did not look dull or stupid, even though she was 12 years old and only in the third grade.

She had entered school in the middle of the term several weeks before, and Mrs. Lewis, the teacher, was puzzled because the child never spoke up or gave an answer.

It was some time before Mrs. Lewis discovered Treebie's difficulty. She was nearly deaf. The day she found that out, Mrs. Lewis went home with the child after school to talk with her parents.

A bus ride and a walk down a muddy road to a clearing brought them to a tent where Treebie lived and kept house for her father and brothers who "followed the crops."

THE teacher listened sick at heart while Treebie's life story slowly unfolded as she bustled cheerfully about the tent, starting a fire in the stove and fixing some coffee.

Her mother had died two years ago, and Treebie was making a valiant effort to fill her mother's place, cooking and "doing for" her father and brothers in the makeshift living quarters set up as they followed the crops.

LIVING on damp dirt floors had given the girl almost perpetual colds which had permanently impaired her hearing. The family never stayed long enough in one place to get the steady medical care Treebie needed.

As they waited for Pa and the boys, Treebie hauled out an old battered suitcase from under one of the beds, brought out a cigar box tied with string, and showed her teacher some photographs.

"Here's a picture of Ma," she said. "Ma died two years ago. I'm the only girl. So I cook and look after Pa and the boys." She handed Mrs. Lewis another photograph. "Here is the old home. We had to leave because Pa said the land was too poor and we hain't had a home since . . . not really. But we hope to."

THIS true story of Treebie, illustrating some of the difficulties faced by thousands of children of migratory workers, is told by Florence R. Wyckoff in an article, "Youth Pays a Subsidy to Agriculture," in Woman's Press, the YWCA's national magazine.

The CIO Food, Tobacco and Agricultural Workers, which has thousands of members who are migratory workers, could tell countless similar stories. Some of the terrible conditions among these workers got publicity during the long lettuce strike several months ago in Arizona, and in the more recent strike of asparagus workers in northern California.

"Forever on the move, they cannot share the advantages which have long been assumed to be the right of very child in America," says Miss Wyckoff in her Woman's Press article. "Teachers and others who live and work along the path of the great agricultural migrations give the most authentic first-hand testimony about conditions among the families of seasonal farm workers."

SHE quotes some comments made by a school truant officer in a Southern California county where she has worked for many years.

"It is not uncommon to find a whole family working in the fields. When questioned 'Why aren't the school-age children in school?' the answer is, 'If we don't all work, we don't eat.' On investigating prevalent wages for piece-work in the fields, the facts justify the acts. This type of labor needs aid.

"Lack of medical attention is quite apparent. Children needing sight-saving operations or equipment, hernia operations, more adequate diets, tonsillectomies, etc., are unable to receive help. Since they are not residents, they are unable to receive free public service, and it is completely beyond their means to pay for services. . . ."

Florence Wyckoff points out that many Americans have taken it for granted that "such dramatic stories as the 'Grapes of Wrath' were only temporary ills which would automatically be corrected in 'better times'. Such is not the case," she says. "Unless deliberate steps are taken, these families will continue in the present conditions or worse so long as the agricultural patterns remain the same.

"It is a form of subsidy to agriculture which cannot be reckoned in dollars. It is paid for by human values—paid for by children in days lost from school, threatened with illness from bad sanitation, bad housing, poor nutrition and little or no medical care."

Miss Wyckoff holds that the Federal Government is the proper body to solve the problems of interstate migration, as any welfare or relief measures can be only temporary and piecemeal.

Congress so far has failed to pass any proposals for federal action.

YOU can't beat anti-labor Congressmen by philosophizing. It takes hard work.

That was the gist of advice given by veterans labor leader Samuel Levin to some 500 delegates to the Illinois PAC meeting, who are determined that they can provide the hard work.

And, as a result of that hard work, they not only expect to replace anti-labor Congresssmen, but also to elect members of school boards, library boards, sheriffs, etc.

The conference, which met in Chicago's Amalgamated Center, was strictly a working conference. Delegates received PAC kits, sat at huge round tables and took notes as advice was given by Levin, Joseph Germano, State CIO president; Maurice McElligott, State CIO secretary - treasurer; Natl. PAC Dir. Jack Kroll; Paul Douglas, Democratic candidate for U. S. Senator against incumbent Wayland (Curly) Brooks (R.); State PAC Dir. Frank Annunzio, CIO Auto Workers Reg. Dir. Pat Greathouse and by many speakers from the floor.

The conference also saw a stimulating movie, "They Said Labor Didn't Count," and witnessed a skit, "You've Got a Date in 1948," which showed exactly why PAC must win this year. From young union members like William Dodds, Auto, to seasoned veterans like Frank Monaghan, Packinghouse—who fought in the famous Irish "throuble"—the conference was inspired to complete 1948's mission.

HIGHLIGHTS of addresses:

KROLL: "There are two immediate problems that are important to you: Who's to be the Congress and Who's to be the President.

"As to the Congress, this 80th Congress—I'm glad that Pres. Truman after almost two years, has found it's the worst in history—was elected by a vote of less than 20% of the people.

"As to the President, it's not too late to let the delegates know that you want a certain man—I don't have to mention his name (several delegates yelled 'Ike')—to be the nominee, a man who will give more than lip service to liberalism.

"As to the Wallace third party, we're against it. When a real third Party is formed—from the bottom up and on a broad representative basis—our party will be the first, not the third party. The Wallace party has crawled into bed with reactionary Republicans in an attempt to secure a reactionary Congress far worse than the 80th."

DOUGLAS: "You are entitled to know where I stand. Here it is:

"Prices: We must check prices, reform the banking system, oppose monopoly.

"Housing: Chicago has a housing cancer—20 square miles of blighted areas. We cannot trim on this issue of housing.

"Taft-Hartley Law: I can express my stand in three words:

"I'm against it!

"But, labor has itself to blame for Taft-Hartley, because labor stayed home in 1946 and a lot of liberal Congressmen—including my wife—were defeated.

"I'm against T-H because of its ban on the closed shop (I was for years an arbiter for the newspaper industry and saw at first hand the beneficial effects of the closed shop); because of the restrictions that have been placed on the union shop; because the law paradoxically sets up a standard of jurisdiction which lets the state law—if it is tougher—prevail; because T-H opens the way for almost continuous collective bargaining elections; because of its restrictions on secondary boycott and sympathy strikes; because of the permitting of damage suits against unions. (Chief Justice Taft set an example for his son when, in the Tri-City case, he declared that two pickets were ample.)

"I make no special plea for myself. But, barring a miracle or Eisenhower, we have a tough fight this fall. Your future—the future of your unions and your country, is at stake.

"I guess I am not talking like a college professor when I say I want to kick the Commies in the teeth. We must walk down the center way, the F.D.R. Way."

Industrial Union Councils:

PAC Seeks Their Aid in Making Decisions

By JOHN BROPHY
CIO Director of Industrial Union Councils

I WANT to amplify in this article on the question of our councils' seemingly paradoxical position of having a very broad, yet limited autonomy.

The limitations on council powers—and at the same time the great breadth of those powers—has been high-lighted recently by the CIO's national decision to oppose a third party in 1948.

Since politics is one of the major fields in which our councils concern themselves, a question arises: If councils are not permitted to declare for new parties whenever they choose, or to work for the formation of such parties when the CIO has decided against them, and if they are called upon to work as one man in support of official CIO policy, what democratic rights do they have in political matters?

Well, in answering that question, let's look back into CIO history.

In the summer of 1943, the CIO embarked into the political field in an organized way by forming the Political Action Committee. Pres. Philip Murray appointed Sidney Hillman, president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, to head PAC.

Hillman, who since has unfortunately died, made a tour of the country, talking over political experiences with various CIO leaders, both of unions and councils. In particular, he discussed political action with Pres. Jack Kroll of the Ohio Council. For, the Ohio CIO body had been extremely active in political action.

Hillman found that the Ohio Council —and other Councils too—had been concentrating on getting CIO people registered in order to vote. CIO knew from experience that most union members voted for progressive candidates when they went to the polls. So Hillman put into effect what he had learned.

It was found that during the war many people had moved and often had not registered to vote at their new homes. PAC put on drives for registration, and CIO's political influence picked up remarkably.

Now, all this work had been carried on quite independently by our state and city organizations. Ohio's experience was passed on to other councils, and they in turn sent in their own experiences to PAC.

Since then, the emphasis of PAC has shifted from registration, though that is still important, to getting out the vote, getting into the primary elections, finding good candidates and having them nominated, and getting into precinct and county caucuses and state and national conventions, in order to have a real influence in choosing good candidates and adopting platforms.

Decisions about state and local political questions are now made mainly by state and local councils and their political action committees. National PAC relies very heavily on local and state recommendations in deciding what position to take on any given candidate. It also, of course, provides the state and city councils with information and recommendations, and it has the final authority to make a definite decision.

This is a cooperating, two-way arrangement, however. It would be very difficult for National PAC to make all these decisions alone. It realizes that state and local organizations have a closer contact with political facts and with the sentiments of our own people.

Hence, a great deal of leeway is given, within the general outlines of CIO policy, as I have said.

As a practical matter, then, in the political field, our Councils are now obligated to work within the established parties, and to resist the present attempt to establish a third party. They are free, however—indeed, they have a duty—to exercise initiative in getting the union vote registered, in getting out the vote for the primaries and final elections, in finding good candidates, and in building up labor's influence within the previously established parties.

Also, National PAC has to rely on the councils and state and local PACs to pick out good local political issues.

There may be a big fight locally about a sales tax, congested housing conditions, utility rates, political corruption, or the like. Or, again, there may be dangerous attacks on labor in the state legislature, which ought to be campaign issues.

No national organization can possibly pick up all these things and make decisions on them from Washington.

Our councils and their PACs have a tremendous responsibility and a very wide autonomy, within the confines of National PAC policy, in turning out good, fighting political issues.

They are also free at any time to make recommendations to National CIO, and this right is guaranteed to them specifically by the rules governing councils. Now the only thing they are asked to do is to stay within the general limits of CIO policy on the third party issue.

In later articles, I want to go into the question of the limited but very real autonomy of our industrial union councils on other matters in addition to politics.

UAW's Allis-Chalmers Local Stages Comeback

A milestone in labor history has been achieved at West Allis, Wis.

There, Local 248 of the CIO Auto Workers, split by factional dissension, went back to work March 23, 1947, after a long strike, its ranks divided and broken.

GREATHOUSE

On Dec. 1, 1947, the UAW executive board named Reg. Dir. Pat Greathouse as administrator of Local 248—a seemingly thankless task. He had difficulty getting into the union office—the former officers, who had been ousted, had locked the doors against him.

When he finally took over, he found that the membership had declined to 184 paid-up members from the thousands who had gone on strike. A Natl. Labor Relations Board election, held June 17, 1947, was still not determined, since a number of ballots had been challenged, leaving the close issue in doubt.

Last week, Greathouse could breath his first sigh of relief. This is what had happened:

1. The issue of the challenged ballots had at last been decided. UAW 248 had won bargaining rights.
2. The membership had risen, in six short months, to nearly 6000 paid up members.
3. An interim contract had been signed with management.
4. Negotiations were going on for a complete contract. Late last week, Allis-Chalmers offered a general increase of 8%, ranging from 9 to 15c an hour.
5. An election was being held for regular officers, the first since Greathouse was named administrator.

THE interim contract provides:

a. Recognition of UAW as collective bargaining agent.

b. A grievance procedure where the worker, foreman and steward meet at the aggrieved's machine or job. Within 30 minutes after then the worker says: "Get my steward!" Step 2 provides for consultation of steward, chief steward and superintendent. Step 3 takes the grievance to the shop committee and top management.

c. A steward structure providing for approximately 250 stewards and 50 chief stewards. (Stewards are paid by the company for time spent on their steward duties.) Stewards are to be elected, with interim appointments made by Greathouse.

d. A voluntary dues checkoff.

The meeting which accepted the interim agreement was one of the largest in the local's history. The final vote was unanimous.

THE meeting also was given an audit report on the local's finances. Included for the period before the administrator took over were large items for auto repairs for the former officers; huge sums carried as petty cash; items which showed that union sums had been kept in officers' homes "for safe keeping"; a finding that not one cent of profit had been made from the local's bar, though all expenses, overhead and salaries had been paid by the local; more than $5000 in "loans," one of them being for $100 to a tavernkeeper "to save his business."

Greathouse opened the meeting with the remark: "The last time I attended a Local 248 meeting, in this very hall, I was almost thrown out." The former officers had been opponents of the administration of UAW Pres. Walter Reuther. Greathouse was elected on the Reuther ticket last fall.

At the meeting, more than 80 nominations were made for the top offices in the local. Elections will be held this week.

GREATHOUSE inherited a lot of legal trouble when he took over his administrative duties. Harold Christoffel, former chairman of the Allis Chalmers shop committee, had been convicted by a Federal Court of perjury. He was accused of denying, before the House Labor and Education Committee, that he was a member of the Communist Party. That conviction is under appeal. Despite the fact Christoffel is a bitter opponent of the Reuther administration, the UAW executive board voted an appropriation to help his defense.

(At the UAW convention, Christoffel, speaking against signing the non-Communist affidavits of the Taft-Hartley law, exceeded the five-minute limitation on speeches from the floor. After six minutes, Reuther told Christoffel to come to a conclusion. Christoffel went on talking, after eight minutes, sergeants-at-arms pulled him from the microphone. He shouted that Reuther was barring freedom of speech. The five-minute limitation had been adopted unanimously by the convention.)

Other court cases Greathouse had to contend with included charges of contempt of court and civil and criminal accusations.

Twenty-three members of Local 248 had been sentenced to terms of up to five months after being convicted of contempt of court in violation of an injunction. Greathouse was able to get the terms reduced to 40 to 60 days.

Under Wisconsin's Huber Law, the sentenced men were able to work at the plant during the day, spend the night in jail.

In the NLRB election, the issue was finally settled when the NLRB ruled that a separate unit be set up for 17 pattern makers, but that the petition of the AFL Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers for a place on the ballot was thrown out.

That left 62 ballots to be counted. UAW needed only four to be assured of victory. The count for the 62: UAW, 6; UAW-AFL, 39; 16 for the independent union and one for no union. That made the final totals: UAW-CIO, 3675; independent, 1946; UAW-AFL, 1638, and no union, 85.

Calif. PAC Launches CIO Drive; Report 80,000 Quit N. Y. Council

A CONFERENCE of delegates representing more than 98,000 of California's 150,000 CIO members, meeting in Los Angeles last week, unanimously voted to work for CIO's national political program.

The delegates, creating a new political arm—the California National CIO-PAC—set immediately to work on what they called the most ambitious political campaign ever undertaken in their state.

Many of the delegates were from local unions which have withdrawn from State Industrial Union Council because that body refused to follow the national CIO's political policies, adopted by a majority of the CIO executive board. Revolts against the State group's defiance of CIO policy, and against similar refusal in Los Angeles, San Francisco and San Diego, led to this meeting.

Morris Zusman, who resigned as State IUC head as a result of the IUC's action, presided at this meeting. Wires were read from CIO Pres. Philip Murray, PAC Dir. Jack Kroll and Organization Dir. Allan S. Haywood, all of whom congratulated the delegates on their efforts to fight for CIO's policy of opposition to a third party in 1948.

THE delegates adopted rules, under which the new California PAC will operate through block committees, city and county committees, Congressional district committees, and, above all those, a state executive committee. Delegates pledged themselves to raise $2 per CIO member in a voluntary campaign to work for approval of a four-cent monthly per capita assessment.

Zusman pointed out that under CIO's policy, only Calif. Natl. CIO-PAC had the right to use the name of CIO or PAC in political matters.

The conference also backed the Marshall Plan, assailed racial and religious discrimination and urged affiliates to work for an FEPC amendment to the California constitution.

Officers chosen were Joseph Van Elsen, Auto, from Richmond, Calif., chairman; Herb Wilson, Rubber, from Los Angeles, first vice chairman; Chester Wright, Oil, from Pinola, second vice chairman, and John Despol, Steel, from Los Angeles, secretary-treasurer.

Irwin L. Deshetler, Southern California CIO regional director, and Tim Flynn, who holds a similar post in Northern California, told the delegates that "This is the first time in California CIO history that the real progressive forces of CIO have been convened" and that with "many locals still in the process of getting out from under totalitarian political control, it won't be many months before the State CIO will work for the real principles of the National CIO."

OTHER PAC developments:

Greater New York CIO Council: Is losing locals representing about 80,000 members because of the council's refusal to follow CIO against a third party in 1948 and in favor of ERP.

Latest to withdraw was Local 100 of the Transport Workers. The local's executive board voted, 25 to 12, to withdraw after TWU Intl. Pres. Michael Quill urged that the local quit the council. Quill had resigned as council president and as member of the American Labor Party as a result of the refusal of both to follow CIO policy. He was elected to New York's Municipal Council as an ALP member.

The action of Local 100 came on the heels of similar action by Cutters Local 4 of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

Six Win Back Pay For Two-Year Period

Back pay checks for two years' wages have finally been paid to six workers who were fired by the General Electric X-Ray Corp., Chicago, Ill., in May 1946 for joining the CIO Electrical Workers. The checks range from $462 to $3,591.

UE Completes Major Contract Negotiations

By GLORIA CAPLAN

THE CIO Electrical Workers have completed negotiation of all their major contracts in the electrical industry.

Latest of these was with Westinghouse, whose 8% raise offer is expected to be ratified by the membership by July 1. The proposed boost would increase wages from 9 to 16c an hour for the company's 70,000 employes. First Westinghouse offer of 6% was rejected by UE.

UE Pres. Albert J. Fitzgerald said contracts have been negotiated for 450,000 workers, bringing raises totaling $100,000,000 annually. Major firms affected are General Electric, Westinghouse, General Motors electrical division, Sylvania Electric Products and Phelps-Dodge Copper Products.

In addition to contract gains, the union has made big strides in organizing, having won recognition in 72 new companies since Taft-Hartley went into effect last August. UE has not signed Taft-Hartley non-Communist affidavits.

Fitzgerald hit the NLRB as "an agency of the employers" and pointed out that although the Board received twice as many unfair labor practice charges against employers as against unions in its first six months, it issued a third more injunctions against unions than against employers. "Of the 1550 charges filed against employers the Board acted on 18."

Auto: The CIO Auto Workers, meanwhile, have wound up all their major contracts, except Ford.

The union rejected Ford's first offer of an 11 to 14c boost as "inadequate to meet the present needs of Ford workers." Ken Bannon, UAW Ford Dept. director, said the offer "falls far short of raising Ford wage standards to those of its competitors. None of the points of the company's Monday proposals are acceptable to the committee."

A counter-offer was submitted by the union.

The so-called "Chrysler" pattern of 13c hourly raises has been accepted by the UAW at the Budd Manufacturing Co., Hudson, Nash, Packard, and Willys-Overland. At Kaiser-Frazer the union won 13c plus an additional 5c an hour for a social security program.

The same pattern is being sought at the Ryan Aeronautical Co., San Diego, Calif., where 900 UAW employes are on strike following the company's refusal to bargain.

Basing its refusal on a technicality, the company claimed the union failed to provide notice of contract reopening before last February's contract anniversary date. UAW officials pointed out that negotiations began in 1947, but were suspended pending settlement of a jurisdictional dispute with the IAM last April.

Ryan has made an offer of 6c an hour, rejected by the union. Strike strategy is being directed by Roy Reuther, brother of the UAW president.

Textile: For its 120,000 cotton and textile workers in the South the CIO Textile Workers will ask a 15c hourly boost, six paid holidays, an employer-financed insurance program and improved vacation pay.

The contract program was announced by TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve at the end of an Atlanta conference of 250 delegates from 10 Southern states.

The last Southern rayon and cotton raise of 9% was in November 1947 and brought the minimum up to 87c an hour.

Despite union gains in recent years Southern textile wages are "still far too low," Rieve said, "too low to provide the workers with proper living standards and too low to permit textile communities to be prosperous."

A resolution adopted by the conference stressed the industry's ability to pay increases without boosting prices.

Although the industry's 1947 profits hit a record high, the first quarter of 1948 was even higher than the same period in 1947.

International Harvester: A company offer of an 11c hourly raise has been accepted by the UAW at six IH plants, but agreement with the CIO Farm Equipment Workers, which holds contracts in 12 other plants, was stalled when company negotiators broke off wage talks.

Previously both unions had rejected the raise offer on grounds that the company demanded working rules concessions in return for the boost.

During subsequent negotiations with FE, company officials walked out on the pretext that an FE local is on strike at the Auburn, N. Y. plant. The walkout stemmed from a dispute over piece work pay.

Commenting on the company's action, Gerald Fielde, the union's IH Council director, charged that "Harvester is again pulling its old stalling tactics. The issue at stake is not Auburn grievances. The issue is that they refuse to grant their 40,000 employes in FE-CIO the same contract benefits held heretofore.

"We will not be euchred into accepting an 11 cent wage increase with one hand while signing a weak contract which steals it away again with the other," he concluded.

ALCOA: Another "inadequate" contract offer was scheduled, as the CIO News went to press, to touch off a strike by 18,000 CIO Steelworkers on June 27.

Rejecting an 8% wage boost proposal by the Aluminum Co. of America, the union originally set June 20 as its deadline. It was postponed a week at the request of Federal Mediation Director Cyrus S. Ching.

A 13 cents hourly boost plus improved insurance and pension plans and correction of wage inequities are being sought.

NLRB Chm. Apologizes To Oil Union

NLRB CHAIRMAN PAUL M. HERZOG, embarrassed by a major board blunder, has apologized to a CIO union.

Involved are the CIO Oil Workers International and its local at the Lane Wells Co., Los Angeles, Calif.

Because the employes are spread over a large territory surveying and drilling oil wells, the international union filed for certification as the bargaining agent. OWIU and other CIO unions have often followed this practice.

Recently the board ruled that the International could not "front" for a local which has not filed non-Communist affidavits.

But the NLRB was quick to learn its mistake. The local signed the affidavits last April. What's more, the Board itself had previously certified the local in six instances during the week of May 31, indicating that the local had filed affidavits.

OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight promptly protested the action, objecting particularly to a Board press statement which described the International as "fronting" for the local.

In his letter to Knight, Herzog said:

"You are correct in saying that the Board was in error in finding Local 128 of your International Union not in compliance when the decisions was issued on June 4. It was in compliance, and we very much regret the erroneous statement contained in the Board's opinion and in the release.

Erie CIO Urges Rat Control Rules

The Erie Cio Council is spearheading a campaign for rat control regulations in Erie.

The CIO council several weeks ago passed a resolution calling on city council to hold hearings and take action on the regulations, which would give the city health officer power to close rat-infested dwellings.

Neither the present mayor, Sherman Hickey, Democrat, nor his predecessor, Gale Ross, Republican, have favored the regulations, according to Ralph W. Tillotson, CIO subregional director.

Third Party Aids GOP, Commies—Michigan CIO

By TED OGAR

THE Michigan CIO Council, at its 10th annual convention, reaffirmed its support of CIO-PAC policy and struck at third party presidential candidate Henry Wallace.

Delegates to the three-day session in Grand Rapids, representing 750,000 CIO members in the state, last week approved by an overwhelming majority a resolution putting the Michigan PAC within the framework of the Democratic Party.

"Labor cannot be satisfied with lofty resolutions passed in a vacuum, but must develop a program that is realistic and down-to-earth," the resolution stated.

"Support of the Wallace Party can only result in splitting the progressive vote and assuring the election of a reactionary Republican president, Congress and state legislation; playing into the hands of the Communist Party, which is supporting Wallace, and strengthening the isolationists and Communists who with equal vigor oppose the CIO-endorsed Marshall Plan to aid the war-sufferers of Europe."

The policy statement pointed out that all Michigan Democratic Congressmen and state legislators voted against anti-labor bills during the past year.

Strong emphasis was given the fact that the Michigan CIO-PAC is not handing out a blanket endorsement to the state Democratic Party, Council Pres. August Scholle told delegates.

The state PAC, he said, had been consistently supporting Democratic candidates without having a voice in their selection. "The only way we can change that is to officially get into the Democratic Party," he added. "We will line up with the liberals in the party and make an effort to clean out its reactionaries."

MICHIGAN CIOers have become active at all levels of Democratic Party organization in the state. In 1946 the GOP won 34 seats in the state legislature through default when no Democratic candidates appeared against them. CIO members will be placed in nomination against them wherever possible, Scholle said.

The PAC resolution followed a blistering attack by CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey on the Wallace Party and Communists. His talk was delayed 10 minutes by the shouted protests of the left-wing minority over a defeat on the seating of delegates.

Said Carey: "The supporters of Henry Wallace within the CIO are not loyal to the policies and program that made this organization great. The leaders in his campaign are in it because they were told to get in it. They decided that they would split every CIO union if need be to impose the Communist program. But they won't be successful.

"Throughout Europe you have Communists trying to destroy Democracy, and they are attempting to do the same thing here. The Communist Party in America is lined up with Misters Taft and Hartley. The reactionary, conservative unions in Soviet Russia are under complete government domination and restriction, and what Mr. Taft is trying to do is Sovietize American trade unions."

Heckled by left-wingers during his talk, Carey took them on, answering questions shouted from the floor. When he blasted Communists as union-busters a delegate shouted, "Who built CIO?"

"It wasn't the Communist Party," retorted Carey. "The commies know how to create chaos and confusion, but they don't know how to build a union."

IN ANSWER to why CIO supported Wallace in 1944, Carey said it was because Wallace was then vice-president. "We said then we would not change horses, either in the front or in the rear."

While president of the Senate, Wallace never steered through any piece of social or labor legislation, Carey told the convention.

"There is one thing I must, in all fairness, give credit to Wallace on. While in office he and the CIO set forth the underlying principles of the Marshall Plan. Now he has shed those principles and opposes them."

In the elections Scholle was returned to the Council presidency for a sixth term and Secy.-Treas. Barney Hopkins won a fifth term. Scholle polled 4119 votes to 988 for Frank Davis, UAW Local 900. Hopkins defeated Ben Probe, UAW Local 3 member, by a vote of 3175 to 954.

The convention asked CIO Pres Murray to use CIO influence to obtain appointment of Asst. Labor Secy. John Gibson as Secretary of Labor.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

Reg. Dir. George DeNucci, Columbus, Ohio, reports CIO victories in two NLRB-conducted union shop elections: American Optical Company, Columbus, 100% vote for the CIO Optical Workers; O&IW Field Representative James T. O'Reilly was in charge. Ohlen-Bishop Saw Company, Columbus, 100 for to 4 against; O'Reilly handled the election under the direction of Director DeNucci.

Reg. Dir. Irwin L. DeShetler, Los Angeles, Calif., reports the following results of a consent election, Western Gulf Oil Corp., Fruitvale, Calif., CIO 44, against 40. OWIU Rep. James Morgan advised DeShetler of this victory.

Thomas J. Gallagher, Dir. of Org., IUM&SWA-CIO, reports CIO victories in two union shop elections: Owens Yacht Co., Local 28, Baltimore. Eligible to vote, 125; number votes cast, 119; for 111, 8 against; Pusey-Jones, Local 3, Wilmington, Del., eligible to vote, 709; number votes cast, 542; for 508; against 28; void 6.

Shoe Workers Rep. Dave Wilson, reports a victory in an election at the Moran Shoe Co., Carlyle, Ill., eligible to vote, 336; CIO 240; AFL 23; no union 62.

George Brown, Dir. of Org., IWA-CIO, reports victories in the following elections: Oroville Lumber Co., Oroville, Calif., yes 38, no 9; Standard Roller Shade, Oroville, yes 12, no 1.

Paul E. Miley, Dir., Region 2, UAW-CIO, Cleveland, Ohio, reports that an election held at the Bendix-Westinghouse Plant, UAW Local 971, Elyria, 80% of the eligible votes were for the union shop.

SOUTHERN CAMPAIGN CIO State Dir. Robert W. Starnes, Jackson, Miss., advises the winning of union elections at two plants of Reliance Manufacturing Co., Hattiesburg, for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers-CIO, brought to 17 the number of victories so far during June for the CIO Southern Drive. Director Starnes also headed the drive at the Laurel plant of the Reliance firm last February when the employes voted 351 to 64 for the CIO-Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

Van A. Bittner, Director, CIO Organizing Committee, announces the CIO elected victories at the following plants: Jeffries Lumber Co., Washington, N. C.; Moore of Bedford, Inc., Bedford, Va.; Novelty Furniture Co., Fayetteville, N. C.; Gullet Gin Co., Amite, La.; Champion Garment Co., Rome, Ga.; Consolidated Quarries Corporation, Lithonia, Ga.; Shamrock Oil & Gas Corporation, Sunray, Texas; Magnolia Petroleum Co., Beaumont, Texas; Halifax Paper Co., Roanoke Rapids, N. C.; Hercules Powder Co., Hattiesburg, Miss.; M. G. Waters Co., Washington, N. C.; American Rubber Corp., Huntsville, Ala.; Armour Fertilizer Co., Greensboro, N. C.; American Oil Co., Norfolk, Va.; Bryant Heater Co., Tyler, Texas.

Employes of the Frost Lumber Industries of Texas recently voted 123 to 63 for the IWA-CIO in an NLRB election held exactly nine months after the petition for the election was filed. The CIO win in the Nacogdoches mill was the second in the Frost lumber chain. Earlier, the CIO Organizing Committee registered a 222-34 victory for the IWA-CIO in the Frost mill in Waskom.

CONGRESS ADJOURNS Congress has adjourned after giving plenty of plums to big business and giving the working people of the nation THE business. Congress did not pass any adequate legislation on housing, so much needed by the people. It continued stabbing labor in the back and protecting greed. From the human point of view it has been the worst Congress on record. Labor will long remember.

The Republican Party Convention is on in Philadelphia and from all indications nothing constructive for the common people will emanate from it. More organizing, educating and more political activizing by labor through the PAC is the real effective answer.

Potofsky Dedicates Hillman Memorial

More than 1,000 persons made a pilgrimage on June 12 to the grave of Sidney Hillman, late president of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, in Mt. Hope Cemetery, Westchester, N. Y. Hillman died on July 10, 1946, at the age of 59, after leading the Amalgamated for 32 years.

Jacob S. Potofsky, Hillman's successor as Amalgamated president and his close associate for 36 years, made the principal address, dedicating the Hillman mausoleum at Mt. Hope. He was surrounded by his colleagues in the Amalgamated General Executive Board. Rabbi Ahron Opher, Executive Secretary of the Synagogue Council of America, officiated.

Hyman Blumberg, Amalgamated executive vice-president, served as chairman of the Hillman Memorial Committee. Potofsky, in his address at the grave, declared that his predecessor, "because of his superb gifts and his great strivings for mankind, will remain forever alive."

CIO Lists Four Summer Schools

Four CIO leadership training courses have planned this summer by the CIO Department of Research & Education for various parts of the country.

The school for the Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska area will be held Aug. 22-28 at the Montebello Vacation House, Kimmswick, Mo.

The Rocky Mountain area summer school has been set for Aug. 28-Sept. 4, at a YWCA in Estes Park, Colo.

The school for CIO'ers in Western Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virgiania and West Virginia will be held Aug. 15-21 in New Windsor, Md., and for those in the South, a training course will be run Sept. 19-Oct. 2 at Highlander Folk School, Monteagle, Tenn.

Further information about the schools may be obtained from Associate Director of Education George Guernsey, National CIO, 718 Jackson Pl., Washington 6, D. C.

Mrs. Smith Nominated In Maine

IF THE nation goes as Maine went last week, there'll be a decided swing toward liberalism in November.

That citadel of rock-ribbed Republicanism has shattered its tradition by nominating (and in Maine this in tantamount to election) a Republican woman as Senator—and a liberal (by Maine standards, at least).

Decisively swamping three opponents—two of them millionaires—Rep. Margaret Chase Smith took the Republican nomination with a 32,359 plurality. Her wealthy opponents were Gov. Horace Hildreth and former Gov. Sumner Sewall. Also in the race was Albion P. Beverage.

Mrs. Smith thus will become the second woman to serve in the Senate. The first was Hattie Carraway of Arkansas.

Although the CIO membership in agricultural Maine is not large enough to be a decisive factor in elections, Rep. Smith had the support of the CIO Shoe, Textile, Office & Professional and Clothing Workers.

During the rigorous campaign preceding the primary, Rep. Smith's opponents reprinted and distributed a 1946 CIO News voting record, which showed her as siding with labor on 11 out of 12 key issues.

The circular accompanying the reprint lambasted Mrs. Smith with the "accusation" that "she supported the demands of the CIO."

In the 80th Congress Rep. Smith voted for the Taft-Hartley law but she strongly opposed the anti-labor Barlow Bill in her own state, which is slated for a referendum vote this November.

Ohio CIO School

The Ohio CIO's fourth annual summer school will be held Sept. 12-17 at Camp Tar Hollow, 16 miles from Chillicothe. In previous years it has been held at Antioch College. Keynote speaker will be Kermit Eby, National CIO education and research director.

A Town Turns Out To Help the Strike

BEHIND every strike there are countless untold stories of the selfless cooperation of non-striking unionists and non-union friends in the community—cooperation that helps keep strikers on the picket lines.

This is the story of how one non-striking local—CIO Packinghouse Local 9 at the Hormel plant in Austin, Minn.—got behind its striking brothers. But it is more than that. It is tangible proof that the sympathy and cooperation of the community can be enlisted if the strikers' case is put before them.

During the nine weeks of the nationwide packinghouse strike members of Local 9 contributed $131,558.12 to the strikers. But they didn't stop there.

They enlisted the help of the businessmen—and all but a few contributed. Before the city-wide drive began, the Local's Pres. Frank W. Schultz presented the strikers' case before the Austin Chamber of Commerce. Business and labor had to prosper together, he reminded them. He assured them that no pressure would be used to obtain their contributions; that, in fact, if the contributions weren't from the heart, the union didn't want them.

Armed with a list laboriously combed out of the city directory, the union began canvassing every business and professional establishment in this city of over 18,000 people.

The finance committee devoted three full days to this task, and when it was completed, all but a handful of business and professional men had contributed a total of $3,718.50.

Nor did Local 9 stop there. A food and clothing committee rolled up its sleeves. It was headed by Rev. Father D. A. Cunningham, Queen of Angels Parish; Rev. Carl Oberleiter, Grace Lutheran Church, and Mrs. Francis Sullivan, wife of a Packinghouse Worker and active in local welfare work.

Even the schools went all-out to help the strikers. Having obtained a go-ahead signal from the school board, the committee launched a food collection drive in the public and parochial schools. Every school child in the city piled his article of food on the heap. Undoubtedly many of them learned for the first time the meaning of the word strike.

"CIO," commented CIO Minnesota Director Fullerton Fulton, "can well be proud to point to Austin, Minn., for the job it has done."

Union Group Quits American Legion

The National Conference of Union Labor Legionnaires has withdrawn from the American Legion and has established a new organization of union labor veterans which plans "to fight against the undemocratic activities of the American Legion."

The conference, composed of trade union members of the Legion was formed in 1938. Its purpose was "to establish within the American Legion democratic principles beneficial to the rank and file veterans of organized labor."

It was announced that the conference which held its 10th annual convention at Chicago, that the group's activities had created a demand "from other veterans' organizations, unaffiliated veterans of organized labor and from organized labor" for a broadening of its membership.

Because the Legion has continued to discriminate against organized labor by refusing to charter trade union posts, the conference unanimously adopted a resolution to include any person sympathetic to organized labor who served in the United States forces or with any of the allies of the United States during time of war and was discharged honorably.

The group changed its name to the National Conference of Union Labor at the same meeting. Richard Reisinger, Cleveland, Ohio, regional Auto Workers director, is chairman of the re-organization committee.

Speakers at the conference included Meyer Bernstein, CIO veterans representative and Eugene Cotton, CIO Packinghouse Workers counsel. Both pointed out how the T-H law operates against labor.

The conference passed resolutions urging repeal of the T-H law, defeat of the Mundt-Nixon bill and passage of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill.

BEAUTIES AID UNION: The campaign which netted Auto Workers' Local 887 at North American Aviation, Inc., 6249 new members was climaxed by a rally at Los Angeles, Calif. Prizes were awarded by the models pictured here with UAW officials. L. to r., Rita Mellus; George B. Roberts, PAC representative; Noah Tauscher, assistant UAW Regional Director; Dorothy Huff; C. V. O'Halloran, UAW Regional Director; June Bright, former Powers model, and George Douglas, CIO Field Representative. No wonder the drive reached a successful conclusion.

THE ADVENTURES OF JIM BARRY

PETE DELLY—ANGRY BECAUSE UNION WORK KEPT HIS FIANCEE, MARGIE WILSON, OUT ALMOST EVERY NIGHT—BROKE HIS ENGAGEMENT.... AND THUS STARTED A CHAIN-REACTION OF HEART TROUBLE.....

I KNOW JIM LOVES ME! BUT MARGIE IS PRETTY..... IN TROUBLE... AND WILL HANG ON TO JIM... AND IF HE KEEPS SEEING ENOUGH OF HER.... SOMETHING MIGHT HAPPEN....

I'M A FOOL.... BUT STILL... I CAN'T SLEEP FOR THINKING.... BOSH! IT'S GETTING LIGHT OUTSIDE! I'LL HAVE TO BE GETTING BACK TO THE OFFICE SOON!

THERE WAS LITTLE SLEEP FOR JIM THAT NIGHT, TOO.....

FUNNY HOW MARGIE'S FACE KEEPS POPPING INTO MY MIND ALL THE TIME... CAN'T BE I'M FALLING FOR HER... SHE'S PRETTY—AND NEEDS HELP! BUT THAT'S AS FAR AS MY INTEREST IN HER GOES...

AND IN MARGIES ROOM....

PETE'LL COME BACK TO ME... I LOVE HIM SO MUCH! AND JIM IS SO SWEET... PLAYING AT LOVE WITH JIM TO MAKE PETE JEALOUS... GEE! I HOPE PEGGY DOESN'T TAKE IT TOO SERIOUSLY... 'CAUSE WE WON'T BE SERIOUS ABOUT IT.... OR... OR WILL WE?

NOT FAR AWAY... IN AN ALL-NIGHT DINER....

THIS IS ALL CRAZY! I'M IN LOVE WITH MARGIE AND SHE LOVES ME... WHY DID I HAVE TO LOSE MY TEMPER AND WALK OUT ON HER? WHY? COULDN'T I CONVINCE HER TO STOP AT LEAST SOME OF HER UNION RUNNING AROUND?

EVERYTHING I BECOME.... EVERYTHING I'VE GOT.... I OWE TO MY UNION.... A GOOD JOB WITH SECURITY... GOOD WAGES... A CHANCE TO HOLD UP MY HEAD LIKE A MAN.... AND HERE I AM TRYING TO GET MY GIRL TO WALK OUT OF UNION WORK!

BUT IT WASN'T REALLY UNION WORK SHE WAS DOING... I UNDERSTAND AN ORGANIZING DRIVE... OR A STRIKE FOR HIGHER WAGES... OR SOMETHING LIKE THAT....

BUT POLITICAL ACTION... GETTING MIXED UP IN THE ELECTIONS—THAT'S NOT SOMETHING FOR UNIONS TO DO! THAT'S GOT NOTHING TO DO WITH WAGES AND WORKING CONDITIONS...

OH, SHUCKS! WHAT'S THE USE OF GOING TO MY ROOM TONIGHT! I'LL NEVER GET TO SLEEP!

I RECKON THET'S ABOUT JUST WHUT WOULD BE A-HAPPENING, PETE! IF YUH CAN'T GET NO SLEEP—MEBBE YOU'D LIKE TO HAVE A TALK WITH ME?

New Injunctions Halt Maritime Strike Again

THREE new injunctions issued under the Taft-Hartley Act have halted a maritime and longshore strike of 100,000 scheduled for June 24.

Issued over the strong protests of union officials, who warned that such a move would only "aggravate instead of settle" the dispute, the no-strike orders were granted at Pres. Truman's request.

The order issued in New York City forbids a strike for 80 days. Those issued in Cleveland and San Francisco extend previous temporary restraining orders for another 10 days.

The seven maritime unions originally set June 16 as their strike deadline. On issuance of the temporary injunctions, the date was moved up to June 24.

NMU Pres. Joseph Curran, in testimony before Federal Judge John W. Clancy in New York City, warned that if an 80-day injunction were slapped against the unions, it would only leave the dispute unsettled until the end of the 80-day period when the unions would again be free to strike.

Five CIO Maritime unions, an independent and an AFL union are involved. They are the Natl. Maritime Union, Longshoremen and Warehousemen, Marine Engineers Beneficial Association, Marine Cooks and Steward, American Radio Association, Pacific Coast Marine Firemen, Oilers, Watertenders and Wipers (independent) and the AFL Electrical Brotherhood.

With none of the unions did the employers attempt an agreement on wages and working conditions. This led to the unions' charge, also hinted by a presidential fact-finding board, that the employers exhibited "bad faith."

The employers based their refusal to riscuss such issues on the argument that the question of the unions' much-prized hiring hall must first be settled. They asked changes which would prevent union members from receiving hiring preference. Such alterations, the unions contended, were tantamount to wrecking union security and destroying numerous reforms brought by the union hiring hall.

Meanwhile, in the dispute over the legality of the hiring hall, the employers won another government agent to their side. NLRB Trial Examiner Howard Myers, in a case involving four Great Lakes shipping companies and the NMU, ruled the hiring hall on the Great Lakes "clearly repugnant to the (Taft-Hartley) Act."

Ohio CIO Plans Pay Roll Tax Test

The Ohio CIO is planning a legal test of the payroll tax enacted at Columbus, Ohio, in a special election following a high-pressure campaign by the city administration and the local press.

"The payroll tax fight is not a local issue," Ohio CIO Sec.-Treas. William Lavelle said in announcing this action. "It is a state—in fact a national issue, for Columbus has been used as a guinea pig in an attempt to change the entire pattern of taxation in America."

Every agency in the city government took part in the campaign to put the tax over.

Industry Deaths, 400 in 3 Months

Four hundred American industrial workers died and 5,400 suffered permanent physical impairment as the result of injuries received on the job in the first three months of 1948, according to the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Some 114,800 employes were disabled for one or more days by work injuries received during the first quarter of the year, the BLS estimates. Working time lost during the quarter by these injured persons is estimated at 2,296,000 man-days, representing an estimated value of more than $18 million in wages alone.

Highest rate of accidents in the manufacturing industries listed was saw and planing mills, with iron foundries and wooden containers the next two highest.

Labor Editor Unable To Accept Scholarship

Svend Godfredsen, editor and educational director for the United Packinghouse Workers, has cause for a double grudge against the meat packers whose refusal to grant a wage increase provoked the long and bitter strike.

If it hadn't been for that strike, Godfredsen could have taken advantage of a scholarship to attend a six weeks' labor school in Sormarka, Norway offered him by the American Scandinavian Foundation shortly before the big packinghouse strike.

The scholarship was granted by the Transport Workers of Norway and the Norwegian Labor Party.

Vets' Housing Plea Falls on Deaf Ears

An urgent plea for action on housing was sent to the Republican National Convention by national chairman Chat Paterson of the American Veterans Committee.

Paterson said that if the convention does not put an adequate housing plank in its platform, the Republican program would be considered "a fraud as far as veterans are concerned."

The AVC chief said the housing plank must include specific approval of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill, including public housing features. The Republican platform failed even to mention TEW, but called for Federal aid to states and cities, where private industry had failed to provide homes.

CIO Becomes OIC For AFL-LLPC

CIO has its Political Action Committee, and the AFL its Labor's League for Political Education.

And the AFL also has a monthly magazine, American Federationist, whose back cover not so long ago carried a plea urging union members to register and vote.

Adorning the page was a picture which Joseph Appelbaum, St. Louis, Mo., CIO Chemical Workers' regional director, reports was taken at meeting of Chemical Workers Local 6. Appelbaum wrote Chemical Workers' Intl. Pres. Martin Wagner:

"I just thought that you would get a kick out of this, seeing that AFL uses a CIO local union to emphasize its point."

CIO Greeting Ends Visits Of Police

"WE'RE glad to have the officers of the law present. They are here to see that this meeting is not disturbed because they know that under the law you have the right to organize."

That was Texas CIO Director Robert Oliver's surprise "greeting" to city and county police when they swarmed into a union meeting at the rate of one officer to every six unionists. What's more, he invited the bluecoats to sit right down front in the "guest" seats.

And that was the end of police interference with the CIO's organizing campaign at the Frost Lumber Industries in Nacogdoshes, Texas.

There were plenty of other headaches before the CIO Woodworkers won that election, but it was a young newswoman who did much to bring about the victory.

Mrs. Lucille Fain, reporter for the Nacogdoshes Sentinel, refused to flavor her stories with anti-union propaganda, kept them fair and objective.

"I imagine she raised the collective blood pressure in this section," said CIO Organizing Committee staff member Paul White, "but she certainly stuck by her guns all the way through."

80th Congress' Record Bad Outweighs Good

FIVE days after Congress had folded its tents and silently disappeared in the night—or in Philadelphia—your national capital was hot and quiet.

The temperature was knocking into the nineties, the humidity was fierce. You could get a room in a hotel without being a brother-in-law of the manager, and the telegraph wires running out of this big news center operated at sub-normal.

The reason for the heat and the quiet could be—though not necessarily—a reaction to the Eightieth Congress. Lots of folks around the country seemed mad and heated at the Eightieth's record, and lots of Congressmen would just as soon you forgot about that record.

(The CIO News will publish a voting guide — with the record of Congressmen and Senators on major issues—to help you remember until November).

GOOD OR FAIR MEASURES PASSED

1. European Recovery Program and a $6 billion appropriation to back it up for the first 15 months.
2. Rent control: extended—but not nearly as strong as it should have been.
3. GI Terminal Leave Bonds: GI's to cash their bonds at any time.
4. GI Apprenticeship Benefits: Increase in benefits to vets in on-the-job training positions.

BAD BILLS PASSED

1. Taft-Hartley Act.
2. Wage-Hour Amendments—under guise of outlawing portal suits, wage-hour law was badly whittled down.
3. Gearhart Proposals: A bill and a joint resolution which keep a million people out of social security system.
4. Reed-Bulwinkle Bill: It gives railroads a good chance of getting completely out of the anti-trust law on rate fixing.
5. "Spare-the-Rich" Tax Bill: Wealthy families get big tax cuts; the rest of us get peanuts.
6. Labor Dept. weakened: The U. S. Employment Service was torn out of Labor Dept., made a minor bureau in Federal Security Agency.
7. Peacetime Draft: Labor, church groups opposed it and lost.

BILLS NOT PASSED

1. Civil rights legislation: Nothing got through—polltax ban, anti discrimination bill, anti-lynch bill all were lost.
2. Aid to Education: It passed Senate, got lost in House.
3. Housing Bill: Taft-Ellender-Wagner Bill passed Senate, was strangled in House. What came out was a minor bill insuring loans made by banks to veterans—but big housing crisis still remains.
4. 75 cents Minimum Wage: Much talk, no action.
5. Health Insurance: Not even much talk.
6. Social Security Improvements: Nothing was passed, though many Congressmen wanted better coverage, better payments.
7. Anti-inflation: It died early this year.
8. Removal of oleomargarine tax: The dairy state bloc stopped this one.
9. Mundt-Nixon Bill: You can be glad this one got lost. It would deal body blow to civil liberties.

"Congressman Wolcott should try this type of housing."

L. A. Labor Chapter Chartered By AVC

The natl. policy committee of the American Veterans Committee recently chartered a new Los Angeles Labor Chapter led by anti-Communist trade unionists.

Leaders in the move to set up the chapter included CIO Field Rep. Douglas and several other CIO leaders.

The AVC committee also chose Joseph A. Clorety to replace Richard Bolling as natl. vice chairman. Bolling resigned last month to seek, with labor endorsement, a Democratic congressional nomination in Kansas City, Mo.

Clorety has been AVC natl. secretary. The resignation of Andrew L. Newman as editor of the AVC Bulletin and publicity director was also accepted. Newman will be associated with the Marshall Plan News Letter. He has been succeeded by Sam Geison, New York City.

Rewards Offered In L. A. Bombing

A reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction or any person or persons found guilty of bombing the Los Angeles home of Morris Zusman, PAC state director in Cailfornia, has been offered by CIO unions in the area.

Last week the Amalgamated Clothing Workers Joint Board offered $1,000, the Los Angeles Committee for the National CIO, $100, and the regional office of the United Steelworkers, $100. Other unions are expected to contribute additional amounts, CIO Regional Director Irwin L. DeShetler said in letters sent to Mayor Fletcher Bowron of Los Angeles, and other city and county officials.

Tenn. Anti-Closed Shop Law Headed For Test

The way was cleared for appealing Tennessee's 1947 anti-closed shop law to the U. S. Supreme Court when the state supreme court at Nashville, Tenn., clarified its previous ruling by making it more ironclad. The court found that not only is the law constitutional but picketing for a closed or union shop is illegal. The court had previously held such picketing legal even though it upheld the state law. The union involved is the AFL Teamsters.

VACATION TIME: Before the CIO was formed most industrial workers got vacations only when plants were closed down—when "No Help Wanted" signs were placed on factory gates. It's different now. Millions of workers this summer are getting one, two or three weeks off—with pay—because union contracts contain vacation clauses. So, it's off to the beach or the woods for those who have been able to save a bit despite the cost of living. Story on P. 8.

Truman Signs Housing, DP, Trade Bills 'With Regrets'

WITH Congress scattered to the four corners of the nation, Pres. Truman spent last week "signing with regrets."

The President placed his name on three major pieces of legislation. In each case he voiced sharp criticism of the 80th Congress for failing to do a better job, but said he felt the bills—so far as they go—should become law.

The bills signed by the President:

● A secondary mortgage guarantee bill: "Hasty patchwork . . . bears no resemblance to the comprehensive housing program, the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill . . . fails to provide for farm housing or for slum clearance . . . there can be no excuse for such slipshod legislation.

● The displaced persons bill: "It is with very great reluctance that I have signed (this bill) . . . It is a close question whether this bill is better or worse than no bill at all . . . It mocks the American tradition of fair play . . . The bill discriminates in callous fashion against displaced persons of the Jewish faith . . . it excludes many displaced persons of the Catholic faith . . . there are many other seriously objectionable features. . . ."

● The reciprocal trade agreements: "Unfortunately this act extends for only one year the authority to enter into reciprocal trade agreements. It also makes unwise changes in the procedure. . . . I regret very much that the Congress has not seen fit to renew this authority for the customary three-year period. . . . The act prescribes a new, complicated, time-consuming and unnecessary procedure for the negotiation of new agreements."

ALL three of the statements repeated the sharp criticism of Congress that the President voiced during his cross-country tour. But his strongest words were used in the message on housing legislation.

The bill rushed through Congress in the final days, in place of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner Bill, increases the amount available for government purchase of home mortgages, and it "purports" to liberalize government power to insure mortgages on veterans housing cooperatives.

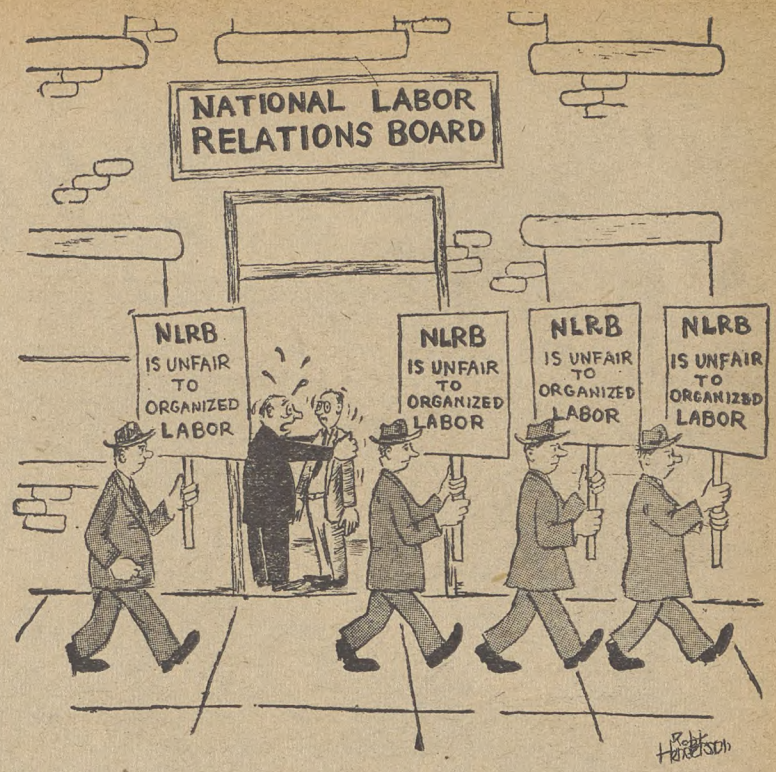
Even in these two respects, the bill is "seriously defective," Pres. Truman said, because it "actually eliminates" an existing aid to urgently needed rental housing; and so far as the vet housing co-ops are concerned, "the bill is practically worthless."

Contrasted with the Taft-Ellender-Wagner proposals, this bill was properly labeled as the "Teeny-Weeny" bill, the President charged.

It fails to provide for housing research, for financial aid on big-scale home-building projects, or for aid in making pre-fabricated homes, he pointed out. It fails to provide for farm housing, slum clearance, low-cost rental housing, or for public home building for the low-rent market.

"The failure to pass decent housing legislation is a sad disappointment to the millions of our people who are so desperately in need of homes," he said. "We cannot accept as final a decision reached by such undemocratic methods.

"This is one of the many jobs left unfinished by the 80th Congress."



"Get Denham to call Judge Goldsborough at once! We need to issue another injunction!"

No Blue-Penciling Allowed On Politician's Radio Talks

With the '48 election campaign barely under way, the Federal Communications Commission has ruled that political candidates may not be censored by radio stations.

The FCC, handing down a final ruling in the Port Huron Broadcasting Co. case, barred station managements from blue-pencilling remarks by candidates for political office—even if the stations consider the remarks clearly libelous.

The Communications Act of 1934, the FCC said, clearly specifies that no station may have power to censor the talks of political candidates.

Result of censoring remarks considered libelous or slanderous by the station would be to place the station squarely in the midst of political issues, the FCC pointed out. In most voting contests, "the record of the persons and party in office is up for the voters' inspection," the Commission noted, and the "personal honesty" or motives of the candidates may be a principal issue.

In such cases, statements may be libelous or they may be true—but if the power to censor them is given to broadcasting companies, they have "a positive weapon of discrimination between contesting candidates." That's not what Congress wanted, the Commission said.

If libelous statements are made, the speaker rather than the station can be sued. The station is protected because of the federal law's requirement that stations must exert no censorship over political talks, the FCC stated.

The Commission's decision noted that stations may refuse to carry any political speeches at all. But if they allow one candidate for office to speak, time must be made available to all his opponents on request.

Opposition to the Port Huron decision, which was released in tentative form several months ago, was voiced by the Natl. Association of Broadcasters. CIO hailed the decision as a move toward strengthening free speech on the airwaves.

JAMES B. CAREY
Named ECA Adviser

Carey Is Named ECA Adviser

CIO Sec.-Treas.. James B. Carey has been named by Pres. Truman to the 12-man advisory board set up to help Administrator Paul Hoffman run the Economic Cooperation Administration.

The ECA operates the European recovery program on behalf of the United States. The advisory group is charged with studying progress of the program overseas, working out plans for more effective American aid, and noting effects of the recovery program on our own economic system.

Carey was a member of the Harriman Committee which last year reported on the detailed needs of the program and made recommendations for the ERP setup.

Named to the committee, along with the CIO officer, were Sec.-Treas. George Meany of the AFL and Sec. A. E. Lyon of the Railway Labor Executives Association.

Also appointed were heads of the big three farm groups, as well as former Gov. Herbert Lehman of New York; Jonathan Daniels, North Carolinian publisher and onetime aide to former Pres. Roosevelt; and Eric Johnston.

European Unions Ask Voice in Handling ERP

TRADE unions in the "Marshall Plan" countries of Europe have taken steps to assure themselves a direct voice in the handling of the European Recovery Program.

Meeting at Paris, leaders of unions in the aid-receiving nations made plans to have their group recognized as the permanent advisory committee for the Organization for European Economic Recovery. The "OEEC" is the cooperative group set up by the countries in the aid program to handle their end of the program.

In addition, the unions will seek to place labor representatives directly in the OEEC administrative machinery, to insure full recognition for labor and its needs in the various European countries.

The meeting, third in a series since the committee was formed at the invitation of the British Trades Union Congress last March, was attended by Michael Ross, CIO's director of international affairs.

Averell Harriman, roving U. S. ambassador to handle ERP problems, told the group that American assistance was designed to give Europe the "extra" amounts of food, raw materials and machinery necessary to bring about normal conditions and decent living standards.

News Guild Head Chosen For ECA Post in Paris

THE CIO Newspaper Guild has given its president, Harry Martin, an indefinite leave of absence to serve as labor information specialist to Paul G. Hoffman, administrator of the Economic Cooperation Administration.

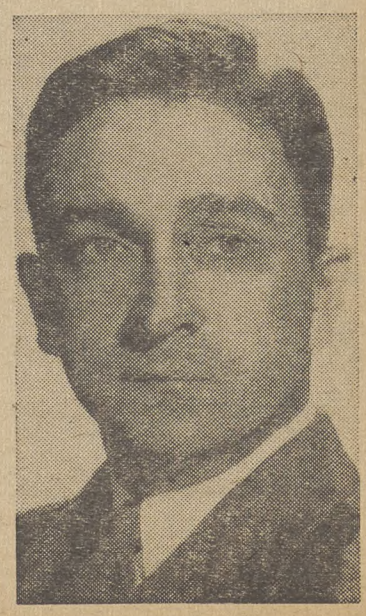
The leave and the appointment were announced at the Guild's 13th annual convention, held last week in San Francisco. The leave was granted by the convention at the request of Hoffman. Martin will be stationed in Paris, where he will work in close contact with W. Averell Harriman, overseas representative of ECA.

The Guild convention pledged wholehearted support to CIO policy, unanimously adopting a resolution rejecting a third party in 1948 and indorsing the Marshall Plan. The third party stand was taken after detailed reports on political action and the record of Congress were given by Vice Pres. Dorothy Rockwell of Philadelphia and Washington, in which she accused the legislators of being "reactionary" and as having adopted a "do nothing" attitude toward the problems of the people.

IN a letter to the convention, the ECA's Hoffman declared: "I know Martin personally and have a high regard for him. There is a vital function for him to perform in relation to the ECA program."

Martin, who also obtained a leave of absence from his position as amusements editor for the Scripps-Howard Memphis Commercial Appeal, served as a member of the official American delegation to the United Nations freedom of press conference this year at Geneva, Switzerland. While overseas, he made a number of addresses to labor groups in Italy, Germany and Austria.

Martin, founder and first president of one of the first guild locals in the South, was a vice president of the ANG from 1938 to 1942, when he enlisted in the Navy. After four years' service, he returned to his newspaper job. Last fall he was elected ANG president.



HARRY MARTIN

ANG Asks Firing Action

The CIO Newspaper Guild Convention—less than 24 hours after unanimously adopting a resolution rejecting Henry Wallace's third party—last week criticized one of its largest locals for refusal to take up a grievance of a member fired by a newspaper because he admitted membership in the Communist Party.

The local is Washington, D. C. The member is Thomas Buchanan, a reporter for the Washington Star. The resolutions committee gave the convention a resolution which reiterated the Guild's "traditional" policy of not discriminating against a member for race, religion, national origin or political belief. A Washington delegate moved a substitute which would have absolved the local. The substitute was beaten on a roll call, 273 to 18. The original then passed overwhelmingly on a voice vote. It advises the Washington local to handle the grievance.

SHORT AND SWEET: Mass picket lines weren't necessary to discourage scabbing in last week's quickie strike of CIO Farm Equipment workers at 9 Intl. Harvester plants. It took them two days and only token pickets to settle the issue. Here picket Alden Nederhood sits comfortably on a crate as an officer waits for him to do some "violence."

Steel Union Wins 10-16c At Alcoa; 14c at Timken

By GLORIA CAPLAN

AN 11th-hour raise of from 10 to 16c an hour headed off a strike by 25,000 Aluminum Company of America employes. The walkout was scheduled for midnight June 26; agreement with the CIO Steelworkers was reached 30 hours before the deadline.

The new agreement will run until May 31, 1950, and may be reopened in May 1949 for wage discussion. If negotiations fail at that time, the union has the right to strike.

Soon after the CIO pact was reached, the AFL Aluminum Workers' union, which represents 6,500 in four Alcoa plants, accepted the same terms. The two unions had agreed to walk out together if no accord was reached by the strike deadline.

More than 14,000 Steelworkers in five Timken Roller Bearing plants in Ohio will benefit from a 14c hourly increase and wage inequity adjustments, won just seven hours before a strike deadline. In addition, the company will pay 3¾c an hour to correct inequities, with payments retroactive as far back as Dec. 23, 1943.

In Conshohocken, Pa., last week, the Steelworkers pried one basic steel plant loose from the industry's heretofore solid "no increase" line.

USA District 7 Director H. Charles Ford said a 10c hourly increase for 2200 employes at the Alan Wood Steel Co. was the first boost in the nation to be granted by a basic steel plant.

Ship and Rail: The Pennsylvania Railroad was presented with a demand for a 25c hourly raise for 50,000 non-operating employes as the CIO Railroad Workers, affiliated with the Shipbuilding workers, began wage talks.

In addition, the union seeks a reduction in the work week from 48 to 40 hours.

As the company broke off wage talks to take time to prepare counter proposals, Robert Walkinshaw, union negotiating committee chairman, charged the company with stalling negotiations.

"We were faced with a negotiating team which, at best, was no more than a second team. They told us they would 'report and consult,' but obviously they were not authorized to make any binding agreements," he asserted.

The union's contract talks with Bethlehem Steel Co. for some 30,000 shipyard workers have been stymied by the company's flat refusal to grant a raise, insisting employes don't need one. Talks will be resumed July 8, IUMWA Pres. John Green said.

Farm Equipment: Some 35,000 CIO Farm Equipment workers in nine Intl. Harvester plants have returned to work with an 11c hourly raise, retroactive to June 28, and other contract benefits intact, following a two-day strike.

The walkout followed the company's insistence on changing provisions of the old contract which, the union felt, would weaken its status. Another issue in dispute was the effective date of the wage increase, which was accepted by the union before the walkout. The agreement makes it retroactive to the day before the strike began.

Telephone: Possibility of a nationwide telephone tie-up entered the national picture last week as 23,000 CIO Communications Equipment Workers got hot under the collar about Western Electric's refusal to consider a raise increase.

Protesting the company's refusal to bargain, the ACEW began its "cold war" by picketing every major telephone exchange in the country. (Western Electric is a subsidiary of the American Telephone & Telegraph Corp.).

If this fails, said union officials, a strike may be the only recourse. In a union-wide vote the membership approved strike action by a margin of four to one.

The union, affiliated with the CIO Telephone Organizing Committee, is composed of telephone installers. Their average wage, according to one union spokesman, is $1.15 an hour. "Far too many of our workers are forced to work elsewhere evenings and during their spare time in order to earn the money necessary for keeping their families provided for," the spokesman said.

Maritime: An NLRB regional director, acting on charges of the Atlantic and Gulf Coast shipowners, has issued a complaint of unfair labor practices against the CIO Maritime Union and the CIO American Radio Association. July 12 and July 14 have been set for the hearings.

Issuing the complaint, Charles T. Douds said that in insisting on preferential hiring through their hiring halls the unions had committed an unfair labor practice.

Reeves R. Hilton, NLRB attorney who recently prosecuted a case against the NMU on the Great Lakes, will again argue the government's side. At that time Hilton won a decision from the trial examiner that the hiring hall is illegal under the Taft-Hartley Act.

The NMU, ARA and five other maritime unions are now working under an 80-day federal injunction which forbade a strike originally scheduled for June 15, contract expiration date.

Displeasure of the West Coast Longshoremen at being slapped with an injunction is finding expression in stickers now popping out on the waterfront: Some read: "There's ways and ways of cooling off for 80 days." Others say: "Safety Slogan: In watching safety, don't forget—you'll have phewmonia if you sweat."

Rubber: With the signing of a new two-year agreement providing an 11c hourly raise at U. S. Rubber Co. the CIO Rubber Workers has wrapped up its major contract talks this year.

The U. S. Rubber increase is retroactive to June 28, and the contract may be reopened for wage discussion again after May 1, 1949. Previously, Firestone, Goodrich and Goodyear had granted the same boost.

Food and Tobacco: Wage increases up to 12½c an hour for 10,000 workers at the Campbell Soup Co. plants in Camden, N. J. and Chicago, Ill., were jointly announced by representatives of the CIO Food and Tobacco Workers and the Campbell Soup Co.

The agreement will add approximately $3,000,000 a year to the workers' pay checks, plus some $200,000 in retroactive pay.

Unions To Courts: T-H Oath Violates 1st Amendment

CIO unions have launched legal assaults in Chicago and New York on the constitutionality of the Taft-Hartley's non-Communist affidavit provision.

- In Chicago, the United Steelworkers filed a brief in the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals asking that the affidavit clause be judged in violation of several sections of the Constitution.
- In New York, Local 65 of the Retail & Wholesale Employes Union is making plans to appeal to the Supreme Court a lower court decision on the affidavits. A special three-judge federal court ruled the affidavit section is legal.

(At its final session the High Court handed down a decision in a suit Brought by the Natl. Maritime Union, which had attacked both the affidavits and T-H's requirements that unions file financial statements.

(The Supreme Court ruled the financial provisions are constitutional but offered no ruling on the affidavits in the particular case.)

THE New York case grew out of the Retail & Wholesale local's effort to halt a Labor Board election asked by the AFL teamsters union at the Woolworth Co. Local 65 officers refused to sign the T-H affiidavits and the union was therefore ineligible to appear on the ballot.

The court's 2-1 decision to permit the NLRB election was not accompanied by a formal opinion, since the presiding judge said there was insufficient time to write one. Judge Simon Rifkind, who dissented, said that the bar to using NLRB facilities is not in accord with the First Amendment to the Constitution.

"It abridges the freedom of speech and the right of assembly without a showing of clear and present danger," he said in reference to the law.

Counsel for Local 65 sought without success to secure a temporary order from Supreme Court Justice Jackson ordering the election be postponed pending final decision in the case.

THE steel union attack on Taft-Hartley affidavits arose from the Inland Steel Co. case. In April the NLRB ordered the Indiana steel firm to bargain with the USA-CIO over pensions—provided the union filed affidavits within 30 days.

The union is asking the circuit court to set aside that proviso in the NLRB order, on grounds that the affidavits are contrary to Constitutional rights.

That section of T-H requiring affidavits "goes farther than any previous statutory attempt to suppress the freedoms granted by the First Amendment," the union brief charged, and "is an attempt to restrict freedom of belief."

Language of the affidavit is vague except as it applies to "members of the Communist Party," the brief said, and the wording does "not give notice of exactly what are the proscribed beliefs or activities . . ."

Recalling that CIO has often been wrongfully smeared as Communist or Communist-controlled, the steel union brief argued that the vagueness of the affidavit might lead to prosecution of union leaders. Taking exception to the vague language of the law, the brief asked:

"Of what avail is it to . . . Philip Murray to know in his heart that he is a patriotic American, that his activities and affiliations have in no way furthered the overthrow of government, and that his every effort has been devoted to the preservation and extension of progressive democratic institutions?"

HELP FOR ITALY: This cooperative clothing factory has been opened in Massacarrarra, Italy, by the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers to help the people of Italy rebuild their country's war-shattered economy. A demonstration welfare center made possible by a $29,000 donation from the CIO Community Services Committee is being run jointly by the YWCA and the CIO-CSC side by side with the clothing plant project.

IT JUST ISN'T SO!

Price increases are going to bite another chunk out of your dollar between now and the end of the year.

This, the economists say, will happen despite the fact that the poor old dollar is rapidly becoming a mere shadow of its former self.

And the unions will be blamed for the higher prices—if the corporations have their way.

You remember how it was after the "first round" of post-war pay hikes. Prices jumped up—way up—and the corporations said they had to impose the price increases to stay in business and "expand for the future."

The same thing happened after the "second round."

The corporate story sounded good to the careless observer, perhaps, but it convinced nobody who knew the facts.

And here are the facts:

The first two "rounds" brought labor an increase of 29% in straight-time hourly earnings.

During this period those granting the wage increases upped their prices 61%.

And their profits increased 116%.

Here's another—and—easier—way to figure it:

Corporation profits increased four times as much as the pay of their employes.

And to think that we'd been foolish enough to believe corporations had learned their lesson back in the lush 20's! ★ ★ ★

HERE'S SOME MORE PROOF

Events are making liars out of some of the most avid advocates of the restrictions placed on organized labor by the legalistic monstrosity called the Taft-Hartley Law—a pet of the 80th Congress.

You remember how it was?

Oh, no, the law wouldn't cause any harm to good, old, responsible outfits like the International Typographical Union.

The ITU has been fighting for its very life since shortly after the T-H Law was enacted.

And the public was told—time and again—that the new law was designed to "protect the workers by taking them from under the domination of union bosses."

Ask the maritime workers what they think of that one. This great "protection" is threatening to take the hiring hall away from them.

And the hiring hall was the instrument which took maritime workers out of the jungle of petty racketeering and job uncertainty.

The men who work on the wharves and man the ships said they'd strike "from now on" rather than back to the vicious "shape-up," where seniority and availability count for nothing.

Then Uncle Sam slapped an injunction on them. During the "cooling-off" period they're supposed to make up their minds to go back to some of the most vicious practices of the maritime industry. ★ ★ ★

GOP PLATFORM PLEASES NAM

The GOP platform is pretty good, says the NAM News, but it would have been even better if those in charge of it had paid more attention to recommendations of the NAM.

"The platform adopted by the Republican Convention in Philadelphia is a good document for the most part and fulfills the hopes of businessmen to a considerable degree," the NAM says.

It seems almost useless to mention that the CIO News and NAM News see things quite differently—but we'll mention it, anyhow.

The Cynic Says, 'Well, So What?'

But If He'll Look Around Him He'll Learn Things Are Not So Bad

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THE kids shot firecrackers and Roman candles, and the orators made good—and lousy—speeches about Washington and Jefferson and Tom Paine.

It was Independence Day—the Fourth of July—the birthday of a radical document conceived in the minds of men who wanted liberty and a lot of it.

The holiday was observed this year in traditional ways—by going to the beach and getting blistered by the sun, by going to picnics and eating too much food and getting a bit tight on beer, by watching thousands of dollars worth of powder go up in flame and smoke.

And — unfortunately — many of the merrymakers failed completely to appreciate what they were celebrating.

SO YOU think you're having troubles and that things are in a devil of a mess today?

Prices are too high and wages are too low. People are cooped up like chickens because of the housing shortage.

Russia is behaving like a spoiled, unprincipled brat. Many people are existing on the dregs of a totalitarian debacle.

There is disease and hunger and hopelessness in much of the world.

It isn't a pretty picture—no matter how you view it. And there was nothing pretty about the picture at which a small group of brave men looked back in 1776 when Tom Paine wrote:

"These are times that try men's souls . . ."

THOSE words were written when the revolutionists' hopes were at their lowest ebb and the future looked as dark as the inside of a black derby.

But the small group of brave men had something which much of the world does not possess today.

They had faith.

They had faith in the idea that "all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

And they gave the world a new nation—and the new nation gave the world a new concept of human behavior.

AT THIS point the cynic should stick out his pugnacious chin, shrug his shoulders and demand, "Well, so what?"

He should point out that many men, in both low and high places, have broken all the rules of democracy.

He should cite instances to show that the "American system" isn't hitting on all 16 cylinders.

And, by all means, he should seek to prove that we're headed toward Communism or Fascism.

Then somebody should tell the cynic that he's paying too darn much attention to the hole in the doughnut and not enough attention to the doughnut itself.

DON'T get too rough on the cynic, however, because you may learn that he saw a lot of the world over the edge of a foxhole during the war.

You may learn that he's on of those gadflies that keep poking us in the ribs because of our shortcomings.

And you may learn that he, too, has faith in this cockeyed country we call the U. S. . . . .

And that he got as tight as a tick on Independence Day because his mother-in-law has been heckling him—or because the first drink made him remember the little toast he and a buddy had drunk a few hours before a bomb blew Joe's brains out.

Don't worry too much about the cynics. Save your worry for those who deliberately and consciously try to undermine our system.

OH, SURE, we all get fed up at times with the way things are being run in America.

Then—if we're smart—we take a look around us at Italy and Germany, at Japan and China, at Russia and its satellites.

And we shudder a bit at what we see.

And we say to ourselves that things in the U. S. may be in a mess but that they're a damn sight better than they are elsewhere.

Honest comparison does much to restore faith.

Chinese School Grateful To CIO-CSC

IT'S a long, long way from the USA to Sandan, in West Kansu, China. And it's been a long time since the CIO Community Services Committee gave about $5400 for electrical equipment to be sent to a trade school of the Chinese Industrial Cooperatives (INDUSCO, Inc.).

The money was given to equip an electrical workshop set up to train Chinese workers at the Sandau Indusco Bailie School in handling electrical equipment, and to provide power for the smaller cooperative industries already established.

The great difficulties involved in getting the equipment to its destination in China were brought out in a letter of thanks just received by CIO-CSC Director Leo Perlis.

"The first parts of the electrical workshop have been landed in Hongkong, and sent on to Shanghai, where they await airlift to Lanchow," writes Rewi Alley, INDUSCO representative in China.

"When we hear of their arrival in Lanchow, our lads will take trucks down the road to haul (the equipment) here. Our New York office has written saying that the remainder of the material will be shipped from America this month. Our technical supervisor, Walter Illsley, went down to Shanghai from here in the early summer to see what could be done to expedite shipment. . . .

"Our electrical workshop has been built, and is operating with what material we have, under Hugh Elliott. The boys are most interested and useful work is being done. We hope that you feel it has been worth while to bring some of these basic things to a Chinese hinterland village, where we try to train lads to help their own people. We want you to know that we are grateful for all you have done for us."

Cost Of Illness

Sickness costs the country 600 million man-days of labor annually, according to the Committee for the Nation's Health. The people spent $5 billion in 1947 for medicine and medical care.

Tom's Words Led Unorganized To Revolt

THE world had been treating Tom roughly and shabbily and he could see no prospects for a bright future in the place where he was born.

So, at 37, he decided to pull up stakes and move to Philadelphia. When he arrived he was sick, nearly broke and poorly clad.

But he still had hope of making the world a better place in which to live.

He worked at odd jobs, regained his health and then became editor of a new magazine. But this didn't satisfy him.

He quit and, with only a small amount of money in his purse, undertook a task that helped change the course of history.

WHAT the people needed, Tom told himself, was organization. They needed to get solidly behind the new idea that was sweeping the land—an idea that might throw off the yoke of oppression.

He put his ideas down on paper and went to see a printer. In a short time his writings became a 47-page pamphlet.

Would it be a success or failure? Tom had failed before. But this time he had put his heart into his work.

Pamphlet sales began mounting. Before long 100,000 copies had been purchased. That was phenomenal, considering the circumstances.

Tom's ideas had an almost magical effect on his readers. Many of them threw their support behind the things he advocated.

No speech, no single publication had more to do with changing the trend of the times.

THERE was much intimidation and coercion to discourage those who believed as Tom did—but courageous men always step forward in a crisis.

And this was a crisis.

Men had died before fighting for causes in which they believed—and Tom and his cohorts knew there would be bloodshed before they achieved victory.

But they forged ahead. They wanted a full measure of human dignity and freedom for their fellow citizens.

Progress was slow and disheartening, but the leaders never gave up. After all, they had undertaken one of the most important organizing jobs in history.

LEADERS of the movement finally decided it was time to declare their intentions openly—time to serve notice that they intended to throw over the old system under which they had been working and living.

They got together and approved a document which one of their members had drafted. They argued and cajoled. They cut out a phrase here and added one there.

Finally they voted approval of the document.

The fat was in the fire. Tom and his friends knew there was no withdrawing—no half victory—no compromise.

THE going became tougher and tougher. Men double-crossed each other. Some sold out to the "bosses."

Tom was told something was needed to put spirit into the men. Tom sat down and wrote:

"These are times that try men's souls. . . . Tyranny, like hell, is not easily conquered; yet we have this condition with us, that the harder the conflict, the more glorious the triumph."

Gen. George Washington said later that Tom's article did much to rally his troops—troops that won a victory which gave real meaning to the Declaration of Independence.

Fourth of July orators usually talk about Washington and Jefferson—but there were others who played important roles in the fight for independence.

Among them was Tom Paine, who left his native England and helped found a new nation.

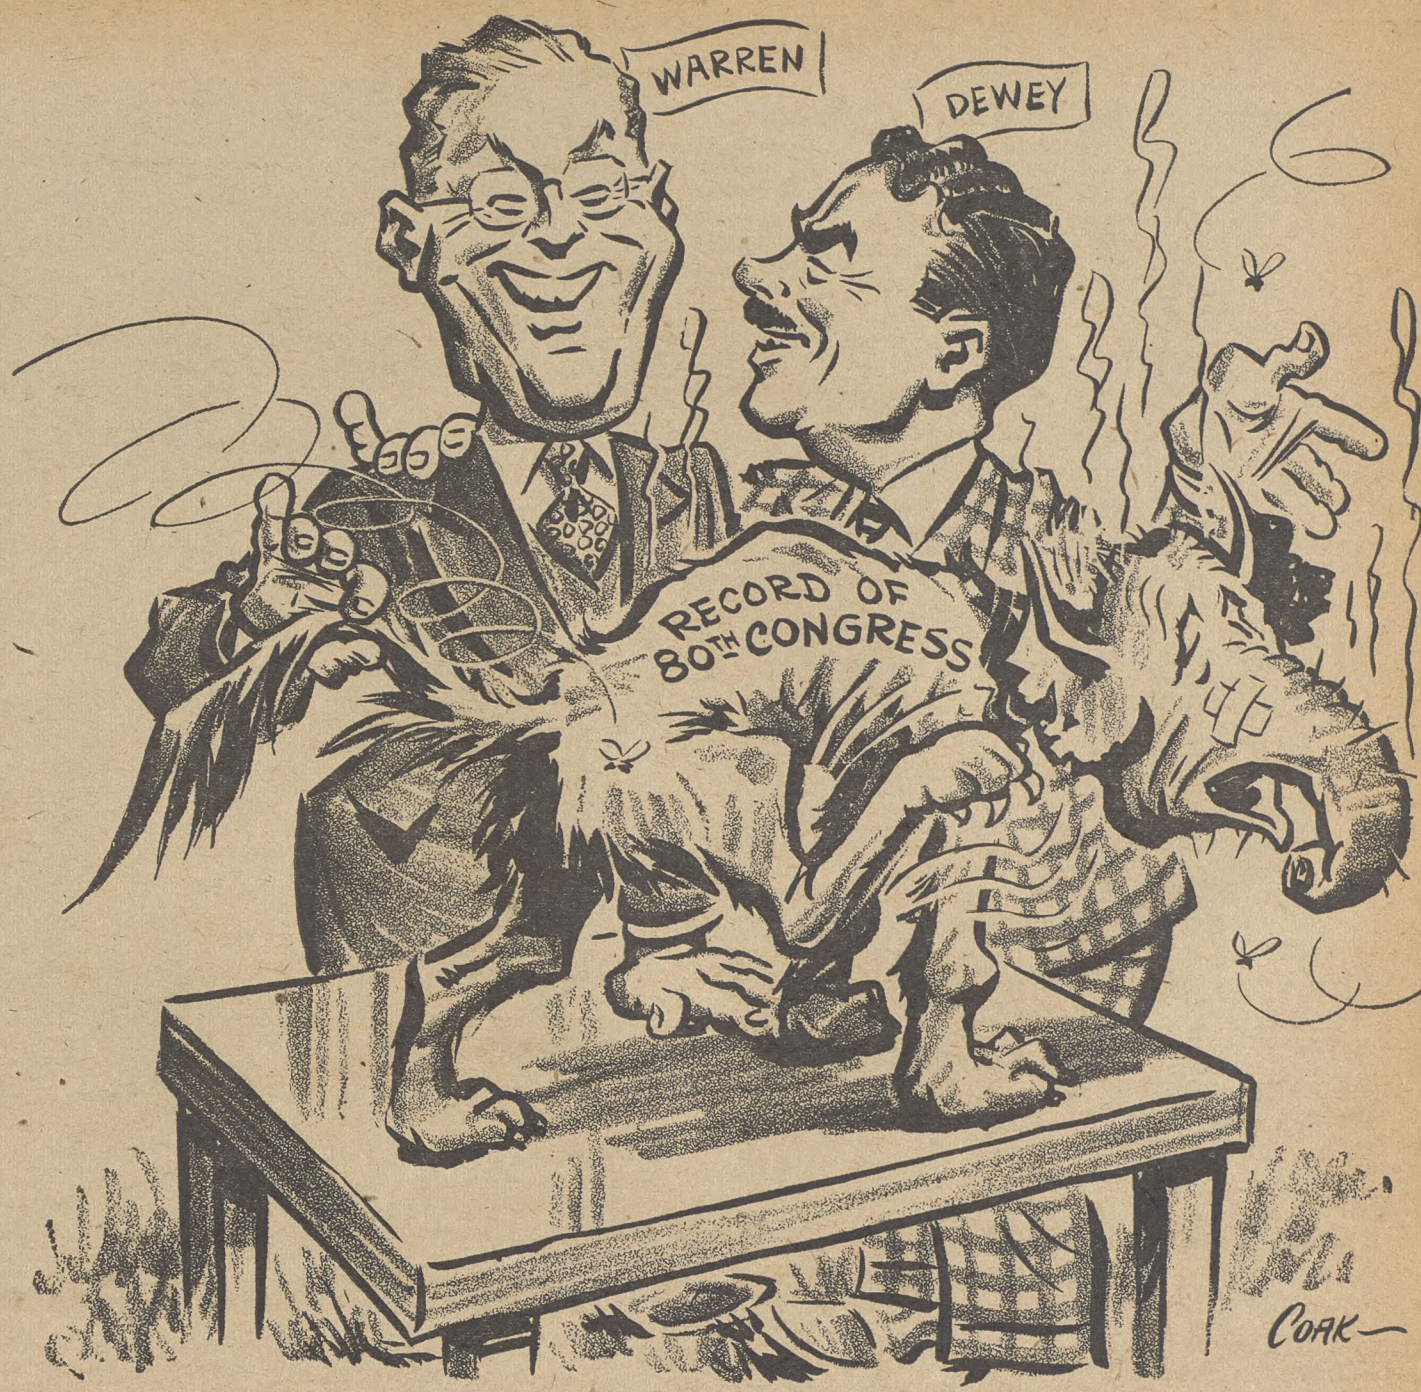
He Still Doesn't Look Like A Show Dog



They're Reading Phil Murray's Article On Beacon Hill

UP on Boston's swanky Beacon Hill, there's hardly a dowager who doesn't consider the staid old Atlantic Monthly as "must" reading.

Harvard professors read it cover-to-cover, with the same eagerness as the boys at Hialeah or Suffolk Downs scan Daily Racing Form.

This month the dowagers, the professors and other readers of the Atlantic are being given some unusual food for thought by CIO Pres. Philip Murray. The magazine contains an article by Murray on "The Gap Between Prices and Wages."

Labor's objective in America, Murray writes, is "an ever improving standard of living for all workers everywhere. . . .

"We must have a greater availability of products at lower prices so that the majority of the people can buy and consume.

"We must also have a larger share of the profit dollar going to the mass of American consumers in the form of increased wages."

But workers have been getting the short end of the stick. In the three years after January 1945, living costs jumped 31.4%, wages—before payment of taxes—rose only 11% and corporation profits—after taxes—soared 90%.

RISING profits, gained at the expense of wages, are making our American economy "unstable," Murray noted. "The average worker finds himself behind the eight-ball, unable to buy the things his family needs to maintain health and peace of mind."

To get out from behind the eight-ball, Murray says, workers need wage increases to make up for the cut in their dollar buying power that's resulted from the post-war inflation.

"The military armament program will probably tend to keep prices at their present high levels," he says. "As production is diverted from consumer goods to war goods, additional scarcities of consumer goods will develop and prices will tend to rise.

In postwar America, Murray continues, "we have been forced to live under a steadily lowering standard of living and steadily decreasing real weekly wage. This is exactly opposite to what a strong and healthy economy should provide for its people."

The answer to our problem lies in several programs, the CIO president thinks. We need higher wages, to boost the people's buying power; we need wider union organization—particularly among white collar workers—to insure that no group gets left behind in the economic race; we need improved federal minimum wage and social security laws to help low or fixed income groups; and we need a real anti-inflation program, including price controls, excess profits taxes, allocation of supplies and rationing of scarce goods.

Danger Signal

There's been a "dangerous shift" in the national income during recent years, Pres. Murray pointed out in his Atlantic Monthly article.

A greater slice of the country's income is going into "profits, dividends and interest, while a much smaller proportion is going toward wages and salaries."

In 1945, corporations paid wages and salaries amounting to 60 billion, made 8.9 billion in profits. Last year, the bill for wages and salaries was 68 billion, the profits 17 billion.

"This means that corporations paid out only four dollars in wages and salaries for every dollar taken in as profits," Murray noted. "Seven to one in 1945, four to one in 1947."

MURRAY'S article in the Atlantic is countered by a defense of high profits written by Prof. Sumner Slichter of Harvard. Slichter, although admitting that profits are at an all-time high, disagrees with CIO thinking that these corporation earnings are "extortionate."

Wages shouldn't be lifted out of profits, Slichter maintains, since big profits are necessary now to finance new plants and new industries—which, he argues, leads to greater production and greater prosperity.

The CIO president, in rebuttal, sharply attacks Slichter's argument.

Big industry, he says, is expanding its resources out of its profits—rather than inducing persons with big savings to invest their funds in corporate enterprise. These individuals have some 155 billion socked away in savings, but they don't buy stocks because they fear an ultimate economic crash.

So the corporations are paying out only a portion of their profits in dividends and are using the rest to build new factories. That's unhealthy for two reasons, Murray points out: (1) it gives a handful of members of Boards of Directors vastly increased control over huge amounts of savings; and (2) it leads to the sacrifice of high wage standards to continued super-profits, in good times or in bad.

And such a "profit-heavy, low-consumption economy . . . brings the eventual depression much closer, and makes it much more severe and much more certain."

UPWA O. K.'s Wage Plan; Hits 3d Party

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

IT'S been years since this writer read "The Jungle," Upton Sinclair's expose of the workers' plight in the packinghouse industry.

A few weeks ago, I had a horrified conviction, when the CIO Packinghouse Workers' strike ended, that the industry had launched a well-mapped out plan to return its workers to the days of "The Jungle"—back to the early 20th Century.

HELSTEIN

Last Week, the Packinghouse Workers met in convention and gave their answer to industry's threat. When the strike ended, the industry had confidently envisioned a licked, beaten union. But, at the convention, every delegate was determined that the industry's dream would not become a reality.

It just wasn't there.

Of course, there were splits over various issues—and over the strike itself. But, every one of the more than 500 delegates from 334 locals who attended the Chicago convention was united on the issue of improving the lot of the 200,000 workers covered by the union.

Of course, there were splits over elections of officers. But, there was no split over the determination that UPWA is as integral a part of the industry as is the hamburger you eat at home.

The fifth constitutional convention did these major things:

1. Adopted a broad, 21-point wage and policy program.

2. Rejected by a wide margin the Wallace third Party of 1948 and indorsed the CIO's stand on political action. The resolution was adopted after Tilford Dudley, assistant director of PAC, addressed the convention and said that any CIO member who votes for Wallace is "scabbing on PAC." Dudley is a member of UPWA.

3. Re-elected Ralph Helstein as President.

4. Heard stirring addresses by Most Rev. Bernard J. Sheil, senior auxiliary bishop of the Chicago Catholic archdiocese, and CIO Organization Dir. Allan S. Haywood.

Helstein introduced Bishop Sheil as "the patron saint of UPWA."

The UPWA wage program is designed to be presented to the Big 4 (Armour, Cudahy, Swift, Wilson) and to Morrell and Hygrade when the master contracts expire August 11. It is expected also to be offered to Hormel, Tobin (both of those are guaranteed annual wage contracts) Rath, Kingan and others.

THE program, adopted unanimously, includes:

General wage increase (to be worked out by negotiating committees of various chains); equalization of vacation credits; protection of gang reduction rate; a pension plan; severance pay; company-financed hospital and medical insurance; triple time for holidays worked.

Job loads; seniority; one-cent an hour night differential, optional work beyond eight hours; three-day lay-off notices; union shops; clarification of sick leave; clarification of tool preparation time clause; multiple and split rate determination.

Point No. 21 said: "That all negotiating committees shall be instructed to draw up contracts containing language that can be understood by the average packinghouse worker."

THERE was a long discussion on the strike at several closed sessions. The discussion ended after Haywood's address. Following an ovation for the CIO director of organization, a delegate sprang to his feet and, observing that Haywood had told the delegates facts which considerably clarified the issues, moved that the closed sessions be declared ended. The motion passed unanimously.

There was no attempt to gloss over the strike situation in the officers' report.

(The Packinghouse strike ended after 12 weeks, with the workers returning to their jobs for a nine-cent raise.)

The officers recalled that the union, just before the strike, had accepted a proposal by the U. S. Conciliation Service that the issues be submitted to arbitration. This, the companies refused to agree to.

The report declared that during the strike "an intensification of company activities through letters, through advertising and by personal contact to the membership was commenced. Every conceivable effort was made by the companies to employ scabs, both from union ranks and outside. Back-to-work movement after back-to-work movement was attempted, but no substantial breaks in the lines occurred.

"The campaign of violence against the union increased. The police in Kansas City raided the union hall, destroyed equipment and beat up pickets, members of the union and complete strangers to the dispute. The National Guard was used in St. Paul and Albert Lea, Minn. Pinkertons become active in various strike centers. The firms threatened employes with loss of jobs by replacements.

"Although substantial contributions were received from the national CIO and unions affiliated with it, demands (for aid to members) become so great that it was difficult to meet them.

BISHOP SHEIL

"Faced with a situation where, although the strike remained substantially solid in most places throughout the country, signs of deterioriation were creeping in, indicating a breakdown. Finally, the National Strategy Committee recommended to the membership that the strike be terminated in all plants, except independents and Wilson.

"Injunctions obtained by the companies totalled 50 with practically no place in the country exempted. The weapon of starvation was a handy instrument in the hands of the companies.

"Our union carried on the most effective strike ever waged in the packing industry and out of it we can rebuild our union and grow strong, if this convention unifies itself in a common endeavor to effectuate that purpose."

The unanimous adoption of the wage and policy program looked as if unity had been achieved on contractual proposals.

BISHOP SHEIL, in his address, referred to the end of the strike, saying "such anguished moments are truly the 'times that try men's souls.' In such bitter experiences are fashioned the character and virtues that make men and movements great. You gave yourselves in a cause that was just. This was only a skirmish, not the end of a campaign.

"The packers well knew that arbitration would have exposed their ability to pay a decent wage. They were well aware that their hope for victory lay in starvation. To their total discredit and our national shame, they chose to starve you into submission.

"To an objective observer, this was all part of the pattern that has made its appearance since the close of the war: a pattern designed by NAM. A portion of this pattern was obligingly put into action by the 80th Congress when it passed the notorious Taft-Hartley Act. It is claimed that T-H is good because it equalizes the power of unions and management. This is a bitter jest. The balance was always with management and T-H has only insured maintenance of that power."

(Bishop Sheil is active in the Back of the Yards Council, which aids the packinghouse workers.)

HAYWOOD, in his talk, reminded his listeners that Chicago was a revered city in labor history. Here, he recalled, there were the Haymarket and Railway strike massacres. In Downstate Illinois, miners gave their lives that a union might be born. "And," he declared, "never forget that three of your own members were slain during your strike."

CLARK

He also reminded his audience that many of the now successful unions had lost strikes in early days—but had survived to grow great.

Referring to reports that the AFL was trying to raid UPWA ranks, he said of AFL: "They can have AFL, I don't want it, it's too fat for me."

He was applauded heavily when he reminded the delegates of CIO's aid during the strike. He pledged aid in the rebuilding of the union and said that "we will form a CIO-UPWA Defense committee to handle the legal defense of those who were arrested during the strike.

"Stick to your union," he advised, "for without a union you'll get everything the chicken lays but the egg."

There were several heated debates. One was on the issue of signing T-H non-Communist affidavits. Fred W. Dowling, director of Region 10 (Canada) moved that all directors and officers be required to sign affidavits. Herbert March, who resigned as director of Reg. 1 in protest against action of the board in signing affidavits, urged non-compliance. Dir. Glen Chinander, Reg. 2, held the opposite view. The convention voted for the Dowling motion overwhelmingly.

In the presidential election, Helstein defeated Svend Godfredsen, UPWA educational director and editor, 683 to 527. Godfredsen is from Austin, Minn., Helstein from Minneapolis.

In his address, which preceded the elections, Bishop Sheil said: "Union officers must serve no other cause than the interest of their country and the interest of the men and women who make up the union. They must serve the membership with complete intellectual honesty, scrupulous honor and sincere loyalty. They must give the same service to the interest of their country and the common good of all citizens.

"As for your president, my very good friend, Ralph Helstein, he has those virtues that I mentioned, and others."

For secretary-treasurer, incumbent Lewis T. Clark, of Chicago, (he was UPWA president until beaten by Helstein at the last election) won over A. J. Puttman, Fort Worth, Tex., 654 to 552.

WEIGHTMAN

For vice presidents, two to be elected, the winners were incumbent Frank Ellis, Austin, Minn. (648 votes) and Rusell Lasley, Waterloo, Ia. (621). They defeated Incumbent Philip Weightman, Chicago (591), and Arthur Kampfert, Cedar Rapids, Ia. (563.)

Under UPWA rules, the Canadian director automatically receives the title of vice president.

Directors elected were:

Reg. 1. Harold E. Neilsen, Milwaukee, who received all of the region's votes except 96, which abstained.

Reg. 2. Glen Chinander, St. Paul, 68 votes, with two abstaining.

Reg. 3. A. T. Stephens, Des Moines, 195 votes, with 30 abstaining and 20 not voting.

Reg. 4. Ralph Baker, Kansas City, 69 votes to 51 for K. Bryan and 10 abstaining.

Reg. 5. James J. Stanton, Los Angeles, unanimous.

Reg. 6. Meyer Stern, unanimous

Helpful Penalty

The Packinghouse Workers' convention had a rule that any delegate late to a session would have to pay a 50-cent fine.

The money collected goes to the families of three UPWA members killed during the recent strike. A total of $226 was collected.

YOUNG UNIONISTS: Little Robert Grafton Hobbs gurgles as his father, Ray Hobbs, registers at the CIO Packinghouse Workers' convention. Hobbs is a UPWA field representative in Fort Wayne, Ind. His wife, Mary, is with him. Hulda Jungel (back to camera) is the registrar.

Industrial Union Councils:

State, City CIO Bodies Have Much Autonomy

By JOHN BROPHY

CIO Director of Industrial Union Councils

(This is the third of a series of articles on the relation of the CIO Councils to the National CIO.)

THERE are wide areas where State and City CIO Councils have a large degree of autonomy.

Many local problems are understood better by the State and City Councils than by the National CIO. The Councils act on these problems, largely on their own initiative.

State legislation is one of the big responsibilities of our State Industrial Union Councils. Our City Councils concern themselves with municipal ordinances. In addition, all Councils have to keep in touch with their Senators and Representatives in Congress.

CIO Councils have to use their own good judgment in doing most of this work, particularly on the state and local levels. The state organizations are the legislative committees of the CIO in their states, and the city central bodies have the same functions in their communities. They usually do all this work without much detailed supervision. They have a very broad autonomy as long as they stay within the general CIO program.

I make these points to emphasize again what I have said in earlier articles, that although the independence of our Councils is limited by the broad outlines of National CIO decisions, our Councils are really very much on their own.

I GIVE whatever help I can from the National office, and the special CIO departments, such as the Research and Education Department; the Legal Department and the Committee to Abolish Discrimination do likewise. But for the most part, our state and local people are not only allowed to stand on their own feet, but have to do so, because no one else is going to take over for them.

The work with the state legislatures is a big job. There is workmen's compensation, for example. We are conducting a continuous running fight to prevent these laws from being weakened and are trying to strengthen them. We have been trying to promote the system used in Ontario, which gives better protection than any of our states offer. We go over these problems at our Annual National CIO Conference of State Councils, but the follow-through has to be done by the councils.

ANTI-LABOR legislature is another example. We properly talk about the evils of the Taft-Hartley Law, but a large number of our states have enacted statutes which are even worse. The cost of testing these laws in court is so high that usually it is borne by several Internationals, with the help of the CIO Legal Department, rather than the Councils, but the Councils cooperate.

The Councils try to get such laws off the statute books, or prevent their being put there in the first place. The Councils have to carry the load themselves on these things, because the National office cannot possibly follow all the details of proposed bills as they come up in the legislatures.

CIO Councils have much freedom in mapping their own plans for getting our people into political action. It is mainly their job to put a real push behind our drive for good laws and against bad laws in Congress. In carrying out this task, Councils have to keep in touch with Senators and Representatives by writing to them in Washington and by visiting them when they are at home.

Occasionally the National CIO asks Councils to send representatives to Washington to visit Congressmen. The Councils have more experience in this work than we have, and we could not tackle it in 48 states anyway. The National CIO Legislative Committee carries the main brunt of legislative work in Washington, but the groundwork is up to the Councils.

Just as in politics, so in legislative activity, our Councils have a very broad autonomy and are free to make their own decisions within the general outlines of National CIO policy.

Civil Rights Essay Wins Author Trip

A free trip to Nashville, Tennessee, and a radio appearance on the State CIO's weekly program were awarded to Morris Shapiro, the CIO member whose essay, on the subject, "How Can We Best Promote Civil Rights in New Jersey" was considered the best entry by the contest judges.

Shapiro is a member of Local 108 of the United Retail Clerks and works and lives in Jersey City. He has been a member of the CIO for over two years.

Arthur Chapin, chairman of the State Council Civil Rights Committee, announced that Shapiro's essay had been chosen as the best submitted by the committee of judges consisting of President Holderman, Joseph L. Bustard, Assistant Commissioner of Education in New Jersey and Manny Kurzberg, executive secretary of the Passaic County CIO Council.

Shapiro's prize-winning essay was read over station WAAT last Wednesday night by the Rev. Richard Evans, when he appeared on the State CIO's radio program.

Radio Censorship Fails To Halt CIO Victory At Craddock-Terry Shoe Co.

A FOUR-YEAR struggle of the CIO Shoe Workers to force the Craddock-Terry Shoe Corp. in Virginia to bargain was climaxed last week by the union's victory in an NLRB representation election.

Balloting covered the 2,200 employes in the company's four Lynchburg and Farmville plants.

Preceding the election, employes held a mass meeting in Lynchburg, addressed by CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, Intl. USWA Pres. Rocco Francheschini, Virginia State CIO Director Ernest B. Pugh and Alex McKay, director of the union's Craddock-Terry organizing drive.

Carey reported that about one-fourth of his speech, broadcast over local Station WLVA, was censored by the station. The portions omitted all dealt with the company's efforts to discourage unionization and its refusal to abide by War Labor Board and NLRB orders to bargain with the union.

Recounting the history of the workers' efforts to organize, Carey noted that employes had named USWA as its bargaining agent in a 1944 NLRB poll. In so doing, they threw over their AFL union.

Then followed the company's refusal, throughout the next four years, to bargain. Orders by the War-Labor Board and the NLRB to recognize the CIO Shoe Workers were ignored, and the NLRB finally took the case into federal court. A 1945 strike by the employes also failed to budge Craddock-Terry.

In one of the censored sections of the address, Carey told of a company agreement with the union earlier this year to consent to NLRB elections wherever the union requested them. In addition, it agreed to reinstate employes who had been discharged and to pay them a substantial part of their back wages. In return the union was to withdraw unfair labor practice charges against the company and to request the NLRB to stop action in the courts.

The company, however, continued efforts to discourage unionization. On June 21, Carey recalled, foremen shut off the power and called all employes together to hear a bulletin from the management.

The bulletin recognized the right of employes to handle grievances through a grievance committee, whereupon all the employes' time cards were placed in a box by the foreman, and someone was requested to withdraw a card, raffle-style.

Those whose cards were drawn were asked to serve on a grievance committee. A number refused, Carey said, but the foremen continued until committees were established. The speaker referred to this move to head off a pro-union vote as a "violation of American democratic procedures."

PACKINGHOUSE

(though Stern resigned as director along with March, he announced he will now sign the non-Communist affidavit.)

Reg. 7. Paul Elsten, Muncie, 44 votes to 40 for Joe Kinch.

Reg. 8. Pittman, unanimous.

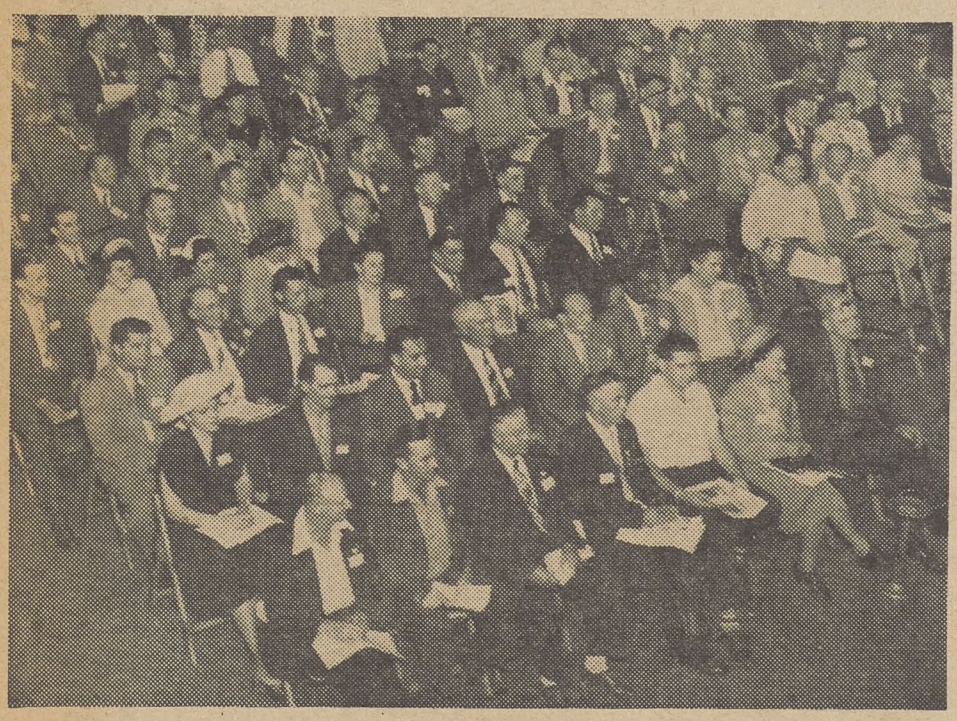
Reg. 9. Grover (Butch) Hathaway Atlanta, unanimous.

Reg. 10. Dowling.

All the officers and directors except Baker, Pittman, Hathaway and Chinander are supporters of Helstein. Elsten did not reveal his stand.

After the elections, the new officers were sworn in by CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Mann with this oath:

"I, ... do hereby sincerely pledge my honor to perform the duties of my office as prescribed by the Constitution of the United Packinghouse Workers of America and my local union by-laws and to bear true allegiance to the United Packinghouse Workers of America. I will deliver to my successor in office all books and other property of this union that may be in my possession at the close of my official term. All of this I solemnly promise, with full knowledge that to violate this pledge is to stamp me as a person devoid of principle and desitute of honor."



POLITICAL ARM: Partial view of the delegates representing more than 98,000 CIO members who set up the California National CIO-PAC at a meeting in Los Angeles. Many of the delegates were from local unions that had withdrawn from the State Industrial Union Council because the council had failed to follow national CIO's political policies.

LEAD CALIF. PAC: Leaders of the newly-formed California National CIO-PAC are: L. to r., First Vice Chairman Herbert H. Wilson, Rubber Workers; Chairman Joseph Van Elsen, Auto Workers; Second Vice Chairman Chester Wright, Oil Workers, and Secy.-Treas. John Despol, Steelworkers. They plan a bang-up campaign for victory in the fall.

Not Like Grandpa's Day—

They Get Vacations Now—And With Pay

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

THE Demchak family was in a high state of excitement. In the bedroom Mary, the 17-year-old daughter, was trying to cram a few more things into a zipper bag, yelling above the racket the smaller kids were making in the kitchen.

Bob and Stanley, the 12-year-old twins, were lugging boxes, parcels, blanket rolls, sweaters, fishing tackle and other assorted articles out to the car, where Tom Demchak, the head of the family, was packing it all in the back of the old sedan.

Grandfather Demchak stood on the steps smoking his pipe. If the kids hadn't been so busy running back and forth and shouting to one another, they would have noticed that Grandpa had that far-away look which came into his eyes when he started telling stories about the old days.

For the elder Demchak was thinking about how different things were now from the times when he worked in the plant. The only vacations he ever had in his working days were sad affairs, for they were layoffs, and meant pinching and scraping, standing off rent and grocery bills.

If the layoff was short, the family got along by scrimping on everything but essentials but when the layoff dragged on, it was bad. Grandfather Demchak remembered only too well the anxieties and sometimes actual hunger which went with the old-time "vacations."

TODAY, thanks to the union, it was different. His son, Tom, was getting three weeks' vacation —with pay—for he had been working at one of the American Can Company's plants more than 15 years. Only the bosses and some of the office workers got paid vacations in elder Demchak's day.

The Demchaks are only one of the working-class families in America going on vacation this summer. In towns and cities all across the country, workers and their wives and children are planning or have already started on some sort of trip, long or short, according to the length of their vacation period and their finances. Some are just taking it easy at home.

American Can Co., for which Tom Demchak works, has an above-the-average vacation clause in contracts signed with the CIO Steelworkers. These provide one week's vacation with pay for one year's service, two weeks for five years, three weeks for 15 years, and four weeks for 25 years' service.

The company has more than two dozen plants under contract with the USA-CIO covered by this vacation plan. The same or very similar provisions are also included in USA-CIO contracts covering some 24 plants of the Continental Can Co., and a few other concerns.

Vacation: According to a study of vacation plans made by the USA-CIO Research Dept., directed by Otis Brubaker, the union has a total of 1,918 contracts which provide paid vacations of varying periods.

Of these 58 have vacation periods running as high as four weeks: 524 have a maximum period of three weeks; 1,269 have two weeks, and 67 have a one-week maximum.

VACATION DAYS: Before the days of the CIO, the only vacations industrial workers got were layoffs, when the pay check stopped coming and trouble began. Today, thanks to CIO unions, paid vacations are provided for many.

While hundreds of thousands of Steelworkers and their families will be enjoying vacations this summer, countless workers in other CIO-organized industries will also be in the vacation throng. Two formerly sweated industries —clothing and textiles — are of particular interest in showing the change from old times to now.

The CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers has announced that its 375,000 members will start their paid vacations this week. The entire men's and boys' clothing industry, employing 150,000 Amalgamated members, shut down during the first two weeks in July while the workers are on paid vacation. The union estimates that its members will receive $30,000,000 in vacation pay.

Workers employed in the clothing industry from two to three or more years receive two weeks' vacation. The 125,000 members in shirt and cotton garment plants get two weeks' vacation after one year, while the more than 100,000 employed in the laundry, cleaning, dying and miscellaneous industries will receive paid vacations ranging from one to two weeks.

A mass exodus from textile plants under contract with the CIO Textile Workers Union is also under way as thousands of workers employed in hundreds of mills from Canada to the Deep South leave for their vacations.

(The Textile Union says vacation pay will be fatter than ever this summer, thanks to gains negotiated by the union in recent months. Large segments of the industry are closing down for from one to two weeks. Some 90,000 woolen and worsted workers, 70,000 cotton mill workers, 30,000 from the dye industry and a majority of the 35,000 synthetic yarn and 30,000 carpet workers started vacations July 4.)

Although the movement to give industrial workers vacations began about 1934, it did not really take hold until the CIO drive to organize steel got going several years later, and the major steel companies began adopting the policy of giving vacations.

It has been generally recognized that it was due largely to the influence and growing strength of the trade unions that the practice of giving paid vacations to wage earners has won increasing acceptance.

As a government board stated in a report issued in 1941: "The enjoyment of a vacation with pay has long been one of the more important aspirations of American labor. It has been a goal of labor, not only because it makes possible leisure and relief from everyday cares and duties, but also because the right of a vacation with pay is a mark of social status and a recognition of the worth and dignity of the ordinary laboring man."

Newspaper Fires Photographer, Ignores Arbitrator's Award

CHARLES (CHUCK) SMITH is a photographer. He is holder of the 1947 Bushemi Award for the best photograph in the state of Indiana. He has won 28 prizes in Associated Press and Inland Press competition —more than any two other photographers in the state combined.

Yet Chuck Smith was fired by the Gary, Ind., Post-Tribune. And, further, the Post-Tribune refused to reinstate him, refused to pay him the severance pay to which he was entitled under the CIO Newspaper Guild contract and finally, even refused to pay that severance pay when ordered to do so by the arbitrator.

Why was Chuck Smith fired? The Post-Trib says "we lost confidence in him." No one in Gary took that charge seriously, for Chuck had been on the paper for 10 years, most of them as chief photographer.

Union-minded Gary knew why Chuck Smith had been fired—because he had been president of the Gary Guild local for three years; because he was active in CIO, because he was an aggressive unionist.

CHARLES SMITH

After long dickering between union and Publisher J. Ralph Snyder, it was agreed that the issue of severance pay ($1600) be arbitrated—and that the arbitration be final and binding on both parties.

Dr. John Lapp of Chicago, a noted arbiter, handled the case, in which he was not to decide on the merits of the dismissal.

Lapp ruled that Smith should receive severance pay. The Post-Tribune immediately wrote Lapp, saying his decision was wrong and virtually ordering him to change it.

Lapp, in reply, declared his decision would stand. He further stated that though his deliberations were limited to the question of severance pay only, that examination of facts in the case had led him to the judgment that Smith was unjustifiably fired.

Since the decision, several clients of Smith and his partner, Paul Vincent, have told them that the Post-Tribune has refused to print any pictures which come from the studio. This would mean a serious loss of engagement and wedding pictures.

At the hearings, Alfred Kamin, attorney for the Guild, questioned all management executives about Smith's ability. Every one admitted Smith was the best photographer on the staff.

That's the story of young Chuck Smith of Gary, Ind.

Group Sues To Clear Name

CHARGING the Constitution has been by-passed, the Natl. Council of American-Soviet Friendship has sued to force the removal of its name from a government list of "subversive" groups.

The Council said that since it was formed in 1943 it has carried on a program of educational activities "to strengthen friendly relations between the U. S. and the U. S. S. R."

None of these activities, the Council said, provides any basis "for it to be designated as 'totalitarian, fascist, communist or subversive'" or of having advocated or approved acts to overthrow the U. S. government.

In asking that its name be stricken from the subversive list, the Council said the Attorney General's listing of the organization was made without advance notice, investigation or determination. As a result, the Council was deprived of its right of free speech and due process of law, its attorneys said.

The Washington Post praised the Council's legal action. Whether promoting friendship for Russia is wise or foolish, the Post said, it is "certainly not subversive." The paper noted that if the organization were the agency of a foreign power it could be prosecuted for law violation—but no case has been brought against it.

"If men may not join hands to espouse ideas which are unpopular, then the constitutional guarantees of free speech and free association are mere myths," the Post commented.

Labor's Political Unity Pays Off in North Carolina

Its Candidates For Governor, Senator Win

By WILLIAM W. WEISS

There is no more sure tie between friends than when they are united in their objects and wishes.—Cicero.

THESE lines were written about 2000 years ago. The reason they are remembered is that they are as true now as they were then.

Their immortality was again proved in North Carolina where the United Labor Political Committee, representing the CIO, AFL and independent unions such as the Railroad Brotherhoods, was the decisive factor in winning the Democratic nomination for governor for Kerr Scott.

Capus Waynick, Scott's campaign manager, told William Smith, North Carolina CIO Director and a member of ULPC, that it was the united vote of labor and particularly of the CIO that was responsible for the victory of Scott over Charles M. Johnson, State treasurer. Scott's majority was 36,000 in the run-off.

This was not the only recent victory scored by a ULPC-supported candidate. In the first primary election, committee-backed J. Melville Broughton defeated William B. Umstead, incumbent, for the U. S. Senate. Umstead challenged labor by declaring that he had voted for the T-H Act and other anti-labor legislation, and that if he were beaten, "it would be labor which would be responsible."

At that time Thad Eure and Forrest Shuford, ULPC-backed candidates, also won the Democratic nomination for State Treasurer and State Commissioner of Labor without much difficulty.

LET'S go back to last January when a small group of labor leaders met in a Salisbury hotel room and discussed the possibility of building a united labor political movement.

Both old timers in the labor movement and machine politicians were likewise unimpressed by the news of the attempt to unify labor politically.

"It can't be done," the old timers said, "We've seen it tried before and it never worked out."

"Nuisance value," the politicians sniffed.

But ULPC was set up with the following chosen to serve on it:

O. C. Lee, Raleigh, Southern Federation of Telephone Workers, Coordinator; C. A. Fink, of Salisbury, AFL; J. E. Baumberger, Asheville, Railroad Brotherhoods; Smith and E. L. Sandefur, PAC State Executive Director.

The first task of the committee was to decide which candidates labor would support. Among those who appeared to be acceptable were R. Mayne Albright for Governor; Broughton, Eure and Shuford

There were no newspaper releases given out announcing labor's support of these candidates. Rather, the gigantic task of getting the laboring people registered went on quietly but effectively, as the results were to show.

Albright, a political unknown, waged a strenuous personal campaign, visiting each of the state's 100 counties. Everywhere he went he received the cooperation and assistance of the local union people, particularly CIO members. His campaign was ridiculed by the professional politicians who termed him the "Ambitious Amateur."

One of the most significant events which took place during the campaign was a huge labor rally in Durham. Over 1000 delegates from local unions were in attendance to hear Sen. Claude Pepper of Florida speak on "United Labor Political Activity." Virtually every newspaper in the state carried an account of the rally and the foes of labor began to sit up and take notice.

The Durham meeting was definitely the turning point in the state political campaign as far as labor was concerned. Local unions which up until then had been indifferent began to get behind the movement. Contributions began pouring in.

Each CIO organizer in the state voluntarily contributed two day's pay. Telephone calls and telegrams were received from sympathetic groups and individuals throughout the state. Labor, it seems, was on a unified march at last in North Carolina.

The day of the primary election witnessed the greatest concentration of labor's political activities ever seen in North Carolina. All day long, automobiles which were either owned or loaned by union members went back and forth to the polls. Textile Workers, Woodworkers, Steelworkers — all over the state—willingly stayed away from work so that they might assist in getting the vote out.

When the returns began coming in that night there were looks of amazement on the faces of those who had told themselves, "It can't happen here in North Carolina!" When the final vote was in, the results showed Umstead beaten decisively by ULPC-supported Broughton.

ALBRIGHT pulled a cool 76,000 votes—enough to throw the two leaders into a run-off and make them dependent on his votes for victory. Eure and Shuford coasted to easy victories. It was a great day for labor in North Carolina and the best was yet to come!

No sooner were the final tabulations in than calls were received from both Johnson and Scott, high men in the gubernatorial race, who wanted to come before the committee and ask for its support.

The ULPC, however, was in no great hurry to commit itself to either man. Audience was given to each candidate in due time and the final decision was to throw the support of organized labor to Scott.

Utilizing the techniques it had applied successfully in the first election, labor quietly got behind Scott, who emerged an overwhelming victor over the machine-backed Johnson. It marked the first time in the history of the state that the low man in the first primary emerged the victor in the second.

"The unity of labor through ULPC was proof positive to any and all that laboring people, if given the proper guidance and leadership, will take the necessary steps to insure good government," Sandefur said.

LABOR VOTE CARAVAN: Labor's rising power in North Carolina is symbolized by this motorcade in behalf of the candidacy of R. Mayne Albright for governor. Although defeated in the primary race, his 76,000 votes necessitated a run-off in which the victor was Kerr Scott, to whom labor threw its support.

Be It Resolved . . .

A resolution adopted at the first meeting of North Carolina's United Labor Political Committee said in part:

"Therefore, be it resolved that the various labor organizations listed hereon form a committee for joint action under the name of the United Labor Political Committee for North Carolina, and that it shall be our purpose:

"(1) To effectively coordinate the efforts of all labor organizations in political matters and to educate our members so that we will be in a position to exert sufficient voting power to elect to public offices candidates who represent the wishes of the people rather than those of the vested interests;

"(2) To invite the participation in these objectives of farmers, educators, business and professional people, all working people and others who find it desirable to join with us in this undertaking."

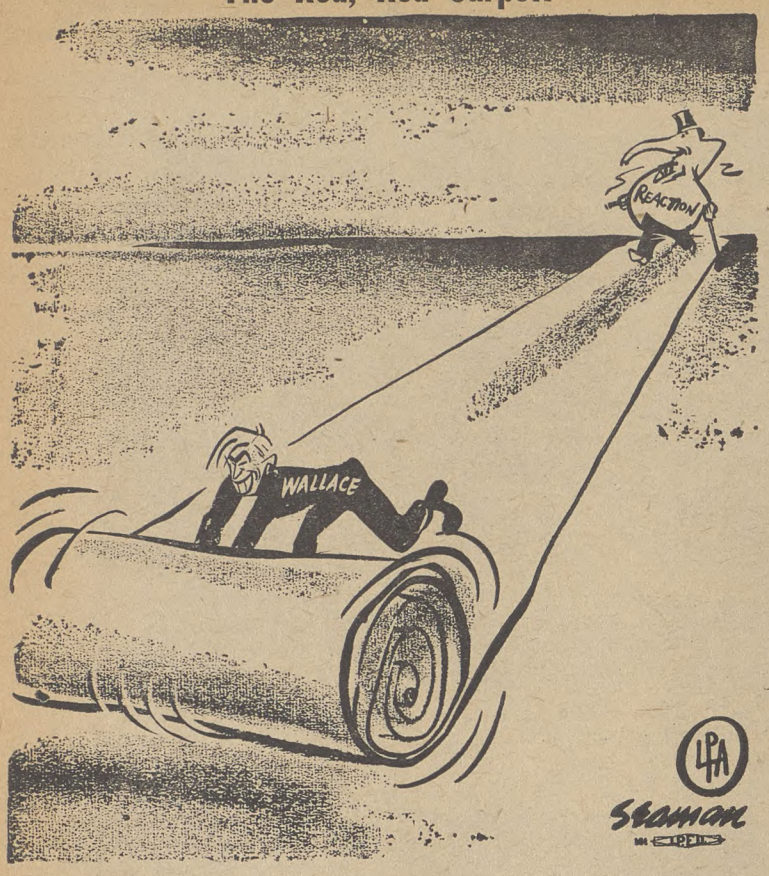
Mich. Compensation Decision Appealed

Denouncing a decision by the Michigan Unemployment Compensation Commission denying benefits to Chrysler workers for the period following the strike settlement, the UAW-CIO last week filed an appeal with the Referee and gave notice that the case would be carried to the Supreme Court if necessary.

"The decision of the Commission is totally without precedent, and contrary to all past policy," UAW Social Security Department Rep. Clayton E. Johnson said.

"The Michigan Commission had to go all the way to England to find even a remotely similar ruling."

'The Red, Red Carpet!'



D. C. Doesn't Need a Law

IN Washington, D. C., they arrest you for the oddest things—like breaking non-existent laws.

Ask Jack Kutner, business agent for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers. Kutner was distributing Eisenhower - for - President leaflets prior to a preferential poll for Washington Democrats.

A policeman told him that he would have to stop distributing the handbills. Kutner replied that he was breaking no law and continued to hand out the leaflets.

Arrested, Kutner was held in a precinct police station about an hour until a friend posted $5 collateral for a hearing.

Police officials later said there was no law against Kutner's activity and dug up a general order of 1941 which said that the distribution of handbills was lawful. That was the same year that the Supreme Court ruled unconstitutional local ordances banning distribution of handbills.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone, New Haven, Conn., reports the UAW-CIO won NLRB elections at the Colt's Patent Fire Arms Mfg. Co., Hartford, UAW-CIO 966, No union 35; Henry and Wright Mfg. Co., Hartford, UAW-CIO 94, no union 31.

Reg. Dir. Irwin L. DeShetler, Los Angeles, Calif., advises that C. V. O'Halloran, UAW-CIO Reg. Dir. reports an NLRB election victory at Union Carbide Co., Los Angeles: CIO 40, AFL O, No. union 19. UAW Rep. Donald Garriga was in charge. At the Niggs Engineering Co., Covina, UAW Rep. Gage signed 100% of the employes; 100% signed for UAW-CIO. Director DeShetler also reports union shop election victory at Ames Harris Neville, Los Angeles: Textile Workers 62, against 14. TWUA Reg. Dir. Harry Stillman was in charge.

Dir. of Org. George Brown, IWA-CIO, Portland Ore., reports union shop election victory at California Fruit Growers Supply, Susanville, Calif. , Yes 515, Against 45.

William McAulay, UAW-CIO Reg. Dir., Detroit, Mich., reports an NLRB election at the new Mound Road plant, Ford Motor Co., Detroit. The results: UAW 1564, no union 36. Ken Bannon, UAW-CIO Ford Director, said the plant eventually will employ about 4,000 workers and the Mound Road victory was the second one to be won by the UAW in new Ford plants in the last month. The other was at the Metuchen, New Jersey plant.

I attended and addressed the Packinghouse Workers' convention last week in Chicago and called the union members to demonstrate unity and solidarity, more so now than ever, and not to consider the recent strike a defeat. Building the union stronger is the best answer. The delegates unanimously stopped debate over the strike.

I addressed three meetings in Baltimore for workers applying for NLRB elections among the telephone operators of that state.

The Association of Communication Equipment Workers of the TWOC-CIO are still deadlocked in their efforts to obtain wage increases from the Western Electric Co. They are engaging in an advertising campaign at all principal exchanges of the telephone company throughout the nation to point out to the public and to other telephone workers the stubborn attitude of Western Electric in its refusal to bargain on wages. The telephone workers have a right to expect this industry to grant increases in wages as other industries do. In fact, it should lead.

The Federation of Telephone Clerks of Illinois, affiliated with the TWOC-CIO, came through with a smashing victory on a union shop election. Results were: Eligible to vote 2643, votes 2316; yes 1534, no 761, void 21. This is significant since it is the first election involving a union in the Bell System which voted for a union shop.

While this was happening the organization called Illinois Telephone Traffic Union, Division 14, CWA (independent) lost a union shop election.

Lansing CIO Paper Helps Lick 10c Fare

The Lansing (Mich.) CIO News played a leading role in the defeat of a proposal to boost bus fares from a nickel to a dime. The vote, in a special referendum, was 1806 against the rise, 1374 in favor. The Labor News, Lansing CIO Council publication, was the only paper in town that fought the fare increase.

Woodworkers Help Halt Forest Fire

Members of Local 29, CIO Woodworkers, played a major role in checking the biggest forest fire on the North Shore in Minnesota since 1936. The fire raged in tinder dry forests near Tofte.

Thanks to the work of 500 fire-fighters, most of them Local 29 members, the fire was brought under control, but only after a large area of timberland along the Sawbill Trail and Temperance River had been laid waste. One flaw in the heroic picture was that the government decreed a pay scale of 80c an hour for the fire-fighters. Minimum pay in the lumber camps is now $1 per hour.

Public Workers Flay N. Y. City's Policy

On the hottest day of the year, 3,000 members of the United Public Workers and other CIO affiliates picketed New York City Hall June 29, protesting the city's labor policy.

Following the afternoon mass turnout, welfare workers set up an overnight picketline. From dusk to dawn, 150 pickets paraded outside the municipal building demonstrating against scheduled wage cuts.

The daytime protest climaxed weeks of picketing by sanitation workers, who are demanding better working conditions and an end to what they call "company unionism." Now working a 48-hour week and two Sundays at straight time, they seek a 40-hour, 5-day week with double pay on Sundays. Also demanded is full sick pay and an annual wage boost of $600.

Oil Workers Do It Again

A short time ago the Washington local (No. 403) of the Oil Workers subscribed for the CIO News for all of its members.

Another Oil local—No. 326 at Rodeo, Calif.—did the same thing last week. The CIO News now goes to each of its 1012 members.

Maine CIO Girds to Fight Open Shop Bill at Polls

THE 80th Congress, the Taft - Hartley Act and Maine's Barlow "open shop" bill all came in for a severe two-day lashing as the Maine CIO Council held its sixth annual convention in Lewiston.

Some 150 delegates, representing 30,000 CIO members in the state, mapped out a detailed political action program for the coming year and outlined their economic objectives.

Dissatisfaction with the 80th Congress and the state legislature was registered by the delegates in numerous resolutions.

One called for defeat of the Barlow bill in the November referendum. The measure would forbid the union shop and maintenance of membership, although thousands of Maine workers have won the right to these forms of union security through secret ballot elections conducted by the National Labor Relations Board. The CIO has not lost a union shop election in the state.

The convention resolved to set up a statewide citizens' committee to seek the repeal of the state law in the referendum election.

THE principal speaker, Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers, set the tone for the convention with a scathing attack on the Republican-controlled Congress and GOP Presidential Candidate Tom Dewey.

Emphasizing the poor record of the Congress, Rieve said: "The Republicans are proud of their record. They are proud of the Taft-Hartley Act; they say so themselves.

"I wonder if Mr. Dewey is proud of the failure of Congress to pass any domestic legislation whatever for the benefit of the little people—the people who make up this great country?"

Congress and the Maine legislature came in for another denunciation when John Brophy, CIO director of councils, accused both of having achieved nothing for the benefit of workers.

The Councils' head expressed concern over the continued rise in prices and predicted that "the ship of state will crash on the shoals" unless effective measures are taken to stem inflation.

Close cooperation between CIO units in the New England states was demonstrated by the fact that speakers included CIO leaders in Massachusetts and New Hampshire. In addition to Rieve and Brophy, those addressing the convention were Joseph Salerno, Massachusetts Council president; Harold Daoust, New Hampshire Council president; Francis Carmichael, CIO regional director, and Mary Martin, Maine commissioner of labor.

OTHER action included:

Political action: Set up state PAC which will organize ward and precinct units.

State labor legislation: Called for joint conference of labor, veterans social service, church and women's organizations to develop "comprehensive program" to be submitted to legislature.

80th Congress: Protested Displaced Persons bill as "discriminatory and unworkable"; hit "sabotage of housing legislation"; denounced failure to enact 75c minimum wage law; criticized "bottling up of federal aid to education."

Civil rights: "We oppose discrimination and segregation on any basis"; urged abolition of the House Committee on Un-American Activities; decried "recent appointment of an unusual number of military men to high civil office."

Communists: Adopted constitutional amendment barring Communists from holding office in the council.

Elected to office were George Jabar, president, who has held that office since the Council's inception; Michael Schoojans, first vice-president, and Dennis Blair, secretary-treasurer.

THE ADVENTURES OF JIM BARRY

LATE AT NIGHT, PETE DELLY RETURNS HOME AFTER BREAKING OFF HIS ENGAGEMENT TO MARGIE... BECAUSE HER POLITICAL ACTIVITY GAVE HER LITTLE TIME TO SPEND WITH HIM....

IF YUH CAN'T GET ANY SLEEP TONIGHT, PETE.... I RECKON YUH WON'T MIND HAVING A BIT OF A TALK WITH ME?

POP STORM! WHAT ARE YOU DOING HERE SO LATE?

I FIGURED YOU'D BE ALL UPSET - LIKE MARGIE WAS - AFTER YOU BLEW UP AT HER... AND BUSTED UP! SO I WAITED HERE FOR YUH. I GUESS A BIT OF TALKING SENSE WITH YUH WON'T HURT NONE... AND MAYBE SAVE YUH FROM MAKING A FOOL OF YOUSELF!

I CAN'T GET TO BE A BIGGER FOOL THAN MARGIE ALREADY MADE OF ME...

OH, YES YUH CAN! LEMME TELL YUH!

WHAT'S MARGIE BEEN DOING, PETE? RUNNING AROUND WITH OTHER FELLERS?

YOU KNOW THAT'S NOT SO, POP! WHY D'YOU ASK SUCH SILLY QUESTIONS?

ON ACCOUNT OF YUH GOT TO UNDERSTAND WHAT MARGIE'S DOING! DON'T YUH THINK MARGIE WOULD RATHER BE SPENDING HER EVENINGS WITH YUH? COURSE SHE WOULD!

WELL, SHE'S GOT A FUNNY WAY OF PROVING IT!

'TAIN'T A FUNNY WAY OF PROVING IT, PETE... IT'S THE TOUGHEST WAY! SHE WANTS TO MARRY YUH.... MAKE A HOME... HAVE KIDS! BUT WHERE ARE YOU GOING TO GET AN APARTMENT TO MAKE A HOME IN?

TO GET A HOME WE GOT TO GET THE TAFT-WAGNER-ELLENDER HOUSING BILL PASSED - AND FOR THAT WE NEED A CONGRESS THET THINKS ABOUT THE WELFARE OF THE PEOPLE - FOR A CHANGE!

IF YUH GONNA HAVE KIDS, YUH GOTTA MAKE SURE YOUR WAGES CAN BUY MILK AND CLOTHES AND FOOD FOR THEM... AND FOR THAT YUH NEED A CONGRESS THET'S GONNA DO SOMETHING ABOUT PUTTING THE BREAKS ON PROFITEERS THAT BUSTED UP PRICE CONTROL!

AND YOU NEED TO GET RID OF THE UNION-BUSTING TAFT-HARTLEY ACT TO MAKE SURE YOUR UNION CAN PROTECT YOUR WAGES! HOW YUH GONNA DO ALL THET WITHOUT SEEING TO IT THET A DECENT CONGRESS GETS ELECTED?

TO GET ALL THIS DONE, YOU NEED TO GET ORGANIZED LABOR ACTIVE IN POLITICS... USING LABOR'S VOTE TO ADVANCE LABOR'S AND THE COUNTRY'S INTERESTS!

7 Guildsmen Win Nieman Awards

EXCUSE us for bragging—but seven of the 12 newspapermen awarded Nieman fellowships for special study at Harvard University this year are CIO Newspaper Guildsmen.

Recipients receive their regular salaries from the Foundation during their year of study at Harvard. The awards have been made annually for the past 11 years at the bequest of the founder, Agnes Wahl Nieman, whose purpose was to "elevate and promote standards of journalism in the U. S. and educate persons deemed specially qualified for journalism."

The Foundation announced that, but for his assassination in Greece, Guildsman George Polk, CBS correspondent, would have been a winner.

Guild winners include:

Alan Barth, Washington Post editorial writer, who will study history and political science. He won the 1948 Sigma Delta Chi award for "distinguished service in American journalism" and has received honorable mention in the Broun awards.

Robert de Roos, San Francisco Chronicle reporter, whose feature articles included a series on the Central Valley project and on Hawaii. He will study American history and American social problems.

DAVID B. DREIMAN, Minneapolis Star feature writer, whose recent work has been largely in education and science fields. His study will be science.

Peter Lisagor, Chicago Daily News reporter, who has done a special series on the state mental hospitals and other welfare and public adminstration problems. He will concentrate on social relations.

Christopher Rand, N. Y. Herald Tribune China correspondent. He will work in the China regional studies.

Aldric R. Revell, Madison (Wis.) Capital Times political writer. His study will be in the political science and social relations fields.

Lawrence G. Weiss, Boston Herald labor reporter, who will study labor and economics.

Other Nieman fellows are: Robert Brunn, Christian Science Monitor correspondent in San Francisco; Grady E. Clay, Jr., Louisville Courier-Journal reporter; Frank T. Durdin, N. Y. Times chief correspondent in China; Elmer Holland, Jr., Birmingham News-Age-Herald editorial writer, and Charles D. Willis, now on military leave, but formerly with the Ft. Worth Press.

Few Physicians

There is one general physician in the U. S. for every 1500 inhabitants, the Committee for the Nation's Health reports. The need is for one per each 1000 inhabitants. In 500 counties there is only one general physician for each 3000.

SUCH LETTUCE! A total of $23,200 in back pay went to these 11 members of the CIO United Paper Workers, when the Volney Felt Mills, Fulton, N. Y., signed a contract with the union after a two-year-long battle. The men who are waving the money were fired during a strike in January 1946 over the company's refusal to negotiate, also got their jobs back. The settlement was reached just as the NLRB prepared to ask for a contempt-of-court order against the company for refusing to obey NLRB and court orders to reinstate the 11 workers with back pay and negotiate with the union.

UNESCO Aims To Create World Union Of Citizens Aimed At Ending War

YOU—yes, you—belong to UNESCO.

You became a member when Congress voted U. S. participation in it.

At a time when peace talk is almost extinct, UNESCO is trying to achieve peace. Its success or failure depends very much on you.

That, in essence, is the theme of a report on UNESCO recently prepared by Kermit Eby, CIO director of research and education, distributed to CIO's research and education staffs over the country.

UNESCO—it stands for United Nations Educational, Scientific Cultural Organization—has been associated in many people's minds with the world's intellectual "high brows." But the report squelches that impression from the start.

Its goal is to create a world union of ordinary "Joes," working to stamp out the ignorance, suspicions, economic insecurities that breed war.

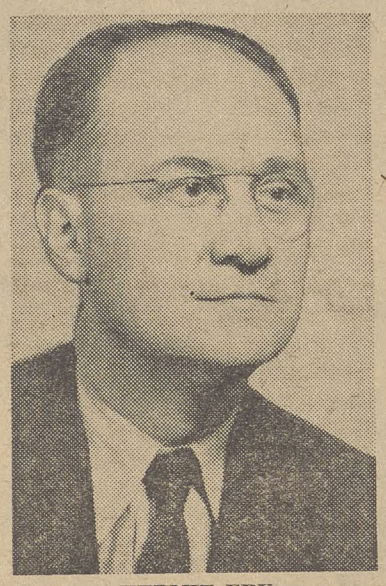
What's in it for workers? The report answers that:

"The workers of the world have a greater stake in UNESCO's success than any other group. We have more young men to give their lives, their best years to the war machine. There are more of us to be killed, maimed, left homeless and jobless in an all-out war that would strike the industrial centers first, most and worst."

UNESCO operates on the theory, first expressed by British Prime Minister Clement Atlee, that: "Since wars begin in the minds of men, it is in the minds of men that the defenses of peace must be constructed."

BUT changing the minds of men is no simple project. Many cynics, the report points out, will tell you the United Nations is failing. But, it replies, "did they expect the minds of men to change overnight from hatred and murder to sweet agreement as soon as the shooting stopped? If UN won't work in its present form, the form of it can be changed until it will work. And the minds of men can be changed."

How is UNESCO going about it?



KERMIT EBY

Eby, CIO research and education head, has been named an adviser to the U. S. delegation to the third UNESCO convention. The organization is holding its third general meeting at Beirut, Lebanon, starting October 18.

It is a fact-finding, planning and method-developing agency, which "pilots" the way for national governments, private organizations and individuals themselves.

For instance, one of UNESCO's chief concerns is eradication of illiteracy. It hasn't funds to set about wiping out that evil all over the world itself, but it learns by test the best means of doing it and national governments and educators adopt those methods. "Pilot" projects to reduce illiteracy and better educational methods are now underway in British East Africa, China and Haiti.

In aiding war-devastated countries to get back on their cultural feet, UNESCO finds out what each needs most. Already it has been instrumental in shipping millions of pencils and books—basic materials we take for granted—to such nations.

Another UNESCO project is the study and improvement of textbooks, one of its purposes being the elimination of excessive nationalism, which many feel contributes to a war psychology.

There are 36 member nations of UNESCO. In this and other nations it works through a national commission. Milton Eisenhower, president of Kansas University, is chairman of the U. S. commission, which is composed of 97 citizens representing all walks of American life. Kermit Eby represents the CIO on the commission, and has been elected a member of the executive board.

Three statewide UNESCO Councils have been organized to enlist the aid of all groups in Colorado, Kansas and Oklahoma.

Copies of the report are available without charge from the CIO Education & Research Dept., 718 Jackson Pl., N. W., Washington, D. C.

Ground Broken For UAW's FM Station

Ground has been broken near Detroit for station WAIM-FM, owned by the CIO Auto Workers.

Construction on the 52,000-watt station will be completed within 90 days. The station will serve southeastern Michigan, including Detroit, Mt. Clemens, Pontiac, Monroe and Ann Arbor, as well as smaller communities as far south as Maumee, Ohio, west to Jackson, north to Flint and Port Huron.

Participants in the groundbreaking ceremony included these UAW officials: Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey, Vice Presidents John W. Livingston and Richard Gosser, and Norman Matthews, director of the union's Chrysler Division and of the union's radio committee.

Two CIO Speakers On Race Program

The CIO will be represented by two speakers at the Fifth Annual Institute of Race Relations, now under way, at Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn. Pres. Willard Townsend of the Transport Service Employes, will conduct one of the seminars on institutional aspects of race relations this week.

Speakers on next week's program will include George T. Guernsey, Associate CIO Director of Education.

Ship Div. Set Up For Govt. Workers

FORMATION of a division for government workers within the CIO Shipbuilding Union was announced by IUMSWA Pres. John Green last week at a Washington, D. C., press conference.

Called the Government Workers Union, the new group starts off with about 2000 members of six locals formerly affiliated with the CIO Public Workers. Of these, about 80% are federal employes, the remainder state employes.

GWU is headed by Co-Chairmen William Mirengoff and Morton Liftin, both federal employes in Washington. They estimated the "immediate" potential membership of the new group at 15,000.

Emphasis in the organizing drive will be placed upon organizing unorganized federal employes, Green said, adding: "We are not intending to do any raiding, but if any government workers want a home in CIO I'll give it to them until I'm told to stop."

Green said that his union had jurisdiction over federal employes until 1939. These were primarily Navy shipyard workers. In entering IUMSWA now, he continued, government workers "are just coming back home."

The IUMSWA head blasted Congress for granting only a $330 annual raise for federal employes. He said they needed at least an $800 boost.

Heap Of Dough For 'Good Will'

Arabian-American Oil Co. is spending a heap of cash on a new radio news show—even though the firm doesn't sell its products on the U.S. market.

The company, which is up to its ears in Middle Eastern oil diplomacy, has hired Earl Godwin to do a 15-minute news show each Sunday for the next 10 weeks over a major network.

Variety, entertainment trade paper, reports the oil firm "is apparently concerned over the bad press it has been getting in connection with developments in the Arab-Israel war . . .

"Inasmuch as Arabian-American, however, has no products on sale to the general public, it's expected the pitch will be to spread propaganda on the Arabs' side of the Near East troubles.

"Company is American owned and operated firm, closely allied with a number of Arab states in development of oil resources."

Textile Gets The News

Fifteen Textile Workers locals in nine states subscribed for the CIO News during the past month.

Some of the locals subscribed for their entire membership, others for their officers and shop stewards.

These locals are in Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, New Jersey, Minnesota, Vermont, New Hampshire, New York and Pennsylvania.

Its objective is to sell the public on its version of Americanism. See story on Page 3.

Birthday Present

TWOC Wins in Maryland On Its 1st Anniversary

THE CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee received a handsome gift on its first birthday—a TWOC victory among 4200 Maryland Telephone Traffic employes in an NLRB representation election.

The election climaxed a year-long campaign by TWOC for the Maryland plum and marked the second big defeat of the rival independent Communications Workers of America. The two unions have come face-to-face in only two NLRB contests so far, both won by TWOC. The other test was among the West Virginia Telephone workers.

The Maryland balloting ended July 1 with TWOC capturing 67% of the votes cast, CWA receiving 29% and the balance of ballots being for no union.

A year previously the Maryland Telephone Traffic Union, independent, conducted two votes among the membership to determine its stand on affiliation.

The first vote offered a choice between CIO, CWA and AFL. This ended in a CIO victory. In the second ballot, voters chose between CIO and continued independent status. The prospect of a CIO victory in this instance prompted the telephone company's general traffic manager, N. E. Showalter, to address a letter to all employes.

"I hope that all of you will vote because I believe that the majority of the employes in the Traffic Department would prefer to have a local union rather than a national union," the letter stated.

Unimpressed by the benefits of a local independent union, as described by Showalter, the employes went on to select CIO again.

Margaret Weiss, president of the MTTU, is a charter member of the TWOC executive board. So certain of a CIO victory was she, that she organized a victory celebration before the election. A message of congratulations was wired the party by Ted Silvey, TWOC secretary-treasurer, terming the new affiliate a pioneer in the TWOC and predicting that it would contribute much toward the "establishment of a strong national union of telephone workers affiliated with the CIO."

In Illinois, the young union won another victory when Illinois traffic employes voted two-to-one for a union shop.

Firm's Idea Of Pact: Scrap All Gains

HERE'S union-busting with a vengeance. Experimenting with the method is the Pharis Tire & Rubber Co., Newark, Ohio. Intended victim is Local 21, CIO Rubber Workers and its 1300 members.

Last May Day, after 15 years of peaceful relations, the company shut down the plant, then cancelled the contract.

A newspaper barrage followed, the company accusing the union of keeping the plant shut down by refusing to accept its offer of a new agreement.

In its counter publicity drive the union revealed contents of the "terms" it turned down:

1. Wage cuts of 10 to 35% for all workers, though company profits are 56% higher than prewar.
2. Abolition of seniority and job security.
3. Surrender by union of all gains won under arbitration awards or previous agreements.

If the union didn't accept its wage-cut ultimatum, the company said, it would reopen the plant July 10 under open shop conditions. The union reports that the workers are solidly against that stuff, and that most of the town is backing them.

Ever Count Sea Lions?

HOW'D you like a job counting sea lions? No kidding, there is such an occupation.

The June issue of the CIO International Fishermen and Allied Workers' official monthly paper tells about the work and some of the adventures of two marine biologists who set out in a Navy blimp to determine the California coastal sea lion population.

The last sea lion count—if you're interested—showed a population of 12,500 of these sea beasts in 1946, nearly double the "census" of 1938.

Sea lions in the zoo put on a good show and are popular with the youngsters, but the fishing industry hates 'em, for they destroy fish. It is estimated that 10,000 lions on the coast destroy 500,000 pounds of fish daily, or 182,500,000 pounds annually.

Several years ago the CIO Fishermen's Union launched a drive on the sea lion menace which resulted in the Fish & Game Commission authorizing the killing off of a certain proportion of the sea lions. But the markets for lions collapsed or failed to materialize and the lions continued to live, eat and multiply.

Now the fishing committee of a West Coast Chamber of Commerce urges the CIO Fishermen's Union to join in another attack on sea lions.

"They are like the mountain lions, killers that should be destroyed," says a leaflet issued by the committee, calling for a bounty of $20 per head on sea lions. the same as there is on mountain lions.

Sea lions could be utilized for dog and cat food, leather, meal and oil, says the leaflet.

STILL RISING

The consumer price index for April was 8.4% higher than a year ago, 27% over June 1946 and 71.7% above the August 1939 level, the Bureau of Labor Statistics says.

It Happened In Ohio

17½c Rise Minus 8½c Bonus=9c Rise, Strike

STANDARD OIL CO. has always been the toughest nut in the oil industry to crack—union-wise, that is.

Last week, Standard Oil of Ohio (Sohio), was busy keeping up the tradition.

The CIO Oil Workers have wrapped up most of their contracts this year with an industry-wide pattern of about 17½ cents an hour in raises plus continuation of cost-of-living bonuses previously granted.

Sohio refused to go along, insisted on cutting out the bonus, but agreed to the 17½ cents. The 8½ cent bonus expired with the contract April 2.

So the 1700 CIO employes in three Sohio refineries in Cleveland, one in Toledo and at the Eastern Division of the Sohio Pipeline Co. walked out last week. A 9 cent raise (17½c minus 8½c) just doesn't equal 17½c any way you look at it, they figured.

Food, Tobacco: The asparagus season is over in California, and 5000 CIO Food, Tobacco and Agricultural workers have called off their seven-week strike until next season.

They'll start with the same demands—union recognition, improved housing and working conditions, and an end to the kickback racket. During the strike deputy sheriffs raided camps and evicted hundreds of families; beatings and arrests of strikers were common.

Plight of these migratory workers was described by Cipiano Delvo in a letter to the California Farm Reporter:

"I have worked in the asparagus fields for 19 years. Whenever I go to work, I never know how much I'm going to get. Our house in the camp is just like a stable. The outdoor toilet has no ventilation. The hole is full and the smell is terrible. . . . There has been no wage increase since 1942. Now I am joining the union so that all these bad practices can be corrected."

Social Service: Contract renewal talks began last week for the Social Service Employes division of the CIO Office & Professional Workers at 22 private social agencies in New York City. The union is pressing for "Sixty-five and Forty"—$65 dollars a week minimum for professional social workers and a $40 weekly floor on clerical pay.

Public Workers: A report on discriminatory practices in Federal agencies has been compiled by the New York City Federal workers local of the CIO Public Workers and has been sent to all New York Congressmen.

The study reveals that nine Federal agencies refused to accept non-white applicants from a wartime agency then being liquidated; that the Federal Trade Commission, after accepting eight transferred Negro employes under protest, segregated them, refused to assign them work and finally dismissed them.

Another incident related in the report concerns an exchange of notes between the personnel officers in the Dept. of Agriculture and another agency in which there was the statement: "Attached are applications I talked to you about. Except for color, they look like good girls."

In forwarding copies of the report to the Congressmen, the local asked them to urge Pres. Truman to issue an Executive Order creating a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee for Federal workers pending enactment of an overall FEPC by Congress.

Drug Store Employes: New York City drug store employes of the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store union will strike the Whelan and Liggett drug store chains if agreement isn't reached soon.

At a membership meeting employes authorized a walkout and appropriated a fund of $250,000 to back the strike.

The companies have refused to bargain with the local on grounds that its officers have not signed non-Communist affidavits. Union spokesmen pointed out, however, that both concerns signed agreements with the local on the West Coast on May 27.

Longshore: A union proposal to settle the current West Coast waterfront dispute has been flatly rejected by the employers, dimming prospects of agreement before the 80-day federal injunction expires.

The CIO Longshoremen & Warehousemen proposed that the dispute over election of dispatchers, who do the hiring, be resolved this way:

That they be selected in the first instance by the union; that they must qualify according to standards prescribed by the Joint Labor Relations Committees; that their appointment and tenure be subject to approval of the committees and that their actions be regulated and reviewable by the joint committees.

This method of selecting dispatchers was to have been put into effect until final court determination on legality of the hiring hall under the Taft-Hartley act.

Other point in the proposal: That settlement of wage demands, when reached, be retroactive to June 16, day following expiration of the old contract.

The union said it would be willing to submit all its demands to arbitration if the company would accept the proposal.

Asks Minimum Pay Rate Of 87c An Hour

Upward revision of the minimum wage under the Walsh-Healey Act from the present 40c to 87c an hour has been urged by Solomon Barkin, CIO Textile Workers research director.

Testifying last week before a public hearing conducted by the Labor Department's Wage & Hour Public Contracts Division, Barkin said the prevailing minimum wage in the cotton textile industry is now 87c and is so recognized by the industry. The present 40c floor is obsolete, he said.

The textile union has been seeking since 1945 to obtain an increase in the legal minimum for mills working on government contracts.

Industry spokesmen opposing the increase admitted that the minimum wage now in effect is 87c, but insisted that the idea of a government-imposed minimum "would encourage the inefficient."

Exactly how, no one explained.

We'll Go Underground to Keep Men Free, Says N. J. Manufacturers' Association

Spreader of dangerous doctrines —as portrayed by secretive Work and Unity Group.

THE New Jersey Manufacturers Association is trying to pin a new—and false—label on the old NAM propaganda line.

It's "Work and Unity."

The scheme is supposed to be secret—insofar as the general public is concerned.

Its announced objective is to combat subversive groups and keep free men from becoming slaves.

Its actual objective is to sell the public on the National Association of Manufacturers' concept of free enterprise.

The New Jersey group has decided to avoid the whoopla and fanfare with which the NAM usually functions, go underground, so to speak, and operate from "cells" and "units" like the Communists do.

Robert W. Watt, NJMA director of publications and research, is the key man in the Work and Unity Plan. His office provides the speakers' kits and other material needed by W&U workers.

Note to Press

"In all publicity, prior to and following delivery of talks before local audiences, the press should publicize the speaker either through his local industrial connection or as a part of the local Work and Unity group, but not as a representative of the Manufacturers Association," says the NJMA handbook.

Headquarters of the New Jersey Manufacturers Association is in a white marble building at 363 W. State St., in Trenton.

The Work and Unity Group has its headquarters at the same address.

But the W&U pamphlet, "Free Men Or Slaves," designed for public consumption, doesn't give the slightest indication there's any connection between the two.

This omission was deliberate. The Work and Unity Plan handbook explains why.

It says those brought into W&N should be told that the "Work and Unity group will be their organization, entirely operated by them and will not be considered a 'committee' of the Manufacturers Association."

And, furthermore . . .

"The group should not only include industrialists but should also represent the educational institutions, the press and civic leaders."

ORGANIZED labor is mentioned casually and only once in the W&U handbook, which carries the Association's signature, or in the "Free Men Or Slaves" pamphlet, which doesn't.

They take swipes at New Dealism, the police state, totalitarian propaganda and Communism.

This is reminiscent of the line followed by such outfits as Christian-American and Fight for Free Enterprise, which raised money under the guise of fighting for Americanism and used it to fight trade unions.

The W&U handbook "views with alarm" the public's reaction to things closest to the hearts of NAM members. It says:

"National surveys conducted by a number of public opinion polls revealed alarming facts concerning the erroneous ideas of a large percentage of our population in regard to corporation profits, government control of industry, the wage earners' share of industrial income and the basic principles of American economics."

W&U proposed to correct these "wrong" ideas.

IDENTICAL: Photostats (left) show headquarters of the new Work and Unity Group and the New Jersey Manufacturers Association are one and the same. Also shown are a portion of a Work and Unity pamphlet, an excerpt from NJMA's confidential instructions to industrialists, and (right) headquarters for W&U and NJMA. They are Siamese twins.

THE manufacturers' group gives a complete outline of the procedure to be used in establishing W&U groups. It states that:

"The modus operandi of subversive groups, particularly the establishment of 'cells' and Communists, has long been the 'units.' It has not been their procedure to tell their story through the use of full-page newspaper advertisements, national radio broadcasts, or mass meetings of thousands of people.

"The 'cell' is composed of five to 10 trained propagandists who, in turn, join with other cells to honeycomb the structure of a free country, until, like an atomic chain reaction, their poisonous misinformation spreads from cell to cell causing an industrial explosion, resulting in economic collapse.

"In the organizaiton of Work and Unity it was decided to fight fire with fire, to build a structure which could provide an adequate antidote to counteract the poison pumped into the minds of Americans. To use cells to fight cells and units to fight units. For the first time in American history, to work for the 'unorganized majority' on the same ground and with the same weapons used by the 'organized minorities.'

DESIGNERS of the Work and Unity Plan obviously intend to keep their cells and units moving steadily down the Manufacturers Association path.

They'll provide W&U speakers with all the material needed to win friends and influence people toward the NAM way of thinking.

Among material available are outlines of three W&U speeches—"The $20,000 Can Opener," "The American Way" and "Who Are the Capitalists?"

Help Available

The Manufacturers Association does not want to be publicly identified with Work and Unity but its handbook says it will. . . .

". . . cooperate in the program by assisting in the organization of the Unit, by providing speakers' material, by furnishing display material to be used before audiences and by cooperating in obtaining speaking engagements for members of the group."

Then there is reference material, "consisting largely of current newspaper and magazine articles, pertinent statistics and speech-stimulating ideas."

There are charts to illustrate each talk.

All of this—and more, too—comes in a neat, handy kit which can be inspected at 363 W. State St., Trenton, N. J.

EASEL PRESENTATION

SPEAKERS' AIDS: For Work and Unity Speakers who want to follow the NAM line the New Jersey Manufacturers Association will provide the material pictured above. Speakers, however, must be billed as representatives of Work and Unity—not as representatives of the Manufacturers Association. It's all part of the "fight fire with fire" technique.

As You Read This A Worker Is Killed

Every four minutes one worker is killed or crippled in industrial accidents. Every 16 seconds of the day a worker is injured. During the year 1947, 17,000 workers were killed, 91,000 disabled and 2,000,000 injured.

These are among the figures cited by the U.S. Dept. of Labor to show why a National Conference on Industrial Safety has been called to spur a "concentrated and coordinate effort" to lessen industrial accidents.

The conference will be held Sept. 27-29 in Washington. Pres. Truman asked the Labor Dept. to call the safety conference through its Bureau of Labor Standards, and appointed Vincent P. Ahearn as executive director of the conference to work with BLS Director William L. Connolly.

Labor, management, voluntary safety organizations, and Federal and state labor departments will be represented at the conference.

Alex Balint Dies, Mine, Mill Official

Alex Balint, 36, regional director for the CIO Union of Mine Mill & Smelter Workers, died at Cleveland, O., July 3, following several months' illness. An organizer in the early days of the CIO, Balint was on the staff of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee. He helped organize the Aluminum Co. of America and other companies.

Balint was arrested last February by the Immigration & Naturalization Service on a deportation warrant charging him with being an alien member of an organization advocating overthrow of the government by force and violence. A native of Hungary, he is survived by his wife and two children.

IT'S GETTING WORSE

The prices-wages situation reminds us of that little dog in our neighborhood who spends a lot of time chasing his tail.

He gets out in the front yard and goes around and around and around. He makes a lot of noise. But he never catches his tail.

It's a tiresome performance—but not a bit more tiresome than this business of getting a pay cut nearly every time you turn around.

It's happened in 18 of the 24 months that have passed since OPA was killed.

Each increase in prices equals a cut in pay (as if you didn't know it). The cost of living has gone up in all but six of the 24 months of the post-OPA period, according to Government figures.

And there's every indication prices will rise again—perhaps rather sharply—between now and the end of the year.

This would cut into the wage hikes the unions have been securing in an effort to regain the lost purchasing power resulting from previous price increases.

Where—and when—will it end?

Nobody seems to know when, but there's fairly general agreement as to where. It will end in an economic crash and another terrible depression unless something is done to change the trends.

CORPORATIONS COULD DO IT

The large corporations of the nation are in a position to do the deflating job that needs to be done. They have enough power to do it. They are in a financial position to do it. But there is no indication they're in a mood to do it.

Their quest is for enormous profits—not for economic stability.

In the long run, of course, they'll cut their own financial throats—unless they do everything in their power to bring about a better balance between wages and profits.

Glib talk won't do the job. Neither will attempts to place the blame for inflation on others. Neither will charges that "labor is trying to destroy the profit system."

If the job is done, business and industry must break their bad post-war habit of gouging the consumer.

There may be a more polite word than "gouging" that we could use, but we know none that is more factual.

THEY WON BUT LOST

Some 6000 persons went to the polls in an election out in Illinois recently and nearly 5000 of them voted in favor of the proposal placed before them. You would call that a smashing victory, under ordinary circumstances.

But the circumstances weren't ordinary.

A union was involved, and usual democratic procedures weren't followed, thanks to the Taft-Hartley Act.

Some 10,600 workers were given an opportunity to vote on a union shop proposal but only about 6000 showed up at the polls. The votes of these 6000 should have settled the issue—but they didn't.

The "no" votes of those who cast ballots were, in effect, added to the "votes" of those who didn't go to the polls.

This total was larger than the "yes" vote—and so the union shop issue lost.

T-H says a majority of all employes affected—not just those voting—is necessary to approve the union shop.

It's a bit like playing a fellow who has loaded dice.

Tear Down That Smokescreen

'Republicanism Vs. Communism', Is Completely Phony Campaign Slogan

By ALLAN L. SWIM

HAMBURGER meat was selling at the corner grocery at 65 to 80 cents a pound, generally, with best grades bringing even more.

Inflation had the nation by the seat of the pants and was threatening its entire economic structure.

Economists were shaking their heads and wearing worried looks because they saw further price increases in the future.

This situation, one would have thought, should have caused delegates to the Republican convention to devote considerable time to the problems arising from the high cost of living—but it didn't.

They approved an "anti-inflation" platform splinter (you could hardly call it a plank) and attached a "rider" promising the "rooting out of Communists wherever found."

Nobody tried to explain what the Reds had to do with the price of hamburger.

SOMEHOW or other, a lot of people got the idea that the Republicans might face a couple of our most important issues squarely.

Instead—

Party Chairman B. Carroll Reece declared that there were only two powerful political forces in the country today—the Republicans and the Communists.

Convention Keynoter Dwight Green said that if the GOP is successful all of the "Reds and Pinks" on the Federal payroll will be given the heave-ho, intimating, of course, that the payroll is loaded with 'em.

And some of the newspapers headlined this foolishness as—

"Republicanism vs. Communism."

REPUBLICAN die-hards were setting the stage for a campaign in which the voters would be told their choice in November would be between good, honest, American Republicanism and Communism.

Drawing the line in that manner would be as phony as a $3 bill! And the Republicans who thought up the idea know it.

There's nothing new in such strategy. Politicians for years have been trotting out bogey men to draw voters' attention from the real issues.

If the GOP could do it this year there would be a grand and glorious fight over Communism. The record of the 80th Congress and the special interest groups which regard the GOP as their happy hunting ground would draw scant attention.

SOME of the newspaper columnists and radio commentators who see eye to eye with the GOP would have us believe that Candidates Dewey and Warren are high calibre gentlemen who would not stoop to such tactics.

Maybe so. We sincerely hope so.

But we recall that Dewey got down pretty low in the gutter when he was doing battle with Roosevelt.

And we're quite familiar with this business of the top guys speaking politely while their underlings throw mud.

WE, of course, don't know what kind of platform the Democrats will write this week at Philadelphia, so we can't compare it with the one adopted last month by the GOP.

But one thing is certain:

The voters this year deserve a better break than they will get if they have "Republicanism vs. Communism" drummed into their ears day and night by the Dewey-Warren campaign orators.

The nation can ill afford a campaign based on hysterical name-calling—a campaign in which a major party tries to substitute false isssues for real ones.

Voters shouldn't have to fight their way through a smokescreen on their way to the ballot boxes.

Unions Likened To Town Meetings

"Unions are the town meetings of industrial America," says Pres. Thomas Thompson of the United Auto Workers' big Local 600 at the Ford River Rouge plant in Dearborn, Mich.

"During colonial days, before the advent of the Constitution, the colonists used to govern themselves by the town meeting," he says in Ford Facts, Local 600's paper.

"Many small New England communities still govern themselves that way. These town meetings provided the medium of development of the seeds of political democracy which culminated in the American Constitution and our present great nation.

"The unions are the town meetings of industrial America. They are the medium in which the seeds of industrial democracy are being developed. They are the only organizations fighting the fight of the workers. They are just as American as the colonial town meeting.

"The workers who come after us will look back at our present efforts as we now look back at the colonial town meetings. They, too, will look with awe upon our valiant fight against seemingly overwhelming odds.

"Overcoming the vicious intent of the union-busting Taft-Hartley law requiring union shop elections is just another one of the fights we are forced to make against our enemies."

"I THINK YOUR TECHNIQUE'S GOOD ENOUGH TO BEGIN CAMPAIGNING NOW."

Two Oil Workers Killed In Blast

THE nitro-glycerin explosion which recently wrecked the Hercules Powder Co. in Hercules, Calif., killed two members of the CIO Oil Workers and seriously injured two others.

R. V. Buckley, secretary-treasurer of Local 587, and John B. Leighty, a member, were killed. Injured were Lester Hegeman and Edward Bruner. Buckley, 49, was the father of three children. Leighty, 35, left two children.

The building in which they were working was obliterated. No trace of their bodies was found. The explosion occurred the same day a similar explosion in another Hercules plant in Kenvil, N. J., killed three men and injured other workers.

Jack Bruhl, president of the local, reported that he heard the report of the New Jersey explosion over the radio, and then went to the nitro-glycerin unit where he talked with Buckley and Leighty several minutes. About five minutes after he left, the blast occurred.

Hits Taft-Hartley

The Eau Claire, (Wis.) Chamber of Commerce doesn't like T-H. That was the word from Paul Jensen, C. of C. secretary and former Wisconsin Univ. football star.

Speaking to the Dane County Conference on Political Education Jensen singled out for criticism the curbs on political spending and the requirement that union officials sign anti-Communist affidavits.

Mike's Son Learns A Peculiar Lesson

THE fellows were sitting around a hotel room one night, shooting the breeze—discussing any subject that came to mind.

Finally the conversation swung around to "Property Rights vs. Human Rights" and that led to the story about Mike, the murdering company goon.

There are a lot of stories about Mike—some true, some false—and most of them deal with his brutality, his disregard for human life.

This one was slightly different, however, because it dealt with Mike's pride and joy—his son—as well as with Mike himself.

MIKE probably was credited with killing more men than he had actually killed, the story-teller said.

But he was a tough customer—a guy equally effective with his fists, a club or a gun.

Sometimes, in his youth, he fought just for the pure joy he got out of physical combat. Later he offered his peculiar talent for hire.

Soon he became a company goon, a strong-arm man for an outfit that believed the best way to deal with unions was to smash them.

Soon Mike was building a reputation—a bad one— for himself.

He, no doubt, took the blame for many misdeeds with which he had no connection, but before long he became known as a killer.

THE story-teller paused to light his pipe, lolled back in his chair and continued to talk about Mike

"Some of the old timers will tell you that he killed five men and others say that he killed six. I don't know. There was too much shooting and too much head-cracking—and that I know for sure.

"For a time it was almost like open warfare—and an organizer's life wasn't worth much more than a plugged nickel.

"Finally the union was firmly established and Mike was given a job in the plant. He was still a tough egg—a hard man to deal with— and he liked to throw his weight about.

"He was about as popular as poison ivy."

SOMEWHERE, sometime Mike met and fell in love with a girl. They got married and a son was born to them.

Mike—Mike the tough egg at the factory—became a doting father. His son was going to be brought up right. He was going to be taught the proper respect for the proper things.

He was going to make a real man out of that boy if he nearly killed him in the process.

At this point of the story one of the listeners interrupted and asked, "What the heck's that got to do with human rights and property rights?"

The story-teller said he'd get to the point immediately.

MIKE took his small son into a store with him one day. It was one of those stores loaded down with gadgets, trinkets, small toys, light hardware and clothing.

The boy's hand darted out towards a counter, grabbed a 10-cent toy gun and disappeared in his shirt front. But Mike's eye was quicker than his son's hand.

He jerked the gun out of the boy's shirt-front, put it back on the counter and jerked the lad out the front door of the store.

"He yanked the kid down an alley and beat him nearly half to death because he'd tried to steal a gun worth a dime."

Then Big Mike—the guy who had almost no respect for human rights—shook his finger under his son's nose and shouted:

"I'll learn ya to have the proper respect for property or I'll wring your damn little neck!"

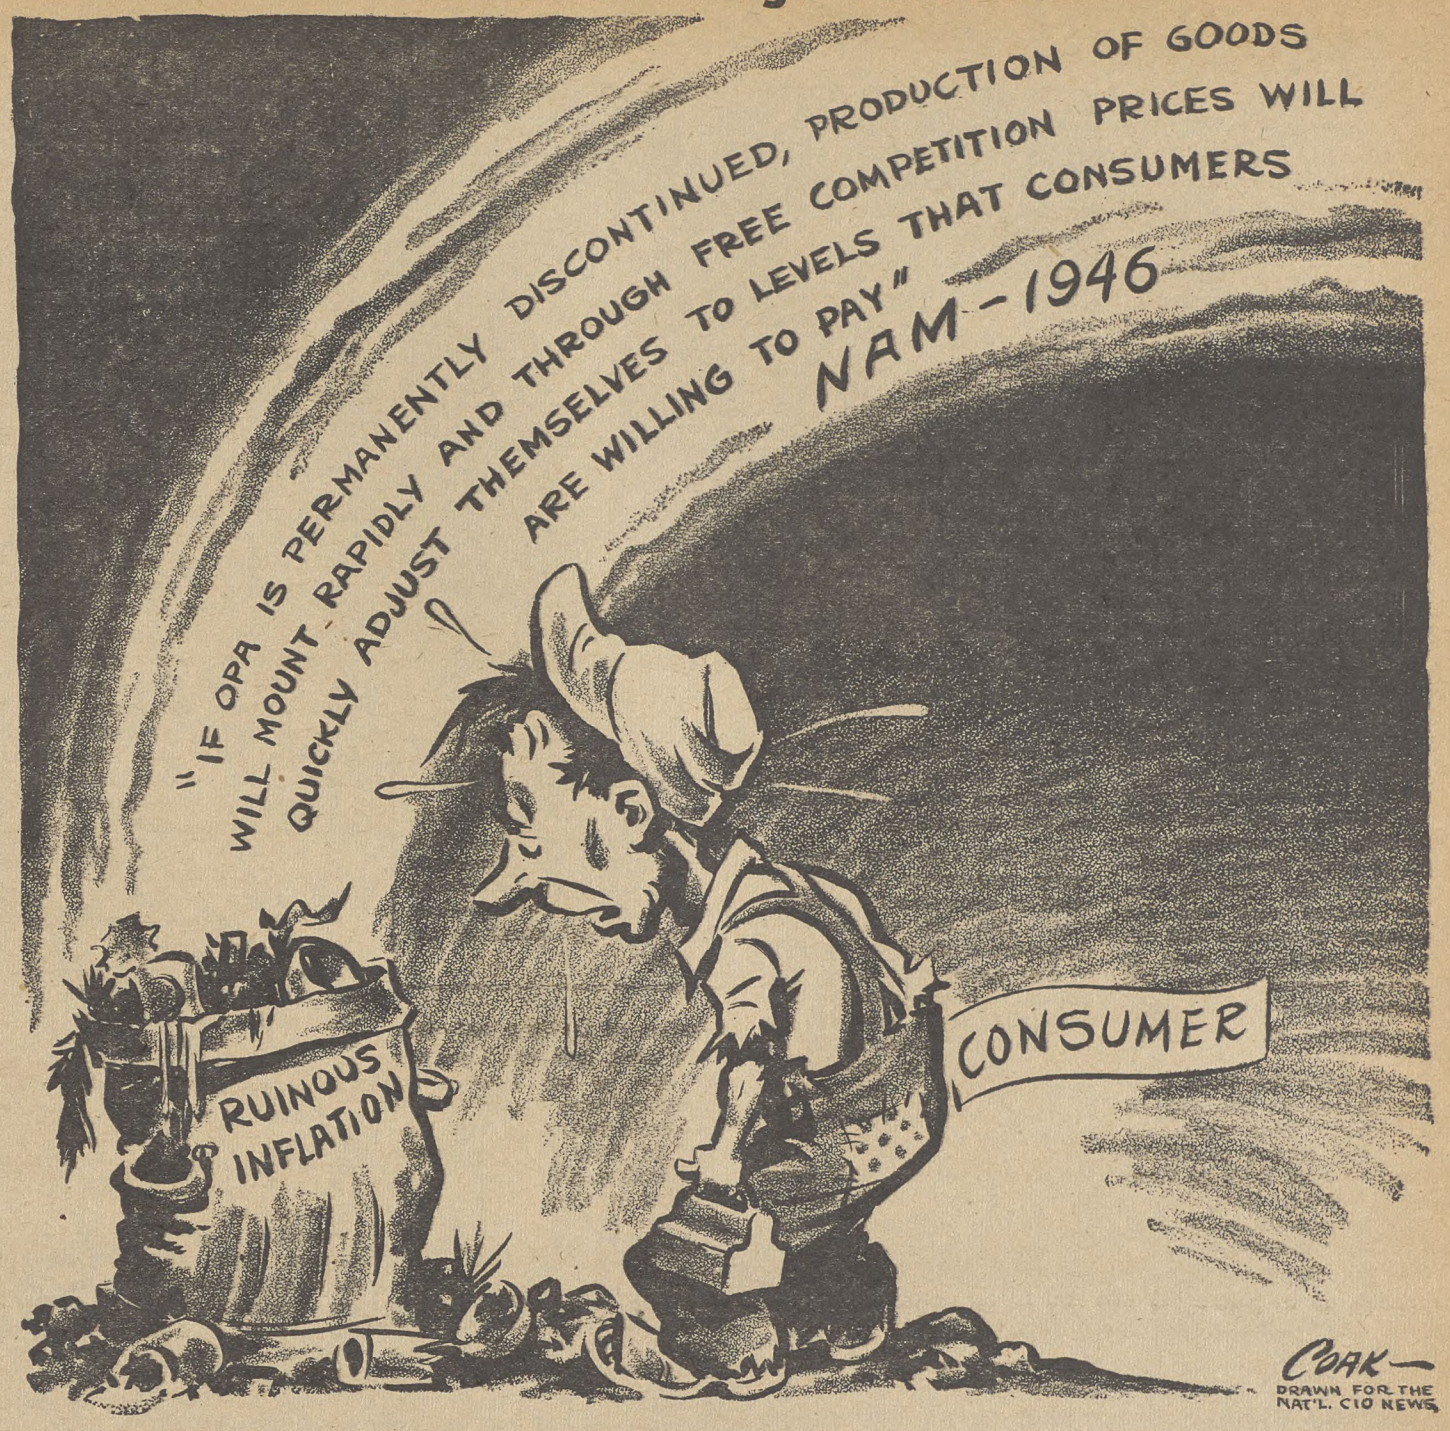
Stinks To High Heaven



Stop Shooting-From-Hip Congress Probes, Says Sen. Lucas

IN Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence a defendant is considered innocent until he is proved guilty. Not so in the klieg-lighted, blaringly-headlined investigations recently staged by some Congressional committees. Without benefit of counsel or the right of cross-examination, witnesses have undergone the committeemen's scalpel, emerging with tattered reputations and in some instances, loss of jobs.

Alarmed at these abuses, Sen. Scott W. Lucas (D., Ill.) has introduced a bill to protect witnesses from such inquisitions. In an article titled, "Cannibals in the Capitol," appearing in the June 27 issue of This Week, syndicated newspaper magazine, Lucas airs his criticisms and outlines his suggested cure. Following are excerpts from the piece:

MANY years ago Walter Lippman pictured Congressional investigations as "that legalized atrocity where Congressmen, starved of their legitimate food for thought, go on a wild and feverish man hunt and do not stop at cannibalism."

It is hardly an answer to say that Congressional investigations have in the main been properly conducted. Those hearings in which witnesses are treated fairly are not the ones which catch the public eye . . .

. . . After I had been elected to the Senate, I was appointed a member of the joint committee to investigate the Pearl Harbor disaster. For week after tedious week, we heard the testimony of everyone who had any connection with that question. The record of that hearing is divided into 39 parts—and took 20,618 pages to print.

Country In Danger

Unless Congress has the statemanship to reform itself, I fear that the whole process of Congressional investigation will fall into disrepute. The public will not tolerate much longer the disorderly hurling of charge and counter-charge, the assassination of reputations without cause. Congress and the country are in danger of losing the useful function of committee investigation. . . .

Sen. Lucas

Irrelevant detail was piled on irrelevant detail until the main issue was often lost sight of. Much more serious, however, was the abusive nature of some of the questions addressed men high in public life.

ANY move for reform must not weaken the basic structure of committee operation. No obstacle should be thrown in the path of an orderly effort to get at the heart of the problem which the committee has before it. The enormous powers of committees certainly must not be taken away. Without the power to subpoena witnesses, to compel them to testify, to produce papers, and to punish them for contempt, committees would be reduced to relative impotence.

What must be done, it seems to me, is to provide committees with rules—in effect, a code embodying the traditional American ideal of fair play. Witnesses must be free from the shooting-from-the-hip so characteristic of the House Committee on un-American Activities.

To my mind, there is no more important battle we have to fight in this war of ideas than the campaign to maintain the respect of the world for the American Congress. If the people of the United States lost faith in their Congress, what opinion can we expect the rest of the world to have? For Congress is the most important visible symbol of American democracy. . . .

To prepare the way for much needed house cleaning, five bills have been introduced in Congress, each aimed at preventing the recurrence of unfair and scandalous committee investigation. Four have been proposed in the House of Representatives—by Helen Gahagan Douglas and Chet Holifield of California, Adolph J. Sabath of Illinois, and Frank Buchanan of Pennsylvania.

Last February, I introduced in the Senate a resolution in which I have tried to provide a code for the protection of witnesses which still will not hamper the work of the committee.

Roughly, Senate Concurrent Resolution Number 44 provides that:

1. Anyone attacked by testimony or other evidence before a committee may file a sworn rebuttal which would become part of the hearing.

2. Such a person has the right to testify in his behalf, have the committee call his own witnesses, and cross-examine witnesses appearing against him.

3. A witness may be accompanied by counsel.

4. In the conduct of hearings the evidence must be relevant to the subject.

5. A witness may purchase transcripts of his testimony.

6. No committee report shall be filed until such report has been approved by a majority of those voting.

7. No member or employe of a committee shall, for compensation, lecture or write about the committee or its reports during the existence of the committee and while he is still a member.

CIO WANTS 'F.D.R. PLATFORM'

Here are the CIO's recommendations for the Democratic platform as presented last week to the Democratic Platform Committee by Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey:

The U. S., under the great leadership and inspiration of President Roosevelt, has set up a standard for all the peoples of the earth.

We propose that this convention adopt a Roosevelt Platform. We recall the objectives proclaimed by Roosevelt for a postwar America in the new economic bill of rights:

"The right to a useful and remunerative job; the right to earn enough to provide adequate food and clothing and recreation; the right of every farmer to raise and sell his products at a return which will give him and his family a decent living, the right of every businessman, large and small, to trade in an atmosphere free from unfair competition and domination by monopoly; the right of every family to a decent home; the right to adequate medical care and the opportunity to achieve and enjoy good health; the right to adequate protection from the economic fears of old age, sickness, accident and unemployment."

We recognize that these basic rights cannot be achieved by words alone. They require action. They require candidates pledged in good faith to these great objectives. They require a Congress similarly pledged and similarly motivated.

The 80th Congress, under a reactionary Republican leadership, has fostered repression instead of freedom, insecurity instead of protection, inflation instead of stability, special interest instead of the general welfare.

The people know this. Working men and women know this. In four successive national elections, under the great leadership of Roosevelt, the American people voiced their determination to move forward with confidence toward this program of security and abundance. They again will respond to a call sincerely made with the courage and will to achieve these goals.

BASIC SECURITY: The vital factor in an organized, orderly society is the basic security of the individual. If this basic security is absent, there can be no such thing as the common good or the general welfare.

Each individual must be free to exercise his human rights—economic, political, and civil.

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING: If our economy and institutions are to remain free, genuine collective bargaining must be safeguarded and extended.

The Taft-Hartley Law has undermined the national policy established during the Roosevelt administration. This law attempts to take us back in the direction of the old evils of individual bargaining.

Sen. Myers (D., Pa.), chairman of Democratic Platform Committee, and James B. Carey.

The T-H Law has been directly responsible for the revival of government by injunction. The Act constitutes a dangerous challenge to the right of free speech and to our free press. It has increased industrial strife, upset union security provisions in thousands of existing agreements, and opened up opportunities for endless lawsuits by unscrupulous employers against unions.

This convention should forthrightly demand the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act. The experience under the law has demonstrated the truth of President Truman's statement when he vetoed the law and said, "It is a bad bill. It is bad for labor, bad for management, and bad for the country."

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS: To assure workers and employers alike of fair treatment, our laws governing minimum wages and maximum hours must be considerably strengthened. The principle of equal pay for equal work regardless of race or sex must be generally applied throughout American industry.

PRODUCTION AND DISTRIBUTION: Between June of 1946 the effective end of OPA, and the beginning of 1948, the cost of living has gone up more than one-fourth. This rise unfortunately still continues. As a result, families are hard put to buy food and clothes, let alone anything beyond. The high cost of living is a household reality.

The 80th Congress has ignored realities and in so doing has contributed to the inflationary spiral.

We reiterate the need for an effective program of control over prices and for immediate and effective legislation by the Congress to restore price controls over the basic necessities of life.

The best preventive of inflation and exploitation through shortages of goods, is the exercise of proper price controls by the government.

HOUSING: The lack of housing requires no detailed analysis. It is real; it is here; and there presently exists no detailed orderly plan for its alleviation. The government must give effective leadership to the private building construction industry. It must apply systems of allocation and price control in distribution of building materials.

We must, however, recognize the void in our housing requirements that cannot be met by private industry. This void must be filled by the government with publicly financed and operated housing projects available to persons in the low-income brackets at reasonable rents.

In view of the delay in providing adequate housing, we urge that effective rent controls be restored.

HEALTH: The health of the people is an integral part of their security. We must admit frankly that our technological advances in the field of industrial production have not been matched in other related fields such as that of health and medical care.

The present system of financing medical care and its related fields must be greatly improved and expanded. We can no longer accept invalid arguments against national health insurance plans which will afford both members of the medical profession and the consumers of medical care, free choice in the rendition of acceptance of medical care. We must give to the health of the people at least as much regard as we give the education of the people.

EDUCATION: Our educational system must be greatly expanded and improved.

Specifically we urge adequate federal aid for all education, and enactment of the Labor-Education Extension Service to provide for adult workers.

SOCIAL SECURITY: A minimum program should embody:

1. A substantial rise in the present level of old-age benefits and a reduction in retirement age. This level has been unchanged for 9 years, during which time the cost of living has moved upward.
2. An extension of the entire social security program, including unemployment insurance and old-age, sickness and death and survivors' benefits to make its benefits available to the many under-privileged groups who are now denied protection.
3. A nationwide system of unemployment insurance, paying adequate benefits for a decent period of time.
4. The institution of sickness and disability insurance to provide a complete program (on a federal level) of health protection and disability payments.

TAXES: Our tax structures must be organized and administered entirely under the principle of "ability to pay." The recent tax law, by ignoring this principle, has contributed to the inflationary spiral. We urge an adequate tax program to recapture speculative, exorbitant and excess profits. Under this program taxes should not be levied against the meager savings of working people. Above all, they should not be levied on the cooperative efforts of farmers and consumers throughout the country to provide themselves with goods and services on a non-profit basis.

RIGHTS OF WOMEN: The great majority of women's organizations support a Women's Equal Status Bill which was introduced in Congress by representatives of both political parties. This bill would have removed undesirable discriminations against women without harming existing protective legislation. We supported this bill, and we strenuously denounce the so-called Equal Rights Amendment which would destroy hard-won gains.

SMALL BUSINESS: The owner of the small business enterprise must be accorded full protection of the law in his right to choose his own method of employment. He must not be subjected to vicious monopoly practices or unfair trade practices.

U. S. DEPT. OF LABOR: The Dept. of Labor is an agency established out of the wisdom of our national experience to serve the needs of the overwhelming majority of our people who work for wages and salaries. This department has its counterpart in the field of industry in the Dept. of Commerce, and its counterpart in food and fiber production in the Dept. of Agriculture. Its services must be broadened and expanded; there must be restored to it the related activities in its field of competence which have been stripped from it and assigned to comparatively unrelated governmental agencies.

NATIONAL RESOURCES: Federal development, administration, and operation of national resources in the interest of the whole people has long since passed the stage of experiment.

It is not too late to begin the administration of these resources so that their availability to the American people can in large measure be perpetuated.

VETERANS: We must, in good faith, make good on the pledges we made the members of our armed forces during World War II. We must not follow the policy of repudiation of pledges to World War I veterans that marked the Twenties.

We have thus far woefully failed to provide proper housing and the other items of basic security which are so sadly lacking. We must not blind ourselves to the fact that the veterans of World War II are the potential parents of those who will guide our national destinies a few short years from now.

FOREIGN POLICY: The same principles that guide us in our domestic policy must prevail in the field of our foreign policy.

We stand dedicated to the cause of peace and its preservation. And as a people, we abhor war.

We are in full support of the European Recovery Program as an instrument towards world peace and sec

Carey Hits GOP

Replying to a query by Rep. Emmanuel Celler (D., N. Y.), a member of the Democratic Platform Committee, Carey said: "I think the Republican Party's 'labor' plank is deceitful."

Model for World

After he finished his prepared statement, Carey told Sen. Frank Myers (D., Pa.), chairman of the Democratic Platform Committee:

"Our CIO members stand behind this program to a man. I hope to see the day when this program is adopted fully, thus making America the model for the world."

The best stock

Hugh D. Scott, Jr., renegade Democrat who is the new chairman of the Republican Natl. Committee, comes of the best stock. He says so himself.

In fact, Rep. Scott thinks all Republicans are of the best stock—including Boss Joe Grundy, who ordered Gov. Thomas E. Dewey to appoint Philadelphia's Scott as chairman. (Also, presumably, the Republicans who are neck-deep in Philadelphia's current municipal scandal.) In a campaign speech several years back, Scott declared: "It is time for the Republicans to take over. We are of the best stock. We are the best people."

Poll Shows Might Bea

IF opinion polls have any prophetic value — and they sometimes do—Mayor Hubert H. Humphrey of Minneapolis has a fairly good chance of licking Sen. Joseph H. Ball (R., Minn.) this fall.

Humphrey, backed by CIO-PAC, is an aggressive liberal who has built up an outstanding record as mayor. Ball, a renegade former member of the CIO Newspaper Guild, has built up one of the most reactionary records in Congress, even in international affairs, at which he was once rated a "liberal."

The Minneapolis Sunday Tribune has been sampling Minnesota voters' preference ever since Humphrey announced he'd run for U. S. Senate. First poll, taken in April, showed that were the election held then, 43% of the voters polled would have voted

Here is part of a statement read to the Democratic Platform Committee by Walter White, executive secretary, Nat'l Association for Advancement of Colored People. The statement was made in the name of the Continuation Committee of 21 Negro Organizations:

We appear today on behalf of 21 national Negro organizations with a combined membership of 6,084,000. Representatives of these organizations have unanimously adopted a "Declaration of Negro Voters."

We come before the Platform Committee with few illusions. We know, as does everyone, that the Democratic party is torn by schisms. The primary, the Tribune queried the voters on how they stood on Humphrey vs. Ball, and Humphrey vs. King. Here are the results:

Humphrey	46%
Ball	36
Humphrey	43%
King	33

Humphrey has been slated as the candidate of the Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party. According to indications, the third party candidate, James Shields, might get about 2 to 5% of the vote.

The poll shows these interesting items: organized workers are strong for Humphrey; his vote would be high in cities and he would break even in towns and country against Ball; he would win 20% of Republican voters against Ball, would only lose 9% of D-FL voters; he is the choice generally of voters between 21 and 49; runs lower above that.

The day of reckoning has come when the party must decide whether it is going to permit bigots to dictate its philosophy or whether the party can rise to the heights of Americanism which alone can justify its continued existence.

The party must move forward or perish. The fate not only of the party itself but possibly that of America depends upon you.

We, therefore, respectfully but firmly insist that the Democratic Platform Committee can include nothing less than the full recommendations of the President's Committee on Civil Rights.

TOTALITARIANISM: We emphasize and restate our rejection of reactionary dictatorship—economic or political—domestic or foreign.

We do not believe that totalitarianism can meet the challenge which we fearlessly make to those who would usurp the government of the people. We can advance the democratic way of life only by putting its principles into full action.

NATIONAL ELECTIONS: The free exercise of the ballot is imperative in a functioning democracy. The importance in our lives of a national election justifies proclamation of the day on which the President and Vice President are elected as a national holiday so that all citizens will be granted the fullest opportunity to vote.

CONCLUSION: To sum up our views, we state our firm belief that the strongest defense of America lies in a sound and equitable economy. The best protection of our democracy lies in more democracy. A democracy that really works in the interest of all the people is immune from attack from within and without. The strength of America resides in its people; and the strength of its people resides entirely in their free exercise of their rights.

AND IT AIN'T FUNNY, McGEE

The following script was prepared by the Illinois Political Action Committee:

COMMENTATOR—You are about to witness a short skit entitled, "You've Got a Date in '48." This stirring drama will show you some of the many reasons why labor must organize to get out the vote as never before.

It shows you in graphic form the kind of men we have had in the 80th Congress. First, we will hear what U. S. Sen. Blowhard has to say.

BLOWHARD—It's a great pleasure and a special privilege to speak before you. I've always felt especially close to workers. My father was a worker. In fact, even today, some of my best friends are workers.

I am a real friend of the workers.

Let me say a few words about the Taft-Hartley law, which I helped, very proudly, steer through the halls of our Congress. This law is an American law. You remember and I remember with Abe Lincoln that our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal—all men! You are all equal.

For many years, you poor people have been victims of exploitation. I like poor people. My father was a poor man.

For too many years you have been victims of legislation which has said you are not equal to your employers, your more fortunate brothers; that you need a union to help you.

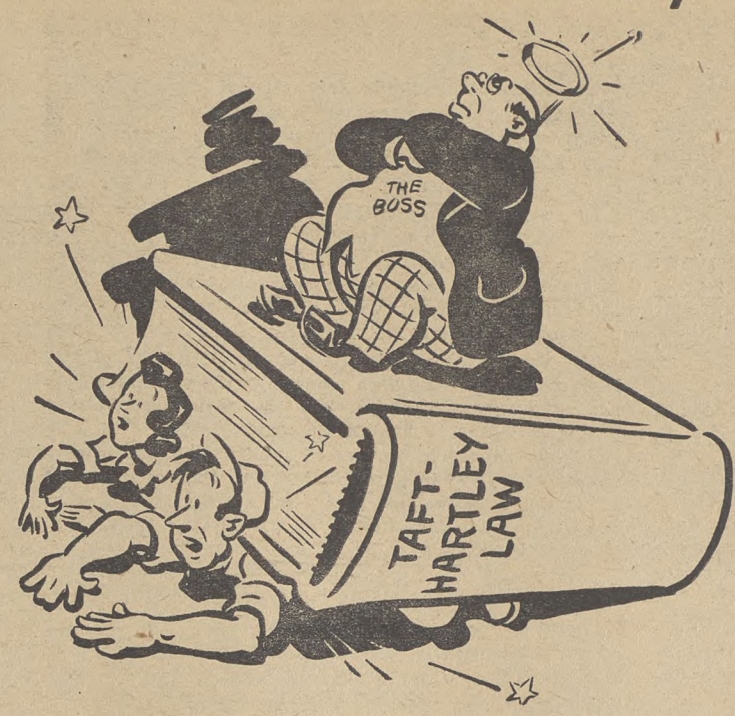
I deny that you are not equal. I will in your behalf, defend to the death, your equality before the law and will resist to the end, all legislation designed to interfere with that equality.

THE Taft-Hartley law was composed in that spirit. It is not my purpose here to go into all the details of the law. You will find out soon enough!

But I do want to take this opportunity to say we have saved you from the closed shop. We hope soon to give you back the open shop.

The doors of your shop will always be open to accommodate the constant stream of men coming in to take jobs.

Now, I know some of you who are timid are afraid that others may come in and take your jobs at lower wages. But think of the freedom you have. You have the right, and no union leader can stop you, to go to another shop yourself, as a free born American citizen, and take another fellow's job away. That is American free enterprise.



That is what made our Country great. Anything else is Socalism.

No I know it seems at first as if employers save money that way. But don't be deceived.

WE are not interested in money for your employers. No, we don't care anymore for money than we do for our right eye. It's all principle.

Now that doesn't mean that I'm against unions. No! If you want unions, go ahead. I'm for unions—so long as they're properly conducted.

Properly conducted. And how would I have them conducted? No strikes, no contracts, low wages, and damn few members. Thank you.

COMMENTATOR—We will now take you to some actual labor relations scenes to show you just how the law works. The first scene shows a union organizer talking to a worker:

ORGANIZER—Listen, fella. We've got to get together and organize a union. I think the boss has shown about enough partiality around here. He won't give us a decent wage; we don't have any seniority on our jobs; and he never heard of workers taking a vacation. Unless we organize and fight for our rights, some favorite of the boss may get our job.

COMMENTATOR—One moment! You can't do that. You're violating the law. You're coercing that worker. Section 8 of the Act.

★ ★ ★

COMMENTATOR—The next scene shows an employer addressing a group of workers at a plant meeting prior to an NLRB election.

BOSS—This Union will do nothing for you. Its organizers don't even come from around here. They are a bunch of outsiders. They can't help you—they just want your money. And I'll tell you one thing. If the Union comes in my plant, we'll shut the plant down before we deal with any Union.

ORGANIZER—Hey, wait a minute. You can't do that. You're coercing these workers. That's a violation of Section 8 of the Taft-Hartley law. That's gotta stop.

COMMENTATOR—Oh, no mister; you're wrong. We don't interfere with the free speech of American citizens.

★ ★ ★

COMMENTATOR—We now take you to a collective bargaining conference between UAW and the Backfire Motor Company.

ORGANIZER—We have expelled John Jones from our Union. Under the terms of our union shop contract we want you to discharge him.

BOSS—Why did you expel him?

ORGANIZER—He comes to work drunk. He's been fighting with the union steward. He's led wildcat strikes, and has even embezzled union funds.

BOSS—Has he paid his union dues?

ORGANIZER—Yes, but what's that got to do with it?

BOSS—I can't fire any man on the union's request, except for nonpayment of dues. You know that. The Taft-Hartley law says that.

★ ★ ★

COMMENTATOR—The next scene shows the mill office of the Quick-Drop Suspender Company.

BOSS—You came to work today wearing a belt. You should be wearing suspenders. You know the company rule on that. You're fired.

WORKER—You never fired anyone else for that. You're firing me because I'm chairman of the organizing committee. I'll go to the law. I'll file charges with the NLRB.

COMMENTATOR—The board will not protect you. The law provides for equality. Labor deals with labor. Management deals with management. This is a management problem. You have nothing to say about it.

★ ★ ★

COMMENTATOR—We continue now with a court room scene.

JUDGE—As editor of "Steel Labor" you are charged with spending union funds in a political campaign. You have urged the defeat of Senator Blowhard. You have violated the law, I sentence you to one year in jail and a fine of $1000.

EDITOR—But, Your Honor, the owner of the Outland Steel Co. gave $5000 to Senator Blowhard's campaign. Why hasn't he been fined and sent to jail?

COMMENTATOR—The editor, ladies and gentlemen, doesn't understand. That was a personal contribution. There's nothing to stop the union editor making a $5000 contribution as an individual if he wants to. He and the employer have equal rights.

★ ★ ★

COMMENTATOR—Our final scene is the close of balloting at which the Union has sought authorization for the union shop.

BOARD REPRESENTATIVE: The results of this election are as follows: 1000 workers were eligible to vote. 490 voted for the union shop. 360 voted against it. 150 did not vote.

WORKERS: Hurrah! We win!

BOARD REPRESENTATIVE—Oh no, you don't. The Union loses. You only had 49% of those eligible to vote.

BLOWHARD—That's right. As your representatives, as representatives of the people, we have made sure that democracy will prevail. Not everybody voted who should vote. So we cannot permit a minority to decide for the majority.

ORGANIZER—Just a minute, Mr. Senator. I understand that only about 25% of the eligible voters in your state voted for you last year.

BLOWHARD—What has that got to do with it? After all, you don't want to carry this democracy thing too far, do you? Do you want mob rule?

ORGANIZER—No, we don't want mob rule—but we don't want to be ruled by a minority of power-hungry Congressmen who vote the way the NAM dictates, either.

And who voted for the Senator? You and you and you and you! How? Well—have you registered to vote? Did you vote in the primaries? Do you know how your Congressman voted on the Taft-Hartley law? Do you know whether your state representative is really representing your interests? Did you work for the election of liberal candidates in the 1944 and '46 elections?

Most of you would have to answer NO to these questions, wouldn't you. Well—let's make the answers YES this year.

Kroll Accepts

PAC Dir. Jack Kroll last week wired James Roosevelt, son of the late President, that "I will be happy to attend" a caucus of Democratic liberals.

"As you know, PAC is uncommitted to any presidential or vice-presidential aspirant, avowed or unavowed," Kroll said, "PAC, however, is committed to an open convention to the end that a ticket may be selected in a democratic manner, free of interference from those holding high office or the strings of political patronage."

Murray Won't Go To Convention

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, elected unopposed as a Pennsylvania delegate-at-large to the Democratic National Convention, has informed Chm. J. Howard McGrath that he would be unable to attend the convention because of urgent CIO business.

He also informed McGrath he would be unable to accept an invitation to address the convention on the subject of labor.

INDUSTRIAL UNION COUNCILS

CIO Bodies Have Wide Latitude On Education

BY JOHN BROPHY

CIO Director of Industrial Union Councils

(This is the fourth of a series of articles on the relation of CIO councils to the national CIO.)

ANOTHER field in which our industrial union councils have a broad freedom of action is the field of workers' education. And, with that broad freedom of action goes a very heavy responsibility.

Along with workers' education comes education of the public—education to make Americans aware of the correctness of labor's stand. And, accompanying both kinds of education is the CIO's duty to see to it that we have decent public school facilities in which real Americanism is taught.

First, let's take workers' education. No finer example can be found than in the State of Michigan—though there are many other excellent examples.

In Michigan, the state industrial union council has bought a magnificent tract of land with buildings on the shore of Lake Huron. It runs summer schools there during several summer weeks. There is a varied curriculum, with excellent instructors drawn from in and around the labor movement. The purchase was financed in part by the sale of bonds to Michigan CIO locals.

OTHER State councils have started or considered similar projects. The Ohio council, for one, is running a summer school at the Tar Hollow Group camp, near Chillicothe.

In some cases, councils have working arrangements with universities for somewhat similar activities on the campuses. There has been a great growth in this kind of educational work in the last three or four years.

The various internationals and the CIO Department of Research and Education are helping them along, but the main pioneering in this field and establishing solid schools has to be carried out by the councils. The internationals, on the other hand, have to think mainly of education related to their collective bargaining techniques.

Remember, the national CIO cannot try to teach the entire membership. Even where our Education Department organizes schools, sometimes for several states, the councils must do the recruiting. It is also up to them to decide what they want to have taught.

In short, our councils are agencies which offer educational programs on a broad basis, appealing to more than one international, and dealing with questions of common CIO policy. They are largely on their own in getting these things done.

As to public relations, we naturally want to put our best foot forward in telling the public about our movement. That's because the NAM and other business groups are constantly attacking us and misrepresenting our cause and our policy.

It is up to our councils, state and local, to answer such charges, and, even more important, to take a positive public position, showing communities the real truth about labor. One way to do this is radio programs.

Councils also call meetings and conferences on particular issues. Council committees go to see mayors and governors, keep in touch with veterans' organizations, farm organizations, voters' leagues and the like. They put the real story of the CIO across.

THE national CIO publicity people and education people are always ready to help if called upon, but they cannot do the job for the whole country. That is up to the councils, and they have a wide discretion to work out their own methods.

All Americans are interested in our public schools. Americans would be very bad citizens if they were not. Sometimes, selfish business interests put false propaganda into the schools. Official investigations have shown how that was done by electric power interests and others.

We need to be on guard against such false propaganda and to work for good people on local school boards who will not tolerate distortions. This is one of the duties of the councils, which they have to discharge pretty largely on their own, because only the local people can size up the job and work it out properly.

SOMEWHAT related to education is the matter of community services. The National CIO Community Services Committee has set up many centers under the direction of local councils for training CIO representatives in this work. These activities are called outplant representation or referral.

The counsellors, CIO people who take these courses, learn how to put CIO members in touch with Government agencies which can help them in social security, health, housing, and so on. Our members learn to use the facilities of local, state and national governments to solve their own personal problems which come up outside the plant.

The training of these counsellors under the supervision of CIO-NCSC is done by the councils. The contact work with governments is also really educational work among our members.

All these activities go on locally and on a state basis without interference, and with only a little assistance from the National CIO. Our councils have a broader autonomy in these educational fields than they will, in all probability, ever be able to exercise with the resources at their command.

Education

Largest Enrollment In Mich.; Many Institutes Planned

THE fifth annual Leadership Training Institute at the FDR-CIO Labor Center, the camp at Port Huron, Mich., owned by the Michigan CIO Council, opens this week with the largest enrollment since the school began in 1944.

The Institute which is sponsored by the Michigan CIO education department with the cooperation of the Auto Workers and other CIO international unions, will run until Aug. 21. Twenty-five classes are planned for the session, mostly for one week each, though some will be given over a two-week period.

Courses in political tactics, union time study methods, and payroll and production economics will be given the first week. The second week's subjects include grievance negotiation techniques, economic strategy, recreation leadership and political theories and party structures.

A feature of this year's institute is a special course for wives of workers attending the school. Held from 10 A. M. to noon daily, the course covers such topics as union wife—or union widow; solving our consumer problems; wives in the field of politics, and wives and the union future.

STUDENTS-IN-INDUSTRY

Detroit, motor capital of the U. S., with its 2,000,000 population and culture centered about its mass technology, has become an open class room for 16 students who are members of the Student-In-Industry project being operated under the joint sponsorship of Adrian and Olivet colleges.

Dr. Tucker Smith, formerly on the staff of the CIO Retail and Wholesale Union, now head of the economics department at Olivet, is educational director of the project.

Most of the students have found jobs in local auto shops and are rooming in a working class neighborhood. Field trips and lectures by experts in labor, management, church and government affairs are offered in addition to regular evening class sessions. The project started June 11 and is scheduled to run until Aug. 27.

* * *

TEACHING PARLEY

An intensive one-week conference on the teaching of labor economics will be held this summer on the campus of Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y. Scheduled for Aug. 25-31 by the School of Industrial & Labor Relations at Cornell, the program is designed to provide mutual training of college and university teachers who have classes dealing in subjects related to labor problems.

* * *

RELIGIOUS STUDY

An Industrial Relations Institute for Church Leaders is being held at the University of Wisconsin, July 11-23 under the sponsorship of the University's School for Workers with the cooperation of national religious organizations. John G. Ramsey, CIO public relations representative, will be one of the instructors.

* * *

COMMUNITY WORK

Labor leadership in community affairs will be the subject of this year's annual Labor Leadership Institute sponsored by the Georgia Workers Education Service, 353 Courtland St. NE, Atlanta 3. The institute will be held Aug. 27-Sept. 1, at the Laurel Falls Camp in the mountains of North Georgia, owned by Lillian Smith, famous novelist.

Purpose of the five-day school is to train labor representatives for broader participation in civic and local governmental bodies. The GWES has the backing of both CIO and AFL unions in the area.

Right-Wing Wins In UAW's Local

Allis-Chalmers workers, who received nationwide attention during the bitter 1946-47 strike, have elected a right-wing slate headed by Joe Glynn, who was chosen president, to lead Local 248, CIO Auto Workers. The vote ranged from 5 to 1 to 8 to 1.

Pat Greathouse, administrator of the local at the Allis-Chalmers plant at West Allis, Wis., since last December, said the custodianship of the local will be surrendered when the officers are installed later this month. The union is negotiating with management for a new contract to replace the temporary stipulation now in effect.

Timely Aid

Oregon CIO Newspaper Guildsmen lost their possessions in the recent Columbia River flood won't lose their Guild membership for lack of "do-re-me." The Portland Guild has voted to pay these members' dues for the next six months.

HOSIERY CLASSES

Education of union members is one of the most important tasks facing labor today, Education Director William Rafsky of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers told members of the union attending a one-week institute held June 24-July 1 at Highlander Folk School, Monteagle, Tenn.

Hosiery workers from Tennessee, Alabama and Mississippi who attended the Institute learned how to start educational programs in their own locals, and plan year-round activities. The history of the hosiery industry and union, and other subjects of vital interest to Federation members were included in the course.

Ohio CIO Says Mayor Parley Backs Its Municipal Policy

THE U.S. Conference of Mayors is now advocating the same municipal financing program for which CIO has been fighting, Ohio CIO Council Secy.-Treas. William Lavelle points out.

Commenting on a report just issued by a special committee of the Conference, Lavelle said, "This committee says the same things we said and are continuing to say in our battle against the payroll tax.

"This committee obviously feels as we do, that the payroll tax is not the answer to the financial problem of America's cities . . . that the answer lies in the state Legislature, which is responsible for the financial plight of the big cities.

"The cornerstone of the Mayors' program is a demand for the Legislature to end the present glaring injustices. This demand is precisely the demand of the Ohio CIO Council—that the sales tax distribution be returned to its original form of 60% for schools and 40% for cities.

"This committee urges the cooperation of Labor in support of its alleged program. Ohio CIO has advocated an honest, realistic municipal financing program for a long time. Of course, we will continue to fight for an end to huge state surpluses, while cities are nearly bankrupt."

"Here come the NLRB inspectors to see why poor old Sutton needs that two-cent raise!"

FSA Alters Regional Set-up

FEDERAL Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing last week announced the establishment of 10 Agency Regional Offices, and the appointment of their Directors.

Prior to the establishment of these offices, the Agency's programs were administered in the field through regional and district offices of its various units.

"Hitherto, the various units of the Agency have had differing geographical areas to work in," Ewing said. "For instance, the Social Security Administration has functioned through eleven Regional Offices, the U. S. Employment Service through twelve, and the Public Health Service through eight. The setting up of these ten Regional Offices for all Agency activity will eliminate overlapping of geographical boundaries and individual activity, and will provide the States and the general public with a center of contact for all our varied field programs."

Principal units of the Agency are: the Social Security Administration, which includes the U. S. Employment Service and the Children's Bureau, the Public Health Service, the Office of Education, the Food and Drug Administration, the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation, and the Bureau of Employes' Compensation.

Following are the newly appointed FSA Regional Directors, with the States covered in each of the 10 regions and the headquarters city of each Regional Office:

John F. Hardy; Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island; Boston.

Joseph B. O'Connor; New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware; New York City.

Erval R. Coffee; Maryland, District of Columbia, West Virginia, Virginia, North Carolina; Richmond.

J. Kimball Johnson; Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky; Cleveland.

Ed McDonald; Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana; Chicago.

Richard H. Lyle; Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, South Carolina, Georgia; Atlanta.

James W. Doarn; North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa, Missouri; Kansas City.

James H. Bond; Louisiana, Arkansas, Texas, Oklahoma, New Mexico; Dallas.

Heber R. Harper; Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Utah, Colorado; Denver.

Fay W. Hunter; Washington, Oregon, California, Nevada, Arizona; San Francisco.

Injunction Bars Those Who 'Consort' With Strikers

GOVERNMENT by injunction? You ain't heard anything yet till you hear this one.

Members of CIO Electrical Workers Local 213, Springfield, Mass., are on strike against the Van Norman Co. The firm applied for—and was granted—an injunction in Superior Court, Suffolk County (Boston). The injunction bars all picketing activity of officers and members of the local union and of all who "consort" with the strikers.

Attorneys have informed the Western Massachusetts CIO Council that, since the council has been active in the strike, council officers and all its members are as much enjoined as those who actually are on strike.

The strike was called after the company refused to grant a pay increase following three months of negotiations and federal conciliation. On the day the injunction was issued, the company issued a statement saying it would never recognize the union, threatened to start a back-to-work movement, to eliminate paid lunch periods, to cut the production bonus and to provide police protection for those who might desire to desert the strike.

Adventures of Mike The Factory Worker

Nobody ever told Mike Schaefer when he was in school getting A's in Latin and English that he'd be working in a factory in a few years and likely spend the rest of his working life on a factory payroll.

Like millions of other guys, Mike just drifted into factory work. His story of what it's like to work in a factory is told in one of a series of articles written by workers which are being printed by Work, monthly paper of the Catholic Labor Alliance, Chicago.

Part of Mike Schaefer's working experiences as he tells them in Work, are reprinted below. His salty comments show up vividly some of the flaws in our educational and industrial life which common sense could correct.

FUNNY how the facts of factory life are shunned nowadays. Maybe about three-fourths of the fellows in my graduation class are now doing manual work. But we never got any hints along that line in our class. It was just assumed that we would all be junior executives or at least bank tellers.

Some guys find it hard to understand. Didn't they see it in the movies? Everyone who works for a living has a private office of his own—with a private secretary too, if he makes good.

So then I apply for a job. A man leads me into the plant, but does he give me office space? He does give me space—about five square feet on a production line. What a deal. Me, the junior executive.

ONE of my earliest jobs was in a zinc mill. That was a hot box in the summertime. Especially for the fellows who worked around the blast furnaces . . .

At first I pushed 5000 pounds in zinc around on a skid. Sometimes another guy would help me with the pushing; sometimes I'd have to do it alone. It wasn't too hard—just hard enough to add about 15 pounds of muscle to my body. The muscle-building process was a slow one.

Some of the guys couldn't take it. When they first started working there, they'd take an extra day off at least once a week to get themselves rested up. Most of them hated the place. They'd curse it when they were on the job; they'd curse it when they were off.

I wasn't crazy about the job either. Sometimes I got more out of it than just a pay check—but that wasn't often.

WHAT I mean is this: Certainly you should get some kind of enjoyment out of your job. And I did—but there would be something to stifle that enjoyment. Like when I was working at testing or inspecting . . .

I'd feel I was really doing something useful—seeing that people got a good kind of zinc. But then every once in a while, I'd find some bad zinc, which I'd mark up as bad, and the superintendent would give me hell about "keeping down his production level."

When I couldn't take it any longer I quit, and all the guys slapped me on the back. They said I was smart; they were just there "temporarily" too until they could find something better.

I got a job on the production line of a company that makes bandages. I was one of the last cogs in the wheel. My job was taking the boxes of bandages as they rolled off the assembly line, and putting them into cases. All day, putting 48 small boxes into a bigger one.

I FOUND out how mechanical you can become on the assembly line. You can work for a long time and be only vaguely conscious of what you're doing. Your mind can explore a thousand different subjects very remote from your place of labor.

Maybe it's this roaming of the mind that keeps you from going nuts on the assembly line.

It's not the monotony that bothers me so much. It's the way some foremen breath down your neck, trying to get production, always more production. If these dopes would only wise up, they'd realize that most workers actually do better for a foreman who doesn't check up on every little thing.

I guess I wouldn't mind working in a factory—even for the rest of my days—if the place were a decent spot to work. But a lot of changes would have to be made. Those changes, I'm afraid, are a long, long way off.

Unions have a tremendous job in seeing that workers get enough of a wage to eat and raise a family on. When unions do tackle the other problems, they are accused of stepping on the "prerogatives of management."

Why doesn't someone start talking about the prerogatives of human beings?

Mayor Remembers Labor Backed Him

Because secretaries of the chambers of commerce but not secretaries of labor organizations were invited to attend a meeting of mayors of a section of Wisconsin, Mayor Willard Sonnenburg of Sheboygan, Wis., refused to attend.

HOT DAY: It was a hot day when CIO Auto Workers' officers broke ground for WAIW-FM, the first UAW-CIO radio station. Vice Pres. Richard Gosser mops the brow of Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey, while Norman Matthews, Chairman of the union's radio committee, looks on with the station builder.

Newspaper Dubious Of Union Probe

REP. Fred Hartley (R., N. J.), who skipped most of the latter part of the 80th Congress to fulfill paid speaking engagements, has been conducting an "investigation" of officers of New York locals of the CIO Retail, Wholesale Union.

Perhaps the best analysis of Hartley's sordid proceedings was made by the Washington Post. Herewith are excerpts from a Post editorial:

"Rep. Hartley says that the investigation into communism in labor unions by a House Subcommittee which he heads is not a witch hunt. Rather, his aim is to assist labor unions in dealing with their problems of Communist infiltration.

"That aim has not been advanced by the sessions in New York. There are some disquieting indications that, in spite of his announced intention of keeping the investigation on a high plane, Hartley may be seeking more than information.

"Hartley is asking a large number of labor leaders if they are Communists. So far they have refused to answer. If they continue to refuse to answer, he says they will be cited for contempt of Congress.

"This method might presumably be employed to lodge large numbers of Communists or recalcitrant fellow travelers in jail. Any such approach might easily defeat the purpose of the subcommittee if indeed it did not redound to the discredit of the investigators. The implication is that Hartley intends to use the congressional investigation as an instrument of persecution—a wholly illegitimate use — instead of informing the public and the unions as to the work of Communists in their midst."

A sub-committee of the House Labor Committee, of which Hartley is chairman, is ostensibly investigating charges of employers that certain New York locals of the Retail, Wholesale Union are Communist-dominated. The national union is right wing-led.

"You understand that that Taft-Hartley Law just equalizes labor's relations with management."

Good Wages Replace Frock Coats

RAW MATERIAL: Workers hold up a fleece weighing 36 pounds at the Barre Wool Combing Co., where there was a long history of division among the workers and strife with management before the CIO Textile Workers organized the plant.

ALL the 750 workers at the Barre Wool Combing Company in South Barre, Mass., belong to the CIO Textile Workers Union today. For more than two years no strikes, stoppages or slowdowns have occurred. The relationship between the union and the company is remarkably harmonious.

But it was not always this way The colorful story of labor relations at this plant which makes worsted out of the raw greasy wool piled in its bins is told by Agnes M. Cohen in the current issue of the CIO union's paper. "Textile Labor."

It is a story which covers half a century marked by many stormy conflicts, and is typical of what has been happening in many plants.

The earliest union at Barre was a wool sorters guild which reached its peak around the turn of the century. "Perhaps few of the workers at Barre today can remember the frock coats and the top hats which this craft group wore to distinguish themselves," writes Miss Cohen.

"They were a colorful group, but a group which held itself apart. Division on the basis of skills and nationalities both in the mill and the community was the rule here in the early days. You won't find that division today. The Italians, the Polish, the Lithuanians, the English and the Irish—all the workers—are working together under one TWUA contract.

"The conflict and the violence which are part of Barre's labor history are gone too. The memories of the killings of 1917, the use of fire hoses against the workers in 1934, the tipping of organizers' cars in 1935 and the bitter struggle of 1940 when county and state police were called in are disappearing as both management and workers learn to get along together in collective bargaining."

IN the early years, the mill was owned by Lord Barmby, a British citizen, who "rode to work on a horse with red-coated lackies by his side." Those were the "wine and chicken" days, when to get a promotion or to hold a job workers slipped little presents to the boss.

Lord Barmby sold the mill to the Uxbridge chain in 1938 and a new manager, Levon Yacubian, was put in charge. In 1940 the workers who had belonged to the AFL United Textile Workers, which had led an unsuccessful eight-week strike, voted 406 to 241 to join the CIO Textile Workers.

The first TWUA contract was signed in July 1940, and the years of steady improvement began. In 1942 the CIO union won a second election, 431 to 288, and today has a standard TWUA woolen agreement, the only group in the Uxbridge chain with a union shop. Early this year Barre workers voted 643 to 23 to sustain the union shop.

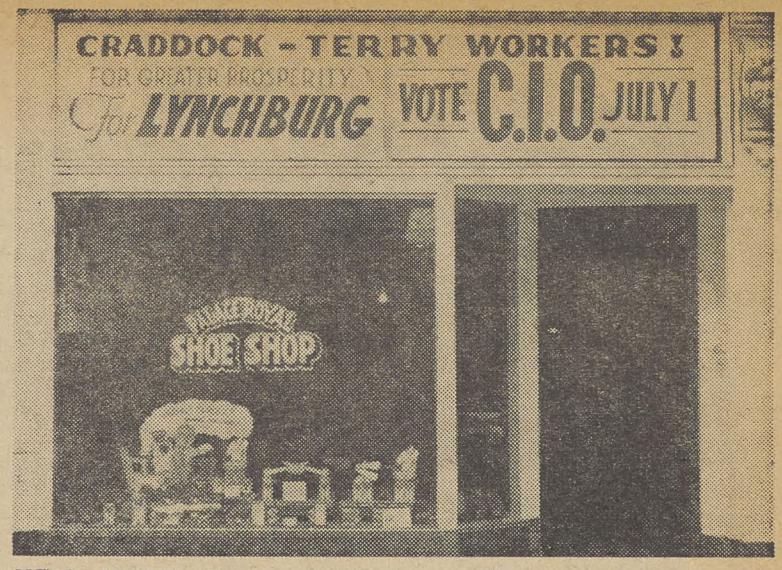
"No mysteries are responsible for the new successful union-company relations," says Miss Cohen. "It's been merely a process of mutual education and cooperation. The primary rule is to settle difficulties at their source so that no grievances are allowed to smolder and erupt.

"Every Tuesday afternoon the three top officers of the union are on hand to help settle grievances which have reached the second step in the grievance machinery. The manager of the mill exercises autonomy in the plant so that management 'buck-passing', a common plague in collective bargaining, is eliminated."

With quibbling between the workers and the company reduced to a minimum, time is available to work on constructive projects, says Miss Cohen. For example, in November 1946 the employes organized their own Barwoolco credit union, which had 250 members and $35,000 assets a year later, and is still growing. By belonging to the credit union the workers can borrow from their own bank at rates far below commercial rates.

"Barre Wool Combing workers," concludes Miss Cohen, "are learning that militancy and cooperation go hand in hand to make a good union man. And the company is learning, through the excellent relations it has established through TWUA, that a good trade union is a business asset."

FINAL PRODUCT: Peter Fargnoli shows big rolls of dyed yarn produced by members of the CIO Textile Workers at the Barre Wool Combing Plant.



HE'S WISE: This Lynchburg, Va., merchant knew that if the CIO Shoe Workers won the NLRB election at the three Craddock-Terry plants, the town would be more prosperous. The CIO won.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

The telephone operators of Maryland voted overwhelmingly for affiliation with the TWOC-CIO in an NLRB election held Thursday, July 1, affecting all operators throughout the state. Results were: Eligible to vote 4200; number votes cast, 3237; CIO 2156; CWA 946; Neither 135; void 50. Pres. Margaret Weiss of the Maryland Telephone Traffic Union, her staff, and all the CIO people who took part in this election are to be congratulated.

This is a significant victory, demonstrating clearly that the telephone workers once presented with the facts, want national affiliation with the CIO. It should convince those who have any doubts that this is where they belong. The kind of work that these workers perform warrant much better treatment and consideration than they are receiving now from the Bell System. To obtain such improvements in wages and working conditions will require a strong national organization affiliated with the CIO. Again congratulations to all who participated!

Reg. Dir. Tim Flynn, San Francisco, Calif., reports an NLRB election at the Shell Development Co., Emeryville, OWIU-CIO 320, no union 58. Homer Coffman and Willam Povall, Intl. Rep., OWIU-CIO, handled the campaign.

Reg. Dir. Ewald Sandner, Newark, New Jersey, reports a victory in a representation election at the National Lead Co., Titanium Division, Sayreville, N. J.: Eligible to vote 750, GCCWA-CIO 462, AFL Chemical 152. Acting Reg. Dir. Jack Rosen and Rep. Frank Gallagher were in charge.

Reg. Dir. Frank Bender, Baltimore, Md., reports victories in the following elections: Marvadel Ice Cream Co., Inc., Salisbury, UAW-CIO 17, no 0; Electro-Motive plant, Division GM Corporation, Baltimore, UAW-CIO 36, no 6.

Dir. of Org. Thomas J. Gallagher, IUM&SWA-CIO, Camden, New Jersey, reports victories in the following union shop elections: Constable Hook Yard, Bayonne, N. J., eligible to vote 131, yes 131, no 0; Casey Boat Yard, Fairhaven, Mass., eligible to vote 25, yes 23, no 0.

SOUTHERN CAMPAIGN Virginia took the spotlight in the Southern Organizing campaign when State Dir. Ernest B. Pugh reported victories for the United Shoeworkers of America in the three plants of the Craddock-Terry Corporation, Lynchburg. Results were yes 987, no 942. Approximately 2,250 persons are employed in the three plants.

Other victories reported by Director Van A. Bittner of the CIO Organizing Committee, include: Southeastern Optical Company, Miami, Florida; Chicago Mill and Lumber Co., Tallullah, La.; Chicago Mill and Lumber Co., Waterproof, La.; Universal Moulded Products Corp., Bristol, Va.; Cohutta Talc Co., Chattsworth, Ga.; Armour Fertilizer Works, Albany, Ga.; Southern Iron and Equipment Co., Atlanta, Ga.; Union Envelope Co., Richmond, Va.; Locust Pin Co., Front Royal, Va.; Staff-O-Life Feed Mills, Meridian, Miss., Bryant Heater Co., Tyler, Texas; and Royal Crown Bottling Co., Memphis, Tenn.

Britain Banishes High Cost Of Illness

By DAVID WILLIAMS

MEDICAL and dental service last week became available, without payment, to everyone who lives in Great Britain.

Just as every family has for generations been able to send its children to the public school system without any money changing hands, so now it is able to deal with sickness in the family.

The new Natl. Health Service is not, of course, "free"—any more than the public school system is really free. Its cost will be fairly spread over the whole community and over the whole of the people's working lives, instead of being concentrated at the time when the individual can least afford it—that is, when he is ill.

For several years David Williams, who wrote this story, has been correspondent for the Labor Press Associates in London, where he has watched the fight for the Natl. Health Service.

The fact that ill-health is to be freed from financial anxiety arising from the cost of treatment is a matter of great medical importance. It means that no one need delay seeking treatment for fear of what it is going to cost.

Thus, earlier treatment should be encouraged, and the chances of recovery should be correspondingly increased. Furthermore, no doctor need worry, on the score of finance, about ordering any treatment his patients may need.

For the service is complete. It covers every form of treatment that is required, whether from the family doctor or specialist, clinic or hospital, masseuse or nurse. Medicine and all types of appliances—glasses, hearing aids, etc.—will be available without cost.

It is not complusory to use the new service. Some doctors will stay out of it altogether, and will continue private practice as before. All doctors can have private patients, as well as those coming to them under the national service.

But it is expected that only a small minority will be willing to pay twice for medical service—once as individuals, and again as taxpayers.

How are the doctors taking it? After a brisk battle with Aneurin Bevan over the details of the scheme, the British Medical Association has given it its blessing. Says its chairman, Dr. H. Guy Dain: "The profession will do its utmost to make the new service a resounding success." A few bitter-enders will retire from work; some others will carry on with what remains of private practice. But the great majority are coming into the Natl. Health Service.

Perhaps the most striking new feature promised by the Service are the Health Centers. It is the duty of county and municipal councils to build and equip these centers, and provide them with equipment and clerical staff.

Here six or eight doctors work together as a team, pooling their knowledge and experience.

F.D.R. Is Quoted As Favoring Health Plan

"The American people are self-respecting and do not like either to incur debts or to have to accept charity. Our people want and should have what Franklin Delano Roosevelt termed 'the right to adequate medical care and the opportunity to achieve and enjoy good health.'"

In those words Morris Llewellyn Cooke, member of the board of directors of the Committee for the Nation's Health, appealed to the platform committee of the Democratic Natl. Convention for a plank pledging support for a national health insurance program in the U. S.

Two out of every three Americans cannot afford adequate medical care, Cooke pointed out. "Only by providing for contributions from everyone to a national insurance fund and by making the fund available for payment of health and sickness costs, can we hope to remove the economic barriers to adequate medical care," he asserted.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray is an honorary vice-chairman of the Committee for the Nation's Health.

Teachers Burned Up At Dewey

GOP Presidential Candidate Tom Dewey will have a hard time talking himself out of this one:

Some 3500 teacher delegates to the Natl. Education Association convention in Cleveland were plenty burned up last week by a report that Dewey had referred to teachers' propaganda as "the biggest lie since Adolph Hitler."

Columnist Drew Pearson, who spilled the story, said the New York governor made the statement before the Governors' Conference at Portsmouth, N. H., as he urged the conference to undertake a publicity campaign against the teachers.

Delegates' anger seethed some more when, in answer to a request for a statement from Dewey, the convention received one from his executive secretary, James C. Hagerty instead. Hagerty asserted that "it was never proposed by Gov. Dewey or any other governor to break the teachers' lobby."

Pearson, however, stuck to his guns. In a wire to James A. Cullen, N. Y. State NEA director, he made it hotter for the little man with the mustache:

". . . Not only did my report of his conversation at Portsmouth come from a governor who sat in on the session, but in addition I talked with Dewey personally at his headquarters in Philadelphia June 20, at which time he repeated to me the same general ideas he expressed at the Governors' Conference, even referring to the teachers' lobby as 'damnable blackmail and Hitler's tactics.'"

CIO Committee Says:

New Social Order Or Red Rule In Italy

THE American Government must encourage and support economic as well as political democracy in Italy, if the Italian people are to resist Communism successfully and rebuild their nation in the democratic image, the CIO Italian-American Trade Union committee declared in a letter addressed to Pres. Truman.

The committee, the official liaison between the CIO and the Italian Confederation of Labor (CGIL) said the Italian people had voted democratic because they believed that with American aid the campaign promises made to them by the democratic parties of Italy would be carried out.

"The Italian people," the committee said, "like the people of all Europe, envision an economic order in which production is carried on for the benefit of all the people, not the profit of a few, in which land and machinery are now secure in the hands of the men who use them."

If America tries to revive the old order in Italy, the Committee said, the battle of democracy will be lost. "The Communists," it warned, "will have only to bide their time while the democratic parties of Italy, and our Western democracies, prove that they do not understand the heart and mind of the common man in Italy, and that they cannot act even to save themselves in this all-too-desperate situation."

The Committee declared that only a basic transformation of the Italian social order can stem the otherwise inevitable advance of Communism in Italy. That country, it said, needs vast agricultural and industrial reforms, in order that the Italian peasants and workers may participate directly and productively in the economic democracy which was promised them in pre-election speeches by the democratic parties.

The Committee also stressed the need for rebuilding the ruined towns and cities of Italy; the introduction of vast projects of regional development, such as our own TVA, and the reform of basic financial institutions. It also emphasized the need for democratic social participation in and ownership of the central elements of the Italian economy, declaring that while in America the merits of private and public enterprise may still be debated, in Italy—as in all of Europe—that debate is over.

George Baldanzi, executive vice president of the CIO Textile Workers, is chairman of the committee, which includes Pres. L. S. Buckmaster, Rubber Workers; Dir. Joseph Germano, Dist. 31, Steelworkers, and Pres. John Green, of Shipbuilding Workers.

Seeks Ouster Of N. J. Aides

CARL Holderman, president of the New Jersey State CIO Council, has called upon Gov. Driscoll to remove from office all state officials "whose feverish activities in behalf of the forces of inflation have made them a serious threat to the people of our state."

In a signed editorial in the July issue of the New Jersey CIO News, Holderman wrote, "The State CIO Council calls upon Driscoll to launch an extensive examination of the actions, motives and behavior of his appointed department heads and to remove from office those individuals whose incapabilities, personal ambitions or controlled behavior have made them a serious threat to the welfare of New Jersey residents."

Holderman pointed out that the cost-of-living in New Jersey was being increased by three "government-inspired" actions the first week of July, 1948.

"On July 1," he wrote, "the price of every pack of cigarets purchased in the state will go up three cents. On July 4, the price of every ride in a Public Service vehicle will go up 40%. This first week in July the retail price of milk—instead of being decreased as is usual in the spring period of flush milk production—will undoubtedly again be increased by decree of the Director of the Milk Control Board.

"There are unkind deductions to be made of the reason why our state government should (a) simultaneously levy a burdensome tax on the shoulders of low-income groups; (b) approve a heavy increase in communication and transportation costs for people who must use these monopoly facilities, and (c) continue to cater to the profit-making whims of the commercial milk interests by authorizing still another increase in milk prices, despite the fact that milk dealers and distributors are reporting extraordinary profits in the face of already unprecedented gains."

Medical Care Is Only One Phase Of Britain's Social Security Plan

A NEW charter of social security insures Britain's 50,000,000 people not only against ill-health, but also against unemployment, industrial accidents, disablement, bereavement and retirement. It also helps them in happier circumstances, such as expenses of childbirth.

The plan went into effect last week.

Everyone between 16 and 65 (60 in the case of women) pays for it—some as little as 45c a week, nobody more than $1.25 a week. In return for this contribution, every Briton will be insured against emergency expenses for the rest of his life.

Cost of operating this vast scheme during the next 12 months—the British Information Services reports—is estimated at 850,000,000 pounds (equivalent to $3,400,000,000). About 525,000,000 pounds will come from the taxpayers' pocket, the rest from the individual weekly payments of insured people and employers to the national fund.

When a man or woman without dependents loses the weekly pay envelope through injury, ill-health, unemployment or old age, he or she is entitled to draw a weekly benefit of $5.20. The benefit has been set at a level that guarantees subsistence, for the cost of living in Britain is much lower than in the U. S.

For instance, the average working class rent is $2 to $2.50 a week, according to the British Information Services. Britain has also followed a policy of keeping food prices down. Butter costs only about 30c a pound, meat about 25c to 50c a pound.

Extra benefits for insured persons with dependents are also fixed at the same rate whether loss of income is due to unemployment, sickness, injury or old age.

In each case, the benefit provides $9.90 a week for a man with a wife and child under 15. While this benefit guarantees an insured person his rent and food during loss of income, he gets all medical services free under another part of the scheme.

Among the other forms of help under the scheme, mothers will receive a maternity grant of $16 for each baby born. If the mother is working and must give up her job before confinement, she also gets a maternity allowance of $7.50 weekly for 13 weeks, dating from six weeks before the baby is expected. If she does not normally work, she can draw instead an attendance allowance of $4 weekly for four weeks from the time of confinement.

An entirely new benefit helps defray the cost of funeral expenses when the wife, widow, husband, or child of an insured person dies. This single sum ranges from $24 on the death of a child under three to $80 for a person over 18.

Britain's 20,000,000 workers are also insured against accidental injuries in their jobs and against diseases contracted due to the nature of their work.

Workers disabled by such accident or disease can claim a benefit even after they are back on the job. It varies from $9 a week for 100% disablement to $1.80 a week for 20% disablement.

Extra benefits go to the worker if he needs someone to look after him, or if he is made permanently unfit for work. If the accident or disease results in death, dependents of the dead person receive a pension—for instance, $7.50 a week for a widow over 50—or unable to support herslf—with one, or the first, child under 15.

Families with more than one child qualify for family allowances—$1 a week for each child after the first under 15. A family with four children, aged 17, 14, 12 and 8, would receive $2 a week, regardless of their wealth or social position, if they wish to apply.

'LIKE A THIEF': Anthony D'Amelio, in a man-bites-dog action, closed his New York butcher shop in protest against the high price of meat. The ex-GI, who has owned the shop about a year, declared, "I was just ashamed to stand behind the counter and raise prices every day. I felt like a thief." D'Amelio's drastic move was taken while speakers at the Democratic convention were blaming the GOP-dominated Congress for the high cost of living and many of the other evils of inflationary trends.

Voters Rise in Wrath

REMEMBER the Philadelphia political scandal mentioned so prominently in the CIO News several weeks back?

Remember that the city's Republican administration is being investigated over shortages running into the millions, most of which apparently was stolen?

Well, last week, a Philadelphia newspaper polled the citizenry over what they thought of the situation—in other words, sought to find out if Philadelphia is really "corrupt, but contented." (The paper's polls, patterned on the Gallup Poll, are considered to be extremely accurate.)

The voters were asked if an election for mayor were being held now would they vote for Mayor Bernard Samuel, the incumbent and head of the administration, or for Richardson Dilworth, Democrat who lost to Samuel last fall?

The answers:

Samuel	25%
Dilworth	54
No opinion	21

(Last fall, Samuel defeated Dilworth, 413,090 to 321,468.)

New Health Center

A new health center will be set up by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers in New York City in a building just purchased by the union's N. Y. Joint Board.

Co-Managers Louis Hollander and Anthony Froise said the Board has bought the YWCA building on 16th St. between Union Square and Fifth Ave., for the health center. The building formerly was a resident hotel for women, and is a landmark in that part of the city.

New Deal Reborn:

July 26 Turnip Day

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

THE Democratic Party is a mass of paradoxes.

Paradoxically, the Democratic Party last week took the chance of losing some of its members in order to gain a lot more.

Paradoxically, the Democratic Party, called dead by scores of gleeful (and some sorrowful) observers, looked far from a corpse last week as it emerged from a sweltering, brawling convention.

The sweltering was due to Philadelphia's "It ain't the heat, it's the humidity."

The brawling was of such an intensity that Southern gentlemen forgot to say "suh."

Reasons for the revivification of the Democratic party—for the rebirth of the New Deal:

1 The adoption of the minority report giving the platform the strongest civil liberties plank ever adopted by a major party.

2 The two-fisted ad lib acceptance speech of Pres. Truman, which provided the best radio and television show of the convention, topping even the stellar performances of Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas and Mayor Hubert Humphrey.

3 The call for a special session of Congress by Truman to "pass laws halting rising prices and to meet the housing crisis," which, he added with biting sarcasm, "they say they're for it in their platform." Truman set the call for July 26, "which is Turnip Day in Missouri."

(The Senate passed a broad housing bill; the House Banking & Currency Committee approved the bill, but the House Rules Committee killed the bill in the dying hours of the regular session of Congress 80.)

4 A Gallup poll which showed that 52% of the American people feel that the Democratic Party can run the country better than Republicans.

All this adds up, it appears to me, to a party that is far from dying yet; to a party that has at least a fighting chance to win this fall, notwithstanding Thomas Edmund Dewey & such and not withstanding Henry Agard Wallace & such.

No CIO Action Taken on Endorsements

The CIO and PAC have taken no stand on Presidential nominees, other than to reject Wallace's third party.

THE Democratic platform—perhaps the most liberal ever presented to the American people—contained a great portion of the suggestions made in the name of CIO by Secy-Treas. James B. Carey, and so did Truman's speech. Here are examples:

CIVIL LIBERTIES: Truman declared: "Everybody knows I recommended to the Congress a civil rights program. (Note: Carey was part of the committee which prepared the report for the President.) I did so because I believe it to be my duty under the Constitution. Some of the members of my own party disagreed with me violently on this matter, but they stand up and do it openly. But the Republicans, who all profess to be for these measures, failed to pass them in the 80th Congress."

LABOR: This calls for outright repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law, but follows it with some rather loose language that might be dangerous. However, the analysis of the weaknesses of T-H make it fairly certain that should the Democrats win a possible repeal of T-H would be followed by a decent labor law.

FOREIGN POLICY: In contrast to the Republicans' vague references to international cooperation "within prudent limits," the Democrats forthrightly pledge necessary funds and "sound humanitarianism" for ERP and other endeavors.

PALESTINE: The Democratic platform is a welcome breath of fresh air after the confusion which marked the Administration's earlier policy on Israel, which was somewhat eased by the de facto recognition of Israel.

HIGH PRICES: GOP promised to cut spending, balance budget—and fight Communism (yes it did, read it yourself), to curb inflation. Democrats called for adoption of the President's 10-point anti-inflationary program, which includes standby price control power.

HOUSING: Democrats pledge slum-clearance, low-rent housing, etc.

SOCIAL SECURITY: Democrats want at least 50% increase in old age, survivors' benefits, many other gains. Backs national health program.

NEARLY 100 CIO members were among the delegates to the convention. They all participated actively in the fight for a liberal platform. There were many effective workers for the civil liberties victory, but much credit should go to the CIO's Carey and the Americans for Democratic Action's Humphrey. Observers figure Humphrey switched a large number of votes to the amendment, which was offered by Ex-Congressman Andrew Biemiller.

RANDOM SHOTS: The endurance of Marty Snyder, Gen. Eisenhower's ex-mess sergeant, who talked for hours daily from a jeep mike, pleading with the general to call him and say he'd run . . . for all we know, Snyder's still talking into that mike . . . She's obviously too young, but Mrs. Rosemary McMahon, wife of Sen. Brien McMahon (D., Conn.) would certainly have added glamour to the Democratic ticket . . . So would Rep. Douglas. . . . So would Delegate Esther Murray (Calif.).

If you called room service at the Bellevue-Stratford, convention headquarters hotel, you could get scotch for $11 a bottle . . . if you had $11. . . . You obviously never heard of it, but the delegates were pestered with leaflets urging the nomination of Frank Ellison Best. . . . He wanted union bosses fired, wanted to limit the power of voting to the white race, and other hogwash. . . . As you no doubt recall, he didn't get a single vote.

Third's Next

Philadelphia, having barely swept up after the Republican and Democratic conventions, will be the scene of the third party convention this Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

It's a foregone conclusion that the new party—as yet unnamed—will select as its standard bearers Henry Wallace and Sen. Glen Taylor.

POLITICAL ACTION: Julia L. Maietta, Democratic candidate for the House of Representatives in the 22d Pennsylvania District, confers with CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll at the Democratic convention. Candidate Maietta, who will oppose incumbent Rep. James Van Zandt (R., Pa.), is an organizer for the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, of which Kroll is a vice president. She is making a strenuous campaign.

STEELWORKERS WIN 9½ TO 25c RAISE

PHILIP MURRAY'S CIO Steelworkers have knocked off the king pin of the steel industry. The mighty U. S. Steel Corp. has bowed to the union's 10-weeks-old demand for wage increases.

The new agreement, accepted by the union's negotiating committee, executive board and wage policy committee, will give the 170,000 hourly paid employes an average 13c an hour boost.

Effective July 16, the increases range between 9½ and 25c an hour. Beginning at the first grade (janitors and sweepers), the raises progress upward by ½c at each grade level. Thus the first grade wage goes up from $1.09 an hour to $1.18½, while the highest pay is increased from $2.25 to $2.49.

In a unanimously-adopted resolution accepting the agreement, the 171-man wage policy committee hailed the settlement as "a great victory for the United Steelworkers of America, recognizing as it does the union's just demands."

The committee congratulated Murray "for his splendid leadership under which the wages and working conditions of steelworkers have advanced to the point where the steelworkers now stand in the forefront of American industrial workers."

A union source estimated that the employes' gain in purchasing power would amount to about $65 million a year. This is based on the assumption that the raise will be extended to an additional 60,000 employes not covered by the contract.

Union demands for a broad program of social insurance were turned down by the corporation.

The new agreement was negotiated under a wage reopening clause in the two-year no-strike contract, which had another year to run. It extended the contract for another year until April 1950 with provision for a wage reopening in July 1949. If no agreement is reached on wages or a health and welfare program, the union is free to strike at that time. The maintenance of membership clause in the present contract is continued.

"Little Steel" — comprised of Jones & Laughlin, Bethlehem, Republic, Youngstown, Pittsburgh Steel and others—is expected to follow U. S. Steel's lead, as it traditionally does. These firms joined with "Big Steel" in April when it set its "no increase in 1948" policy.

Rep. Havenner Erases 8-Year-old Smear

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THIS is the story of a smear job —a smear job engineered by members and staff workers of the House UnAmerican Activities Committee—against a member of Congress.

Because the man who was smeared is a member of Congress —Rep. Frank Havenner, liberal Democrat from San Francisco—he was able to erase the smear from the records. But it took him eight years.

The same thing could happen to you—but unless you were a member of Congress, you might never get the record corrected.

Here's the story, as it was spread over the pages of the Congressional Record in June:

1. Back in 1940, Rep. Havenner heard rumors that unfriendly testimony was to be presented to the UnAmerican Committee, then headed by Rep. Dies (D., Tex.). Havenner approached Dies and other Committee members, asked for an opportunity to be heard as a Member of Congress in order to place his answer on the record if such testimony were given.

2. Dies promised to give Rep. Havenner a chance to reply if the situation arose.

3. In October 1944—four years later—Rep. Havenner learned that testimony had in fact been made against him. He learned it through newspaper advertisements in San Francisco during the course of the 1944 election campaign. The ads quoted secret testimony presented at a 1940 hearing.

4. The testimony — describing Rep. Havenner as a member of the Communist Party—had been given at a secret session of the House UnAmerican Committee in Beaumont, Tex. The meeting was attended by only one Committee member, two staff officials of the committee, and the witness—one John H. Leech.

5. The record of the secret hearing was kept in the UnAmerican Committee files. It was never published by the Committee. It first appeared in print in the Republicans' campaign advertisement in San Francisco.

6. In January 1945—when Congress reconvened—Rep. Havenner branded Leech's charges as "perjury."

7. On investigation, Havenner discovered that Leech had been procured as a witness by James Stedman, a former UnAmerican Activities Committee investigator.

8. Shortly after the secret Committee meeting, Stedman left the Committee, and went to work for Albert Mattei of San Francisco, an oil company president. Mattei was the "chief financial and political supporter" of the GOP candidate running against Rep Havenner. Havenner's opposition, then published for the first time "perjured" testimony against Rep. Havenner given at a secret UnAmerican Activities sub-committee meeting.

It's a mighty curious business. Rep. McCormack (D., Mass.), who spread the facts before Congress, declared: "I leave this astounding sequence of facts to the judgment of Congress and the American people."

* * *

It's an easy formula—perjured, secret testimony handed over to political bosses for smear purposes.

Rep. Havenner was lucky—as a member of Congress he was able, eight years later—to clean the record against his name.

You, as a private citizen, may not have that chance to defend yourself against the House UnAmerican Activities Committee.

This was the Committee to which the 80th Congress gave $200,000—and only 37 Congressmen objected. This was the Committee which sponsored the Mundt-Nixon Bill—to which only 58 Congressmen objected. This was the Committee which has badgered witnesses, brought contempt charges and played for hysteria-headlines.

To sum up, let's take this from the Scripps-Howard newspapers: "His (Truman's) speech has at least served the good purpose of putting the Democratic Party back into the contest."

MAY FORCE LEADERS' TRIAL

REP. FRED HARTLEY'S Labor sub-committee has been lifting a leaf from the House un-American Activities Committee book.

It has been asking what one of Hartley's colleagues refers to as the $64 question, "Are you a Communist?"

And officials of the New York CIO department store unions have been refusing to answer.

As a result, nine unionists—and perhaps more—will face contempt citations, if Rep. Hartley has his way.

The sub-committee, meeting in New York, voted unanimously to recommend to the full House Labor Committee that Esther Letz, David Livingston, Arthur Osman, Samuel Lewis, Nicholas Carnes, William Michelson, Nathan Solomon, Jack Paley and Carl W. Andren be cited for contempt of Congress.

HARTLEY'S group, scheduled to resume its probe into the New York department store union set-up in a few days, was denounced by both left-wingers and right-wingers.

There were accusations that Hartley was merely on a "witch hunt," that he was snarling up negotiations with store managers and that he was giving himself a "build-up" as a labor relations expert. (Hartley intends to become a management consultant on "labor problems" after he leaves Congress next January.)

The Greater New York Industrial Union Council charge the hearing was instigated by the Hartley group to "weaken the unions and frame and railroad to jail their leaders on the eve of negotiations for wage increases affecting 40,000 workers in the retail and distributive trades."

Pres. Samuel Wolchok of the Retail, Wholesale and Department Store union, said that at least 99% of the union's 150,000 members are non-communists.

Rep. Charles Kersten (R. Wis.) said Labor Committee records showed there was not "any substantial communist influence" in the international union.

Three New York union officials —Paley of Local 65, Lewis of Local 3 and Carnes of Local 1250—were ejected from the hearing room when they objected to the committee's tactics and charges it was on a union-busting expedition.

Those facing possible contempt citations declared that questions regarding their political affiliations violated their constitutional rights.

Rep. D. Kearns (R. Pa.) and Rep. John S. Wood (D. Ga.) are serving on the sub-committee with Hartley and Kersten.

Carey Asks Support For CARE Drive

THE long-range Marshall Plan aid to European Nations should not be regarded as a signal for the immediate ending of the day-by-day help that Americans have been sending to hungry European families, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey said this week.

Carey, a member of the 12-man advisory board of the Economic Cooperation Administration, issued a statement calling for support of the CARE drive being conducted by the National CIO Community Service Committee.

"It would be tragic to act on the belief that ECA will immediately solve Europe's problem," Carey stated. "The truth is that ECA's program, while it will eventually restore economic stability to the various countries, may not mean more food on family tables for 18 months to two years.

"My recent visit to Europe gave me ample opportunity to confirm at first hand the outside help to see them through the coming months. Neither the ECA's current food shipments nor the improved crops in Europe can do the job by themselves. The best they can do is to keep the present rations from falling to disastrous levels."

In the last two years the CIO-CSC has sent more than 50,000 CARE food and textile packages to European trade unionists and their families, Carey said. "But the job is far from finished. This makes the current CIO-CARE campaign throughout the country a vital undertaking. I urge full support in every CIO shop, office and union hall."

Contributions may be sent to the CIO Overseas Food Fund, 1776 Broadway, New York 19, N.Y., or given to CIO drive headquarters in your community.

ARKANSAS AND THE BIG HAT

A big fellow named Vance Muse, who wears cowboy boots and fancy 10-gallon hats, "migrated" from Texas to Arkansas a few years ago and began preaching "Freedom to Work."

This freedom, he said, was God-given—and the blankety-blank trade unions had no right to interfere with it.

Although Muse was exposed as a smooth operator who had mined the sucker lists some 19 times, Arkansas' legislature passed his pet measure, thus outlawing the closed shop.

Muse, leader of an outfit called Christian-American, then moved into other states, preaching the same sermon. Sometimes he got his ears pinned back. Sometimes he succeeded.

He became a great buddy of the demagogs and union-hating industrialists.

We don't know what has happened to Muse (because we haven't done any recent close checking on him) but we know what happened to the "freedom to work" idea he planted in a state which then had few union members.

It spread slowly at first, then more rapidly. Thirty-six states enacted measures outlawing the closed shop or the union shop or sharply limiting union security provisions.

Then Congress enacted the Taft-Hartley Act, which bans the closed shop and permits the union shop only among workers who have expressed a desire for it in an NLRB-conducted election.

It would be ridiculous for us—or Muse—to assume that Christian-American deserves all the credit—or discredit—for widespread passage of anti-labor measures.

And we're not nearly as interested in Muse as in the trend toward regulation and control of labor unions.

'UNIONS BECOMING MUCH TOO STRONG'

Many of the persons who advocated or voted for the Taft-Hartley Act and other anti-union legislation will tell you their action resulted from their feeling that "the unions were becoming much too strong."

Just ask them, "Too strong for what?" and watch them squirm.

They were becoming too strong for the comfort of employers who believed employes should have nothing to say about the conditions under which they work and live.

They were becoming too strong for the comfort of the monopolists, the business-bossed politicians, the open-shop industrialists, the preachers of property-rights-above-human-rights.

They were posing a dangerous threat—but not to the welfare of the nation. The threat was to those who shouted about preserving democracy but gave it only lip service—and to those who got the cockeyed idea that about 90% of the fruits of capitalism should go to those to whom the newspapers refer as "capitalists."

The very nature of the Taft-Hartley Act and other anti-labor measures gives the lie to the oft-repeated statements of sponsors that they had no desire to weaken or destroy trade unions.

Among the most avid backers of the measures were men who have tried almost every scheme under the sun to bust the unions with which they dealt.

Well, where do we go from here?

Toward an era in which trade unionism is smashed in the courts and the legislative chambers?

Toward a period in which labor takes its rightful place in the sun and speaks with as much force as management?

That will depend largely on what happens at the polls this year and in the years to come.

Can't Afford To Sit This One Out

Political Inaction Will Enlarge Club With Which Unions Are Being Pounded

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THIS column is dedicated to the proposition that the average unionist by ignoring politics can put hob-nails on the boot that has been kicking him.

It is aimed directly at the man or woman who is fed up with politics and politicians and says, "I think I'll sit this one out," and at those who are just plain politically lazy.

It is designed specifically for those who think Dewey is a stinker, those who can't see Truman with a telescope and those who shudder at the idea of turning the White House over to Wallace.

SURE, there's going to be a lot of drum-thumping and name-calling and mud-slinging in the Presidential campaign—and nobody should underestimate the importance of the Truman-Dewey-Wallace race.

The fellow who occupies the White House throws around a lot of weight.

But he gets his ears pinned back frequently if Congress disagrees with him.

And he's not able to do much about anti-labor measures passed by state legislatures, or about sheriffs who turn their backs while union organizers are beaten.

Fortunately, we don't have to put all of our eggs into one basket or all of our energy into one political race.

ROOSEVELT was a hero to the average person who worked in American industry, largely because he tried to give the country a new concept of the term "human rights."

The CIO backed Roosevelt and was frequently spoken of as the labor arm of the Democratic Party. But—

Some of the most active PAC work in the country was aimed at defeating anti-labor Democrats.

This has often been forgotten because, as a general rule, the Republican Party represents the powerful interests and the Democratic Party represents labor and liberalism.

So it's a good idea, now and then, to take a look at the situation as it actually is and not as it's pictured by PAC opponents.

THE Taft-Hartley Act was passed not by Truman, but by a combination of Republicans and Democrats in Congress.

OPA was killed by a Republican-controlled Congress, but a number of Democrats were right in there pitching for the end of price control.

And when it comes to civil rights legislation many Republicans have stood head and shoulder above their Democratic colleagues in fighting for the things which labor seeks.

Truman wasn't responsible for—and neither Dewey nor Wallace can do much about—the anti-union legislation enacted by 36 states during the past few years.

This means that there are many political races in which labor should take an active part.

LET'S pay more attention to candidates and less attention to party labels, more attention to voting records and less attention to campaign promises.

And let's not forget that in a number of states the winners of party primaries almost automatically go into office in the general election.

Furthermore, we shouldn't forget that labor has taken considerable shoving around because business and industry have done an effective political action job since the end of the war.

And we should realize that there's going to be more of the same in the future unless something is done about the situation at the polls.

THIS is not an effort to brush the Presidential campaign aside lightly or to dodge any of the important issues of that campaign.

It is an effort to point out that there's an important political job to be done by labor in fields other than the one occupied by Truman, Dewey and Wallace.

Failure to do that job—and do it effectively—will simply mean that the special interest groups which labor has long fought will entrench themselves more firmly and will sponsor and secure the enactment of additional anti-union legislation.

PAC is no longer the startling new political organization it was when it got the headlines day after day. It has shunted aside a lot of the whoopla and fanfare which it once used effectively.

It is now doing a quiet, effective, workmanlike job in many parts of the country.

It is not throwing its weight around just for the exercise. It is trying to arouse those who have decided that, maybe, they'll sit this one out.

The sitter-outers must be aroused if labor is to blunt the knife with which its opponents have been doing some nifty whittling and stabbing.

BEFORE POINTING AN ACCUSING FINGER . . .

"If each of us will look in our own hearts first and erase whatever prejudice we will find, we will have taken the first and greatest step toward promoting civil rights.

"Before we can point an accusing finger at our neighbor and tell him he is doing wrong in denying the just rights of citizenship to a group of people because of their race, religion or national origin, we must each ask ourselves: Can I hold myself up as a shining example?"

This, says Morris Shapiro, winner of the New Jersey CIO's essay contest on promoting civil rights, is the realistic way to begin putting into effect the CIO's anti-discrimination policies. Shapiro, a member of Local 108, United Retail Clerks, Jersey City, won a trip to the Race Relations Institute recently at Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn.

Here are some other quotes from Shapiro's essay which was read over the radio on one of the weekly series, "Listen to Labor" programs sponsored by the New Jersey CIO Council:

"What good would it do for us to say: 'Don't make an issue of the fact that a man's skin is darker than yours, that he worships differently, or that his name has foreign sound . . . give him an even break . . . live and let live . . .' and then turn around and refuse to buy a house in a neighborhood that is predominently Italian, overlook a satisfactory seat in the theater because it is next to a Negro, or sit in a bus with a grim face because two old people nearby find it easier to speak a language other than English."

"What is a civil right? Is it not the equitable and fair treatment due every citizen? And does a difference in race, creed, color, national origin, or ancestry, make any one of us any better or worse than the other?"

"Are we not all entitled to an equal opportunity to show what we can do? Should we not each be judged solely on the basis of character, ability, actions and deeds? And if we want to be secure in the rights we wish for ourselves, should we not be willing to respect the rights of other men?"

1948 VOTING RECORD

Whose Congress?

The special interests' - or the peoples'!

1946 'Stay-At-Home' Folks Elected That 80th Congress

THE following pages of The CIO News are devoted to the story of the 80th Congress.

It is not a pretty story.

It is a story of destruction and deceit. It tells how legislation which American labor fought for was chopped to ribbons. It tells how vital needs of the American people were ignored while special interests were promptly served.

It tells how the face of our government was turned away from the men and women of America who work in the shops and on the farms.

It is a story full of grim meaning for the future of our country.

THE 80th Congress was elected on November 5, 1946. Its members took their oath of office on January 3, 1947.

The election was the first peace-time election since 1940. Millions of men who had brought fascism to its knees in Europe and Asia were home for the first time in years.

The promise of peace was bright with visions of new automobiles, well-paying jobs, heavily-laden dinner tables, cozy homes that men could call their own, and a stake in the country for each of its 140 million inhabitants.

It was a promise we wanted fulfilled right away. For many it was the first such promise they had ever had. For others it was the well-deserved end for a hard-traveled road.

And there were those in our land who, for selfish reasons, sought to profit from the desire for peace and prosperity.

Propaganda Drive At Full Steam

Through great organs of public opinions such as the newspapers, the radio, the magazines, even the movies, they sought to convince the people that their goal of peace and plenty was not being reached fast enough—solely because of the kind of government they had.

Controls, needed in the transition period to keep prices down and help spread the nation's goods among the nation's citizens, were pictured as a deliberate device to withhold goods from the people.

Attempts to guide the reconversion of industry into channels that would be orderly and equitable were pictured as "bureaucracy" and "communism."

Proposals to chart the course of our nation along a sound economic path that would maintain the necessary balance between labor and business were met with scorn and sneers.

Every device to stimulate the appetite of a war-weary nation for goods was used and every device to picture necessary restraints as needless were also used.

News columns told of the wonders of production that would be achieved once the "bureaucrats" were defeated and the New Deal put to rout. Radio commercials plugged the merits of commodities not yet being produced.

And billboards screamed, "Had Enough?"

It was against this background of propaganda that the people of the United States went to the polls in 1946. It was propaganda designed to pass the buck of inflation from speculators and corporate price-raisers to the average man and woman.

Early in the year, when primaries were being held, the people knew what they wanted. The picture was still clear and they knew the kind of government they wanted.

In the primaries they defeated such persons as Senator Wheeler in Montana, Senator Shipstead in Minnesota and Senator Radcliffe in Maryland. In five states anti-labor people were badly trounced in the preliminary campaigns for the House; and in others, opposition from the political arm of organized labor was sufficient to keep them from running.

But by November, 1946, many people had become confused.

NAM Dished Out $4 Million

The National Association of Manufacturers alone spent over $4,000,000 for a propaganda campaign. The Republican party poured in more millions, and millions of dollars worth of free space and time was donated by newspapers, magazines and radio stations.

In 1946 there were over 91 million people in the United States who were eligible to vote. Over 60 million of them were registered to vote.

In the confusion people hesitated. Many said, "We'll wait and see" and they failed to go to the polls in November.

So in November only a little over 34 million of the people actually did vote.

The stay-at-homes won the election for the enemies of progress.

In the Senate of the United States, the Republicans gained 12 seats. In the House of Representatives the Republicans gained 55 seats. Control of the national legislature passed into the hands of the party of Big Business.

It was hailed by all the newspapers as a "landslide," a "mandate from the people."

But the figures showed that it was an election that went by default.

As CIO-PAC Director Jack Kroll pointed out at the CIO convention in Atlantic City on November 20, 1946, the record shows that "93 Republican candidates were elected by a small majority of between one and five percent of the votes.

"The total Democratic vote dropped from 25½ million in 1944 to 16 million in 1946, and the Republican vote dropped from 22 million in 1944 to 19 million in 1946.

"In 58 congressional contests, 34 victorious Republicans received fewer votes in 1946 than when they were defeated in 1944.

"The people who stayed away from the polls gave those candidates the margin of victory.

"Their so-called sweep came from the apathy of non-voters, good citizens who elected bad candidates by staying home."

The kind of people elected by "good citizens staying home" was demonstrated a few months later in the Congress of the United States. Out of 92 new members in the House of Representatives only 14 voted to uphold the President's veto of the Taft-Hartley Act. The vast majority of the candidates elected by the "good citizens staying home"—78 of the 92—voted to override the veto.

CIO Mobilizing For Tasks Ahead

The late mayor of New York, Fiorello H. LaGuardia declared: "It looks as if the majority in Congress is beholden to the interests which brought about the greatest depression in history."

And on November 6, 1946, CIO-PAC declared, "We have just begun to fight. Beginning today—right now—the CIO Political Action Committee will intensify and expand its activity. There will be no halt in our work. There will be no retrenchment. We will go on fighting for Franklin D. Roosevelt's program."

"Ours is not a temporary organization. We are here to stay as a vital and growing influence carrying forward the Roosevelt tradition and rallying the people of America around a program which can assure them a secure and plentiful America in a world at peace."

The way in which CIO-PAC has carried on the fight is told in another part of this paper.

The things CIO is fighting for—and against—are made plain in the story of the 80th Congress which follows.

1947-1948 Your Needs Are 'Unfinished Business'

But Business Lobby Hit The Jackpot

IT WAS a utopia for lobbyists of the big corporations, the trade groups, the rich special interests.

They flitted constantly around the halls of Congress. Their number was greater than ever. Their salaries and expense accounts were whopping.

They wined and dined the Congressmen. They sat in at committee hearings, they helped draft bills—Taft-Hartley, for instance. They won friends and they influenced Congressmen. It was money well spent.

For the 80th Congress made beautiful music for the rich, the privileged, the powerful. The people—who had stayed away from the polls in 1946—were the losers.

So, when Congress adjourned in June, the tremendous stockpile of unfinished business was filled with measures desired by the people's organizations. Perhaps the special session called by Pres. Truman will act on some of them; or perhaps it won't.

(If it does, this CIO News Voting Record supplement will be revised to indicate important votes on key issues.)

The 80th Congress—controlled by the GOP—started strong on promises. It delivered on anti-labor bills: Taft-Hartley, Wage-Hour Amendments, weakening of the Labor Dept.

THERE was fast service indeed for anti-union employers. Measures favored by unions moved with the speed of a lame snail.

The out-moded 40c wage-hour law minimum was left as it was. Social security, looking shabbier all the time, was not improved; in fact, 750,000 workers were denied its benefits.

The Mundt-Nixon bill, criticized as a major threat to civil rights, whisked through the House by a whopping majority (though its progress was slowed down in the Senate Judiciary Committee). But the House failed to act on anti-lynch or FEPC bills.

In the Senate none of the major civil rights bills so much as came up for debate or vote. The GOP majority, showing little enthusiasm, alibied that southern poll-taxers would filibuster against the proposals.

THE 80th Congress did a little better on foreign affairs — where a bipartisan policy was in effect. It passed the European Recovery Program, though House Republicans tried to chop down the funds below the point of effective operations.

The high-tariff lobbies won a round when Congress cut down FDR's program of reciprocal trade agreements from three years to only 12 months—which will hurt international trade and weaken our European recovery hopes.

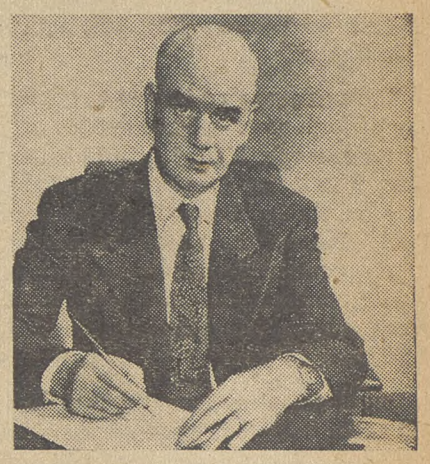
The Displaced Persons Bill was passed—but loaded with clauses to discriminate against Jews and Catholics.

And then—as if to thumb its nose at the United Nations—the 80th "never got around" to approving a $65 million loan to finance building of UN headquarters in New York. People in other countries read the story—and wondered.

BUT special interest groups did just fine. The railroads won an out from anti-trust laws, through the Reed-Bulwinkle Bill. Private utilities forced killing of plans for expanded TVA power program and of St. Lawrence Seaway power projects. The wealthy got tremendous tax savings, and defeated efforts to tax record super-profits.

Rent control was weakened (the real estate lobby was pleased); and new price controls didn't have a chance, though prices went up and up—and they're still going up.

Murray: 'Your Vote Can Help Change Congress'



Let this record of Congress speak for itself.

It was written by every member of the Eightieth Congress. It was written every time a vote was cast on issues affecting the welfare and the future security of the American people.

The record of the 80th Congress is not a pleasant one. It failed to meet the needs of the American people, and it sacrificed to the greed of the vested interests, the belief that governmnt should be not only of and by the people, but for the people.

The Eightieth Congress declared war on the rights of American workers and their unions. It destroyed the Wagner Act, and has brought collective bargaining back close to the jungle of industrial warfare.

The Eightieth Congress failed completely to fight against inflation. Today, as a result, every American family suffers.

The Eightieth Congress failed to act on matters of health and security, of decent minimum wages and critically needed housing. Every American family is the loser.

The Eightieth Congress ignored our country's need for strengthened civil rights.

All of us—every American citizen—must take some responsibility for the 80th Congress. It was elected to office with the votes of only one out of every three citizens. The Eightieth is a minority Congress.

But our government, to serve us well, must be truly a government of all the people.

If all the people, or a substantial majority of them, use their precious democratic rights this November, we can change the complexion of Congress.

If the people vote, they will get a people's Congress.

That must be our goal—to learn the facts, to register, to vote. If we do, we can halt the headlong rush of the Eightieth Congress towards disaster. We can pave the way for intelligent, democratic handling of the problems of our era.

LABOR New Anti-Union Laws..

WORKERS and their unions got it in the neck from the 80th Congress.

They got it with the Taft-Hartley Act; with sharp, crippling amendments to the Wage-Hour law; with the slicing of funds to operate the U. S. Dept. of Labor; with smear-propaganda jobs performed by the House Labor Committee.

It was on Taft-Hartley, of course, that the 80th made secure its anti-labor reputation—and it's on T-H that many Congressmen and Senators must answer to workers in 1948 and the years ahead.

The drive against labor started moving at high speed when the 80th began its sessions in 1947. Anti-union bills poured into the Congressional hopper in a veritable Niagara of spleen and hate. Behind the scenes, a collection of corporation lobbyists, lawyers and public relations men drafted bills, offered advice, smoothed the way for final passage.

Out of the mess came the Taft-Hartley Bill. It was passed by each branch of Congress on three separate votes, in the face of the greatest campaign of opposition ever developed by labor in America.

There wasn't a member of Congress who didn't know the issue when the Taft-Hartley bill came back from the White House with a sizzling veto message. And the 80th over-rode the veto, placed the bill on the lawbooks.

The result? As CIO said on the first anniversary of T-H:

"We cannot ignore the mutual hostility betwen management and labor which this Act has bred. . . "

THE Wage-Hour law was next to feel the axe. Congress used as its pretext the filing of portal-to-portal back pay claim suits by workers. While those lawsuits were still in the courts, the 80th Congress cried with alarm that industry—reaping the richest profits in history—would be forced to go broke.

So the "portal" bill rushed through Congress. Not only did it outlaw the suits, but it shook the whole framework of the Wage-Hour law. Today it's difficult as placing a rope through a needle to prosecute an employer for chiseling on the Wage-Hour law. If tomorrow brings depression, the Wage-Hour law will be thin protection indeed against sweatshop practices.

HAVING mangled the New Deal's two principal labor laws, the 80th went on the warpath against the Department of Labor. When they finished, there wasn't much left.

The Conciliation Service was removed from the Department. The important U. S. Employment Service was transferred to the Federal Security Agency. Other minor bureaus were similarly transferred.

For what was left, there were cuts in appropriations. After two years of the 80th Congress, the Department of Labor has sunk to the level of a minor government agency—without enough money to do well the jobs to which it's still assigned—let alone take on the jobs which should be done.

IN BETWEEN laws and budget-cuts, the 80th Congress found a new way to hamper American unions.

The device: Rep. Hartley's House Labor Committee (it could better be called the House Anti-Labor Committee).

The Labor Committee became a chosen instrument for the quick knife job, for the on-the spot smear campaign. Under Hartley and the notorious Rep. Clare Hoffman (R., Mich.), sub-committees jumped into union-management disputes. It might be a packinghouse strike in the midwest, a government cafeteria strike in Washington, an auto strike in Ohio, a warehouse dispute in New York.

Each time, the House "anti-Labor Committee moved in to discredit the union, to bait workers and this spokesmen, to make hostile headlines —effect, to pull the bosses' bacon out of the fire.

All in all, it was a smooth technique. The Congress to pass the basic anti-union laws; the committee to do the "quickie" smear jobs.

It will take a new-type Congress to disrupt this new NAM-type technique.

HOMES But No Housing Bill!

FROM every corner of the country had come the cry for action by Uncle Sam to help build homes.

But the 80th Congress listened not to those demands and requests—but to the rich, powerful lobby of the real estate interests.

Thus, the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill was deliberately "lost in the shuffle"—and millions of families lose their chance for decent homes at decent rents.

(Throughout this period two of the three wings of the real estate lobby were in trouble with the Justice Dept. The Natl. Association of Home Builders and its Washington affiliate were under indictment for price fixing. Morton Bodfish, shrewd lobbyist for the Nalt. Savings and Loan League, was under indictment for violation of the Federal Lobbying Act.)

The T-E-W bill offered a program aimed at building 15 million new houses in the next 10 years. That was the nation's minimum requirement, as estimated not only by labor and other organizations, but by a Republican-controlled joint Congressional committee on housing.

The bill placed emphasis on giving private builders every inducement to build for lower-income tenants—the ones for whom homes aren't going up now, the ones most in need.

Federal money would have been available to cities for slum clearance. There were aids for rural housing, for veterans, for cooperative housing projects. There was provision for research in better building methods.

Every conceivable device to get houses built was included in that bill. But it was the idea of public housing that set off a prolonged howl from the real estate lobby. T-E-W provided for the erection of only 500,000 units for those low-income families for whom the industry has failed to build. The lobby was prepared to kill off the whole program rather than permit public housing. It succeeded.

THE Senate had passed T-E-W in 1947, passed it in slightly changed style again in 1948. But in the House Banking & Currency Committee, Chairman Rep. Jesse Wolcott (R., Mich.) sat on it—and he sat, and he sat.

It took tremendous pressure to force committee hearings on the bill—but the pressure was matched by some of slickest, swiftest parliamentary juggling seen on Capitol Hill in years.

First Wolcott tried to make a deal with the Senate, to remove the public housing provision, but keep sections favored by the real estate boys. Even Sen. Taft turned him down.

THEN he tried to substitute an anemic, do-nothing bill of his own, in place of T-E-W. But Wolcott's methods were too much for his own Banking Committee. They turned him down and sent the T-E-W bill on its way, to Rep. Leo Allen's (R., Ill.) powerful House Rules Committee.

Allen promptly did a favor for Brother Wolcott. After Wolcott mumbled that T-E-W would "fashion the key to open the door to socialism," Allen's Rules Committee tabled T-E-W.

With T-E-W out of the way, Wolcott claimed his own bill would be better than none (the real estate lobby agreed). With the skids greased, it moved quickly through the Banking Committee, was passed by the House under a suspension of the rules which permitted no amendments.

Then, the conference committee members from the two branches of Congress got together to reconcile the Senate-passed T-E-W bill and the House-passed Wolcott Bill. The Senators told the Representatives to go climb a tree. Senate leaders swore they wouldn't be dictated to by Wolcott.

In the wee small hours of the final night of the 80th Congress, the conference finaly threw out both bills, agreed on a dark-horse proposal made by Sen. Jenner (R., Ind.), some weeks before. That bill, passed by Congress, isn't a housing bill—it's a financing proposition designed to aid banks to unload their mortgage holdings on the government.

An "A" For Effort

Here's an honor roll of Congressmen who fought for action on the Taft-Ellender-Wagner Housing Bill. Though the bill was pigeonholed in Rep. Wolcott's Banking & Currency Committee, and then in the Rules Committee—these Congressmen sought to get some action. They signed a discharge petition, which if successful, would have brought the T-E-W bill on the floor for a vote. The men and women whose names are listed below did their best to vote "Right" on housing.

Congress Talked... And Prices Soared

IF prices are any guide, your hamburger should taste like T-bone steak.

It doesn't. But the price of lowly hamburger is still in the stratosphere —and going higher.

So is the price of shirts, nails, shoes, automobiles, bread and milk.

Much of the blame rests with big business, pushing for even higher profits. But the 79th Congress ended OPA, and gave inflation a green light. The folks who didn't vote in '46 and permitted Congress to feel it had a mandate against further controls, helped indirectly. So did the 80th Congress, which refused to act against inflation.

The 80th Congress had plenty of time to fight inflation. Prices have risen steadily since 1946—but Congress looked the other way.

In the autumn of 1947, with prices zooming skyward even faster than usual, Pres. Truman called the Congress back to Washington. He suggested a 10-point program to fight inflation. It called for restoration of price controls on materials that were critically short; it called for allocation of scarce raw materials; it urged excess profits taxes and anti-monopoly legislation.

Led by Sen. Taft, the 80th Congress picked up the three least important items in the program, made them law, and sat back to watch developments.

Prices continued to rise—and the public grumbled some more.

Then came the temporary drop in the commodity market, last February. It was greeted like rainfall on the desert by the "do-nothing" bloc in Congress. They called a halt to anti-inflation bills. And prices, after a brief lull, kept moving up. They're still moving, wholesale food prices are at a record peak.

Tax Bonanza For The Rich

Big business was happy about the defeat of anti-inflation proposals. It had plenty of reason to be happy about other actions of the 80th Congress. For instance, the tax bill.

A family of four earning $2,200 a years saves 73c a week. A $5,000 family saves about $3 each week on its tax bill.

But the big income families get the big breaks. A $25,000 family saves a neat $58.50 each week on taxes—a cut of 18.5% compared to the 1.3% saving for the $2,200 family.

A $250,000 family gets a $668 tax rebate each week—a 58% tax cut.

The man who makes a million a year saves $1,337 a week in taxes.

No wonder that the tax bill sponsored by Rep. Knutson (R., Minn.) was dubbed a "spare-the-rich" bill. But Congress passed it three times—the last time over the President's veto.

Corporations netted a clear $17½ billion in profits for 1947—an obvious source of taxation. But both the House and the Senate turned down efforts to tax some of those excess profits from the corporations.

And as the session ended, only a last-minute rush prevented Congress from passing a "technical" tax bill that would have allowed new savings to the very wealthy.

Fitzpatrick, in St. Louis Post-Dispatch

Rent Control Still Weaker

In contrast to the worry about the money problems of America's wealthy was Congress' reluctance to pass a decent rent control extenion bill.

Efforts to put more teeth in rent control were offset by the powerful real estate lobby. The Congress wound up with an extension bill weaker than the 1947 version. And rents are creeping up everywhere in the country.

But while the rich were getting richer, the 80th Congress refused to strengthen anti-monopoly laws. It forced the Dept. of Justice anti-trust division to get along on short funds—and then it made the division's job easier by allowing the railroads to get together to fix their rates—without having to worry about anti-trust laws.

You can be thankful, though, for one small favor. The Moore-Rizley bill, which would have lifted U. S. supervision over natural gas distribution, failed to pass. It zipped through the House in easy fashion—but the Senate Commerce Committee turned thumbs down.

The committee's action saved the public over $60 mililon a year in higher gas rates.

Despite defeat of the Moore-Rizley bill, big business was far ahead of the people when the session ended.

ABOUT THIS VOTING GUIDE

ON the next few pages are listed the voting records of 435 Congressmen and 96 Senators on 16 issues of importance to working men and women.

The CIO publishes this record as a matter of educational value for its members and the public in general. These votes—taken as a whole—help to show whether your representatives in Congress stood with the people or with the special interests.

But no voting record—particularly one compiled for the 80th Congress—can tell the whole story of your representative's career in Washington.

Obviously, a voting record does not show whether a Congressman supported or opposed worthwhile bills which never came up for a record vote. Thus, no member of the House was able to vote on the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill; no Senator could vote on the anti-polltax bill, the FEPC bill, the anti-lynch bill; no member of Congress voted on health insurance, better social security, higher minimum wages.

And sometimes the voting record itself doesn't tell all the facts. Most Congressmen who voted against the Taft-Hartley Act disapproved of its aims and purposes. But some few Congressmen voted against the bill because they thought its restrictions on labor unions weren't severe enough!

Obviously, the voting record doesn't clearly record the motive for any particular Congressman's vote on any one issue.

NEVERTHELESS, as you read the voting record you will see pretty clearly the trend of "rights" and "wrongs" in the voting record of each Congressman and Senator. Of course, there are very few Congressmen or Senators who voted "right" on every issue; and not many who voted "wrong" on every issue.

But you'll find about 100 or so Congressmen who voted "right" a good share of the time; and you'll find about 20 or 25 Senators who did likewise. That minority group, in both branches of Congress, constituted the "New Deal" minority. They were the best friends of the American people in Congress.

We hope that the November elections will increase the size of that minority in the House and Senate; that the 81st Congress will compile a better record than Congress which adjourned in disorder, its work haphazardly done, on June 19. The CIO and its affiliated unions will work hard to improve the Congress, to make it worthy of American democracy.

This voting guide is one way for you to learn the records of the men and women who represented you in Washington, so that you may judge for yourselves whether they deserve another term in office.

ONE word of warning: Some newspapers, some politicians are sure to brand this voting guide as a "black list," a "purge list," as a list of "CIO endorsements." It's nothing of the sort.

Endorsements of candidates for Congress are made by CIO groups back home, in the states, in the districts. Those endorsements are made on the basis of all the facts —of which the voting record is only one.

The issues included in this voting guide were chosen by the CIO Legislative and Publicity Departments and the CIO Political Action Committee. The votes fall into three principal groups: (1) labor issues, (2) social welfare issues, and (3) people-vs.-the-interests issues. They were selected to give a well-rounded picture of the record of one of the worst Congresses in this nation's history.

If you want further information about the record of any Congressman or Senator on issues not listed in these pages, write to the office of Nathan Cowan, CIO Legislative Director, 718 Jackson Place N.W., Washington 6, D. C.; or to the CIO Political Action Committee, 728 17th Street N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

They will be glad to help you in the principal job facing the American people in 1948: to register, to learn the facts, to vote.

THE SENATE'S RECORD

Here's a short description of each of the 16 votes on the opposite page. Read these descriptions of the issues—then see how your Senator voted.

1. TAFT-HARTLEY BILL (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Passage of the Taft-Hartley Bill over President Truman's veto. This was the third and most decisive record vote on T-H; no Senator can say he didn't know the issue.

VOTE: To sustain the T-H veto..... 25 (R)
To over-ride the T-H veto..... 68 (W)

DATE: June 23, 1947.

RESULT: Taft-Hartley bill, with its serious curbs on union activity and free collective bargaining, became law on June 23, 1947. Wagner Act was ruined; wave of injunctions followed.

2. WAGE-HOUR AMENDMENTS (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Passage of a bill to amend and weaken the Wage-Hour law, under guise of outlawing workers' portal-to-portal back pay suits.

VOTE: To pass the amendments..... 64 (W)
To defeat the amendments..... 24 (R)

DATE: March 21, 1947.

RESULT: Wage-Hour law was seriously weakened, enforcement of provisions to protect workers was badly hampered.

3. WEAKENED LABOR DEPT. (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Support of President's Reorganization Plan No. 1, which provided that the U. S. Employment Service be kept in the Dept. of Labor, as CIO had requested.

VOTE: To support the Plan..... 25 (R)
To turn down the Plan..... 58 (W)

DATE: March 16, 1948.

RESULT: Vote paved way for eventual transfer of U. S. Employment Service from Dept. of Labor to status of minor bureau in Federal Security Agency.

4. PRICE CONTROLS (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Amendment by Sen. Barkley (D., Ky.) to Taft bill, at special session, in December 1947, to give the President power to issue orders and regulations enforcing anti-inflation policies subject to approval of Congress, and thereby restore price control.

VOTE: To support the amendment..... 35 (R)
To defeat the amendment..... 48 (W)

DATE: December 18, 1947.

RESULT: With Barkley amendment defeated, Congress passed meaningless anti-inflation bill—and prices went up and up and up.

5. EXCESS PROFITS TAXES (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Proposal for heavier taxes on corporations' big profits, but with incentives for building new plant, was offered as amendment to Knutson Tax Bill by Senators O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.) and Johnson (D., Colo.). Vote indicated whether Senators favored heavier taxation on those best able to pay.

VOTE: For excess profits tax..... 26 (R)
Against excess profits tax..... 58 (W)

DATE: March 19, 1948.

RESULT: Big corporations, with biggest profits in history, escaped federal taxes on super-profits.

6. 'SPARE THE RICH' TAX CUT (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Heavy cuts in taxes on high incomes, but only trifling tax cuts for those in low and middle income brackets. CIO had proposed big cuts for average families, to be balanced by heavier taxation on wealthy families, big corporations, etc. Pres. Truman vetoed the Knutson tax bill, but was over-ridden.

VOTE: To over-ride veto of tax bill..... 77 (W)
To support veto of tax bill..... 10 (R)

DATE: April 2, 1948.

RESULT: Tax bill became law; government lost some five billion dollars in revenue while taking on ERP tasks; and wealthy families got lion's share of tax savings.

7. PUBLIC HOUSING PROGRAM (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Amendment by Sen. Cain (R., Wash.) to remove public housing section of Taft-Ellender-Wagner Bill. Senate kept the provision, but the bill—though passed in the Senate—never was passed in the House. Public housing section was crucial, as only means of building new homes in low-rent brackets.

VOTE: For public housing, against Cain Amdt..... 47 (R)
Against public housing, for Cain Amdt..... 35 (W)

DATE: April 21, 1948.

RESULT: Public housing stayed in T-E-W bill—but real estate lobby won its victory when House failed to act on the measure.

8. EFFECTIVE RENT CONTROL (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Weakening amendment to an already weak rent control extension law, offered by Sen. McClellan (D., Ark.) It would have forced U. S. rent control authorities to accept proposals of local boards—often controlled by real estate interests—for higher rents or removal of all controls.

VOTE: To accept McClellan Amendment..... 25 (W)
To turn down McClellan Amendment..... 43 (R)

DATE: February 24, 1948.

RESULT: Weakened rent control extension law was eventually passed—but it was stronger than real estate lobby had hoped.

9. U. S. AID TO SCHOOLS (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Nation's schools face crisis from shortage of local funds, need for new buildings, big increase in students. Labor and educators supported $300 million U. S. aid bill to help meet this crisis. Bill was passed in Senate, but never reached a vote in House.

VOTE: To give U. S. aid to schools..... 58 (R)
Opposed..... 22 (W)

DATE: April 1, 1948.

RESULT: Failure of House to approve bill leaves many school systems throughout country unable to give decent education and training to U. S. youngsters.

10. WEAKENED ANTI-TRUST LAWS (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Support of Pres. Truman's veto of the Reed-Bulwinkle Bill, which allows railroads to get together on rate problems, without fear of prosecution under Sherman anti-trust law.

VOTE: To support veto of Reed-Bulwinkle Bill..... 25 (R)
To over-ride the veto..... 63 (W)

DATE: June 16, 1948.

RESULT: Together with similar action in House, Senate vote caused bill to be passed. Effectiveness of anti-trust laws was weakened.

11. WEAKENED SOCIAL SECURITY (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Support of Pres. Truman's veto of Gearhart Resolution, which keeps an estimated 750,000 people out of social security system. (Congress failed to extend social security, twice voted to limit its coverage).

VOTE: To support veto of Gearhart Resolution..... 12 (R)
To over-ride veto..... 65 (W)

DATE: June 14, 1948.

RESULT: Senate vote, together with similar action in House, made Gearhart Resolution law thereby preventing semi-independent employes from enjoying social security coverage.

12. PUBLIC POWER PLANTS (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: A $4 million appropriation for a government-owned steam plant in the Tennessee Valley Authority, designed to improve TVA's electric power service. The vote reflected old conflict between supporters of public power and supporters of private utility systems.

VOTE: To finance the TVA steam plant..... 45 (R)
To oppose the steam plant..... 37 (W)

DATE: June 15, 1948.

RESULT: TVA steam plant was approved, but House failed to concur—and the steam plant won't be built.

13. EUROPEAN RECOVERY PROGRAM (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: America's decision to support a program of European economic recovery, in order to holster world peace and stability, and authorize $5.3 billion to get program under way.

VOTE: For ERP..... 69 (R)
Against ERP..... 17 (W)

DATE: March 13, 1948.

RESULT: European Recovery Program was undertaken by U. S. Government.

14. DISPLACED PERSONS ENTRY (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Ferguson Amendment to the Displaced Persons Bill; proposal would have removed widely-criticized section barring most Jewish refugees from entry to U. S. under DP program.

VOTE: For Ferguson Amendment..... 29 (R)
Against Amendment..... 49 (W)

DATE: June 2, 1948.

RESULT: Discrimination clauses against Catholics, Jews, and others were kept in DP bill; measure was criticized as souring humanitarian effort to help war refugees.

15. ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Ratification of a 1941 executive agreement with Canada to build 119-mile deep-water seaway to permit through shipping from Great Lakes to the Atlantic, and develop big public power projects along the route. Program has been supported by advocates of TVA-type power developments.

VOTE: To recommit (i.e., bury) the Seaway Plan..... 57 (W)
To endorse the Seaway Plan..... 30 (R)

DATE: February 27, 1948.

RESULT: Seaway Plan was killed by the 80th Congress.

16. 3-YEAR TRADE AGREEMENTS (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Government's power to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements for three years, needed to stabilize foreign trade and help ERP. Opponents of the trade agreements succeeded in limiting government's authority to only one year, not enough to work out long-range program. Sen. Barkley (D., Ky.) offered amendment to extend program to three years.

VOTE: For Barkley 3-year trade program..... 42 (R)
Against Barkley 3-year trade program..... 47 (W)

DATE: June 14, 1948.

RESULT: Important foreign trade agreement was put on "temporary" basis, adding difficulties to working out long-range world recovery program.

READING THE SENATE RECORD

The symbol R in this voting record means a Right vote, from the viewpoint of the CIO.
The symbol W means a Wrong vote.
The symbol A means the Senator did not vote on the issue.
The symbol * means the Senator was not in office at the time of the vote.

HOUSE VOTING RECORD

Here's a short description of each of the 16 votes recorded on the next three pages. Read the description of the issues—then see how your Congressman voted on them.

1. TAFT-HARTLEY BILL (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Passage of Taft-Hartley anti-labor bill over Pres. Truman's veto.

VOTE: To over-ride the veto: ..... 331 (W)
To sustain the veto: ..... 83 (R)

DATE: June 20, 1947.
RESULT: As result of over-riding of veto in both House and Senate, Taft-Hartley bill became law. Wagner Act was ruined; Government by injunction was returned; collective bargaining disrupted by government intervention on employers' behalf.

2. WAGE-HOUR AMENDMENTS (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Weakening amendments to Wage-Hour law, under guise of banning portal-to-portal back-pay suits by workers. Bill provided loopholes for employers, cut down strength of enforcement provisions.

VOTE: To pass the amendments: ..... 345 (W)
To oppose the amendments: ..... 56 (R)

DATE: February 28, 1947.
RESULT: Bill became law; Wage-Hour law enforcement was seriously weakened.

3. WEAKENED LABOR DEPT. (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Support of a rider to the Federal Security Agency's appropriation bill, providing that U. S. Employment Service be switched from Labor Dept. to minor status in FSA. Transfer was opposed by unions and Pres. Truman, who vetoed the bill.

VOTE: To sustain veto, prevent USES transfer: ..... 114 (R)
To over-ride the veto: ..... 283 (W)

DATE: June 16, 1948.
RESULT: House vote, together with over-riding of veto in Senate, transferred USES from Labor Dept., left that Department weakest of all cabinet agencies.

4. FARM ELECTRIC POWER LOANS (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Proposal that a deficiency appropriation bill be sent back to committee for addition of $300 million to finance Rural Electrification Administration loans allowing farm cooperatives to buy badly-needed power equipment.

VOTE: To order funds for REA: ..... 151 (R)
To prevent granting funds to REA: ..... 181 (W)

DATE: February 24, 1948.
RESULT: Farm cooperatives were hindered in obtaining funds to finance post-war electric power improvements.

5. INCREASED PROFITS TAXES (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Proposed amendment to Knutson Tax Bill, offered by Rep. Rayburn (D. Tex.), to force higher taxes on corporations' big profits, and also lift personal exemptions on income tax to benefit low income families.

VOTE: To increase profits taxes: ..... 159 (R)
Against increased profits taxes: ..... 258 (W)

DATE: February 2, 1948.
RESULT: Big corporations, with greatest profits in history, received tremendous tax savings.

6. 'SPARE THE RICH' TAX CUT (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Rep. Knutson's proposal to make heavy tax cuts on high personal incomes, gave only trifling tax cuts to persons in low and middle income brackets. CIO, liberal groups opposed Knutson bill and President vetoed it.

VOTE: To sustain veto of tax bill: ..... 88 (R)
To over-ride veto: ..... 311 (W)

DATE: April 2, 1948.
RESULT: Tax bill became law; government lost some 5 billion in revenue while taking on ERP costs; and wealthy families got lion's share of tax savings.

7. REPEAL OF OLEO TAXES (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Removal of federal taxes and license fees on white and colored oleomargarine, widely used as cheap, nutritious substitute for butter. Bill was fought vigorously by dairy lobby.

VOTE: To remove oleo taxes: ..... 260 (R)
To keep oleo taxes: ..... 106 (W)

DATE: April 28, 1948.
RESULT: Despite House action to repeal oleo taxes, bill never came to final vote in Senate. So, oleo taxes (¼c per pound on white, 10c per on yellow) and license fees, remain in effect.

8. RENT CONTROL (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: A weakening amendment by the Banking Committee to an already weak rent control bill. It would have forced U. S. rent control administrator to accept without changes recommendations of local boards for lifting rent ceilings or removing controls—though many local boards are controlled by real estate groups fighting all rent controls.

VOTE: To accept weakening amendment: ..... 228 (W)
To reject weakening amendment: ..... 155 (R)

DATE: March 16, 1948.
RESULT: Similar amendment was defeated in Senate; but final compromise limited the right of federal rent control administrator to turn down requests for rent ceiling increases and set up a special court system as arbitrator. In effect, the House amendment seriously weakened rent control program.

9. WEAKENED SOCIAL SECURITY (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: The Gearhart Resolution, which keeps an estimated million people out of social security system. (Congress failed to extend social security, twice voted to limit its coverage.)

VOTE: For Gearhart Resolution: ..... 275 (W)
Against Resolution: ..... 52 (R)

DATE: February 27, 1948.
RESULT: Resolution passed Congress, with sugar-coating of increased federal aid to states for some types of security payments. President vetoed the Gearhart Resolution on ground that it limited, rather than expanded, social security system—but Congress over-rode the veto.

10. WEAKENED ANTI-TRUST LAW (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Passage of Reed-Bulwinkle Bill, over Pres. Truman's veto. Bill permits railroads to get together on rate problems, with consent of government and without violation of anti-trust laws.

VOTE: To sustain veto of R-B Bill: ..... 102 (R)
To over-ride veto: ..... 297 (W)

DATE: Junes 17, 1948.
RESULT: Reed-Bulwinkle Bill veto was over-ridden in both Senate and House. Its passage was major victory for railroad lobby, and a weakening of anti-trust laws at time when liberal groups have urged stronger anti-monopoly controls.

11. ANTI-POLLTAX BILL (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Proposal to remove tax on voting in federal primaries and elections in seven southern states—in order to give millions of people a chance to vote.

VOTE: To outlaw the polltax: ..... 290 (R)
To retain the polltax: ..... 112 (W)

DATE: July 21, 1947.
RESULT: House vote to remove polltax was only major civil rights action taken by Congress—but the bill never reached Senate floor for debate on vote. So the polltax remains as voting barrier in seven states.

12. MUNDT-NIXON BILL (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Proposal, sponsored by House Un-American Activities Committee, was labeled as anti-subversive measure; but it was attacked by labor legal experts, and much of the press as a dangerous violation of civil rights and promoter of smear techniques.

VOTE: To pass the bill: ..... 319 (W)
To defeat the bill: ..... 58 (R)

DATE: May 19, 1948.
RESULT: Although bill passed House, Senate Judiciary Committee never reported on the bill and it failed to become law.

13. OK OF SEGREGATED SCHOOLS (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Proposal that Congress "ratify" agreement among several southern states to set up centralized, segregated school systems for Negroes in order to evade Supreme Court decisions. Opposed by CIO and liberal groups as forcing U. S. to approve racial discrimination policies.

VOTE: To approve southern segregated schools: ..... 236 (W)
To disapprove ..... 45 (R)

DATE: May 4, 1948.
RESULT: Although approved in the House, the Senate turned down the proposal to ratify segregated school set-up by 38-37 vote on a motion by Sen. Morse (R., Ore.) to recommit the resolution to committee.

14. EUROPEAN RECOVERY PROGRAM (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: America's decision to support program of European economic recovery, in order to bolster world peace and stability, and authorize $5.3 billion to get program under way.

VOTE: For ERP ..... 329 (R)
Against ERP ..... 74 (W)

DATE: March 31, 1948.
RESULT: European Recovery Program was undertaken by U. S. government.

15. PUBLIC POWER PLANTS (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Agreement with a Senate proposal to approve $4 million for a U. S.-owned steam plant for the Tennessee Valley Authority, designed to improve TVA's electric power service. Vote reflected old conflict between supporters of public power projects and supporters of private utility systems.

VOTE: For the $4 million steam plant..... 152 (R)
Against the steam plant..... 201 (W)

DATE: June 19, 1948.
RESULT: Failure of House to approve this TVA project killed it in 80th Congress, weakened ability of TVA to provide electric power to all consumers in area.

16. 3-YEAR TRADE AGREEMENTS (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Government's power to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements for three years, needed to stabilize foreign trade and help ERP. House Committee cut period of agreements to one year. Rep. Doughton (D., N. C.) moved to send the bill back to committee for inclusion of three-year clause, but the move was defeated.

VOTE: For the Doughton 3-year proposal..... 168 (R)
Against the 3-year proposal..... 211 (W)

DATE: May 26, 1948.
RESULT: Important foreign trade agreement program was put on "temporary" basis, adding difficulties to working out long-range world recovery plans.

1948 You Have Votes— Use 'Em In November!

PRIMARIES SHOWED LABOR VOTE POWER

IN 1948 a dollar at the grocery store bought less than ever before.

But in 1948 a PAC dollar produced more political action than ever before.

Labor scored resounding successes in Iowa, North Carolina, Alabama, Florida, Indiana and other states in the east, west, north and south.

In primaries held up to mid-year, a summary shows, labor-backed candidates won in over 60% of the elections despite the fact that backing was given, in some instances, to candidates new to the game of politics.

City and county elections showed an even larger percentage of victories with impressive wins being scored in Indiana, Ohio and Pennsylvania.

Victories Won In Many States

Some of the highlights of labor's political activity this year are:

Alabama—Labor political activity in this state succeeded in defeating for re-election two Representatives whose records showed a betrayal of the people. They were Pete Jarman and Carter Manasco. Labor backed candidates won the Democratic nomination in those two districts and will be in Congress next year.

Florida—Tom Watson, a bitter foe of labor as state attorney-general, was defeated in his attempt to boost himself to the state supreme court. The labor-backed candidate for governor, Fuller Warren, also was elected.

Indiana—With only two exceptions, every labor-backed nominee for congressional office was successful in the primary elections. A member of the Oil Workers, Charles Fleming, was nominated for state secretary of state at the Democratic state convention and a labor-backed candidate, Henry F. Schricker, won the gubernatorial nomination.

Iowa—Political reporters all over the nation grabbed their pencils when the returns from the Iowa primary came in. A farmer-labor coalition dumped Governor Robert D. Blue, a bitter foe of labor, and Rep. John W. Gwynne, author of the infamous amendments which gutted the wage-hour act.

North Carolina—A United Labor Political Committee pulled an upset as they forced the gubernatorial race into a run-off election and then elected their second choice. It was the first time in North Carolina in years that a person who ran second in the general election was elected in the run-off. The ULPC also participated in the defeat of Senator William Umstead and in the election of Rep. F. Ertel Carlyle.

Pennsylvania — Three Republican Taft-Hartleyites were defeated in the primaries. They were Reps. James Gallagher, Wallace Chadwick and James P. Scoblick. Although not opposed by labor-backed candidates, their records were too much for the voters to stomach.

West Virginia—Matthew M. Neely, labor-backed, defeated former Senator Rush D. Holt for the Democratic nomination and is reported to have a good chance of defeating Senator Chapman Revercomb in November's election.

CIO-PAC To Play Active Role

In most states the final contests will be fought in November and PAC will be in the thick of the fighting.

The constant emphasis, it is predicted, will be on the necessity of electing a Congress that will be responsive to the needs of the people.

Activity will center principally in the 16 northeast and midwest states, which have 214 members in the House of Representatives, on the Pacific Coast, and in the south where labor political activity is beginning to play a vital role.

Surveys, conducted for PAC by an independent research organization, indicate that voters this year will be more concerned with issues than with candidates.

The CIO Political Action Committee, with its blockworkers and precinct organizers, intends to present those issues.

Your Own Block Is Where We'll Work In 1948

By JACK KROLL
Director, CIO-PAC

CIO-PAC has been harping on one theme for the past year. The chances are that we will be harping on it even more during the rest of this year.

That theme is—block and precinct work.

PAC constantly works to impress state and local PACs with the importance of block and precinct work. Why? Because we have found, in election after election, that it is block and precinct work that pays off in votes.

All the grand strategies, all the publicity, all the stunts in the world won't elect a good candidate to Congress or any other office unless they are backed by solid organization down on the block, precinct and ward level.

Another major theme of CIO-PAC is—registration and voting.

We are firmly convinced that a big vote means good government, and that bad candidates are elected only when people refuse to take an interest in the election.

In 1946 the 80th Congress was elected by about 40% of the voters. The Congress was controlled by people who received votes from less than 20% of the voters.

You've got to register to be able to vote—and you've got to vote if you want your ballot to count.

It's very simple and very important.

The third concern of CIO-PAC has been the dollar drives conducted by the international unions of CIO. We are concerned not only because voluntary contributions are the life blood of labor's political activity but also because the person who makes a voluntary contribution is also thereby interested in political activity. The man who contributes to PAC and knows why he is contributing to PAC is a man who can be counted upon to go out and ring door bells at election time.

We of CIO-PAC were naturally proud when CIO President Murray told the convention of the United Steelworkers of America this year that CIO-PAC "is the most effective piece of political mechanism ever created by American labor."

Was This Election Stolen Or Won?

THE political pot is really beginning to boil down in Tennessee, and Boss Ed Crump of Memphis is supplying a generous portion of the fuel.

He's out to get the scalp of Senatorial Aspirant Estes Kefauver and nail it to the barn door, as they say down in those parts.

He's swinging his customary verbal haymakers at Editor Ed Meeman of the Memphis Press-Scimitar, a Kefauver supporter whom Crump loves like poison ivy.

All of which is nothing unusual for a political campaign in which Crump's candidate is opposed.

IT has been rumored around the country for years that some of the elections conducted in Tennessee bore striking resemblance to corkscrews—crooked, that is.

Those peddling these rumors have frequently referred to Shelby County, where Crump maintains his political throne.

The record shows that some of the boys working for Editor Meeman have, at various times past, dug up rather concrete evidence to prove that these "vicious rumor-mongers" were actually peddling facts.

This, obviously, didn't deepen Crump's regard for Meeman.

In fact, it irked him considerably.

THE nation's newspapers recently gave considerable space to stories about Crump inviting Meeman to leave town if a committee of Memphians ruled in favor of Crump in an argument with Meeman over Rep. Kefauver's record.

And if the committee ruled in favor of Meeman, then Crump was to get out of Memphis.

This Crump about whom we're talking is the fellow who said some 10 years ago that the CIO wouldn't be tolerated in Memphis.

He's the man who rescinded the invitation of his predecessor as mayor to the American Newspaper Guild to hold its annual convention in Memphis back in 1940.

He's the fellow who became angry at Meeman back in '37 when the latter blasted the city administration for permitting the frequent brutal beating of CIO organizers.

THERE'S really nothing unexpected about a good election campaign scrap between Crump and Meeman and it's not unusual for either the Guild or the Tennessee CIO movement as a whole to get somewhat involved.

Crump doesn't love Guildsmen—particularly those who were involved a number of years in that graveyard deal.

It happened during an election and it gave much strength to those rumors about Tennessee elections.

The real clincher was photographic evidence that dead men, for practical political purposes, do "vote."

THE anti-Crump candidate who was defeated smelled a mouse and yelled loudly, "I wuz robbed."

That yell had been heard before and had been ignored. But this time there was something which the newspapers called an investigation.

Some Meeman reporters, checking registration lists, became suspicious. Off they went with a photographer to get pictures of the homes of questionable voters.

Next day Meeman's paper carried a graveyard scene on its front page. The caption beneath it said that gravestones occupied addresses given on the registration list.

Nobody went to jail, which proves something.

But it doesn't prove that dead men actually vote!

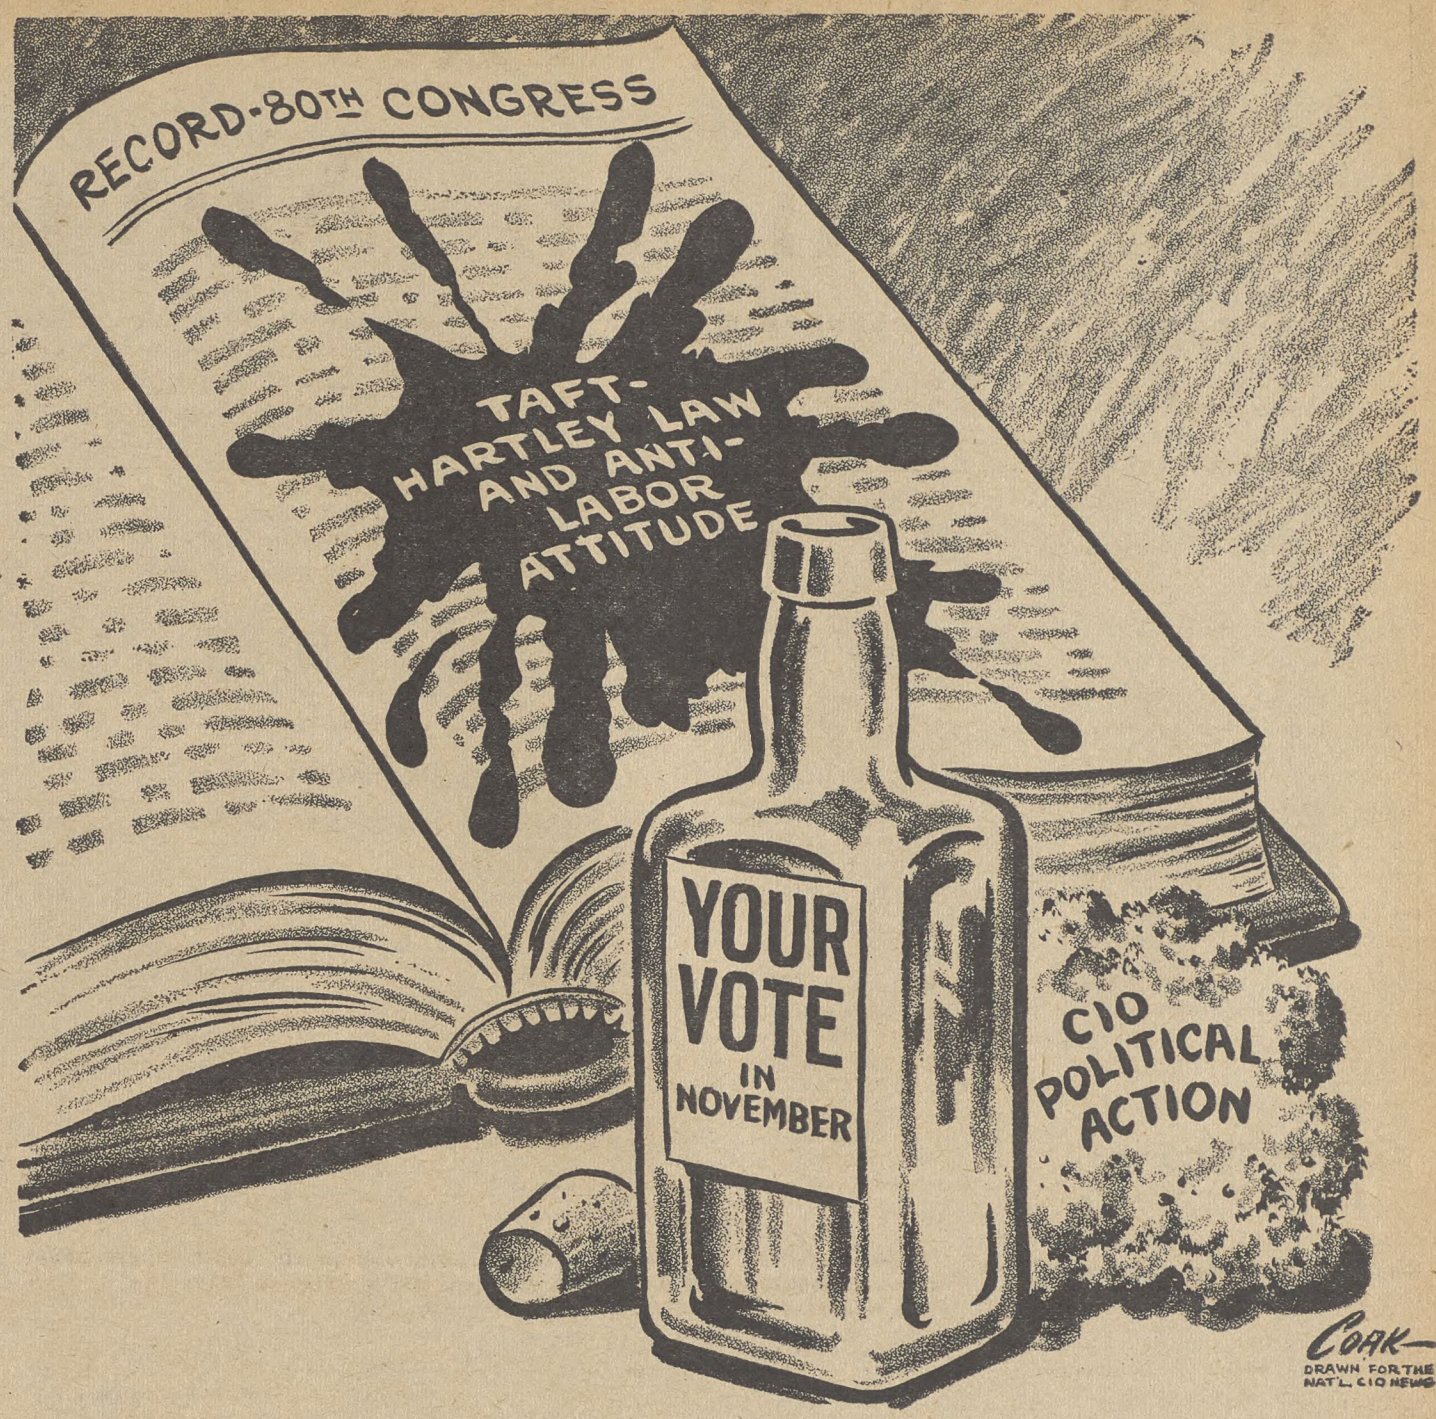
Out, Out Damned Spot!



Poll Shows Labor Wants No Part Of T-H, No Siree

CIO clothing and maritime unionists in New York City don't like the Taft-Hartley Act or any of its parts. What's more, they won't be satisfied with either minor or major alterations; they want the whole works repealed.

That was what psychology student Stanford L. Margoshes of Princeton University found recently when he conducted an objective opinion poll on T-H among 771 members of the two unions in New York.

Not only did he discover 85% opposed to the law itself; he did not find a majority in favor of a single T-H provision.

Why don't they like it? Well, one said because it "is entirely in favor of Big Business, does away with NMU democratic rotary shipping." Another said it was too drastic—"vicious enough to eradicate labor's hard-won gains." Still another: "This law was passed on a wave of anti-labor hysteria. Employers will use it to break down the unions . . ." But whatever their objections, those who opposed T-H indicated they felt much more intensely about it than those who approved.

LAST September Look magazine created a small tempest by publishing a study by Claude Robinson titled "The Strange Case of the Taft-Hartley Law." Robinson purported to have discovered in a poll of workers that unionists like "the major features of the Taft-Hartley Law—but not the law itself."

Reporting that he found 64% of the union members questioned against the law as a whole, but a majority in favor of most of its component parts, Robinson implied that clever propaganda by labor leaders and ignorance on the part of workers were responsible for this phenomenon.

No nationwide poll, to our knowledge, has been conducted by an impartial opinion sampler to test Robinson's "findings," but Margoshes has found that they definitely don't apply to seamen and clothing workers in New York at least.

The Princeton pollster used seven of the questions asked by Robinson, rewording three to give a clearer picture of the issue. In addition, he asked two questions on major T-H provisions not covered by Robinson. Going still further, he attempted to learn whether reactions stemmed from union propaganda and workers' ignorance, as Robinson concluded.

Robinson asked: "If you were in Congress, would you be for or against a law to give the company the right to sue the union if the union breaks its contract?"

Margoshes presumably considered that misleading. In the first place, companies have always had the right to sue unions for breach of contract.

The question as asked by Margoshes made this clear: "Should an employer be allowed to sue a union for any acts of its members or only for acts which were approved by the union?"

Questioned this way, 6% said they favored the law's provision. Robinson's question, on the other hand, provoked a 70% approval of the law.

THE PROVISION least liked by those Margoshes questioned was the one on damage suits. Most favored—and this did not win a majority—was the section on communists holding union office. Actually the question, worded the same as Robinson's misrepresented the law's provision on communists.

The question read: "Would you be for or against a law to prevent communists from holding offices in unions?"

T-H does not bar communists from union office. It merely denies to unions, whose officers fail to sign non-communist oaths, the services of the Natl. Labor Relations Board.

Here 37% replied that they favored barring communists; 47% opposed it.

Calloway Honored

One of three scholarships given by the British Trade Union Congress to American unionists for a year's study at Ruskin College, Oxford Univ., has been awarded to Ernest Calloway, education director of the CIO Transport Service Union. He will sail for England soon.

Active in the labor movement for 15 years, Calloway has been education director of the UTSEA since its formation in 1938. He is also editor of the union's official journal, Labor's Horizon, and an active member of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

Calloway began his working life at 17 as a miner and belonged to the United Mine Workers. His father was the first local union secretary and check-weighman for the UMW in the Sandy Valley-Elkhorn region of Kentucky.

While at Oxford, Calloway plans to make a study of workers' education in the British Isles.

Ga. Boss Gets 'Private Trial', Gets Off With Cost And Fine

TOMMY HOLCOMB, superintendent of the Anchor Mills, Rome, Ga., where the CIO Textile Workers have been on strike since March, pleaded guilty last week to charges of public drunkeness, assault and battery and "pointing a pistol at another."

His guilty plea was entered at a "private" hearing in the chambers of Superior Court Judge C. H. Porter, Rome. (Local unionists pointed out there may have been some connection between the "private" trial and the fact that the secretary of the Floyd County Grand Jury is Wallace Cooper, secretary-treasurer of Anchor Rome Mills.)

Holcomb paid court costs of $33.95 on the drunkenness charge, a fine of $10 and costs of $33.95 on the assault and battery charge and a fine of $50 and costs of $36.70 on the pistol pointing charge.

Holcomb was accused of being drunk on the streets of Rome while on the way to the Anchor mill, pointing a gun at a mill guard in what unionists said was an important attempt to force the guard to molest TWUA pickets, and striking his sister and knocking her to the ground upon his return home. Holcomb's brother-in-law said Holcomb threatened other members of the family.

(Two woman pickets were attacked by a mob on a railroad spur leading to Anchor Rome Mills several months ago. There have been no indictments in this case.)

Rubber Workers Speed PAC Activity; Ask Israel Aid

SUPPORT of political candidates endorsed by PAC was voted by the general executive board of the CIO Rubber Workers at a meeting in New York City.

Vice-Pres. H. R. Lloyd said the board's action carried forward a program initiated in October, providing for intensive PAC registration and educational work in the local unions, under the direction of Org. Dir. N. H. Eagle.

Since that time, our PAC work has gone forward steadily," Lloyd said. "We have held a number of PAC conferences throughout the country, sparking local union activity and we are confident that our work will be reflected at the polls in November. Candidates endorsed by the CIO-PAC can be assured they will have the full support of our union and its members."

Other actions taken by the board, said Lloyd, include:

A request to CIO Pres. Philip Murray to call a meeting of the CIO executive board to pass on the right of unions to strike under the Taft-Hartley law where contracts permit strikes;

Endorsement of full economic aid to Israel, "without strings attached," including shipment of arms to the embattled Jews;

Condemnation of the 80th Congress for "failure to pass legislation beneficial to the welfare of the American people."

SAY, MR. TAFT, DID YOU NOTE THAT FORD VOTE?

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

WORKERS in Ford plants throughout the country have voted 90% in favor of a CIO Auto Workers union shop in the largest election of this kind held since the Taft-Hartley law went into effect.

The vote was 88,943 for the union shop to 1,214 against, with 98,989 workers eligible to vote.

This was the big news that greeted UAW Pres. Walter Reuther as he returned to work early last week for the first time since he was shot and seriously wounded by an unknown assailant last April. His shattered arm was in a brace, but there was a big grin on his face.

Workers represented by UAW locals in some 50 Ford plants voted in the election. In seven states, Ford employes were not permitted to vote because of state laws forbidding the union shop.

At the River Rouge plant, Dearborn, Mich., where the UAW has its biggest Ford local—it's the largest single local of any union in the nation—all but a small minority of the 58,492 eligible workers flocked to the polls for six days, July 2-9.

Nobody knows exactly how much of the taxpayers' money was spent in proving once again how false were the claims of T-H law backers that workers were forced to belong to the union against their wishes. However, the National Labor Relations Board previously estimated that an election cost 50 cents a ballot.

In spite of the fact that more than 98% of all union shop elections held so far by the NLRB have gone for the union, the Ford Motor Co. apparently still had hopes of a defeat for the UAW in last week's election.

The company refused to permit the vote to be taken in the plants. The union stated that was an attempt to keep as many workers as possible away from the polls by making it more difficult to cast a ballot. Under a provision of T-H, employes not voting are counted as voting "no."

The union also charged that the company's pre-election wage offer of an 11-cent increase for workers earning under $1.50 an hour and 14 cents for those making more was designed to weaken the union. (After the election Ford raised the offer to 13 cents across the board plus fringe benefits.)

UAW leaders hailed the winning of the Ford election as a "magnificent victory" for the UAW, and a "slap in the face of the authors, sponsors and supporters of the vicious Taft-Hartley Act."

Thomas Thompson, president of the giant River Rouge Local 600, said that the Ford union shop election demonstrated "in no uncertain manner, how ridiculous and absurd are the union shop provisions" of the T-H law.

Shortly after the election, Reuther made a brief appearance at the wage negotiations with the company representatives, but soon walked out. "All they're doing in there is fighting theoretical windmills," he said.

He warned the company that the UAW would feel free to call a strike of the 108,000 Ford production workers if efforts to negotiate a satisfactory agreement by the time the contract expired July 15 were unsuccessful.

The union demands include a flat 14-cent increase and security benefits estimated at another 14 cents.

Klein To Petition For T-H Repeal

Rep. Arthur G. Klein has made public a letter he addressed to Chm. Fred A. Hartley, Jr., (R., N. J.) of the House Labor Committee.

In the letter, Klein urged that the subcommittee inquiry into allegations of Communist infiltration into the distributive trades in New York be dropped entirely; that the subcommittee devote its attention to the operation of the Taft-Hartley Act; and demanded that the Committee take up immediately consideration of outright repeal of T-H, at the same time serving notice he would initiate a discharge petition for a Taft-Hartley repealer bill on the first day of the special session.

School For 'White Collar' Workers

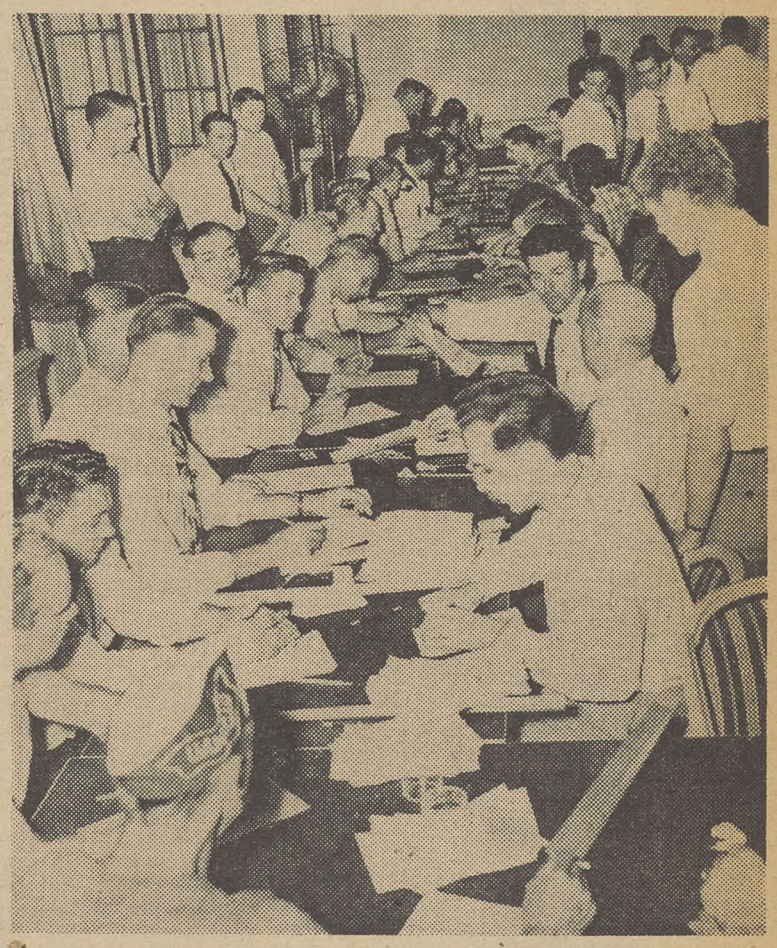
"White collar" workers from all over the country will attend this year's session of the Summer School for Office Workers July 24-Aug. 7, Ohio State University, Columbus.

The study program will center around discussions of current economic, social and political problems, focused to show how the white collar worker can be effective in his community.

George Guernsey, National CIO associate education director, will be a member of the faculty.

Students come to the school, called "White Collar Workshops," on full or partial scholarship provided by unions or other organizations in their communities.

BACK ON JOB: United Auto Workers Pres. Walter Reuther gets the news of the Ford union shop victory during his first week at work following the recent attempt on his life. He expects to regain full use of his arm. Man with the glasses is Kenneth Bannon, director of the UAW's Ford division. The union security election is the first to be held among the giant auto plants.



COUNTING BALLOTS: Tellers add up votes cast by workers at the large River Rouge Ford plant at Dearborn, Mich. Union won by a 90% margin despite the company's efforts to impede balloting. Ford refused permission to hold election on plant premises, but the union got out the vote anyway.

Still Locked Out By Cement Firm After 11 Years

A GROUP of CIO cement workers who were locked out of their jobs 11 years ago are still trying to get the NLRB to settle their case.

The lockout, affecting 171 members of Local 356 of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, occured July 16, 1937, at the Cowell Portland Cement Co. at Cowell, Calif., a company town.

"Immediately after the lockout, management organized a company union and produced a federal charter from the AFL," says Robert E. Treuhaft, attorney for the CIO group.

"Then Local 356 established picket lines which stood solid for more than one year.

"Meanwhile NLRB proceedings had been started. These dragged out until April 1942, when the Board issued an order requiring the company to reinstate all of the locked-out employes with back pay, to disestablish the company-dominated AFL union and to bargain with Local 356.

"THE company defied this order and the Board carried the case to the Circuit Court of Appeals for enforcement. Enforcement was ordered by this court and the company appealed to the U. S. Supreme Court. In October 1945 the Supreme Court affirmed the Circuit Court order.

"Early in 1946 the company was finally compelled to go through the motions of bargaining with Local 356. In the midst of the negotiations, however, the company shut down its plant and it has remained closed since.

"This case is a monument to the disappointments and delays encountered even from the old NLRB.

"Today, when employers go to the NLRB seeking injunctions or other repressive actions against bona fide unions they receive remarkably prompt and efficient service.

"Meanwhile the 171 locked-out employes, who have waited for 11 years, are asked to wait a little longer because the Board is so busy with other matters."

NLRB has "unofficially" estimated $216,943 in back pay is due the locked-out workers, Treuhaft said. The union wants NLRB to take action against the company to enforce payment.

Treuhaft, whose office is at 1440 Broadway, Oakland, Calif., is trying to locate 33 members of Local 356 who have moved from the Cowell area. They'll receive nice, fat pay checks if NLRB acts, he says.

A group of the locked-out unionists held a "grand reunion" last week and picketed the closed cement plant.

Dravo Pays Off After Lengthy Battle

IT TOOK three years to do it, but vacation money is now being paid several thousand former employes of Dravo Corp., Neville Island, Pa., who were laid off when war orders stopped.

As the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers' official paper, the Industrial Union Reporter tells the story, the Dravo plant began mass layoffs when the warship building program was cut back suddenly in April and May, 1945. At wartime peak, 6,000 were employed at Dravo. The peacetime complement is about 1,000.

The company paid accrued working time, but refused to pay vacation money which had accumulated to the credit of the workers, most of whom were members of the CIO union. The company's stand was based on the claim that the layoffs occurred before the vacation period. The union pointed out the 1945 contract provided for accrued vacation pay in the event of discharge.

The union took the case to court as a contract violation, but lost it in June 1945, and the 5,000 workers permanently laid off thought the matter ended there. However, the Schlessinger law firm in Pittsburgh kept digging. For a nominal $1 payment and a further agreement between the firm and each individual worker, the lawyers agreed to process the vacation claims.

AS a result, the Dravo Corp. has finally been "cracked," according to Carl Bloedel, executive secretary of the local, and is beginning to pay the claims. Basis of settlement, Bloedel reports, is 40 times the hourly rate for those laid off in May 1945 and 36 times for those laid off in April.

The company apparently is not contesting the claims, says Bloedel, and pays promptly if the payroll records for the period agree with the workers' claims. Nearly 6,000 former employes are involved.

Accuses Bosses of Assault

By GLORIA CAPLAN

THIS story didn't make the headlines. Chances are it won't—even when it's aired in court some time soon. And that's because "Shorty" Davis is an ordinary guy, working his head off to get a union and the men he accuses of beating him up are company officials.

Shorty—officially it's "Arthur B."—has bruises on his back and a big knot on his head—presents which he said were delivered to him personally by three of his bosses. "They really gave me the third degree," he said.

It started June 26 when the Virginia Fibre Co., Petersburg, Va., told Shorty and about 70 coworkers they were being laid off. They were to receive their final pay June 30.

Shorty said that when he went into the office to collect, Howard Coleman, the personnel manager, ahnded him a slip of paper to sign before he could get his money.

As Shorty related it in a sworn statement, "I asked Mr. Coleman what law required me to sign a paper for the money I had already worked for, and Mr. Coleman's reply was 'my law.' He then told me I couldn't get my money until I signed the paper."

Most of those laid off were active in attempts to organize a CIO Paper Workers local at the plant. Shorty was considered one of the most active.

Shorty said the paper that Coleman considered so important read:

"Reason for leaving: Permanently laid off due to production curtailment."

And below: "I hereby acknowledge that the above statements are true in every detail and acknowledge satisfactory settlement between the company and me."

There was a place for the signatures of Shorty and the foreman.

SUCH a statement, presumably, would clear the company of possible unfair labor practice charges growing out of the layoffs.

Shorty said he told Coleman he would have to see his lawyer before signing.

"I attempted to fold the paper to put it in my pocket and walk out, when Mr. Coleman jumped over the desk and grabbed me by the arm," the affidavit continued. "Mr. Coleman said, 'Damned if you will show that paper to a lawyer.'"

Later, he said, Coleman stated: "You will never get out of here alive with that paper."

Shorty replied that he intended to keep the paper "if they killed me."

He headed for the door, but his exit was blocked by Jack O'Brien, another company official. Shorty said O'Brien grabbed his right arm as Coleman called a third official, Don Clark, to help. Coleman, he asserted, grabbed his neck, twisting it from side to side. "I was afraid they were going to break my neck."

He said the three hit his hand against the door to force the paper out of it; skinned and bruised his shoulder and head and tore his shirt during the assault. Then, he said, they choked and dragged him about 20 feet into the foreman's room.

When Shorty warned he would take the matter to the union, he said O'Brien exclaimed: "God damn the union. The goddamned union doesn't have a thing to do with us."

SHORTY suspected what lay behind all this. The previous week he had seen Coleman sitting in his car parked outside a union meeting, noting the names of those who went inside. Many of those were laid off.

Shorty accused Coleman of spying on union meetings, to which he said the company official replied: "You would have never known that I was there if you had not been there also."

During the melee an employe, Julian Bowers, entered the office from the factory entrance to pay Colman some money he owed him. In an affidavit he stated he saw two men holding Davis by the arms, while Coleman had his right arm around Shorty's neck. He quickly paid his debt and left.

When the police arrived, the three were still holding Shorty. A nurse whom they had called to bandage his wounds, was also still on the scene, Shorty said.

The Paper Workers are preparing to file suit for assault and battery against the three officials. A complaint of unfair labor practices has already been filed with the NLRB by the union.

That little episode might have cowed some people into staying clear of the union from then on. But Shorty—well, here's what he told O'Brien:

"I'll mortgage my home to see that the CIO comes into Virginia Fibre so that the workers can get a square deal."

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

Reg. Dir. Ewald Sandner, Newark, N. J., reports the following results of an election at the Hurft Mfg. Co., Swedesboro, N. J.: United Retail & Wholesale Workers, Store Division, Local 262, CIO 410, AFL 82. Rep. Frank Maloney and Business Agent George Braverman were in charge.

Reg. Dir. G. George De Nucci, Columbus, Ohio, reports an NLRB election at the Columbus Dental Co., Columbus, CIO Optical & Instrument Workers 97, against 23. The organization and election were handled by CIO Field Rep. Stanley Petrosky assisted by Rep. James O'Reilly.

Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone, New Haven, Conn., reports a union shop victory at the National Folding Box Co., New Haven, Conn., Local Union 463, United Paperworkers-CIO: eligible to vote 189, for 182, against 1, void 1.

Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda, Denver, Colo., reports union security election between Local Union 477, Oil Workers International Union-CIO, and Bay Refining Co., Denver: eligible to vote 48, for 46, no 1. Election for bargaining rights among employes of the Studebaker Sales Corp., Denver: eligible to vote 7, UAW-CIO 7.

Reg. Dir. Ralph Tillotson, Erie Pa., reports an election victory at the Raymond Mfg., Co., Corry, Pa.: eligible to vote 402, UAW-CIO 180, against 177. UAW Representative Reuban Peters handled the campaign. Although the UAW only won the election by three votes, this is considered a great victory as this plant was known as a "no union" shop for many years.

Dir. of Org., George Brown, IWA-CIO, reports a union shop election at the High Sierra Pine Mills, Inc., Oroville, Calif.: yes 156, no 8.

Int'l Rep. Francis McMahon, Playthings, Jewelry & Novelty Workers-CIO, reports a union shop election at the D. M. Watkins Co., Providence, R. I.: for 64, against 10.

SOUTHERN CAMPAIGN

State Dir., William Smith, Charlotte, N. C., reports an NLRB election at the Bryant Rock and Sand Company, Neverson, N. C., United Stone and Allied Products Workers Union-CIO 55, against 23, void 2. Acording to Dir. Smith the United Stone and Allied Products Workers Union is conducting an intensive organizing drive in North Carolina at the present time.

At this writing the Democratic party is having its convention in Philadelphia. The writer was in that city one day during the convention attending to organizational matters not at the convention.

The Eisenhower boom came to naught upon the final, positive statement from the General himself that under no circumstances would he become a candidate. Associate Justice of the Supreme Court Douglas took the same position.

A number of Southern reactionaries were there on the march fighting to maintain our institutions of bigotry, undemocratic practices, racial discrimination and what have you.

CIO Field Representative Harry Jones, Toledo, Ohio, passed away suddenly Monday, July 12. He was working for the CIO in the telephone field. Brother Jones had been with the CIO off and on for a number of years. He will be buried in Esterville, Iowa, Thursday, July 15, at 2 P. M.

New Co-Op Venture

A second cooperative warehouse in Detroit similar to the Motor City Consumers Co-op Warehouse No. 1 established several months ago, is now under way, according to the Michigan CIO Council.

Following the pattern set by Warehouse No. 1, the new store will feature Co-op brand merchandise, sold at prices lower than those paid by chain stores. Profits will be distributed among consumer co-op members on a basis proportional to purchases.

GETTING A.T.&T.'s GOAT—Pickets before the main Telephone office in Denver use a novel method of telling the public of A.T.&T's attitude. Pickets are members of the Association of Communication Equipment Workers, an affiliate of the CIO Telephone Workers' Organizing Committee. The union, which refers to its picketing as a "cold strike," has been refused a wage increase by A.T.&T. All employes are continuing on their jobs. The union has a strike authorization from a membership referendum which would permit it to change from a "cold" to a "hot" one if necessary.

Chi. Negro Paper Indorses Truman

The Chicago Defender, a Negro newspaper, announced last week it was supporting Harry S. Truman for President.

The paper called on Henry Wallace to withdraw.

Vegetable Diet

HERE'S a political party that knows its onions.

The American Vegetarian Party, which claims it will receive a modest 5,000,000 votes this fall, has issued its platform.

The Vegetarians, according to Presidential Candidate Dr. John Maxwell, 85, want all this:

Pensions for all past 60; gross income tax; restoration of coinage of money to Congress; a nation-wide program of public works and housing;

Conservation of natural resources; institution of a co-operative plan, to supplement the free enterprise system, based on the Rochdale Plan; public ownership of the broadcasting industry;

Abolition of cattle cut cultivation and use of pasture lands for growing foodstuffs; opposition to food processing and demineralization of cereals and sugar products; recognition of naturopathy, hydro-therapy and chiropractic. Maxwell is a naturopath.

Symon Gould, his running mate, declared that vegetarians are completely immune to the nerve-reactions of the spiralling meat prices.

Extended research in wartime and post-war operation of management-labor production committees in industrial concerns has been undertaken by the New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations at Cornell Univ.

Southern Revolt:

'In Dixieland I'll Take My Stand'

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

POLITICS was boiling so heavily last week that it appeared for a while that Henry Wallace's group might lose the claim to the title of third party.

While Henry's followers gathered in Philadelphia to vote "ja" on a ready-made platform and nominate Wallace and Sen. Glen H. Taylor, the anti-Truman Dixie Democrats were already campaigning to unsolidify the Solid South.

Nominated at Birmingham, Ala., as standard-bearers for the Dixiecrats were Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina (famous for his confused metaphor at the Democratic convention: "I guess I'm giving you medicine you don't like to hear") and Gov. Fielding Wright, of Mississippi (of whom the Atlanta Constitution said: "It would be interesting to know if Gov. Wright knows what part the tidelands oil interests have in promoting him and his fourth party?").

THE States Rights Democrats at the Alabama gathering included delegates from Maryland, South Carolina, the District of Columbia, Virginia, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Florida, Oklahoma, Texas, Arkansas, Kentucky and Tennessee and—surprisingly — from California, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Indiana and Colorado.

Among the "notables" present: Rev. and Mrs. Gerald L. K. Smith, Alfalfa Bill Murray, Big Jim Folsom, and Frank Ellison Best (who peppered the Democratic convention in Philadelphia with literature urging that he be nominated for President and that only whites be allowed to vote).

Conspicuously absent: Gov. Earl Long, of Louisiana, and Herman Talmadge, candidate for governor in Georgia.

Gerald Smith was sad when the Dixiecrats decided that he was too hot even for them. In a statement Thurmond disavowed Smith's support, Smith, founder of the Christian Nationalist Crusade, was even sadder for "I kept myself deliberately in the background because I was anxious to do nothing that would introduce extraneous controversy into this wholesome and historic gathering."

But, he wasn't deterred. "I have called a convention for Aug. 20 and 21 in St. Louis of my followers and there I shall recommend to our leadership that they support the States' Rights principles in every state."

In a statement Thurmond denied that the issue was white supremacy. He declared he believes in improving the Negro's lot, but insisted that segregation was necessary.

In rejecting Smith's aid, he said: "We do not invite or need the support of any rabble-rouser who uses race hatred to inflame the emotions of the people.

"We are interested solely in protecting the rights of states to manage their own internal affairs."

THE Dixiecrats held their rump session in protests against the strong civil rights plank adopted over their violent objections at the regular Democratic convention.

The keynote was the first of a number of oratorical blasts at Truman and his civil rights program. Ex-Gov. Frank Dixon, of Alabama, did some fancy keynoting. He cried: "The people of the South are determined, thank God, to preserve the basic principles of democracy and to prevent the establishment of a police state, vicious as are all police states vicious, and to prevent the end of human and personal freedom throughout this land."

Dixon is a corporation lawyer.

The oratory waxed warmer and warmer. And, every orator knew how to bring a lagging audience to its feet in a shouting demonstration. All they had to do was mention the magic name "Robert E. Lee" or the magic name "Jefferson Davis." Other sure-fire cheer-getters: "a stab in the back for the South" and the playing of "Dixie" by the band.

How did one get to be a delegate? All you had to do was walk in, find yourself a seat and join in the shouting. A lot of people did.

What does the fourth—or maybe it's third—party expect to do come November? Well, listen to Sen. James Oliver Eastland (D., Miss.): "Mr. Truman won't get a single electoral vote. The people of America respect integrity and honesty and they won't vote for Harry Truman."

In 1942, Eastland was elected to the Senate with the votes of only 51,355 of Mississippi's population of 2,183,796.

One surprise of the Dixie conference was the bolt from the gathering by Gov. Ben Laney, of Arkansas. Laney, who had been a leader of Southern opposition at Philadelphia, declared:

"The spirit of obstinacy and revenge is not the spirit of the South. The hasty action at Fort Sumpter and the ultimate results, even unto this day, are well remembered. We are right in our opposition to the platform planks on civil rights. But we in the South are outnumbered. We are licking our wounds, but our spirit is not broken. We are Americans."

The crowd was belligerent against any dissension. When Brig. Gen. Herbert Holdrige, a retired officer who was an announced candidate for president at Philadelphia, rose to his feet and tried to make some unheard protest, the audience screamed "throw that Communist out." A police escort helped Holdridge out of the hall. (He is NOT a Communist.)

Odds and ends: A lady known as the "Wool Hat Woman of Georgia" did a jig on the stage during one demonstration . . . An Alabaman carried the North Carolina standard, "because someone's got to carry it" . . . Texas' banner was carried by a woman who said her father had been a Philadelphia delegate and that she had come to Birmingham to meet him. . . . 55 collegians from "Ole Miss" College kept chanting "to hell with Truman." . . . When resolutions were read, the chairman would ask: "Is there any discussion?" There never was . . . When the vote was put there never was any opposition, either. . . .

It seems that the famous British historian, Arnold Toynbee, had lectured at Birmingham Southern College recently. . . . State Sen. Lloyd Price, of Florida, told the Dixiecrats he didn't like Toynbee's designation of the South as a backward section . . . "There isn't a Negro student in the whole South who doesn't know more history than Toynbee," Price declared. "He's the favorite of the lee-be-ral, leftist, in-te-lec-tua; people in this country."

The name of Franklin Delano Roosevelt was never mentioned at the Dixiecrat convention.

G. L. K. Smith & Mrs.

Refuses To Rename Svend Godfredsen

The executive board of the CIO Packinghouse Workers has voted 8 to 5, not to reappoint Svend Godfredsen as editor of the Packinghouse Worker and educational director.

Godfredsen, at the recent UPWA convention, ran unsuccessfully for president against incumbent Ralph Helstein. Godfredsen had been editor for seven years, through four administrations. Previously, he had been editor of the Austin, Minn., Unionist for five years. UPWA Publicity Dir. Norman Dolnick will fill in temporarily as editor of the union paper.

Hits Dixiecrats

The Richmond, Va., Times-Dispatch had this to say editorially of the Dixiecrats:

"Among the characters in prominent roles there (in Birmingham) are persons with whom a self-respecting group of Southerners could scarcely afford to be associated.

"Southern reporters who attended the caucus of rebellious Dixie delegates in Philadelphia say they were made positively ashamed by the antics there. Fortunately, this state (Virginia) is not officially involved in the Confederate flagwaving and futile posturing Alabama."

Meacham, Isaacson Join ACW Staff

Stewart Meacham and William J. Isaacson, both formerly officials of the Nat'l. Labor Relations Board, have joined the national staff of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

Isaacson, who resigned as NLRB regional director for Buffalo, will become counsel for the Amalgamated on August 16.

Meacham, formerly NLRB regional director in Los Angeles, has already assumed his new duties as administrative assistant to the president of the amalgamated.

Smith Files Suit; Called Red, He Say

Gerald L. K. Smith has filed a $1,000,000 libel suit against the Wichita, Kan., Beacon Publishing Company.

Smith declared the paper had styled him a Communist.

Montana Win

SEN. JAMES E. MURRAY (D., Mont.), one of the Senate's most outstanding liberals, rolled up an impressive victory in last week's Montana Democratic primary.

SEN. MURRAY

Murray won a better than 4-to-1 victory over Dr. Harry J. McGregor and will face Tom J. Davis, Republican, in the fall.

The copper mine interests are active in the campaign against Murray. In the CIO's Voters' Guide, Murray was listed as having voted "right" on 13 of 16 key issues. On the other three, he was absent. He has the full backing of PAC.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray wired congratulations to Sen. Murray.

CIO and CARE Aid Berlin

The CIO has rush-ordered 500 CARE food packages for trade union families in blockaded Berlin.

Leo Perlis, director of the Natl. CIO Community Services Committee, announced the order had been placed with CARE as the best and swiftest means of aiding people suffering severe food shortages.

CARE will make immediate delivery of the packages from stockpiles in its Berlin warehouses. This is one of the first large scale shipments sent by a private relief agency to meet the emergency.

CARE, non-profit, government-approved organization, was founded by 26 of the nation's leading welfare agencies, including the CIO Community Services Committee.

Iowa CIO Hits Third Party

AFTER a long period of controversy, the Iowa State Industrial Union Council has voted indorsement of National CIO's policy of opposition to a third party in 1949.

The vote was 7 to 0 with two abstentions and two absentees.

Also in Iowa, the Sioux City council unanimously voted to reverse its stand. Previously, it had refused to indorse the anti-third party policy.

HITS BELL RATES

Carl Holderman, president of the New Jersey CIO, has again called upon the Public Utilities Commission to reopen the rate case of the Bell Telephone Company "in the light of the fact that the Bell System has reported that its profits for the three months ending May 31, 1948, are 127% higher than the same three-month-period of one year ago."

Union Rich? Just Take A Gander At These $ And C

By GLORIA CAPLAN

ONCE upon a time people used myths to put the kids to sleep. It worked.

So now some of the big publishers are using myths to accomplish the same thing for the public.

One of those myths goes like this:

Once upon a time there was a struggling little union. It was a nice union—nice and docile and too weak to stand on its own two feet.

But that union grew into a great big monster. (That is, it was strong enough to enforce its demands.) And at its helm sat a big fat labor leader who drained the workers of their last dime so he could roll in fabulous wealth and control an astronomical union treasury to his own shady ends. That union treasury got so large and that labor leader got so powerful that the workers had to have a Taft-Hartley Act and scores of little Taft-Hartley acts to protect them.

* * *

WELL, Life magazine made its contribution to The Myth several issues back.

Ignoring record-smashing corporation profits (which no self-respecting publisher mentions out loud), Life devoted a two-page spread to proving that labor unions are "vigorous and rich."

Rich? Let's see who's rich in this postwar setup.

Philip Murray directs an organization of 6 million members—the CIO.

He does that gratis. As the head of the CIO's largest affiliate, the Steelworkers, he draws a yearly salary of $25,000, recently upped by the union convention from $20,000. The Steelworkers has 928,670 members. Thus Murray's salary amounts to about 2½c a member.

Now, Mr. Murray bargains with some of the most powerful men in American industry. One of them, for instance, is Bethlehem Steel Corp. Pres. A. B. Homer. Mr. Homer pulled down a cool $239,399 in 1947. For bossing the corporation's 132,557 employes, he is paid at the rate of $1.80 a head.

Or looking at it another way—if Murray were paid at this rate for directing an organization seven times the size of Bethlehem, he would receive over $1½ million annually.

ANOTHER large CIO union is the Auto Workers with more than 900,000 members. UAW Pres. Walter Reuther draws $10,000 a year. Compare that with the $337,193.75 taken in last year by his industrial counterpart, General Motors Pres. C. E. Wilson.

Third largest CIO union is the Electrical Workers, with about 700,000 members. Its president, Albert Fitzgerald, is paid $6000 a year—less than 1c a member. General Electric Pres. C. E. Wilson (no kin to G. M.'s G. E.), opposite when Fitzgerald sits at the bargaining table, received $198,000 in 1947.

The "fabulous" wealth of the unions also had Life in a tizzy. Thirty-two unions for which the magazine had financial data had a combined wealth of over $287 million last year, it gasped. (Not included in the 32 were some of the nation's largest—the CIO Electrical workers, AFL Musicians, independent Intl. Association of Machinists.) That $287 million is spread out among 10,174,800 members. That's $28 per member that unions have "available for any emergency." (Enough for a little tiny emergency, anyway.)

These unions, according to T-H philosophy, have grown more powerful than industry. But the figures just don't show it.

General Motors, for instance, had a net profit of $287 million last year—more than all 32 union treasuries combined. Its net worth was over $1½ billion—sufficient for quite an emergency.

Who's rich, Mr. Luce?

Labor Prominent In ECA

MOVES to give labor a powerful voice in the European Recovery Program are being made on both sides of the Atlantic.

A month after Congress voted funds for the Economic Cooperation Administration—which handles ERP problems—the organization is rapidly setting itself up in business, both in Washington and in European capitals.

Recent developments:

● Clint Golden, former Steel Union vice-president, and Bert Jewell, AFL railway union official—who are top labor policy advisers in ECA—left for Europe for talks with union leaders there.

● An ECA policy statement, issued by Paul G. Hoffman, said the labor men would be closely consulted on solving "economic, social, technical and other problems affecting the European workers and their trade unions."

● The ECA's Public Advisory Board—of which CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey is a member—held its first meeting with Hoffman. The ECA boss called for suggestions that will speed the program and get the best possible advantage from each dollar in ECA's $5.3 billion appropriation.

● A CIO delegation of five officials headed for London to confer with spokesmen of unions in the ERP countries, and with the AFL, on means of making labor an effective factor in the recovery program.

Attending the London meeting of the ERP Trade Union Conference are David McDonald, secretary-treasurer, United Steelworkers; Michael Ross, CIO international affairs director; Victor Reuther, auto union education director; John Grogan, vice-president of the Marine & Shipbuilding Workers; and Elmer Cope of the steel union, who is now in Paris as CIO representative at headquarters of the World Federation of Trade Unions.

Harry Martin, Newspaper Guild, on leave to serve ECA in Europe as labor adviser to Averell Harriman, ECA's roving ambassador in Europe, will attend the London meeting. It will be his first major assignment in his new job.

Golden and Jewell, who have been in Norway for a European transport workers meeting, will also be present.

The London meeting is the second called by Europe's pro-ERP unions. In an interim session last month, the group moved to win for labor a formal role in the Organization for European Economic Cooperation, through which estimates of need are channeled by the various governments to ECA headquarters.

ROSS, speaking for the CIO group, said before leaving New York for London that the CIO spokesmen will seek to "exchange friendly, constructive suggestions" with the European union men.

"We—as well as many government officials — realize that the ECA cannot successfully fulfill its tasks unless European labor is given a major role in helping its development," Ross said.

"One of ECA's principal tasks is to help European workers attain full, productive employment; an opportunity to develop a decent standard of living; a chance at both economic and social security.

"Obviously, the unions can and must play a major part in insuring that the ECA's European projects work for the benefit of the common people."

The London meetings will be held on July 29-30. On August 3-5, the CIO group will meet in Paris with labor attaches from U. S. embassies on the Continent.

Silvey Named To ECA Post

Ted F. Silvey, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee, has been appointed executive assistant to the labor advisers of the Economic Cooperation Administration by ECA Director Paul G. Hoffman.

TED SILVEY

Silvey has been active in union work for the past 15 years. In addition to his position with TWOC, he is secretary of the Nat'l CIO Community Services Committee and a member of the Int'l Typographical Union.

Appointed a staff executive at national CIO headquarters in Washington in 1944, he served as liaison officer with the Government war agencies.

PAGING SENATOR CLAGHORN!

We're tellin' you, suh, that those Dixiecrats are plumb set on preservin' those good old Southern traditions.

Durned if they're goin' to have H. Truman and his bureaucratic notions about civil rights clutterin' up their lives.

No, siree!

Why, dad gum it, they'd bust up the whole dad blame Democratic Party before they'd succumb to Federal interference that might imperil their blessed states' rights.

That having been said, they held a convention of their own down in Birmingham and selected Gov. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina and Gov. Fielding Wright of Mississippi as their presidential and vice presidential candidates.

And thus the "fourth" party was born.

Some clever writers who know nothing about the South or its problems hailed the fiasco as "a rebirth of the Confederacy."

The Birmingham meeting was spoken of as a gathering of the polltaxers, the "white supremacy boys" and the Ku Kluxers.

At least one paper gave considerable attention to the fact that hate-mongering Gerald L. K. Smith attended the convention.

These things would indicate the South as a whole has done a lot of back-sliding, but such is not the case.

THERE IS MORE THAN YOU SEE

It would be a bad mistake to confuse the real trend of events in the South with the political shell game which the Dixiecrats are trying to palm off on the public as an honest battle against Federal domination of the states.

Northern and Eastern controlled corporations, whose officers are Republicans, are in this thing up to their necks—and make no mistake about it.

So are union-fighting Southern mill owners.

These groups know that adoption of a real civil rights program would encourage the growth of unionism below the Mason-Dixon Line.

And this would result in the political death of many of the lackeys who do the corporations' bidding in the legislative halls.

Actually, the future political control of the South may be at stake.

Those in power view with alarm the campaigns which have doubled the CIO membership in the region in two years and added quite a few members to the AFL rolls.

They are frightened by the growing liberal groups which are fighting the "old Southern traditions" which have kept the region from advancing economically and in the field of education.

They are worried by the growing rebellion against "outside" corporate control of the South.

DON'T FORGET HUMAN RIGHTS

We can understand and appreciate the feeling of those who are fearful that there's a trend toward creation of a powerful "super" government in Washington which will dominate and eventually control the lives of this nation's people.

Consequently we don't want to see states' rights eliminated.

But we're completely fed up with the false cries of those who shout "preservation of states' rights" every time there is a move afoot to give real meaning to the human rights supposedly guaranteed by the Constitution.

We can't go along with the Dixiecrats or any other group which seeks to use "states' rights" to perpetuate crooked, boss-ridden political machines.

And, suh, we're downright opposed to those "states righters" who fight to subjugate human rights to property rights.

A Squeeze Play For Turnip Day

In Which The Man From Missouri Attempts To Put GOP Over Barrel

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THE Man from Missouri, who has a hankering to retain his White House occupancy, has a chance to make Turnip Day as famous as Sadie Hawkins Day.

If he succeeds he will have written another chapter in the growing legend that Truman performs like a live rubber ball.

And he will have demonstrated that the people are more interested in performance than in political promises.

So, keep your eyes on Congress for the next few weeks.

IT's too early yet to tell whether Truman will be the hero or the villain of the story of the special session of the 80th Congress.

Maybe he just got angry and decided to shoot the works. He'd gone through enough to make an iron man disgusted.

The Republican-dominated Congress—with GOP leaders aided by some Democrats—had been pinning the Truman ears back with frequent regularity.

Henry Wallace and Glen Taylor took a walk on the Democrats and set up a new party of their own.

Then the Dixiecrats decided to quit the Truman squad and put a team of their own in the field.

AT this point the Man from Missouri looked bad—mighty bad. Then he mounted the Democratic convention platform and started ripping the hides off his opponents.

The Republicans, he said, had talked a good game of pool at their recent national convention, so he was going to give them a cue and see how they played.

Down in Missouri, he said, July 26 was known as Turnip Day—and on Turnip Day a special session of Congress would convene.

The idea, as he outlined it, was to let the GOP make good on its convention promises before—and not after—the election.

Smart political maneuvering? Maybe so. Maybe not.

But it caused a leading Republican to comment that "we're damned if we do and we're damned if we don't. Truman will take credit for anything done at the special session and blame us for everything that isn't done."

OUR immediate interest in the special session lies no more in its possible political consequences than in the opportunity offered to secure badly needed legislation.

Make no mistake about it. Congress is on the spot. The voters will be watching Capitol Hill closely during the next few weeks.

What is—or isn't—done will exert considerable influence in presidential, senatorial and Congressional campaigns.

Members of Congress know this is true. They know the people expect them to do something about inflation, housing and civil rights. They know the people want action on various other items which the lawmakers have been dodging or pigeonholing.

THERE is a chance, of course, that Truman merely stirred up a hornets' nest and that he'll be badly stung before it's all over.

The majority party—or dissident members of his own party—may tie him up in a net of parliamentary red tape. There's a good chance that an attempt to do so will be made.

But, regardless of how the session turns out, Truman has given the voters an "extra" chance to obtain some badly needed legislation.

And he has given the Republicans a chance to demonstrate whether there's any connection between convention promises and Congressional performance.

So, why not send your lawmakers Turnip Day "greetings," telling them, of course, how you feel about the measures in which you're interested?

NLRB LEARNS ALL ABOUT MUSKRATS

The Taft-Hartleyized NLRB has some tough problems to handle. One stickler the board solved last week resolved around whether or not muskrats are wild animals.

Three of the board's members said they are, while J. Copeland Gray maintained the beasts must be classed with domestic livestock.

This knotty problem was posed by the refusal of Steinberg & Co., a fur trapping outfit in Louisiana, to bargain with the Int'l Fur Workers-CIO, and its attempts to discourage the organization of its employes.

The trappers Steinberg employs not only have to catch the beasts, but have to keep up the muskrats' breeding grounds. Gray thought that this makes muskrats legally comparable to ordinary farm animals.

But the majority of the board held that the trappers' principal job is "to trap and ensnare muskrats which roam wild in the marshlands." Therefore, the trappers are not agricultural workers—a category whose right to organize is not recognized by federal law.

The NLRB majority noted that while muskrats are sort of looked out for by the industry which wants to make fur coats out of them, it doesn't "raise" them as farm animals are "raised." So, the board has ordered Steinberg to stop trying to prevent the organization of its employees.

Incidentally, the board's study of the muskrat runs to 102 pages.

What kind of show? You guessed it—a quiz show!

"I'm going to Europe to investigate un-American activities"

South Africa Hits Negro Unionism

An anti-labor-racism bill barring union membership under certain conditions has been prepared by the ruling party of Premier Daniel F. Malan for introduction in the Union of South Africa Parliament.

Called the "Industrial Conciliation Bill" it provides that, within 30 days of passage, all native-born Negro Africans must resign from labor unions.

After this all members of mixed unions will be subject to a $400 fine and one years' imprisonment.

The bill provides that Africans dropped from regular unions will be permitted their own "native trade unions"—except for the 80% of African workers in mining, agriculture and domestice service.

The "native trade unions" would be subject to regulations forbidding them to call strikes under any circumstances, on pain of a $2,000 fine and three years in jail.

"Native trade unions" would be forbidden to hold meetings unless government officials are present. These officials would be required to pass on the agendas of all meetings and whether a vote can be taken on any question. African union officers, too, would have to be approved by government agencies.

Mr. Smith Gets A Very Cold Shoulder

GERALD L. K. SMITH, who attached himself to the ascending tail of Huey P. Long's kite 15 years ago and later became the country's No. 1 rabble-rouser, went down to Birmingham the other day.

He—if he was up to his usual tricks—was trying to figure out some way to turn the Dixiecrats' political pow-wow to his own personal advantage.

Smith, who doesn't suffer from timidity or false modesty, got his picture and his name in the papers.

And he got a very cold shoulder from Strom Thurmond, the Dixiecrat presidential candidate.

SMITH, obviously saddened by the absence of Gov. Earl Long of Louisiana and Herman Talmadge, candidate for governor of Georgia, said:

"My old friends, Huey Long and Gene Talmadge would have been here.

"Fence-straddlers like Lister Hill (Alabama Senator) . . . will have to move quickly or they will be accused by the voters of playing for the Negro votes in the North. I prophesy his finish."

Which recalls to the writer a couple of prophesies Smith made back in December, 1945.

AT that time Smith was trying to find out whether Southerners would grab hold of the America First and Nationalist Party line which he was reeling out at Detroit with the aid of a loud voice, 31 assistants and a lot of cold cash.

He was a badly misunderstood man, he said.

"The reactionaries branded me as a crackpot and the Communists branded me as a Fascist," he declared.

He said he "faced a choice between Joe Stalin and J. P. Morgan, turned both down and chose America-Firstism instead."

He denied he was anti-Semitic but admitted he had made the statement that—

"The Jew Eddie Cantor makes his contribution to the hate promotion program by using my name and the names of other Nationalists to raise money to underwrite their Jewish-operated Gestapo organization."

THE America-Firster, who joined the isolationist movement at the beginning of the war and fought lend-lease, predicted the Nationalist Party line would sweep the country.

He said, spiritedly, that he had no use for those persons in high and low places who wanted to engage in international cooperation or form international alliances.

A little deal with England, he said, was one thing, "but you can't be an internationalist without sharing sovereignty with Russia—and who wants to share sovereignty with Russia?"

He wanted to preserve "Christian Nationalism" without domination by the Jews or any other minority group. And he wanted America First—with G. L. K. Smith leading the "crusade."

BY this time Smith was in fine fettle and in a mood to engage in a bit of prophesying for the reporters.

He thought matters over for a few seconds, leaned forward in his chair.

Then he predicted that Sidney Hillman and the CIO-PAC would "get on the GOP bandwagon" by "working out a deal with Gov. Harold E. Stassen of Minnesota."

Then he prophesied that Harry Truman, who later fought for enactment of the European Recovery Program, "will become the champion of the Nationalist Party line."

Perhaps Sen. Hill doesn't need to worry too much!

LATEST NEWS FROM THE SOCIAL WHIRL

THE wedding of Virginia Lee Wagner, 21, and George Hunt Wayerhaeuser, 22, joins two of the most powerful families in the wood industry.

Virginia's father, Corydon Wagner, has for years been a leading figure in the West Coast Lumbermen's Association, The National Lumber Manufacturer's Association, and American Forest Products Industries, the three most powerful organizations in the U. S. wood industry. Every reader of this paper knows who the Weyerhaeusers are.

The daily papers tell of the "simple but costly arrangements" for the wedding to which 1500 persons were invited. The present excessive prices of lumber make it possible, of course, for lumber barons to make a really big splash socially when their children get married.

Our wish for the young couple as they grow older and begin to have an influence on the policies of the industry is that they will be better citizens than their parents have been.

We mean using their influence for the general welfare and not just for the profits of themselves and their cozy circle of business associates.

AFPI is not doing right by the public. It is flooding our schools and press with misleading propaganda about the condition of the nation's forests.

With a great smoke screen of fine sounding words about growing more trees, it is diverting public attention from the basic issue, namely that of getting good technical forestry into all the woods where current logging operations are going on.

Nor have the Weyerhaeusers, with all their success in building the nation's largest timber owning and manufacturing combine, taken the side of the public in the broad issues of forestry for abundance.

The old folks have been and still seem to be playing a scarcity game. They apparently are satisfied to see the national and world timber shortage grow worse and worse. Indeed, they and their children are faced with a great temptation. For a general scarcity of timber is profitable to those who have timber.

So the young couple have a moral issue to face. Will they compromise with their conscience as their parents have done or will they help to provide the new, enlightened leadership which the American lumber industry so urgently needs?

Only by policies geared for abundance can freedom be preserved in the years to come. The scarcity game of the elders endangers, more than anything else, the very system of free enterprise in the wood industry which has been so bounteous to this favored young couple.

For it is scarcity, more than anything else, that leads to more and more government regulation and management of business, to more and more restriction of the freedom of both management and labor. It may be too late for the old folks to learn this truth. But we sincerely hope that these young folks will.

Dead Men Tell Tales

If the Columbia Mills, West Columbia, S. C., had its way—even the dead would have voted in an NLRB union security election.

The CIO Textile Workers discovered this when the company presented a list of 1,310 eligibles for the election. The figure was 210 more than that submitted by the union. After careful scrutiny, the names of dead men, workers who had been fired and others in hospitals were found on the company roster.

Reason for the company's padding—even with corpses—was that the Taft-Hartley machinery provides that a person not voting in a union security election is recorded as voting No. But even counting those, the company chalked up only 16 votes to 915 for the TWUA.

Eagles Hit Open Shop

The Massachusetts state convention of the Fraternal Order of Eagles went on record last week against the compulsory open shop law that is being submitted to the people of the state for a referendum vote.

The fraternity said that the purpose of the attack upon union security contracts is nothing less than the "absolute destruction of the organized labor movement."

"The Eagles, composed of all classes of citizens interested in and working for the welfare and continued prosperity of the citizenry as a whole, believe that this legislation is a step backward in industrial relations, and is against the best interest of the people of the state," the resolution said.

CONGRESS BACK-WITH PLENTY OF CHANCE TO REDEEM SELF

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

IT was plenty warm in Washington last week—but the prediction was that it would be much hotter this week.

The temperature was expected to be completely out of the weatherman's hands after the 80th Congress trooped back to Washington at the call of Pres. Truman.

In an atmosphere dripping with election-year politics, the Congress was coming back to a heaping stack of unfinished business.

Every indication pointed to a rousing call by Truman that Congress get down to business—immediately and with oomph.

On the Republican side, there were mixed reactions. But it was clear that the President's action wasn't sitting very well with Tom Dewey, the GOP's choice for a residence in the White House.

Said Herbert Brownell, Dewey's campaign manager:

"The Republican platform calls for the enactment of a program by a Republican Congress under the leadership of a Republican President.

"Obviously this cannot be done at a rump session called at a political convention for political purposes in the heat of a political campaign."

BUT CIO Pres. Philip Murray, leaving the White House after a conference to which he had been invited by Truman, told reporters that the CIO wants action from the special session.

He gave the news men a list of 12 issues of crucial importance on which the Congress should take immediate steps to enact legislation. Murray's list of demands was headed by a call for action against inflation. (An hour before he visited the White House, government statistics showed prices of 900 basic commodities had reached an all-time high.)

The CIO called for freezing of prices at "recent levels," taxation curbs on the "lust" of big corporations, and a speed-up on government anti-monopoly activities.

Murray urged passage of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner Bill, repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, a 75c minimum wage, U. S. aid to education, civil rights legislation, improved social security, a national health program, improved veterans' benefits, and removal of discrimination in the displaced persons law.

Murray also called for a farm program "geared to a full economy" and for approval of the proposed $65 million loan to the United Nations, the money to be used to construct its new New York headquarters.

The program is much like that presented to the Democratic Party platform committee two weeks ago by James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer; and in many respects resembles similar suggestions offered (without much success) to the GOP platform writers by Van A. Bittner of the United Steelworkers.

Many of these same points were mentioned by Pres. Truman in his acceptance speech at the Democratic convention. It is likely that at least several of these points will be placed squarely before the Congress when Pres. Truman addresses the special session on July 27.

MOST of the CIO proposals have been before Congress during the past several months, and have received varying degrees of attention from the GOP-controlled legislative body. Closest to passage of the major issues was the Taft-Ellender-Wagner Bill, which was approved by the Senate but was bottled in the House Rules Committee during the final days of the session.

However, a petition to bring the bill directly on the floor for debate and vote had attracted many signatures. Further stalling by the Rules Committee could easily result in a majority of the 435 Congressmen signing the petition and forcing action on the housing issue.

Anti-inflation measures were discussed, half-heartedly, by the Congress early this year, and the three weakest points in a list of 10 presented by the President were passed—without much effect on the price situation. It would be no surprise if the President offered a new anti-inflation bill for processing by the Banking & Currency Committees of House and Senate.

Taxes on corporation super-profits (which are running at the rate of $19 billion a year, highest in history) were proposed last spring, but were beaten down in each branch of Congress.

Taft-Hartley repeal bills and measures to lift the minimum wage have been pigeonholed for months in the two Labor Committees (the Senate group is headed by Taft, the House group by Hartley). CIO argued forcefully for the Thomas-McCormack Bill to improve minimum wages, and against a ripper bill proposed by Sen. Ball (R., Minn.). But there was no action of any sort in either committee.

U. S. aid to education—in the form of $300 million grants from Uncle Sam to the various states—won an easy victory in the Senate last spring. But Hartley's Labor Committee nursed it like a hen with her first egg, and it never was reported out.

ALTHOUGH both party platforms called for action on civil rights, the Congress has done nothing on this key issue. Several bills, however, are "ripe and ready" for action.

The anti-poll tax measure was passed in the House, and was approved by the Senate Rules Committee. Thus it's ready for action by the Senate—though a cut-off of debate (cloture, they call it in the Senate) would need to be voted by a two-thirds majority to head off a southern filibuster. Republicans and northern Democrats together could probably muster the necessary votes.

The anti-lynch bill was approved by Judiciary Committees in both branches and could be speedily processed if there's a will to do so. The FEPC measure—modeled on a statute in Tom Dewey's New York State and introduced by Sen. Ives (R., N. Y.), a pal of Dewey—has been buried in the Taft and Hartley Labor Committees.

With the prime opposition to the civil rights program arising from the polltax state Congressmen and Senators—who lost the battle of the platform during the Democratic convention—the stage may be set for legislation before Congress folds up and heads into the election campaign.

Social security improvements and the health program have both been kept in committee for months, and it may take some real oratorical blasting to move it out. Improved veterans' benefits may be easier, for there's not a Congressman or Senator who doesn't think twice before giving the vets a cold shoulder.

The Displaced Persons Act was passed late in the session. But severe criticism of its barriers to permitting Jews and Catholics to enter the country in the 202,000 quota set up for the next two years may bring improving amendments.

THE farm program likewise has a good chance of passage; and the $65 million loan to the United Nations to build its New York headquarters was less opposed than lost in the shuffle at the end of the Congress.

While the list of proposals is of considerable size, much of the proposed legislation has already been processed in preliminary steps by the slow-moving 80th Congress.

Charles Ross, White House press secretary, told newsmen that the President "is not asking Congress to do the impossible, or go off on a wild goose chase."

One interesting angle of the special session will be the relationship between Tom Dewey, the GOP candidate, and Sen. Taft, leader of the GOP Republicans in Congress and a badly-trounced member of the "stop Dewey" coalition at the recent Philadelphia convention.

Congress's record—sorry as it is— has been in large measure the responsibility of the Ohio Senator. But the success of Dewey's campaign may hinge on how the special session handles the business at hand.

Some observers feel that Sen. Ives—though lacking seniority—may step into a key position as Dewey's closest associate in the Congress. On the other hand, very report indicates that the progressive Democratic bloc—almost punch-drunk from continued defeats during the session—may show lots of vigor when the special session gets under way.

You'll be able to tell in another week or two.

'Life Regrets'

The following letter to the editor was printed in the July 19 issue of Life Magazine:

"I was one of the 40 or 50 Washington correspondents on the two-week Truman trip and must protest the article in the June 21 issue of Life. Your declaration that his crowds were small just isn't so. I am no Truman enthusiast; I am just disheartened by irresponsible and snide journalism.

"RICHARD L. STROUT Christian Science Monitor"

This was Life's reply:

"Life went to press before President Truman had completed half of his trip, thereby reporting only the early mistakes and mix-ups. The President gathered momentum as he progressed and by the end of the journey had thoroughly recouped his false start. Life regrets that the time element caused a one-sided picture of the tour as a whole.—ED."

KROLL HITS GOP PLATFORM; LAUDS DEMOCRATIC PLANKS

THE CIO's Political Committee feels that the "Republican platform holds no promise for the American public."

PAC feels that the Democratic platform is specific and, in two instances (Taft-Hartley repeal and civil rights) it is outstanding."

An analysis of the two platforms was issued this week by PAC Dir. Jack Kroll. Kroll declared:

"In due time, the National CIO and CIO-PAC will consider the record of the candidates and their respective parties and make their recommendations to the membership. Pending that meeting there will be no indorsement of any candidate for President or Vice-President.

"In our opinion the Republican platform holds no promise for the American public or the members of the CIO. It is a vague document, couched in the usual generalities, and is intended to mask rather than reveal the real intentions of the Republican party.

"The greed and naked lust for power that characterized the actions of the majority party in the 80th Congress are sufficient indicators of the stand of the Republican party.

"The platform adopted by the Democratic party is specific and, in two instances, is outstanding. It calls for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and it spells out a civil rights program that includes anti-poll tax, anti-lynching, anti-segregation and anti-discrimination legislation.

"The 55 delegates and alternates to the Democratic convention who are members of the CIO were active in the fight on behalf of those planks and of others which call for raising the minimum wage to 75 cents an hour, strengthening the Dept. of Labor and the social security system, and others which labor requested.

"IN OUR opinion the platforms of the Republican and Democratic parties offer the voters of America in 1948 a real choice between liberalism and reaction.

"We therefore urgently recommend that all states and congressional districts which have not as yet completed their plans for mobilizing labor's political force this year do so within the immediate future.

"Such plans must include the breakdown of all union membership lists to insure that all union members are registered and eligible to vote. They must include provisions for blockworkers to cover every home in critical areas and precinct organization to direct the activities of blockworkers.

"In those areas in which primary elections have not been held, labor's political action organization must start work immediately to insure that the best possible candidates are presented to the voters in November.

"THE present Congress is the direct result of an election in which only 34 million out of a potential 91 million voters cast their ballots. Neither the labor movement, the country nor the world can afford the repetition of such a Congress. We must secure a registration of at least 75 million to prevent such a catastrophe.

"This is the time to put into motion the political action machinery which you have been building for the past year. Planks and platforms will prove meaningless unless congressional candidates pledged to give them forthright support are elected to Congress and unless like-minded candidates for state office are successful in their election contests.

"In the immediate future the CIO will have an opportunity to judge performance again promises. We urge all PACs to keep in close contact with the national PAC office during the forthcoming special session of Congress and to make sure that they, in turn, keep their members informed of the performance of the local Congressmen during the special session.

"I am confident that if we do our job of political organization as well as we have done our job of industrial organization the people of this nation will once again be back on the high road to sound prosperity, security and peace."

HCL Is Highest Ever

As Congress convenes today for its special session, a hard, cold fact stares it in the face.

The cost of living index of the Government's Bur. of Labor Statistics has risen to the highest point in history. The index, of 900 basic commodities, is now 168.9 of the 1926 average. The year 1926 is considered to be 100. On that basis, the highest previous BLS index was May, 1920—167.2.

Another blunt reminder to Congress: The House restaurant special lunch has risen from 65c to 75c.

Nailed Down

TRUMAN C. Bradshaw of Galveston, member of Texas City Local 449, CIO Oil Workers, tells a yarn worth passing along. He writes:

No matter who you are, there's bound to be something you can do a little better than anybody else and sooner or later you will be called on to do it and you can name your own price.

Now you take the case of my Grandpa. The only thing he knew anything about in this world was the river, but he did know more about that than anybody else. He had studied it from its lowest stages to its floods for 50 years.

One day his big chance came. A construction company was building on the river bank and they wanted to know how high the water came up. They sent for Grandpa and he drove a nail in a tree and said, "It'll never come no higher than that."

That spring they had the biggest flood in history. The water rose up within half an inch of the nail.

The company asked Grandpa how much they owed him. Grandpa said, "Thirty-five dollars and fifty cents."

The clerk said, "That's lot of money for driving that nail. I'll have to have an itemized bill."

So Grandpa wrote on a piece of paper: "Driving one nail, 50c; knowing where to drive it, $35."

M Misdeeds'

employers there would seem a vast differential in the loss to employes and employers, indeed! Then too, to mention units as loss to the employers instead of dollars was smooth propaganda to irritate prospective buyers of cars who can't get them because of 'shortage,' once again blaming labor.

"You who have purchased an automobile in the past few months can more easily figure what the loss to the thousands of Chrysler employes was in contrast to the loss of the handful of Chrysler stockholders . . . their loss of 10,000 units per day.

"ANOTHER half-truth (Or, should we base it upon a smaller percentage basis?) deals with the present rise on a ton of coal. As the public should be well aware of, the miners, in their recent agreement with the coal producers' association, received not a dollar per ton raise but one dollar per day. This means the recent raise of 85c per ton to the consuming public. Assuming each man averages ten tons of coal a day, the mine owner after paying the one dollar raise will clear seven dollars and a half on each miner he has employed.

"Moral: Read carefully between the lines and do your own thinking. Take such NAM propaganda with a grain of salt. Your own power of reasoning, based on true facts, will aid tremendously in our efforts to expose the NAM for what it is . . . industrialists organized for the sole purpose of protecting their profit-bursting pocketbooks."

Will Kamp Be Freed?

WILL friends of Joe Kamp, pal of seditionists and hater of unions, try once again to free him of a contempt of Congress citation?

Kamp, who has peddled race-hate literature for years in his capacity as head of the "Constitutional Educational League" is currently out of jail. He was convicted months ago by a Federal District Court of contempt of Congress and given a four-month sentence.

Kamp's lawyers appealed. Meanwhile, his friends in Congress got busy.

On June 15, Rep. Church (R., Ill.) slipped in a House Resolution (No. 495) to withdraw the contempt citation. It would have passed on the spot except for quick thinking by Reps. Klein (D., N. Y.) and Eberharter (D., Pa.).

Both objected and the resolution was left on the calendar.

The move to quash the contempt citation comes at a time when numerous liberal and radical figures, as well as some trade union officers, have been threatened with contempt charges by Congressional committees.

Kamp's case dates from the 1944 election, when a Special House Committee to Investigate Political Expenditures conducted lengthy hearings. Kamp, who had been playing a big political game, was called as a witness. He flatly refused to name contributors to his Constitutional Educational League, which has unleashed vicious hate propaganda at various times against the CIO, the New Deal, Catholics, Jews, Negroes and other minority groups.

The committee cited Kamp for contempt and the formal charges were voted by the House. When he first came to trial in Washington's U. S. District Court, a jury disagreed. At a second trial he was convicted of contempt.

Rep. Church, the Chicago lawyer and longtime isolationist who sponsored the resolution to free Kamp of contempt charges, was a member of the House Committee whose questions Kamp refused to answer in 1944. At that time, according to observers, Church appeared to hold no hostility to the stubborn witness.

PLAN ECA WORK: CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey (right) and Paul Hoffman, ECA chief, discuss the Marshall Plan. Carey is a member of the ECA public advisory board.

From Bach To NLRB

HE LEARNED so much about law as a court reporter that most people think he knows as much as a lawyer—and maybe more.

He collects phonograph records for a hobby—with a wide range of taste, running from Bach to boogie-woogie.

He has handled more Natl. Labor Relations Board cases than any other person in America, except perhaps officials of NLRB itself.

He is John J. Brownlee, "on loan" to the CIO Organizing Committee (Southern Drive) from CIO Steelworkers, for which he has the office of assistant to the general counsel.

Brownlee's exposure to legal procedure started when he was a youth in Southern Illinois. He became a full-fledged court reporter-stenographer at 14. Some of his first court reporting was recording the legal battles involving mine workers in his area.

Brownlee's first connection with the CIO was in 1937 when Van A. Bittner, Steelworkers vice-president, retained him to help process cases in the then newly-created NLRB. Bittner was in charge of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee with a territory running from Buffalo to the West Coast and headquarters in Chicago. Then followed a period of years when the Packinghouse and Farm Equipment Workers were formed under the guiding hand of Bittner. Brownlee, of course, handled the NLRB details.

During the war, he served on the War Labor Board in Washington for two years, and later in the Philadelphia regional office.

It is only natural that when the Southern Drive was launched in June, 1946, Bittner would call for Brownlee to take over the NLRB work for the drive.

Across Brownlee's desk has passed every election petition in connection with the Southern Drive, which has resulted in doubling the CIO membership in the South.

UNDER T-H: Absence Makes "Noes" Grow Unfonder of the Union Shop

IN OKLAHOMA, the Natl. Labor Relations Board held a union security election—one of those elections where if the union wins it has the right to ask the company if it is okay not to work with scabs.

The election involved employes of the Thurston Chemical Co., West Tulsa, and the CIO Oil Workers.

The company and OWIU agreed on a voting list of 37 persons. All worked for the company.

Then, before the election, the company laid off 10 men. They scattered all over the country hunting new jobs.

The remaining 27 all voted—23 for union security, four against.

"I thought we won that election by 85%", said OWIU Dist. Dir. W. R. Wonsettler. "But the labor board says that's not right."

The labor board examiner, after conferring with Dr. Edwin A. Elliott, 16th NLRB regional director, ruled that the 10 men on the list who no longer worked for the company should count as having voted "NO."

That made the vote 23 for union security, 14 against, although only 27 ballots were cast and only 4 against union security.

Under the Taft-Hartley law, a person NOT VOTING in a union security election is counted as having voted "NO."

And under Elliott's interpretation, these 10 men are counted as voting "NO" even though they were no longer working for the company and were no longer in the vicinity of Tulsa so that they could vote.

"Now you see how clever the NAM was when they drafted the Taft-Hartley law for their stooges, Taft and Hartley, to present to the Congress," said Wonsettler. "All a company has to do to defeat us in a union security election is to lay off their employes for about a week before the vote. These employes don't show up to vote because they can't live without working somewhere else. And their absence counts as votes against us."

In this case, the labor board handed the company a 10-vote advantage. Next time it may be a hundred votes or a thousand.

"LIBERTY & JUSTICE FOR ALL": South Carolina Negroes turned out in large numbers to register after registration books were ordered reopened by Federal District Judge J. Waites Waring. Judge enjoined the State Democratic Party from excluding Negroes, insisted books "be opened to all."

Negro Vote In S.C. Ordered

THE South Carolina Democratic party has been ordered for the second time in a year to stop excluding Negroes from membership.

The order was issued last week by U. S. District Court Judge J. Waites Waring. A similar decision last year was carried by the county Democrats to the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which sustained the Judge. That case arose in Richland County.

Obviously angered by the Party's refusal to conform to his original order, Waring emphasized in court: "Let me tell you that any disobedience to the letter and spirit of this ruling will result in contempt proceedings. The parties responsible for any violation will be punished by imprisonment.

"It's a disgrace and a shame when you must come into court and ask a judge to tell you you are an American," he exclaimed.

Waring ordered the registration books, which were closed on June 22, to be reopened. Immediately Negroes flocked to the registration booths.

In granting a preliminary injunction, Waring said his order would "bar racial discrimination . . . provide that the books be opened to all parties regardless of race or religion and will fix a reasonable time for the books to be opened. The time has come when racial discrimination in political affairs must stop."

In addition, the Judge ordered the party to abolish the state Democratic Party's voters' oath. Democratic Party members were required to swear their belief in the principles of the state Democratic party; support of social and educational separation of the races; belief in the principle of states' rights and opposition to the proposed FEPC.

In 1943 and 1944 the state legislature repealed primary election laws in an effort to transform the state Democratic party into a private club with the right to choose its own membership. Thereafter Negroes were excluded.

But Waring ruled that "The primary conducted by said organization. . . is the only election where the plaintiff and other qualified electors can express a meaningful choice in selecting federal and state officers."

Welfare of Their Regions is CIO Councils' Concern

By JOHN BROPHY
CIO Director of Industrial Union Councils

(This is the last of a series of articles on the relation of CIO councils to the national CIO.)

REGIONAL planning may not sound exciting, but it's vital to the health and prosperity of workers and their communities. And it provides CIO Industrial Union Councils with important tasks.

Take the Missouri Valley program as an example. The national CIO has put considerable effort behind it. We have been concerned with working out a better plan for controlling the Missouri River than the Pick-Sloan Plan, product of the army engineers and the Reclamation Bureau.

The national CIO is so concerned with furtherance of an MVA that it has a standing Missouri Valley Committee, consisting mostly of state council officers. This committee has helped establish a regional committee for MVA, in which the AFL, the Farmers' Union, the Missouri Farmers Association and various rural electrification co-ops are also represented.

Why do the CIO and the councils in that area consider MVA so important?

The Steelworkers, for example, has paid thousands of dollars of relief to its members and their families who have been flooded out in one of the recent Missouri River floods. We want to prevent such disasters befalling our members and others in the future, and so we are interested in stopping floods, building dams and reforesting the mountain slopes in the upper valley to prevent too rapid run-off.

In attempting to protect the welfare of the people in this region, we run up against the electric power interests, who are opposed to building dams on the Missouri River if they are to generate power under Government auspices. The CIO considers it in the best interests of the small towns and farms throughout the valley that the power be produced there and distributed by Government transmission lines.

WE think this would help the ranchers and their families. Such improvement in their economic status would in turn enable them to buy more things our CIO people make in industrial plants. Moreover, most of our people in the West have lived on farms, and their families and friends are still there in many cases.

A proper system of dams on the Missouri would mean flood control, irrigation, electric power, and perhaps improved navigation. Along with it should come a program of reforestation, soil conservation and the development and distribution of fertilizers from the phosphate rock deposits. Like the Tennessee Valley, in which the rivers can be controlled from the TVA office by push buttons, the Missouri Valley's rivers should be managed as one unit.

In the Tennessee Valley, the councils must continue planning even though TVA exists in fact. They have the serious job of protecting TVA against attacks in the next Congress. These may be very serious, because the power interests and other reactionaries are out to get TVA—make no mistake about it.

BUT their job is bigger than that. They must learn the size and location of industrial plants which are coming into the valley to use the electric power. They have to worry about what kind of towns are to be built around these plants, because this is where our CIO people will spend their lives. Adequate housing, education, sanitation, medical care, recreational facilities—these local problems are all tied up with broader regional problems. For example, the pollution of rivers by sewage and industrial wastes destroys their value for recreation, kills the fish and makes boating and swimming impossible.

These conditions are not national calamities over which we have no control. We can change them by working out constructive plans and getting wide support for them.

That responsibility belongs mainly to the Industrial Union Councils. They are free to go ahead on their own for the most part. The general outlines of CIO policy are very broad, and the autonomy of our councils in these fields, as in most others, is almost unlimited.

Laud Court On Rights Record

CIVIL rights for minorities fared very well at the hands of the nine U. S. Supreme Court justices this past session. In fact, it was the most liberal on this subject of any term in recent history, according to the American Jewish Congress.

A tally by the AJC revealed that in eight out of nine cases involving group relations the High Tribunal extended constitutional guarantees. The one case in which civil rights received a setback, said AJC, was in the second Oklahoma Law School case, Fisher v. Hurst. Here the Court declined to rule that segregation by law amounts to discrimination.

Best individual record on minority rights, the analysis showed, was chalked up by Justice Murphy, who had six "broad favorable and three narrow favorable" votes in the nine. Justice Rutledge had no unfavorable votes, but abstained from voting twice on restrictive covenant cases. Justices Douglas and Black each had only one wrong vote.

Worst records belonged to Justices Reed and Jackson, who each had only one broad and two narrow favorable votes and four unfavorable. Both abstained from voting on restrictive covenants.

The cases involved exclusion of Negroes from a Mississippi jury; the anti-Japanese California Land Law; the two Oklahoma Law School cases involving a segregated school; a Michigan steamship company which denied access to a Negro; religious instruction in public schools during "released time" in Champaign, Illinois; the two restrictive covenants in housing barring Negroes, and the California Statute denying commercial fishing licenses to aliens ineligible to citizenship.

Weirton Pays And Pays

TWELVE directors of the union-hating Weirton Steel Co. have agreed to pay another $25,000 installment on a $153,125 air-conditioning unit obtained illegally under high priority during the war.

The equipment was obtained by the company under the pretext that it was to be used for war production purposes and for a company hospital in Weirton, W. Va.

But the equipment was actually used to remodel and air-condition Weirton's luxurious country club at a time when America was at war.

Board Chairman Ernest T. Weir and Pres. Thomas E. Millsop were among the 12 directors named in a suit brought by Eva Liner, a New Yorker who owns 10 shares of National Steel Corp., which owns Weirton.

One of the directors, Willmer A. Murphy, also head of the company's purchasing department, has already paid $30,000 as part of the $153,125 in fines and legal fees which the company incurred as a result of remodeling the Williams Country Club, Holidays Cove, W. Va.

Murphy admitted getting an air-conditioning unit and other scarce materials for the country club illegally under War Production Board regulations.

In 1945, the Government fined Weirton $148,125 on three counts of fraud. In addition, the company ran up a $5,000 lawyers' bill for the federal case.

Last February, Murphy paid the company $30,000. But Miss Liner said the settlement was "improper, a waste of company assets and a violation of the duties of the directors."

She brought suit against 12 directors, asking that the agreement between Murphy and the other directors be set aside or that they make up the difference between his $30,000 and the fines and legal fees.

In Common Pleas Court in Pittsburgh, Miss Liner agreed to allow the directors to pay just $25,000 more towards the bill.

When the sentence was imposed in Federal Court at Wheeling, W. Va., the company entered a plea of no defense to charges preferred by the War Production Board.

The company was charged with obtaining war-essential materials which were actually used to provide luxuries, such as chrome-plated, glass-enclosed shower baths, new sleeping quarters, a new kitchen and an air-conditioned bar for the exclusive club which is limited to about 300 top executives.

NLRB Refuses Independent's Plea To Carve Up Textile Workers

THE CIO Textile Workers, which faced the possibility of being carved into bits by numerous craft union elections under Taft-Hartley, is breathing a sigh of relief after a recent NLRB decision.

In a ruling expected to set a precedent for the industry, the Board turned down a small independent craft union's request for a separate representation election in plants under TWUA contract.

The case involved the New Bedford (Mass.) Loomfixers' Union and the New Bedford Cotton Manufacturers' Association, composed of eight companies. The loomfixer, as the name implies, repairs the loom and makes necessary adjustments for a change in style. Working with him at each section of looms are also a changer, a weaver, oiler, battery hand, cleaner, doup man and smash piecer. TWUA has a two-year contract, expiring in 1950, covering all production and maintenance employes.

Had the Loomfixers won their demand for a separate craft unit, it was feared, the way would have been paved for similar action by each of the many crafts employed in the mills.

THE Board held that the loomfixers do not comprise a separate department and are so integrated in the production line as to be "inappropriate for the purpose of collective bargaining."

A similar case is pending at the American Viscose plant in Front Royal, Va., where a small group of AFL Leadburners are seeking a separate unit among the 3000 CIO Textile employes.

Officials of TWUA said they expect a ruling similar to that in the New Bedford case when the question comes before the Board.

IN another NLRB arena there were indications that the Board may be preparing to give employers one more weapon with which to club unions.

During a hearing on the legality of the CIO Maritime Union's hiring hall in the Great Lakes, Board Member James J. Reynolds, Jr. dropped the hint that his group might take a company attorney's suggestion and permit employers to sue unions under T-H for alleged losses suffered during "illegal" strikes.

Reynolds obligingly told the lawyer: "Your suggestion is an extremely interesting one and will be considered carefully by some members of the board."

NMU Atty. Herman Rosenfeld's argument that unions have never been awarded damages for loss of dues and strength incurred by illegal discriminatory firings did not evoke similar enthusiasm from the board member.

Big Biz Sobs Over Fringe Issues

"'WHAT big fringes you have, grandma!' exclaimed Little Red Riding Hood as she looked into the new labor contract.

"'The better to conceal the wage increases, my dear,' the contract replied, leering."

Pity the poor employer, victim of a union contract. And if you don't, Modern Industry magazine, which says it's "for all management men concerned with making and marketing better products at lower cost," will shed enough pity for you and the rest of us.

In an article on July 15, leading off with the above quote, the magazine quaked at the "pitfalls" unions are laying for employers in seeking social security and other "fringe" benefits.

To Modern Industry it's a straight dollars-and-cents proposition:

A rest period, for instance, "may be worth the expense in refreshed and more productive workers. But results must be weighed against cost to reach a sound decision."

(If you can't make a profit on it, let the worker collapse. It's good business).

As for insurance programs: "Such plans as are considered now must justify themselves on other grounds (than heading off unions), such as their contribution to stability of the work force and to the kind of interest in the company that creates greater productivity."

THEN there are little cost-saving tips like this one:

"Some have succeeded in abolishing rest periods, with the reduction of the number of women in the working force. Others have eliminated formal midmorning rest or lunch periods, but permit lunch carts to go through the plant. Time lost is still about the same, but the system is more efficient and more flexible."

But, concludes MI: "Any plan is no more than a tool to bring workers, as well as foremen, into the management team. Like any tool, no fringe issue is too expensive if it pays for itself. None is cheap enough if it does a bad job."

Just oozing with concern over our welfare, we'd say.

Union Shop Won Under Tough Colo. Law; UAW Takes New GM Plant 9 To 1

BY ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Colorado Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports that a union shop election at the Coleman Motor Unit, Littleton, was won for the UAW-CIO. Of those eligible to vote, 100% voted for the union shop.

Colorado, in requiring elections for the union shop, went far beyond the Taft-Hartley Law by providing in its own Labor Peace Act that 75% of the employees must vote in favor. It is significant and gratifying to note that the CIO has won every one of its union shop elections. Nearly every one of these elections was won by 100% or near 100% votes.

Livoda also reports that the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers won a collective bargaining election at the Pioneer Tailoring Co., Denver. ACWA Natl. Rep. Earl Graham and Local 263 Sec. Nettie Sides represented the union.

* * *

Employees of the Southern California Edison Company Redondo Beach Plant voted overwhelmingly to be represented by the CIO Utility Workers, Reg. Dir. Irwin L. DeShetler reports. Reps. John Boyles, Maurice Croson, Dick Taylor and Paul Honey participated in the campaign under the direction of UWUA Clem J. Lewis.

IUMSWA Org. Dir. Thomas J. Gallagher reports his union won a union shop election at the Carpenter and Patterson Company, Boston.

The UAW won bargaining rights in an NLRB election at the Wilkening Manufacturing Company, Philadelphia, Pa., Reg. 9 Dir. Martin Gerber reports. The UAW received 348 votes against 35 for no union.

Director Gerber also reports victory over the AFL at the Farrar & Trefts Company, Buffalo, and over the IAM at the Johnson Machinery Company, Paterson, N. J.

* * *

Philadelphia Reg. Dir. George Craig reports the following victories:

For the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employees, CIO, 410; for the AFL Amalgamated Meat Cutters, 85 at the Edgar F. Hurff Co., Swedesboro, N. J. UAW, CIO, 14; Independent Employees Committee, 3 at the All Lite Metal Window Company, Bristol, Pa. For the United Rubber Workers, CIO, a 100% victory in the Gettinger Plastic Printing Co., Conshohocken, Pa., and in the same city, another victory for the Rubber Workers in the Flexton Corp.

Another General Motors plant has gone CIO in Hamilton, Ohio. The UAW received 1426 votes in an NLRB election while "no union" received only 150 votes. Reg. 2A Dir. Paul E. Miley reports that Bernard Wilberding, William Kircher, Louis Ress and Bert Foster all contributed to this fine victory. Negotiations with the company will begin immediately under the guidance of International Representative Charles E. Lewis.

This week this writer spoke in Milwaukee at the convention of the United Gas, Coke and Clemical Workers of America, CIO. In spite of being in a field dominated by some of the largest and most powerful corporations in the country, this union continues to make steady progress and show constant growth.

I was sorry to be unable to attend the Federation of Glass, Ceramic & Silica Sand Workers of America, CIO, convention in Charleston, W. Va. This is a CIO union that has made a proud record in organizing and collective bargaining.

Dr. Condon Cleared By Atomic Group

Another smear job of the House UnAmerican Activities Committee has been torn apart and been found lacking in facts.

Dr. Edward U. Condon, director of the Natl. Bur. of Standards, was cleared as reliable and loyal by the Atomic Energy Commission. AEC announced its report was based on two thorough investigations by the FBI, during which 300 people were questioned concerning Condon.

The UnAmerican Committee announced several months ago that Condon was "one of the weakest links" in the atomic security setup. But the Committee refused to hold hearings on the widely-publicized charges. Meanwhile, scientists, educators and government officials sprang to the defense of the accused official.

SOMETHING FUNNY happened just before this picture was taken. Glass Workers Pres. Joseph Froesch was receiving a new gavel presented by the host of the convention, Pres. Don Berger, when the microphone went on the bum and suddenly let out a raucous Bronx cheer as Berger spoke into it.

LARGEST LOCAL in the Federation of Glass Wokers is Toledo 9, represented by these delegates. Some 4,000 union members work in the big plate and safety glass plants of the Libbey-Owens-Ford Co. in Toledo. Delegates around the table, left to right, are: Harold Bailey, John Leach, William Akos, local president (at end of table); Charles Jones, Don Thomas and Chester Bable. Some of the delegates don't show in the picture.

BETWEEN SESSIONS: Harold Jamison (left) talks in the lobby with James Tinsley, vice-president of Local 93, Ball Bros. plant, Muncie, Ind. Jamison is a lead man supervising design and silvering at the plant of the Nurre Co., Memphis, Tenn., largest mirror concern in the country, he says. Tinsley, who is quite a bit over six feet tall, has a hot job—tending a furnace in which glass is melted. Eight furnaces at his plant run continuously 24 hours a day, seven days a week, shutting down only for repairs.

HOW ABOUT taking care of our delegates' parking tickets, Mr. Mayor? Sec.-Treas. Albert D. Viller of the W. Va. CIO Council jokingly made this proposal to Mayor Andrews. Both men addressed the Glass Workers Convention on the opening day.

CIO SEC.-TREAS. James B. Carey, main speaker at the Glass Workers Convention, greets Irving DeShetler, former president of the union. Carey urged the delegates to work as hard on political activities as they did in building their union. "America deserves a better Congress and it's up to the CIO to help get it," he said. "Instead of having so damn many lawyers, let's have some workers in Congress." DeShetler, who is now regional CIO director in Southern California, attended the convention as a local delegate.

WORKERS BEHIND GLASS

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

UNTIL I went to the Glass Workers convention last week, I never realized how many of the things we use and see all the time are made by members of the CIO Glass, Ceramic & Silica Sand Workers.

Mirrors, window panes, Ball jars and containers, plate glass windows, drinking glasses, glass bricks, bathroom and store shelves, pottery, optical glass, porcelain, those fancy colored glass-tiled store fronts and numerous other articles with a silica sand base are all products of CIO glass workers.

More than a hundred delegates representing some 45,000 members enrolled in 70 locals attended the biennial convention in Charleston, W. Va., site of the biggest window glass factory in the world.

They came from glass centers in a dozen or more states, extending from Shreveport, La., to Buffalo, N. Y., and as far west as Oklahoma. The largest local delegation, representing some 4,000 members, was from the L-O-F plate and safety glass plants in Toledo, Ohio.

Other big locals represented were from big Pittsburgh Plate Glass plants in Creighton, Pa., with more than 3,300 members, Ford City, Pa., with 2500 members, and Crystal City, Mo., 2300 members.

FROM the time Pres. Joseph Froesch opened the convention Monday to its final session, Saturday, the sessions were a model of democratic procedure. Debate from the floor was lively, continuous, and good-humored, however hot the argument raged.

Business of the convention was concerned largely with the officers' and committee reports and with discussion of proposed changes in the constitution which is throughly examined and voted on section by section every two years when the convention meets.

THE most important constitutional change at the '48 convention was the addition for the first time, of a section barring members of all subversive groups from holding office. It reads:

"Any person who is a member of the Communist, Nazi, or Fascist party, or of any subversive organization, or who believes in or who advocates the overthrow of the U. S. Government by force, violence, or any other illegal or unconstitutional means shall not be eligible for, and shall be barred from holding any elective or appointive office, including grievance men and committeemen in this Federation or in any of its local unions.

"Any person holding an elective or appointive office including grievanceman and committeeman shall sign a non-Communist affidavit."

Guest CIO speakers at the convention included CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, and Pres. John Easton and Sec.-Treas. Albert Viller, both of the West Virginia CIO Council.

GRAY-HAIRED, dark-eyed William Saas, Local 2 delegate, is a glass assembler at the Pittsburgh Plate Glass plant in Norwood, W. Va., where he has worked for years. He sorts sheets of glass according to size, quality and strength. The plant employs about 1,300 workers. With Saas is lovely Louisa Ann Mankoch, member of the 100% union of office workers at Norwood. She is a billing clerk and has been with PPG six years. It's her first and only job so far. Louisa, an only child, lives with her mother and father on a 14-acre farm and has two goats which are her pride and joy. Her father is a retired coal miner.

UAW Wins 16½-17c At Ford

WITH a strike threat staring it in the face, the Ford Motor Co. yielded to union demands, granting what UAW Pres. Walter Reuther estimated at a total hourly increase of 16½ to 17c. Accord came after a 21-hour bargaining session.

For the 116,000 CIO Auto workers at Ford the new pact will mean a 13c straight hourly raise, 3½c an hour for a broadened social seecurity program, increased shift premiums and longer vacations.

The afternoon shift differential was boosted from 5c to 7c an hour and the midnight premium from 6c to 10c.

Employes with one year's service will get 40 hours paid vacations; those with three years' service will get 60 hours, and those with five or more years' credit will receive 80 hours paid vacations.

The company agreed to re-study worker classifications and vacation rules for World War II veterans and negotiate any inequalities.

SWEET AGREEMENT—CIO Auto Workers Pres. Walter Reuther displays his satisfaction with the new Ford agreement reached after 21 straight hours of bargaining. His shattered right arm in a sling, he uses his left to shake with Ford Vice Pres. John S. Bugas.

THE agreement, unanimously accepted by the negotiating committee, will run for one year, expiring July 15, 1949, provided the membership ratifies it before Aug. 16. In yielding to the union's demands for a one-year pact, Ford became the only one of the "Big Three" auto companies to do so, General Motors and Chrysler previously signed for two years. As a result, union spokesmen said, Ford will lead off wage talks next year. It was last this year.

Reuther estimated the increases would raise employes' purchasing power by about $32 million annually. The UAW chieftain, recently wounded by a would-be assassin's bullet, took a personal hand in negotiations on his return to work two weeks ago. He remained at the bargaining table throughout the final all-day-and-all-night session.

Ford Vice-President John Bugas originally proposed that the union accept a 5c wage cut. On June 22, following settlements in the rest of the industry, the company offered an 11c boost for employes making less than $1.50 and 14c for those making above that. This was rejected by the union. It was not until Ford employes voted to strike that the deadlock was broken.

SHIP—In a final 14½-hour negotiating session, the CIO Shipbuilding workers wound up two months of stymied wage talks at Bethlehem Steel Shipyards with what was unofficially learned to be a wage increase of around 9c an hour.

The new agreement was negotiated under a wage reopening in the two year contract and represents an about-face for the company which had steadfastly refused a raise. The contract was extended for another year with provision for wage reopening in 1949. It will expire June 23, 1950.

Affecting 25,000 workers in nine East Coast yards, the settlement exceeds that reached with Todd shipyards two months ago. The Todd agreement, covering 9,000 employes in three yards, provided a 5c hourly boost. It has not yet been approved by the union's international executive board.

The Bethlehem employes will vote on accepting the settlement this week.

GLASS: For the 16,000 CIO Glass workers at the Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co. and Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. pay envelopes will be bigger by 10c an hour and there will be 2½c an hour in the till for increased social insurance benefits. Negotiations ended last week.

BREWERY: In LaCrosse, Wis., a 51-day strike by 500 CIO Brewery Workers at the G. Heileman Brewing Co. came to an end recently when the company offered a 20c hourly raise retroactive to April 1, date the strike began. (Nice work if you can get it!)

Quill Assails Daily Worker

MICHAEL QUILL, president of the CIO Transport Workers, has denounced the Daily Worker, official organ of the Communist Party, as "a scandal sheet which oozes five days a week from a cesspool of anti-labor crackpots."

Quill noted that the "Worker says it supported our fight against the company unions back in 1934 and 1935."

"This is true," Quill wrote in the TWU's Bulletin, "the paper championed our cause in such a stupid manner that thousands of our members still believe the Worker was then in the pay of the traction trusts.

"In 1937, when TWU squeezed its first contract out of New York Omnibus and 5th Ave. Coach, the peddlers of the Worker had to be forcibly removed from the front door of Transport Hall during the meeting because the gutter journalism of the Worker was so distasteful to our bus men that if allowed to continue its sale it would have served the bosses' first and final purpose—to wreck our union.

"I do not owe any leadership in TWU to any individual or group. I have held this leadership through the will of the rank and file of this great organization, and I have owed no allegiance either in the past or now to the crackpot leadership of the Communist Party."

Quill resigned as president of the Greater New York City CIO Council because that body refused to adhere to CIO policy and oppose a third party in 1948. Quill charged the council was Communist-dominated.

WHO OWNS CORPORATIONS? ONLY ONE PERSON IN 20

WHO owns and controls the corporations of America?

A small, very small segment of the public, the CIO Economic Outlook points out in its current issue.

Six million people—about one person in 20—own corporation stock, the Outlook, published by the CIO Dept. of Research & Education, points out.

Most of these six million own "only a few shares." A handful own a "great deal of stock."

Corporations are "supposed to be controlled by all the stockholders; but in practice the handful who own the large blocks of stock have complete control," the magazine said.

American Telephone & Telegraph is a prime example cited by the Outlook. That mythical character, the "average stockholder" owns about 30 shares of the stock. (Each share is worth about $150.) But the 30 largest owners have an average of about 35,000 shares apiece. Those 30 each control about $2,250,000 worth of stock.

"The huge wealth that a relatively few people have is certainly startling," the Outlook commented. "But the control over our economy by these few people is many times greater than their ownership. By controlling the major banking, insurance and industrial corporations of America, they virtually control the fate of our economy."

MOST stockholders' votes are cast by "proxy"—that is, the voting right is turned over by the owner to some other person.

"With this 'proxy-democracy', only the wealthiest of stockholders can ever hope to contest a board of directors' election," and such contests as develop are almost always among the directors themselves, the Outlook said.

The real power to control corporate monopoly lies in the Congress, it added.

"Will you vote for Congressmen who killed OPA because you own one share of stock in the XYZ Corporation?" the Outlook asks, "Or will you join the millions of farmers, workers, professionals and small businessmen in establishing democratic control of our economy?"

Vol. 11 WASHINGTON, D. C., AUGUST 2, 1948 82 No. 30

HIGH PRICES and the housing shortage created problems which Congress should seek to solve at once, President Truman (shown addressing joint session) told Congress near the beginning of its special session. Sensing congressional reluctance to act on the President's program, voters throughout the country sent letters and telegrams to Washington lawmakers, urging them to pass anti-inflation and housing bills and enact other portions of Truman's program. CIO leaders requested members to communicate with senators and congressmen, telling them the folks back home want action, not stalling. All warned their congressmen that Nov. 2 is not far off.

Third Party:

Do, Re, Mi, Fa, So, La, Ti, Do!

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

ALL the shouting of the political conventions is over.

But, the singing isn't over yet.

For the Wallace Third-New-Progressive Party hopes to sing you to the polls. By Nov. 2, in case you get near Wallace rallies, you'll have heard hundreds or maybe thousands of times a song in which the singers every once in a while scream something that sounds like "eep, eep" or "beep, beep".

The whole concoction is known as "The Same Old Merry-Go-Round"—a sort of a combination of the "Woody Woodpecker's Song" and a drunk trying to sing the "Music Goes 'Round and 'Round."

As one irreverent member of the working press put it, paraphrasing the great musical comedy team of Clark and McCullough: "These Wallace people don't sing good, but they certainly sing loud."

Speaking of the working press, the reporters at the Wallace convention—most of them members of the CIO American Newspaper Guild—showed they were in accord with the ANG convention which voted unanimously to follow CIO policy and reject Wallace's "Crusade." The night of the Wallace acceptance speech, while the "pitch" was being made for contributions to the Third-New-Progressive Party, someone did some collecting in the press box. The result: only $71 from among about 600 reporters.

With the Wallace convention, four more or less major parties had completed their selections and platforms.

The four major parties included three whose main aim was to defeat Harry S. Truman. Two of them had been set up for that purpose and obviously were intending to bend every effort to see that the 81st Congress would be so reactionary that the 80th—the "awful 80th"— would seem in retrospect like a group of Trotzkyites.

These two parties—an incongruous combination if there ever was one—are the Wallace Third-New-Progressive Party and the Dixiecrats.

For a while, the Wallaceites gave the impression they might call their outfit the New Party. But, they finally, as had been previously expected, decided on Progressive Party. Historians immediately recalled that three previous—at least three—Progressive parties had fallen by the wayside after starting off bravely. They were the Teddy Roosevelt Bull Mooses, the Robert M. LaFollette, Sr., group of 1924 and the Robert M. LaFollette, Jr., Wisconsin Party of the '30s and early 40s.

The Wallaceites called themselves the party of "Peace, Freedom and Abundance," but it quickly developed that the Peace was a unilateral peace to be written by Russia, that the Freedom was for the Communist Party and that the Abundance would in some strange occult fashion flow from the other two.

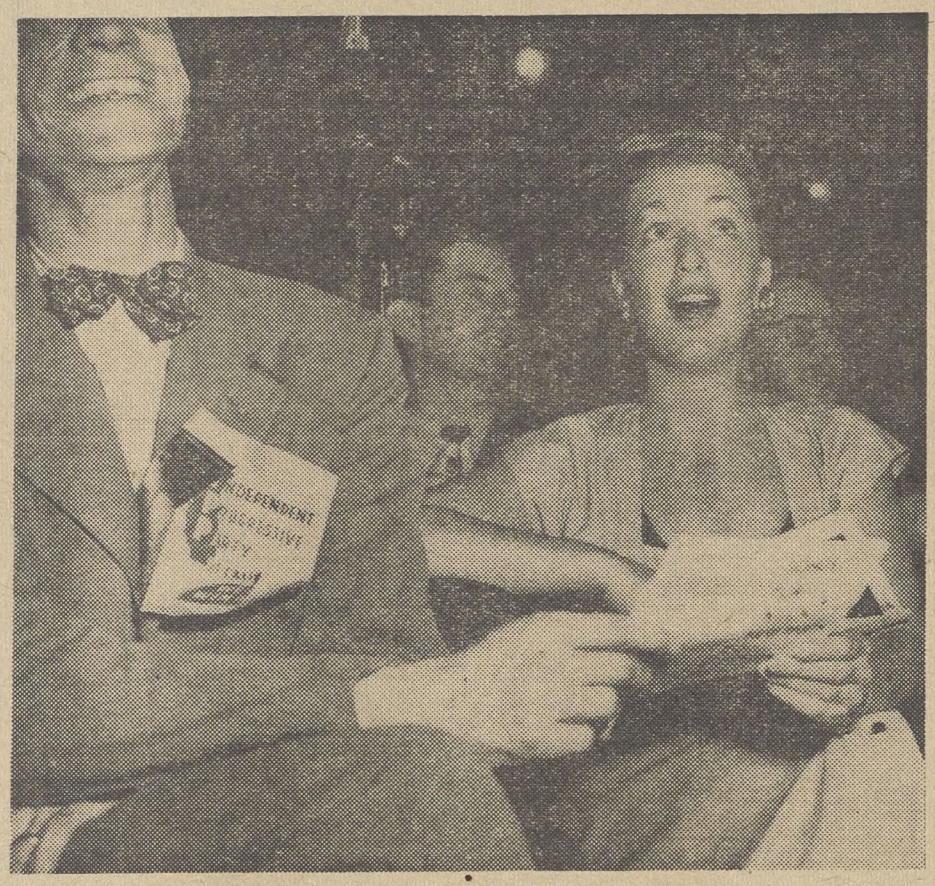
THE party modestly announced it is the "political heirs of Jefferson, Jackson and Lincoln—of Frederick Douglass, Altgeld and Debs—of "Fighting Bob" LaFollette, George Norris and Franklin Roosevelt."

Most of those men have been dead too long for any of their followers to be still around. But, FDR has been dead only three years. To quote Frank Kingdon, who resigned as co-chairman of the Progressive Citizens of America in protest against that body's endorsement of Wallace:

"I missed the companions of other days who carried on the fight for FDR. No member of Roosevelt's inner circle of intimate advisers was there. This was another crowd. Some were pure in heart . . . the nature boys of politics.

"The others were not pure in heart. I've seen them before, doggedly working to turn whatever they touch into instruments for the Communist crusade. They are in control."

Let's get back to the Russian issue, which after all, was the keystone of the convention. Some—a very few—of the "pure in heart" were pretty worried about the general public impression that the Wallace movement was a tail to the Communist kite. These worried folk tried to remedy that by an amendment to the peace plank of the platform.



"It Don't Mean a Thing If You Ain't Got That Sing"

That platform, by the way, was just about the longest ever issued. It drew this further irreverent crack from the press section: "For Pete's sake, don't mention the kitchen sink, or they'll put that in, too."

A Vermont delegate moved the addition of these mild words, "It is not our intention to give a blanket indorsement to the foreign policy of any nation." He said that no one could interpret his amendment as "red-baiting" or even retreat from his belief that America wasn't handling the Russian-Berlin situation properly.

MEMBERS of the platform committee opposed his amendment on the grounds that this language of the platform fully covered the point: "responsibility for ending the tragic prospect of war is a joint responsibility of the Soviet Union and the United States."

The Vermonter, however, said "any one reading the platform would be justified in drawing the conclusion we indorse Soviet foreign policy 100%."

The amendment was roundly defeated.

Except for parts of Henry Wallace's acceptance speech and most of Glen Taylor's ditto, the speeches at the convention sounded as if the ghost writers must have lain down on the job. There was a tiresome repetition of "We-must-return-to-the-principle-of-Jefferson-Lincoln-and-Franklin Delano Roosevelt"—which catch phrase never failed to bring on a "spontaneous" demonstration—and charges that the ills of the world are all apparently due to one brokerage house: Dillon, Reed & Co. (That was a sure-fire way to bring on a round of "spontaneous" boos.)

Reason for mentioning Dillon, Reed was because James Forrestal, now Secretary of Defense, came from Dillon, Reed, of which he used to be president. (No one mentioned the fact that Pres. Roosevelt thought so much of Forrestal that he named him Undersecretary of Navy in 1940.)

Another hot issue—really a part of the Russian issue—was a denunciation of the recent indictment and arrest of U. S. Communist leaders.

Rep. Vito Marcantonio (D., ALP) was a typical speaker on this issue. But, he always became so wrought up that it was impossible for most of the press to make out what he was saying.

The Young Progressives, who met the day after the party did—most were delegates to both, or at least they looked like the same people—called for "the right of every political party to express its position without intimidation or fear."

The youths then added that it should be made clear "that the Young Progressives would deny the Fascist groups in this country any occasion to infringe on the liberties or freedom of any American citizen."

Wallace was in perhaps the best voice of his career, though he had no change of pace. His acceptance speech—delivered at Philadelphia's big league baseball park on a delightfully cool evening—was sort of an anti-climax. He repeated everything he had said before.

When he urged that the Americans evacuate military personnel from Berlin and leave that city to the Russians, he caught his audience and the many cheer leaders napping. But, he was interrupted many a time by loud cheers.

MANY eyebrows were raised in the press sections when, in reading over the advance to Wallace's speech, reporters came on these words:

"The cold war has already brought death to millions of Americans."

Those words caused momentary excitement. Had there really been a war going on?

But, the excitement was quickly over. Wallace then gave the reason for his statement: "Look at your friends. Read the papers. Here are casualty lists. Millions—sick of cancer, tuberculosis, pellagra, heart disease and polio. Together, we must rise up and write an end to the casualty lists of the cold war. This is the American way—to conquer the forces of nature, not our fellow man."

Reporters looked at each other in astonishment.

Another startling moment was when Taylor at the end of his acceptance speech, brought up his wife, kids and brother and together they sang—so 'elp me—"I Love You As I Never Loved Before."

Incidentally, the Wallace publicity staff has reversed the meaning of the word "streamlined". They announced the convention would be "streamlined"—then listed the number of delegates, about 2500—approximately twice the Democratic total—and the length of the convention, three days—exactly as long as the Democrats and two days longer than the Dixiecrats.

In addition to the pro-Russian and defend-Communists planks, the platform ranged from demand for repeal of Taft-Hartley to support for "the aspirations for unified homelands of traditionally oppressed and dispersed people as the Irish (sure and that's foine) and Armenians. The plank originally included the Macedonians, but that was eliminated the same day the newspapers carried a story that Marshal Tito was for the Macedonians.

The platform did not go as far as Wallace on the question of the Equal Rights for Women Amendment, which is opposed generally by labor because it would do away with many important protections.

Wallace sent the Natl. Women's Party a letter indorsing the amendment. The platform (in rather general language) favored improvements for women.

One lady, testifying for her favorite amendment, got somewhat mixed up and exclaimed: "All mothers aren't women."

REPORTERS who covered the testimony before the platform committee said it was made rather dull by the long procession of persons representing obscure organizations, each with its own special cause. The newspapermen swear that they noticed one young man make several appearances for several organizations and then later saw him in the ante-room running a mimeograph machine.

One organization which didn't get a chance to testify was one which calls itself the Christian Communists. Its representative, Dale E. Linebaugh, York, Pa., told reporters: "I only wanted to say government isn't necessary, that all we need is trust in God. We should take U. S. troops out of Germany and turn it over to the Salvation Army."

As you must have known or guessed, the Daily Worker just loved the entire Wallace convention.

THIS AND THAT: The Wallace people were lucky on hotels . . . the Philadelphia inns had generously doubled their rates for the old parties . . . But, for the New Party, rates were back to normal . . . The Wallace cheerleaders kept a close eye on the television cameras, led demonstrations—up on your feet boys!—only in the sections where the camera was focussed . . .

Philadelphia was rather cool to the whole thing, having sat through both the Republican and Democratic shows . . . proprietors, almost all of whom are Democrats and grateful to that party for repealing prohibition, say the Wallaceites did almost no drinking. Of course, the Republicans and Democrats didn't pub crawl much either . . . Note to the New York Star: "A Dollar Ain't a Dollar Any More' was written several years back for PAC—not for the Progressive Party.

A suggestion for a Wallace campaign song:

"Sing Something Simple."

Or—

"I'd rather write a Nation's songs than be it's President."

Bedfellows!

Gerald L. K. Smith preaches hate against Catholics. He preaches hate against Jews. He preaches hate against Negroes. He preaches hate against everything except Fascism.

Last week, Elinor Gimbel, leader of the Wallace women's division, held a press conference. She was asked if the Wallaceites would accept Communist support. She replied: "We will welcome anyone who says he is for our platform." A reporter then asked: "Would you accept Gerald L. K. Smith if he said he was for your platform?" Mrs. Gimbel replied: "I don't see how we could keep him out."

Note: Smith was too hot even for the Dixiecrats, who rejected his offer of help.

Talk, Talk, Talk, Talk, Talk, Talk, Talk

BY HENRY C. FLEISHER

DON'T hold your breath waiting for the GOP-controlled Congress to pass important legislation at this special session. You may wind up blue in the face and cold in the body.

Long before this issue of the CIO News went to press, the Senate was tied up in a southern polltaxers' filibuster against the anti-polltax bill. The GOP leadership had quickly brought the polltax issue to the floor, knowing that it was certain to be received by a talkathon.

The filibuster started on a motion made by Sen. Wherry (R., Nebr.)—the GOP "whip" in the Senate—to consider the bill. If the Senate ever gets around to voting to consider the bill—which has already passed the House—there'll be further debate on the bill itself.

Republican leaders in the Senate were obviously anxious to cooperate with the southern marathon talkers. During the first day's "debate" the GOP leadership gave all the courtesy of the floor to the defenders of the poll-tax, and they showed no indication of pressing for cloture—the method through which the Senate can check debate.

Meanwhile, leaders of both the House and Senate killed time taking potshots at President Truman's urgent plea that Congress restore price controls and rationing, and enact the Taft-Ellender-Wagner Housing bill.

REP. DIRKSEN (R., Ill.), speaking for the GOP over a radio network, claimed that private industry can build more homes—"if it had a chance"—than any government program.

But he didn't explain how slums would be removed or low-rent homes would be built under such a set-up, since private industry had done little along those lines since the war's end.

With the T-E-W bill locked up in the House Rules Committee, about the only chance for action lies in the success of a discharge petition set up by Rep. Helen Douglas (D., Calif.) months ago.

The petition is still 63 short of the 218 Congressional signatures necessary to bypass the Rules Committee and bring the bill to the floor. An intensive campaign is being waged to pressure the remaining 63 to place their John Hancocks on the petition.

Biggest Republican roar, however, was reserved for the President's anti-inflation bill. It would roll prices back to last November's levels, start a program to ration scarce goods, stiffen the present rent control bill, and apply controls on a number of credit and financial processes.

The President also offered a wage-control formula—which CIO has opposed—that would bar any price adjustments by employers who have failed to get U. S. approval of wage increases. CIO has pointed out that wages have not been the cause of the inflation, that wages lag far behind prices and profits, and that no controls are necessary.

To the Republicans, who have been trying to alibi the fast-running increase in living costs, the President's anti-inflation proposals were popular as a snale at a Sunday school picnic.

SEN. TAFT rose as expected to the occasion, yelled "police state."

Rep. Halleck (R., Ind.), a leading member of the House, screamed "political expediency."

Sen. Wherry (R., Nebr.)—who was miffed two years ago because he failed to get enough publicity for helping kill OPA—growled about "emotional appeals."

One of the few Republicans to realize that sky-rocketing prices can hurt a lot of people was Sen. Tobey (R., N. H.). He said:

"If those who produce, manufacture and distribute goods cannot find that remedy through the use of voluntary means, the American people, acting through their elected representatives, must search for a different and more effective course. The remedy must not be a bread-line depression."

But Sen. Tobey is one Republican out of 51. The great majority of his party colleagues—and some Southern Democrats—seem determined to sit out the special session.

Unless there's a major surprise, Congress is going to sit on its hands for a few weeks, then go home.

They're hoping you'll forget about it by November.

Food Too Expensive? Try GOP Plank Steak

HAVING TROUBLE with your summer menus? High prices getting you down? Finding it difficult to work up a varied diet for your loved ones?

Don't despair! If food's too expensive, why not try substitutes? Why not sample this delightful Congressional special?

Grundy political plums, with sugared Dewey window dressing; fishy promises in season; barreled pork, with gravy in the right places; Dixie-style civil rights, chopped fine; Knutsoned breaded tax cutlets for workers, sprinkled with crumbs; buttered Republican campaign promises that melt in your mouth; meaningless GOP plank steak, garnished with 1944 platform leftovers.

Also, Taber-sliced appropriations; minced social security benefits, served with half-baked enthusiasm; Upper House rolls, with enriched Senatorial campaign dough; special session jam, made with Republican sour grapes; hard-boiled Wolcott resistance to decent housing; tossed profit-steal salad, with tideland oil dressing; jellied backbone without starch; polltax filibuster ham, and just plain old applesauce.

Union Political Spending Ban Upheld By Court

ANOTHER test of the Taft-Hartley ban on union spending in political campaigns is on its way to the courts.

A. U. S. district judge in Connecticut ruled that officers of a Hartford local of the AFL painters union must stand trial for violation of the law.

Their "crime": buying radio time and page advertisements in Hartford daily papers to voice labor's opposition to the presidential candidacy of Sen. Robert Taft. The AFL also promised to oppose Connecticut Congressmen who voted for the T-H law.

The case may test a phase of the Taft-Hartley political ban not covered by the Supreme Court decision in the CIO News case. In that ruling, the Court said that unions may spend money as they see fit on regularly-appearing union papers which carry political articles, editorials or endorsements.

The Supreme Court did not rule, however, on the constitutionality of the T-H political section.

Last week Judge Carroll C. Hincks of U. S. Court in Connecticut turned down the AFL's plea that the indictment against the painters' union be thrown out as unconstitutional. In ordering the case to trial, the judge held that the T-H political spending ban "was well within the limits of federal legislative power."

It is expected that the trial will start in the next couple of weeks.

Judge Hincks claimed that the AFL case differs from the CIO News case because the "union monies were expended for publication of expressions of political advocacy intended to affect the result of the election and the action of the (state) convention in an established newspaper of general circulation and for a broadcast by a commercial radio station."

The judge said he felt that this type of activity was exactly what Congress was trying to forbid in the T-H law's ban on political spending.

Arthur Goldberg, CIO general counsel, said that if the AFL union officials are convicted in the district court, CIO will file a "friend of the court" brief when the case is appealed to the Circuit Court of Appeals.

The CIO News case involved CIO Pres. Murray's endorsement of Judge Ed Garmatz in a Baltimore special Congressional election last summer.

Tulsa TWU Local Backs CIO Policies

Eleven hundred American airline Workers in Tulsa, Okla., members of Local 514 of the CIO Transport Workers Union voted unanimously last week against the Third Party and for the policies of National CIO and the Transport Workers Union, after an address by TWU Pres. Michael J. Quill.

The meeting was reported by TWU as the largest ever held by the TWU in Tulsa and the three hour debate took place while the thermometer hovered at 102 degrees.

After a 40-minute plea by President Quill to permit Fred Swick to continue as International Representative in Tulsa, the membership of Local 514 voted to keep him when Swick made a statement to the effect that he would not speak in the name of any section of the Transport Workers Union in his personal support for the Third Party.

Believe Prices Are High? You're A Politician!

HENRY WALLACE and the GOP say it's all politics.

But, Pres. Truman's attempt to tackle the inflation problem, politics or no politics, is certainly buttressed by statistics.

Since Nov., 1947—which is the date to which Truman would roll back prices, the cost of living has risen 4.1%, according to the cautious Bur. of Labor Statistics.

Quietly, but resolutely, the American housewife was forced again to resort to her best weapon short of price controls—a buyer's strike.

Meat? Many moderate and low-income families were eating it only one day a week. Fish and vegetable and egg dishes were back on the menu.

The NAM, which predicted that prices would "find their levels" if OPA were killed, solemnly warned that a return of price controls would bring back the black market. Unions and civic organizations pledged themselves to fight against return of the black market, but NAM's warning meant that big business wouldn't lift a finger to protect the people.

So, prices soared. The BLS index of 900 basic items—food, apparel, rent, fuel, electricity—was at a record all-time high of 171.7, up about 28% since June, 1946, when the NAM's Congress killed OPA.

And food! The item which takes most of your dough has risen about 45% since OPA.

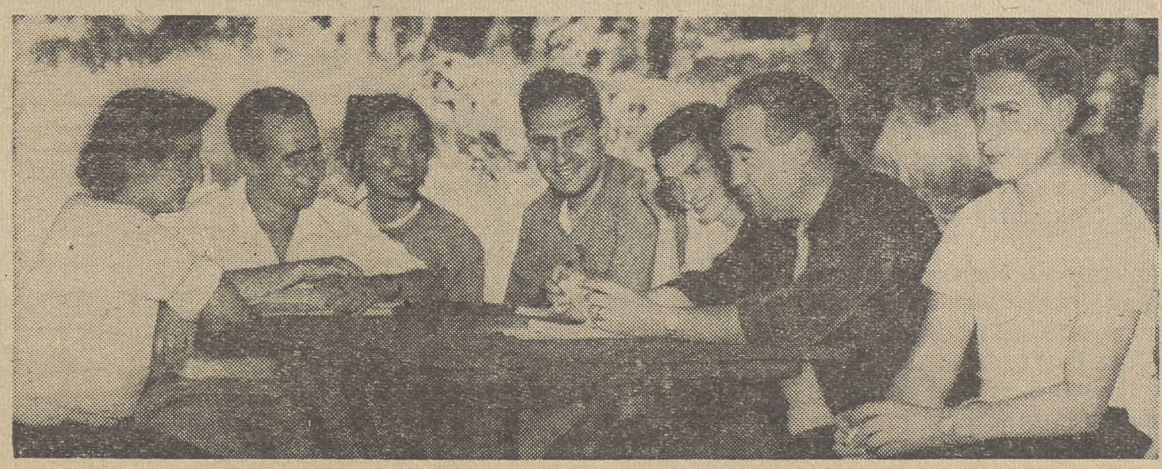
N. J. Council Offers Course on PAC

Preparing students for more effective PAC work will be one of the aims of the labor school which the New Jersey CIO Council will conduct at Stevens Camp Institute in Johnsonburg, N. J., Sept. 7-12.

The three courses offered will be political action, education leadership and public speaking, it was announced by Education Director Harry Kranz.

Instructors and workshop leaders will be drawn from the following: George Guernsey, assistant director, National CIO education department; August Claessens, Rand School professor; Al Barkan, TWUA political director; Stephen J. Moran, State PAC director; Norman Dorfman, Rutgers labor instructor; Herman Schnurer, political lecturer, Antioch College; Sam Jacobs, UAW economist and pamphleteer; Joe Glazer, labor ballad singer.



VALUABLE EXPERIENCE: Preparing for future careers in union education and research work, six college students are working their way through the FDR-CIO Labor Center's leadership training institutes by acting as staff assistants. They are, l. to r.: Sally Heller, Cornell Univ.; Melvin Painter, Brooklyn College; Su Fujii, Bennington College; Roy Helfgott, City College of New York; his wife, Gloria, Cooper Union; Bill Kemsley, camp director, and Herb Oshansky, Columbia Univ.

'UNIONS ARE TO BLAME'

You go into a store to buy something that ought to cost you a buck and the clerk charges you $1.50 for it.

You complain, and the clerk, who probably doesn't have the slightest idea he's not telling you the truth, says:

"Well, it wouldn't be so high if it weren't for the unions."

At that point it's time for you to declare "Now, look here, bud" or something more polite and tell the clerk a bit about the economic facts of life.

If a lot of unionists don't do that there's a good chance that a very clever campaign launched by business and industry will succeed.

Objective of the campaign is to saddle the trade union movement with the blame for inflation.

This would mean shifting public attention from the exorbitant profits of business and industry and focusing it on the wage increases which unions have obtained for their members.

And the wage increases would be pictured as the cause and not the result of price hikes.

It's a neat trick if they can get by with it—and they'll get by with it unless the unions do something—and quick—to block them.

Facts—hard, cold facts which can be obtained from the CIO and from various union research departments—are the best weapons with which to combat the campaign.

PART OF DRIVE AGAINST UNIONS

The little "the unions are to blame" gimmick is part of a widespread campaign to discredit unions and to make them weak and ineffective. It could prove as effective a weapon as the Taft-Hartley Act, so don't undersell it.

The average non-unionist doesn't understand or appreciate the bad features of T-H.

But he understands and appreciates each new price increase and gets hot under the collar every time one is put into effect.

Suppose he can be propagandized into believing that the unions—which the T-H Act weakens—are responsible for these price increases.

Suppose he can be convinced that today's outrageously high profits are a natural result of inflation and not its major cause.

And suppose he can be made to believe that these profits are not unreasonably high.

Wouldn't he then be likely to throw his political support behind those who want to place further curbs on the union? Of course he would—and you couldn't blame him much if he did.

BATTLE HAS JUST BEGUN

A large group of business and industrial leaders is out to smash the unions, and statements to the contrary simply don't make sense in the light of what's been going on over the country lately.

Oh, sure, they'd be willing to tolerate worker organizations called "unions" if these organizations "behaved themselves" and didn't ask for anything management wasn't willing to grant.

They say—in print, at least—that they're in favor of "responsible" unions but when they define "responsible" you learn that what they really want is a union set-up without power to enforce just demands.

The battle against unions, which nearly halted during the war, has just begun anew. The objective is the same as ever, but some of the techniques are new.

One of these is trying to sell the public the idea that the unions are to blame for inflation.

Joe Is Hot Under The Collar

And So Are Reluctant Congressmen, But For Entirely Different Reasons

By ALLAN L. SWIM

JOE is one of those ordinary guys the orators sometimes refer to as "the very salt of the earth."

He lives with his wife and two kids in a trailer camp out in the Mid-West.

He puts in 40 hours a week in a factory and belongs to a union.

Trailer life doesn't bother him too much right now but he shivers when he thinks about putting in another winter "on wheels."

Joe has seriously considered on several occasions trying to trade some of his war medals for a supply of juicy steak.

Joe's savings are gone and he's flat broke by the time payday rolls around.

And he's hot under the collar.

UP ON Capitol Hill in Washington is a group of men who don't live in trailers and don't worry too much about how cold the winter winds will be.

They eat juicy steak every now and then if they want it and most of them still have a wad of folding money in their pockets when payday rolls around.

Many of them are not rich, but they receive about $6 every time Joe gets $1.

They work in air-conditioned quarters and they live in nice houses and apartments.

But they're hot under the collar, too.

JOE'S burned up about the false bill of goods which the NAM and its political friends sold the country while they were getting rid of price control.

Joe figured it was a phony at the time OPA was put on the skids and now he knows for sure.

He knows because his savings are gone and he's having an increasingly hard time making ends meet.

And Joe sometimes gets a bit profane when talking about housing. "Why, damn it," he says, "I know about the housing shortage first hand. Haven't I been living in a trailer since I got out of the Army?"

Joe isn't a happy man.

THE men on Capitol Hill aren't happy men either. They're downright disgruntled and they're telling the world about it.

They're angry about a variety of things.

There's one group—the group which understands Joe's problems—which feels like batting the controlling group in Congress over the head because of the way the GOP boys have ignored the people's needs.

There's a group which would like to ship Harry Truman to Siam because he advocated a strong civil rights program.

But the ones who are hottest under the collar are those who are shouting loudest that the special session resulted from Truman's need to play politics and not from a need for legislation.

JOE knows a little—but not too much — about politics and, frankly, he doesn't give a darn whether the special session was politically inspired.

He wants prices brought in line. He wants a decent place to live. He favors the things Truman proposed in his message to Congress.

He's getting pretty skeptical about the oft-repeated statement that senators and congressmen "serve the will of the people."

He knows they're serving somebody but he's sure the beneficiaries aren't the people he knows and with whom he works.

Oh, sure, he says, there are some really swell guys in Congress, but they haven't been running the show lately.

Joe has a sneaking suspicion that he and a lot of his friends are going to do some politickin' of their own between now and Nov. 2.

IT'S hot—mighty hot—in Washington these days—and it's sizzling in the plant in which Joe puts in his 40 hours.

Joe thinks that congressmen and senators ought to be able to stand the weather if he can.

He's not a contented man by any means but he's happier than he was a few weeks ago. He sat down on the grass in front of his trailer one evening and did some hard figuring.

He figured that his vote would count for as much in the November elections as the vote of the richest corporation executive.

And he figured there are a lot more Joes than corporation officials.

Ohio Republicans Ignore Cities' Plight

HOW the financial plight of Ohio cities was ignored by the special session of the state's legislature was reported in the latest issue of the Ohio CIO Council's legislative news letter:

The second special session of the Ohio Legislature, called for July 22, lasted 9 hours and 59 minutes, just long enough for the Republican majority to ram through Governor Herbert's program, ride rough-shod over all attempts to aid the cities, bury all attempts to get additional state aid for the blind and aged, and spell out protection demanded by retail merchants before the sales tax cut could be passed.

Headlines quoting Republican mayors as calling Herbert a "double-crosser" highlighted the special session, labeled, by many of the state's editorial writers, as a political maneuver by the Governor. The Governor flatly refused to help the financially desperate cities.

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP BY YOMEN

"What! undo in a few weeks what we did in the past two years?"

The Governor's call listed a reduction in sales and use tax on all items costing less than 41 cents; supplemental appropriations for the Department of Welfare and amendment of the General Code to increase maximum payments to the aged and blind by $5 a month, using federal funds for the increase.

Ohio CIO urged the Governor to extend the call to include financial aid to the impoverished cities and an increase in maximums for the aged and blind to $60 a month, with the state matching the federal grant dollar for dollar. The Governor refused.

Only move to aid the cities came from the Democratic side of the Legislature. Sen. Metzenbaum, (D.) of Cleveland, attempted to insert an amendment granting an additional $12,000,000 to the impoverished cities. Pointing to the state's huge surplus, Metzenbaum said, "Our failure to adopt this amendment will stamp this Legislature with full responsibility for every payroll tax that passes."

The cities' financial plight is the result of the "Bricker binge," Metzenbaum charged, before his amendment was unceremoniously tabled on a roll call vote with Sens. Bernard (D.) of Youngstown, Jackson (D.) of Youngstown, Margaret A. Mahoney (D.) of Cleveland, Metzenbaum, Tyrell (R.) of Eaton, and McKie (R.) of Cincinnati, voting to keep the amendment alive. Twenty-six Republicans refused to even consider the plight of the cities.

In the House, Rep. Harmony (D.) of Sidney offered an amendment ear-marking a third of all sales tax monies for the cities. His amendment was ordered tabled with 15 Democrats and seven Republicans teaming up in a futile effort to help the cities.

It's Heaven Now! No Frogs To Gig

YES, sir, they need a good union—or something—out in Idaho, and if you don't believe it, just listen to the story about the family with frogs in its basement.

Things are a bit better now then they were a few months ago. By comparison they're heavenly. But they're still bad.

The refrigerator, for example, "sounds for all the world like a gasoline engine in a motor boat on a lake surrounded by mountains!"

Folks have an awful time sleeping when it gets going full blast.

And you can hardly sleep, anyhow, because of that dog-gone bed!

Frankly, we can't vouch for the truthfulness of this story because it came to us unsigned and addressed merely to "CIO Union, Washington, D. C."

It had a ring or genuine, angry authenticity, however, and it's devoted to a subject in which many CIO members are interested—the housing shortage.

It starts out by saying—

"I have an apartment made over from an old house. The old front porch was closed in and called a living room. There are no pictures on the wall. None of the furniture matches and the rug is a nightmare.

"The bed . . . well, it consists of one of those boxes we used to use under a box-spring mattress—but instead of a box-spring mattress there is a thin cotton mattress with no springs at all."

AT this point the writer really begins warming up to his, or her, subject—the "apartment" of a family of three:

"There is no linen closet . . . no pantry . . . no place to store things.

"There is a bath and that is all I can say for it. There are no windows in the bedroom or the bathroom, and the bath has no vent except a big hole they forgot to seal which leads into the attic.

"The stove hasn't cooked for so long it's ready for the scrap heap.

"All this for $60 a month—and we pay for the lights!"

YEP, things are bad, but they used to be much, much worse. Yes, sir, the family is making real progress. The writer puts it this way:

"But, mind you, this is heaven! We have just moved from a basement 'apartment.'

"We had to go frog gigging just about once a week. Yes, frogs! We never learned where they came in from but they were in our house when we came home.

"The cesspool would back up into the bedroom. The rains came and I woke up one morning and found nearly two feet of water under my bed.

"The walls were always wet or damp—and the people upstairs would leave the house and turn off the heat.

"For this we paid $50 a month and half the electricity bill. And the owner had an electrically-equipped home shop in which he sawed the neighbor's wood and made things to sell!"

THINGS looked a little brighter when word got around that a rich young man was going to open a new apartment house.

But he set the rent at $70 a month for three rooms, unfurnished. The family couldn't afford that much.

The writer concludes by saying:

"Now, either the union needs to come in here and unionize or we need a housing project where poor people can afford to live—or both.

The Man Who Came Back to Dinner

Sen. Kilgore Says:

'Senate Chaplain Prayed Against Lobbyists'

SEN. HARLEY KILGORE (D., W. Va.) has made a strong attack on the "well-heeled" lobbists of Big Business, describing them as "fat cats."

Kilgore declared:

"The high pressure technique of these fat cats became so deplorable as to draw the criticism of the chaplain of the senate.

"On one occasion he prayed with fervor that the Congress might stop giving all its attention to those lobbyists and instead heed the voices of the little people who did not have vast sums to push their interests. Unfortunately, his prayer went as unnoticed as the pleas of the common people."

Addressing the convention of the CIO Glass Workers, Kilgore pointed out that there are good lobbyists "who represent civic organizations, women's clubs, churches and trade unions. But you can be sure they are not the groups with fat expense accounts.

"The record shows, in unequivocal terms, that they are not the lobbyists who sit behind the throne and pull the strings. Their voices cried out in vain, while well-heeled representatives of Big Business smirkingly boasted that they were in the saddle."

What happened? "The special interests feasted day after day, month after month. Corporation profits climbed to fantastic heights. Yes NAM and its fellow travellers continued to bemoan the strength of labor, and what they loved to refer to as 'lack of venture capital.'

"Inflation? Why bother about it. The workers still had some of their wartime savings left. Why not fool them with a tax reduction program that would upset the administration's program to prevent the accumulation of exorbitant profits."

Kilgore recalled that the NAM, just before OPA was slain, had declared in the public prints:

"If OPA is promptly discontinued, production of goods will rise rapidly and through free competition prices will quickly adjust themselves to levels that consumers are willing to pay."

"NAM," Kilgore asserted, "used the technique of the BIG LIE, repeating it over and over and brazenly misrepresenting what it called the 'economic truth about price control.'

"Before the campaign got underway, the majority of American people believed that controls were necessary. But the NAM did its work well. The majority of the people fell for false propaganda. They reached out for the pot of gold—only to learn months later that they were victims of one of the greatest frauds ever perpetrated in history."

Then came the results. "Once all price controls were out of the way, those emissaries of Big Business launched a bitter attack on the Wagner Act and the Administration's tax structure. You know—only too well—what happened.

"Time and again, Pres. Truman called upon Congress to act upon the two most pressing issues; inflation and the acute housing shortage. The President even called Congress into a special session in 1947 to secure upon an anti-inflation program and a foreign-aid program.

"Congress brushed aside his pleas for an anti-inflation program. The fact that thousands were living in crowded dwellings also failed to impress many of the Republican Congressional leaders. "They listened to the real-estate lobby—instead of to the homeless."

How about Taft-Hartley? "Many responsible leaders of industry now realize that the act has complicated and impaired rather than improved their relations with unions. Recently, a special committee of the Pennsylvania Bar Association reported that in 'some instances, the act has actually disrupted and embittered hitherto traditionally harmonious employer-union relationships.'

"I am happy to say that the Democratic platform advocates repeal of the T-H Act."

Labor's Apathy Costly

"The great labor vote which helped reelect our late Pres. Roosevelt for a fourth term disintegrated in 1946, and as a result of the apathy and carelessness of the working people, Republican Congress got into power and passed the T-H act.

"If the American people want representatives who are their servants and not their capricious masters, then they have to bestir themselves and get out and vote.

"Democracy cannot survive in a vacuum!"—Sen. Kilgore in an address to the CIO Glass Workers' convention.

Choice Must Be Made On Monoplies

When we were kids, there were a lot of nice little stores in our neighborhoods.

There was Joe's, where we bought candy.

There was Tony who would occasionally give you a free apple from his supply of shiny fruits.

There was Sam, who sold men's clothes.

There was "Mme." Sadye's, where one could buy ladies' clothes.

There was George's grocery store.

There was Pat's fish market.

But, after a while, Joe and Tony and Sam and Sadye and George and Pat were bought off and where we had six stores there were only two or even one.

Monopoly had moved in and taken over.

That, on a small scale, was what was worrying the Federal Trade Commission last week when it declared:

"No great stretch of the imagination is required to forsee that if nothing is done to check the growth in concentration, either the giant corporations will ultimately take over the country, or the government will be impelled to step in and impose some form of direct regulation in the public interest.

"In either event, collectivism will have triumphed over free enterprise and the theory of competition will have been relegated to the limbo of well-intentioned but ineffective ideals.

"This is a warning which the commission has repeated time and again, and one which some of those who have the most to gain by the preservation of competition seem determined to ignore."

The FTC, calling attention to the loophole in the Clayton Anti-Trust Law "which permits corporations to purchase the assets rather than (or in addition to) the stock of competing firms, thereby evading the original intent of Congress to 'arrest the creation of monopolies in their incipiency,' pointed out these startling findings:

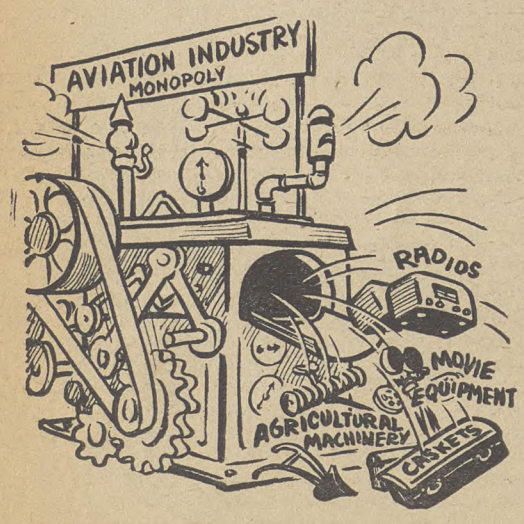
1. "The current merger movement, under way since 1940, has already resulted in the disappearance of more than 2450 formerly independent manufacturing and mining companies. These firms held assets aggregating some $5.2 billion, or more than 5% of the total assets of all manufacturing corporations in the country.

2. "Horizontal" mergers—in roughly similar lines of production—constituted 60% of the amalgamations.

3. "Conglomerate" mergers—those in which there is no discernible relationship in the nature of the business between the purchasing and acquired firms—were one-fifth of the amalgamations.

4. "Vertical" mergers—in which the purchase represents a movement either forward or backward in the productive process—made up the remaining mergers. The "backward type" predominated, reflecting efforts of fabricators to gain control of critical materials.

5. "Horizontal" mergers have involved such products as wallpaper, canned milk, wooden containers, slide fasteners, oxygen and acetylene gases, paint and numerous others. Combinations of "substitute" products and acquisition of a large number of small, independent businesses also came under this category.



6. "Forward" vertical mergers showed such things as movement of large steel producers into the fabricating fields. "This has resulted in an almost complete disappearance of what formerly had been regarded as typical 'small business' industries," the report said.

7. "Backward vertical" mergers have had the effect of "drying up" materials available for small business. Examples: purchases by machinery manufacturers of producers of tool and die shop products, metal stampings, screw machine products, etc., the purchase of iron and steel foundries on the part of automobile manufacturers; acquisitions of producers of pulp by large paper companies; purchase of wide varieties of manufacturing enterprises, such as meat packers, cheese factories, etc., by chain stores.

8. There are extremes in "conglomerate" mergers. Aircraft manufacturers have acquired firms that produce such widely diversified products as movie equipment, radios, agricultural equipment and burial caskets.

The report notes that "there has been a widespread tendency to underestimate the importance of external expansion and to attribute nearly all of the increase in economic concentration to internal growth.

(Internal growth—sometimes called "natural" growth—is defined as that which "occurs through the building of new facilities or the expansion of existing properties financed out of retained earnings, loans, sale of securities, etc.")

(External growth—which is the keystone of the FTC report—"takes place through the combining of existing firms by means of acquisition, merger or consolidation, and through the creation of other types of combinations such as trusts and holding companies.")

Here is how FTC points up the importance of external growth:

"The two leading industries, in terms of number of acquisitions, have been textiles and apparel, and food and kindred products—both predominantly small business fields. Moreover, in certain small business industries (notably steel drums, tight cooperage, and wines) virtually all or a substantial part of the industry has been taken over by big corporations.

"Nearly one-third of the companies merged since 1940 have been absorbed by corporations with assets exceeding $50 million. Another 40% have been taken over by corporations with assets ranging from $5 million to $49 million.

"Of the nation's 200 largest manufacturing corporations, 123 have made corporate acquisitions since 1940, amounting, in the aggregate, to approximately 27% of all firms bought up. Some 33 of the top 200 firms have bought out an average of five companies each . . . 13 have purchased more than 10 each."

FTC reminds that since 1945 "legislation has been pending to amend Sect. 7, Clayton Act. These bills, introduced by Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.) and Rep. Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.) have been the subject of extensive hearings, but have failed to reach the floor."

This is the Clayton loophole: A corporation can circumvent the law by (a) purchasing control of a competitor and then utilizing such control to acquire the assets of the firm; or (b) the assets could be purchased in the first instance without bothering to acquire the stock at all.

Examples of recent uses of the merger-escape loophole are provided in such industries as cement, salt, white lead, fire extinguishers and book paper.

In conclusion, FTC warns:

"A definite choice must be made. Either this country is going down the road to collectivism or it must stand and fight for competition as the protector of all that is embodied in free enterprise."

Textile Gal Up Fo

SHE waited until almost the last minute, then decided she couldn't let the politicians get away with running a candidate unopposed.

So Lucille Savoie, joint board manager for the CIO Textile Workers in New Orleans, will oppose Rep. F. Edward Hebert (D., La.) for the Congressional nomination in Louisiana's 1st District on Aug. 31.

It was exactly 20 minutes before the deadline when Lucille had herself qualified. Her platform: fight inflation, repeal Taft-Hartley, grant federal aid to education, provide adequate housing and broaden reciprocal trade agreements.

She plans an active campaign, with her expenses coming from the people of the district. She will accept no contribution of more than $10. In the first 24 hours after she qualified, more than $500 was collected.

And, she expects to get a lot of help from Labor, from The Americans for Democratic Action, of which she is the New Orleans secretary, and from the United Women to Combat Inflation (she is secretary there, too).

SHE points out that elections are old stuff for her. For eight years, she has been reelected to her union post—and each time she beat a man!

Of inflation, she says: "There can be no doubt that for all too long we have been victims of politicians who did not worry about high prices because they have the money to pay for food and clothing that is priced out of the market for us.

"But we, the white collar workers, who spend our days over office typewriters and our nights figuring how we can buy the things we need, must fight against higher prices if we are to do our part in keeping America safe, and a sane democracy."

Other planks in her platform: end political bossism, taxes that are fair to the poor man, slum clearance, increased minimum wage, increased appropriations for flood control and an improved intercoastal canal system, more jobs in Louisiana through industrialization of the state, end of oleo tax, protection of shrimp and oyster fishermen, free lunches for school children, a firm stand for democracy in foreign affairs, the Ma

Campaign Begins

WITH the conventions over, political news was beginning to perk up last week.

Here are some highlights:

NEW JERSEY: The State PAC has indorsed Archibald S. Alexander, Bernardsville, for U. S. Senator.

Alexander, a Democrat, is seeking the seat now held by Sen. Albert Hawkes (R.), who was ditched by Republican leaders in favor of Robert Hendrickson.

Alexander was indorsed after he had answered a CIO questionnaire on 21 key issues. Hendrickson made no reply. Alexander said he favored:

Repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law (specifically, he assailed "provisions relating to the use of injunctions, those curtailing the right of unions to express their viewpoint of public affairs," and other factors), price controls, ERP, civil rights legislation, improved social security, public housing, rent control, labor education extension service, higher minimum wage and partition of Palestine.

PAC also indorsed eight House candidates: Charles Howell, 4th; Charles Joelson, 8th; Peter Rodino, 10th; Peter Addonizio, 11th; Harry Dudkin, 12th.

KENTUCKY: The CIO, AFL and Railroad Brotherhood have indorsed John Young Brown for Democratic candidate for U. S. Senator against Sen. Cooper (R.). The three labor groups have joined with other civic groups in the Progressive Democrats.

The indorsement came at a time when Gov. Earle Clements, who won last fall with labor support, had announced his support of Rep. Virgil Chapman for Senate.

Kentucky's PAC has indorsed these Congressional candidates: Chal Charles Gordon, 1st; incumbent John A. Whitaker, 2d; Ralph Logan, 3d; William J. Wuerth, 4th; incumbent Brent Spence, 5th; Thomas Underwood, 6th; incumbent Joe B. Bates, 8th. All are Democrats. In the 9th, PAC indorsed James S. Golden, Republican.

OKLAHOMA: Former Gov. Robert S. Kerr has won Democratic nomination for U. S. Senator in the race for the seat of Sen. Moore (R.), who is not seeking reelection. Kerr will oppose Rep. Ross Rizley (R.) in the fall.

MISSISSIPPI: Rep. John Rankin (D.) is having hard going, according to the New York Times, in his attempt to win renomination.

The champion of "white supremacy" will be opposed Aug. 24 by Judge Raymond Jarvis and former Judge Claude Clayton. The Times correspondent reported that it

ILLINOIS: The Third Party, which is running a journalism professor, Curtis MacDouglass, against liberal Democrat Paul A. Douglas and isloationist Republican Sen. Curley Brooks, claims that Douglas has pussyfooted on the Taft-Hartley Law.

(At the Illinois PAC conference, Douglas told 600 cheering CIO delegates that he favored repeal of T-H, listing the unfair provisions of the law. He has repeated that pledge at numerous rallies.)

COWAN: GET ON BALL

GET on the ball if you want Congress to do anything for the people.

That was the message sent out to all CIO affiliates last week by Nathan Cowan, legislative director, in the first of a series of reports on the special session.

Cowan said that the 80th Congress "is on trial."

If unions rally the people, "we may be able to get action on the bills that need to be passed," Cowan reminded CIO unions and councils.

"If Congress fails to act, the do-nothing record will make potent material for the coming election."

Republicans have made clear that they want "no action now," Cowan said.

"They say that IF the people elect a Republican President and Republican Congress in 5 months, then MAYBE they will act in 8 or 10 or 12 months from now.

"Meanwhile, we'll be paying higher prices; meanwhile, we'll be waiting for decent houses in which to live."

HE urged unions and union members: 1. To get in touch with the Senators and Congressmen to demand "immediate action on an effective price control bill"—to help end the "increasing hardship of high prices on the incomes of working families."

"We must insist that wage control legislation is neither necessary nor desirable, because record-breaking profits make it possible for labor to win wage gains by collective bargaining within existing price levels.

"With prices controlled, labor will make progress at the expense of profits, not at the expense of consumers."

2. To demand of Congressmen who have not signed the petition to bring the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill up for debate and vote, that they do so at once. About 160 of the 218 signatures have already been obtained.

3. To demand that Senators take steps to shut off debate on the polltax bill, and to pass that measure as well as the anti-lynching bill and the FEPC bill.

4. To secure petitions and hold meetings in favor of anti-inflation legislation, where such projects can be handled quickly and effectively.

5. To make contacts with other community groups—women's clubs, church and civic groups, etc.—to "develop the strongest possible appeals for action on inflation, housing and civil rights."

Cowan pointed out that "every CIO affiliate, every CIO member has a duty to be on the alert; to keep the Congressman from your area continuously reminded that the public wants Congress to pass anti-inflation legislation, the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill, and the civil rights program."

Murray: Legislation Is Important

THE people are looking to their representatives in Washington for action.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, talking last week over a national ABC network, gave the 80th Congress some advice about what's on people's minds.

"We must see to it that the basic necessities of life are available to all of our people at prices they can pay," Murray said.

"More and more of every worker's wage is being required to buy food alone. As a result, other basic needs are not being met.

"We are becoming ill-clothed. We are certainly ill-housed. Our educational standards are suffering. Health is not being maintained. Savings are being depleted.

"Our old people are not being properly cared for. Many workers with fulltime jobs must apply for public relief to balance their family budgets."

LEGISLATION is "imperative," the CIO president told the radio audience.

"Congress must enact at once an adequate inflation program . . . We must re-enact the excess profits tax law to recapture speculative and exorbitant profits."

Murray lashed out at big business, the Natl. Association of Manufacturers, the chambers of commerce and members of Congress who joined to kill OPA. He said they had "victimized and shaken down the American worker and consumer."

"The NAM sold Congress a bill of goods. But even a special interest Congress must now recognize the fraud perpetrated upon it and the American people."

He charged that big corporations have used wage increases as an excuse for raising prices—although wage boosts could have been paid out of present record-breaking profits.

FOLLOWING are some highlights of Murray's broadcast:

HOUSING: "The facts of our housing shortage are known to the Congress. Extensive hearings have been held by both Houses. The record is replete with evidence showing the absolute need for a comprehensive housing program. It is high time that both political parties should honor their repeated pledges to provide adequate housing.

"Such a law should include provisions for public housing, slum celarance, low-rent and rural projects, and restoration of effective rent control. The Taft-Ellender-Wagner Bill, a non-partisan measure containing many of these desirable features, has passed the Senate. It is now lodged in the House Rules Committee.

"Only the real estate lobby stands in the way of its passage. The bill must be dislodged from the Committee and enacted into law . . .

TAFT-HARTLEY: "The Taft-Hartley Law attempts to take us back in the direction of the old evils of individual bargaining. During the year since its enactment it has brought chaos into industrial relations. It has strengthened the hands of the most arrogant, the most anti-labor portion of American industry in its determination to destroy labor organizations.

"These misguided employers are now using the provisions of the law as a weapon for union-busting, for provocation and for economic aggression against working people. The Taft-Hartley Law has been directly responsible for the revival of government-by-injunction.

"It has increased industrial strife and promoted discord.

"The Taft-Hartley Law should be replaced forthwith . . .

UNCHECKED GREED: "Unless the rise in price is checked, our economy is in danger of serious dislocation. I charge that Big Business and a Congress controlled by special interests are to blame for our present inflation.

"It was the NAM and their ilk that prevailed upon Congress to kill the OPA. This corporate lobby solemnly promised that with OPA eliminated, prices would go down. We all know what has happened since. Prices have risen nearly 30 percent.

"Big Business knew then, and they know now, that with rising prices every family suffers. But their sole interest is in their profits.

"These profits have pyramided ever since the end of OPA. This year they will reach an unprecedented twenty billion dollars.

"The greed of these monopolists has known no restraints. They have victimized and shaken down the American worker and consumer. No end is in sight except ultimate disaster and ruin for us all unless Congress acts now before it is too late . . .

UNION'S ROLE: "In contrast to industry, labor has consistently fought inflation. Labor fought to save the OPA. Labor has since urged the restoration of effective price control. In this we have received no support from Big Business and their chambers of commerce.

"Labor is not responsible for the present crisis. It is industry that has caused the steady price rise which has occurred since the end of OPA. It is the Congress which has failed to prevent this rise. "With standards of living being lowered, labor of necessity sought higher wages. These pay increases were then used by profit-hungry corporations as the excuse to lift prices many times in excess of the direct cost of such wage adjustments.

"The plain truth is that the wage increases which have been granted did not require higher prices. These wage adjustments could have been paid for out of record earnings. Industry could still have retained fair profits.

"I charge that this conduct of American industry since the end of OPA is a national scandal. It invites the scrutiny of our government. I call upon the Congress and the Department of Justice to investigate the price and profit policies of our big industrialists. It is high time that the facts be brought publicly to light . . .

"But an investigation is not enough. Legislation is imperative,

"Congress must enact at once an adequate anti-inflation program. We must roll prices back to reasonable levels. We must see to it that the basic necessities of life are available to all of our people at prices they can pay. We must reenact the excess profits tax law to recapture speculative and exorbitant profits.

"Wage control is neither necessary nor called for in such a program since wages have fallen far behind rising prices.

CIVIL RIGHTS: "Both the Republican and Democratic parties stand committed to passage of civil rights legislation. The time is overdue for the Congress to bridge the gap between our constitutional obligations and our day-to-day practices.

"No group so wilful or bigoted men should be permitted to stand in the way of immediate action.

"Congress should promptly enact bills for fair employment practices, anti-poll tax, anti-lynching, and other anti-segregation measures proposed by the President's Committee on Civil Rights.

SOCIAL WELFARE: "Our Social Security program needs extension and improvement. Our educational system requires federal aid. National health insurance has long been needed. An adequate and permanent agricultural program rather than an improvised farm law should be enacted.

"A Minimum Wage bill adjusted to present standards is overdue. Our system of veterans' benefits necessitates revision to meet the price increases which now imperil the living standards and opportunities of the men and women who served our country so well.

"In the closing days of the last session of Congress a so-called Displaced Persons bill was passed. This prejudiced law violates our democratic traditions. This blot on our national honor must be removed. A non-discriminatory Displaced Persons bill, in keeping with our role of democratic world leadership, must be enacted . . ."

Rubber Lauded

A 6-month experiment in radio programming by the CIO Rubber Workers has been proclaimed a whopping success.

Billboard—a show business paper—said the union programs used "sound and musical effects with telling effect" and made "effective listening."

The program was broadcast over Station WADC, in Akron, and transcriptions were sent to locals in other rubber union centers. They were produced by Robert Cruden, URW publicity director.

The shows involved current issues of interest to union members. Music, sound effects and amateur talent from the union were used on the series.

General Tire Stalls TWVA Two Years

THE CIO Textile Workers believe that the General Tire & Rubber Co. "is leading the battle in central Georgia to prevent workers from exercising their rights as free Americans."

TWUA is circularizing other unions to place GT&RC products on the unfair list. The Textile Workers point out that since they won a NLRB election by a vote of 281 to 135 on April 19, 1946, "the workers at the Aldora plant (60 miles south of Atlanta) have been prevented from reaching a contract because of unfair practices of the company."

Here's the story the union tells:

"Aldora is a village owned completely by the General Tire and Rubber Co. There is nothing in Aldora but the tire cord mill of the company and the houses where the workers live. The company owns the houses, the school, the playground."

The union in its appeal for placing the company on the unfair list declares that the town's three commissioners, appointed by a county judge, are the mill manager, L. A. Macomber, one of his assistants and the president of a bank in nearby Barnesville.

The union won the NLRB election in 1946, but, TWUA asserts, "the company would not meet to negotiate a contract. At first they said that A. J. Teusch had to come down from Akron. Finally after six months and the threat of a strike, they hired the most viciously anti-union lawyer in the state and started meeting. They never bargained in good faith.

"The union filed charges against the company for firing workers for union activities, failing to bargain, and itimidation and coercion. The NLRB's Trial Examiner heard the evidence and found the company guilty. He ordered four workers reinstated with back pay. The company appealed the case to Washington and it is still pending.

"When Taft-Hartley went into effect, the company had a decertification petition circulated in the mill. If a worker wouldn't sign, his second hand would go over and 'explain' it to him. The NLRB refused to consider it however, since the other case was pending."

Curran Ticket Routs Leftists in NMU Election

Joseph Curran and his right-wing supporters last week won a smashing victory over their leftist opponents in the Nat'l Maritime Union membership election, bringing to an end an exceedingly bitter campaign.

Not only did Curran defeat Frederick (Blackie) Myers for the presidency, but his slate won every one of the 32 posts in the NMU national council. Even the key left-wing stronghold, the port of New York, passed into anti-Communist hands when the Curran-backed candidates were elected port agent and port patrolmen. The Curran forces won every contest in which they entered a candidate.

JOSEPH CURRAN

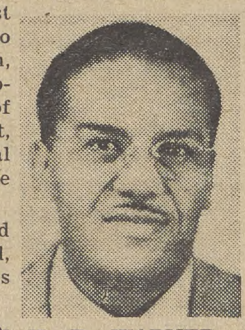
Curran received 28,043 votes, Myers 9640. Other figures in contests for important posts, with the name of the right-wing candidate first in each case, were: For secretary, Neal Hanley 24,071, Ferdinand C. Smith, incumbent, 12,549; treasurer, M. Hedley Stone, incumbent, 22,561; Paul Palazzi 13,203.

NEAL HANLEY

With margins ranging from better than two to one to four to three, Jack Lawrensen, incumbent; Adrain Duffy and H. B. Warner, all right-wingers, defeated D. James Gavin, Chester Young and Howard McKenzie, the latter two incumbents, for vice-presidencies.

Having routed his opponents at an election conducted by the Honest Ballot Association, Curran said that he would press the attack against the left-wingers.

He outlined a number of steps to be taken to end the Communist influence in the union. These include: charges against ousted officials intended to expel them from the union, firing of Communist supporters from the staff of the union's paper, The Pilot, and from the educational department and the office staff.



H. B. WARNER

Charges against the ousted officials, Curran indicated, would include "crimes against the membership."

The NMU head served notice on the ship owners that the union would fight them for better conditions "just as hard as we fight those Communist groups which seek to wreck our union. We accept this vote as a mandate for better wages, hours and working conditions and for retention of our hiring hall."

ADRIAN DUFFY

The union is currenly engaged in negotiations with the shop owners who are maintaining that the Taft-Hartley law outlaws the union-run hiring hall, which replaced the shape-up under which bribery of hiring agents and union officials was frequently needed to land a job.

Ohio Council Backs Suit Against Tax

THE Columbus, Ohio, payroll tax ordinance was in the courts as Fred Stockwell of Columbus, challenged its constitutionality.

In a taxpayer's suit, filed in the Franklin county court of commonpleas by Atty. David Clayman, Stockwell cited 11 reasons why "Ordinance No. 658-47 is unconstitutional and void."

Stockwell asks a permanent injunction halting all enforcement of the ordinance; a return of all taxes collected from him and a declaration by the court that the ordinance is null and void.

The suit names as co-defendants the City of Columbus, City Treas. Roy King, City Auditor R. P. Barthalow and the Jaeger Machine Co., Stockwell's employers.

Stockwell is a member of the CIO Steelworkers and a delegate to the Columbus CIO Council. His action follows a promise by Secy-Treas. William Lavelle of the Ohio CIO Council, that that body would "perform an important public service by taking all necessary steps to challenge the constitutionality of the payroll tax ordinance in the Ohio courts."

N. J. UE Group Backs CIO in Politics

Delegates representing more than 16,000 members of right-wing New Jersey locals of the CIO United Electrical Workers, have completed the organization of a Political Action Committee pledged to "full support" of the policies of the National CIO, it was announced last week by Pres. Carl Holderman of N. J. CIO.

Top local officials and rank-and-file members from the participating locals joined in the formation of the new committee designed to furnish UE members with the "machinery for effective implementation of the policies of the National CIO, which include endorsement of the European Recovery Program, and opposition to the Wallace Third Party movement."

At a meeting at Newark last week, called by Holderman, the group passed a resolution unanimously authorizing the establishment of PAC's within the various UE locals.

"The policies adopted and pursued by the current officers of the UE are in direct defiance of the established program of the National CIO," the resolution stated. "The overwhelming majority of UE members are, in fact, actively desirous of supporting the national CIO program of endorsement of the ERP and opposition to the Third Party."

International officers of the UE have gone on record opposing the Marshall Plan of aid to European countries, and are spearheading the Wallace campaign for the presidency. Albert Fitzgerald, president of the UE, was the permanent chairman of the Progressive Party convention in Philadelphia.

Average Profits Up

The average profit after taxes and other costs was 7.8c per dollar of sales in 1947, compared with 6.7c in 1946, the Federal Reserve Board reports.

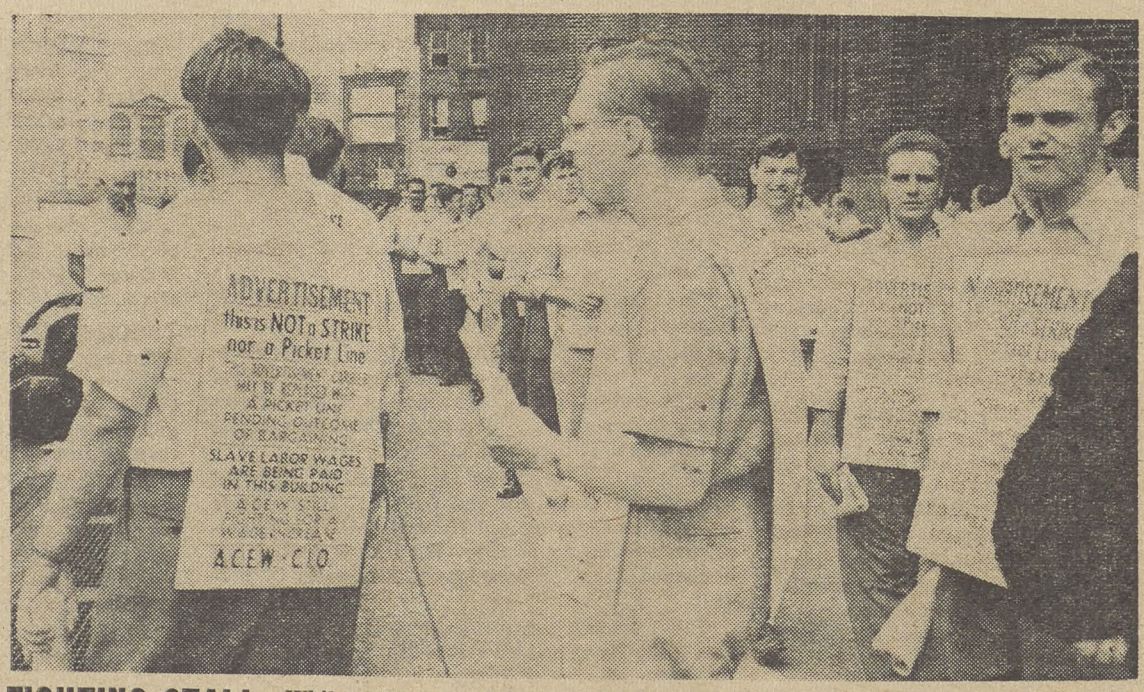
'Don't Dodge Issues', AVC Tells Dewey

Thomas E. Dewey was called on last week to demonstrate immediately the leadership he promises if elected President through influence on the 80th Congress. The request was made in a letter to the New York Governor by Joseph A. Clorety, Jr., acting chairman of the American Veterans Committee (AVC).

Clorety described last week's statement of 80th Congress leaders as "a heartbreaking substitution of tawdry politics for representative government." He urged "immediate passage of the T-E-W Housing Bill and a program to control the inflation spiral" as "the very least American citizens can expect to help solve their domestic problems."

Europe's Wheat Crop

Though the European wheat crop will rise 35% this year, it will still be 13% below the 1935-39 average.



FIGHTING STALL: While Western Electric says it is conducting a wage survey, members of the CIO Association of Communication Equipment Workers are conducting a "cold strike" throughout the nation. Though continuing on the job, the pickets such as these in front of the American Telephone and Telegraph (WE's parent company) New York City building are reminding WE that the cold strike may become a real walkout.

Twice As Good

YOU can't double-shuffle the CIO Shipbuilding Union and get away with it in Chester, Pa.

Sun Shipbuilding and Drydock (owned by the Pews) tried it.

Walter Oprouseck, a welder, was fired for smoking on a ship. The discharge seemed to Oprouseck a violation of the contract. The shop steward he told his story to felt the same way about it.

Local 2 took the case to the company.

The company refused to budge. Oprouseck, they said, was fired and he'd stay fired.

* * *

Local 2 went to arbitration.

The arbitrator awarded the case to Oprouseck — ordered him reinstated and all his back pay restored.

The company sent for Oprouseck.

But when Oprouseck entered the gates, he was whisked off directly to a medical examination. The company never gave him a chance to get to work; they took him from the gate to the doctor.

The doctor promptly discovered a defect in Oprouseck's eye—a defect that already showed on his physical report, and had been known about and accepted for a long time.

On the basis of the defect, the company fired him again.

* * *

Oprouseck went back to Local 2.

Local 2 went back to arbitration, and fought the case all over again—and this time won the case permanently.

Oprouseck is back at work—and in the offiing is a check for back pay which will be in the neighborhood of $1,000.

INDUSTRY TRIES TO CONCEAL EXCESS PROFITS WHILE BLAMING LABOR FOR HIGH PRICES

By GLORIA CAPLAN

IT'S a neat trick if you can get by with it.

You raise your workers' pay $1.62 a day. You raise your prices $5.10 on the goods a single worker produces in that day. You make a cozy $3.48 profit on the deal—and then you shed crocodile tears on newspaper reporters' shoulders about the high cost of labor.

Next day Joe Doakes picks up his ole reliable daily, and it says something like this:

"Efforts of the Yattata-Yattata Coal Co. to hold the line against inflation collapsed yesterday as the company 'regrettably' announced it would raise its coal prices an average 85c a ton, the result of recent wage boosts."

That's the pattern recently followed in the coal, steel, auto and electrical industries and being mimicked by other manufacturers.

And this hoax is a manufactured product about as easy to sell these days as a ton of steel or a Ford car—easy to sell because:

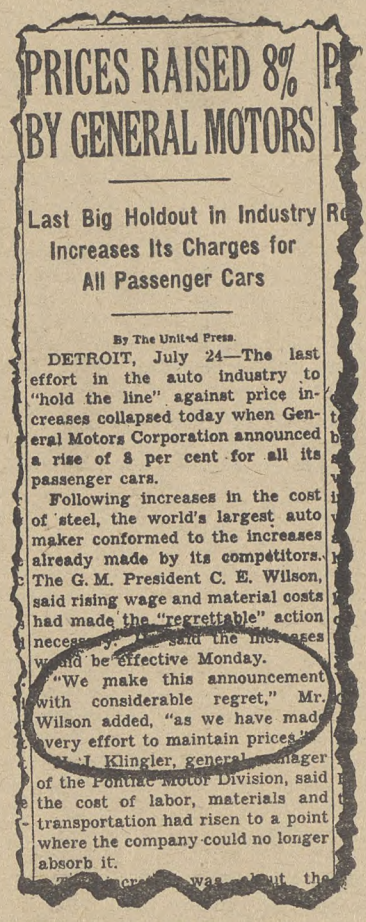
- It's easy to create the impression that after wage increases, price increases are always as inevitable as rain in April. The cliche is "to cover increased labor costs."

- It's easy to keep the other factors out of the newspapers—the excessive amount of the increase in the first place; the excess profits out of which the wage boosts should have been paid in the second place.

ON the other hand, it's hard for the unions to get across to the public their argument that many price increases are unjustified and constitute an enormous hoax on the American people because:

- The unions' argument rests in a mass of nine- and 10-digit figures — the corporations' own figures, incidentally — that make laborious reading.

- The newspapers aren't exactly turning handsprings in their anxiety to prove labor is not the cause of inflation.



PRICES RAISED 8% BY GENERAL MOTORS

Last Big Holdout in Industry Increases Its Charges for All Passenger Cars

By The United Press.

DETROIT, July 24—The last effort in the auto industry to "hold the line" against price increases collapsed today when General Motors Corporation announced a rise of 8 per cent for all its passenger cars.

Following increases in the cost of steel, the world's largest auto maker conformed to the increases already made by its competitors. The G. M. President C. E. Wilson, said rising wage and material costs had made the "regrettable" action necessary. He said the increases would be effective Monday.

"We make this announcement with considerable regret," Mr. Wilson added, "as we have made every effort to maintain prices."

J. Klingler, general manager of the Pontiac Motor Division, said the cost of labor, materials and transportation had risen to a point where the company could no longer absorb it.

FROM N. Y. TIMES: This story shows how industry tries to blame labor for price increases.

So when you shell out that extra $1 or so for a ton of coal this fall, or an extra $125 for a shiny new Ford, recall some of these 9- and 10-digit figures and let the cuss words fall where they may:

We'll start with coal, which sets off the price increase chain reaction.

Those mine workers, who forego the light of day and suffer the highest rate of on-the-job deaths and accidents of any group in the country, recently won a $1 a day wage hike, plus a welfare fund royalty of 10c on each ton they dig.

The new increase added about 27c to the cost of producing a ton of coal, according to the Mine Workers. On the average, a miner digs about six tons a day, which means labor costs went up $1.62 per worker per day.

The coal producers said they just couldn't absorb that terrific raise—despite the fact that profits are averaging 16.86% on their investment. So up goes the price of coal by about 50c to $1 a ton. The estimated average price increase is 85c a ton. On a miner's daily production that means the owners take in an extra $5.10—to cover increased labor costs, they say. All of which gives them a tidy little $3.48 profit every day for every miner they employ.

You can look at it another way, if you still think higher wages caused your price of coal to go up 50c to $1 a ton. In the past 27 years—from 1920 to 1947—the payroll cost of producing a ton of coal advanced all of 11c. Sounds unbelievable, but the figures come from Julian E. Toby, director of the Fairmont, W. Va., Coal Bureau. Reason for the negligible increase, of course, is greater production. In 1920 a miner produced four tons a day, but it was 6.1 in '47.

STEEL takes the spotlight next in this inflation drama. (And anything coal can do, steel can do better.)

Next time you go out to buy a ton of steel—which you probably won't any time soon—it'll cost you $9.34 more than it did last month—an 11.64% increase, say the CIO Steelworkers. U. S. Steel's Pres. Ben Fairless was not so blunt as to pin the entire blame on labor; he just hinted it. "Last week," he said, "U. S. Steel, in announcing a 9% wage increase to its steel workers . . . stated that constantly rising costs compel, etc." The inference was clear; the newspapers picked up the cue.

U. S. Steel's price increase will bring it an additional $189,060,280 this year, assuming it sells the same amount of steel as last year. Actually, a greater volume is anticipated. This additional revenue compares with a total wage increase for the year of $65 million for all employes—not just the CIO Steelworkers.

The increase in coal prices will cost the steel industry another $85 million, the industry estimates. This, added to the wage boost, totals $150 million. Together these two factors constitute the bulk of steel's production costs. Subtracting these cost increases from the annual price increase, you find $39 million profit.

But that's on only one steel price increase, the most recent of four the industry has imposed since December, 1946. These boosts have brought the price of finished steel up from an average $64.45 a ton in November, 1946, to $89.61 today.

And just in case you fell for that line that the industry needed those increases to cover higher costs, take a look at a sample profit statement:

U. S. Steel last week announced that net profits for the second quarter of this year—before the latest price rise — amounted to $32,585,677, compared with $29,336,868 in the same era of '47.

THE auto manufacturers enter the tragi-comedy next.

Actually most of the auto industry upped prices before steel costs went up, and Ford even did so before granting a wage increase. But they dragged out the same well-worn excuse for raising prices: "Higher wages and material costs."

It may make you feel better, when you shell out that extra 8% for a Buick today, to know that GM Pres. C. E. Wilson said he made the announcement "with considerable regret." But a look at GM's profit and wage structure leads one to believe Wilson's "regret" won't overpower him.

We'll use GM as a typical example in the auto industry:

GM hasn't published its revised price list yet, but it has announced an 8% increase. On a $2000 car, about the average GM price, this means a boost of around $160 per car.

Hope Springs Eternal

It's faint, but a ray of hope, none the less.

The New York Times last week reported that bamboo has been found as strong as steel and an excellent steel substitute for some uses.

Maybe there's the solution to the high-price-of-steel problem: bamboo cultivation!

- For each car produced, the cost of steel went up about $15.

- No accurate estimate of the average labor cost per car is available, but it is known that labor constitutes only about 25% of total production costs.

- Thus, no amount of stretching could make these two factors equal or even approach the $160 by which GM car prices soared.

- For every dollar the corporation gave out in wage increases, it will take in three in increased prices this year. The wage increase for the year will total $110 million, compared with a price increase (based on production for the first quarter of this year) of $348 million.

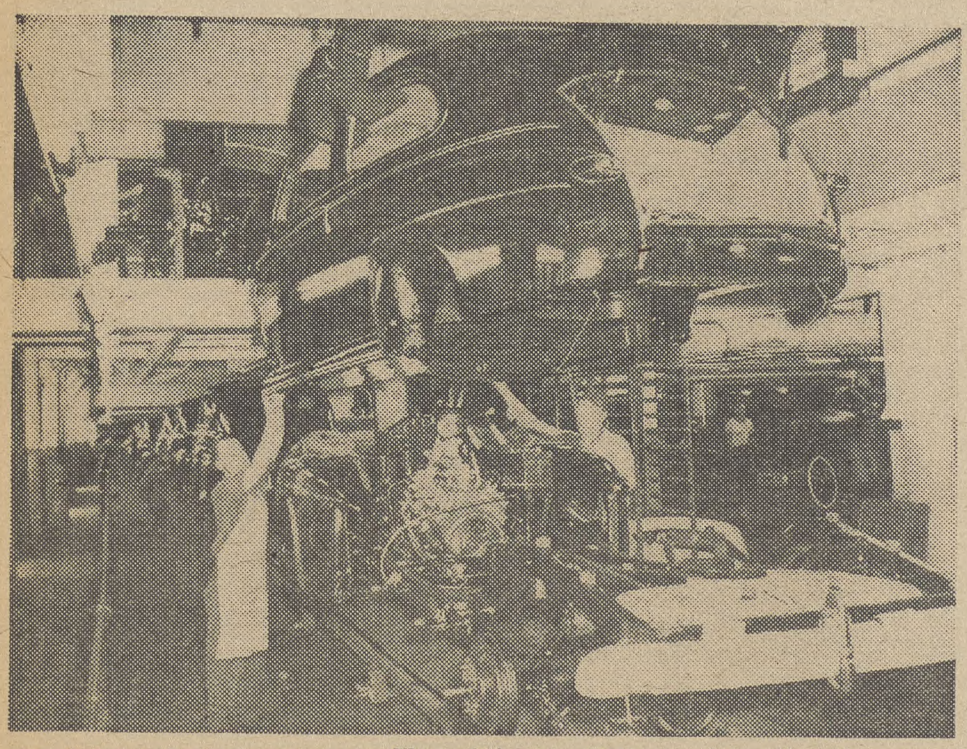
Last week GM announced its net take for the first half of this year: $206,763,672, compared with $137,559,202 in the same period last year. These figures, incidentally, include greatly increased deductions for depreciation and "increased risks of obsolescence."

THIS gigantic DuPont-controlled enterprise could have granted its 11c wage increase, cut car prices by more than $200 and still make a respectable 10% on its investment, according to the CIO Auto Workers. Likewise, had the seven largest auto manufacturers —GM, Chrysler, Ford, Nash, Studebaker, Hudson and Kaiser—been seriously concerned with stemming inflation as they claimed, they could have absorbed the wage increase and still have made 18.4% on their investments.

Gouging the public and using labor as the scapegoat is an ancient game. But in the 20th century the stakes are higher, the crashes harder. Old Adam Smith, conservative father of modern economics, summed it up very nicely about 150 years ago:

"Our merchants and master-manufacturers," he wrote in his 'Wealth of Nations,' "complain much of the bad effects of high wages in raising the prices and thereby lessening the sale of their goods at home and abroad.

"They say nothing concerning the bad effects of high profits. They are silent with regard to the pernicious effects of their own gains. They complain only of those other people."



WATCH FORDS GO BY: These CIO Auto Workers put together the nation's Ford cars with more ease than they can buy one. A 13c hourly raise recently helped recoup some of the purchasing power they lost.

DIG NATION'S COAL: These miners won a $1 a day pay hike plus a welfare fund royalty. Coal companies retaliated with price increase that far exceeds wage boost, nets them handsome profit from you and me.

Brophy Sails For Brazil; CIO at International Confab

CIO WILL BE represented by a fraternal delegate at the Inter-American Catholic Social Action Federation convention, which opens at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, on Aug. 22.

John Brophy, CIO director of industrial union councils, left July 30 on the S. S. Uruguay for the Brazilian city. He was accompanied by Mrs. Brophy and Miss Molly Lynch, secretary to CIO Pres. Murray.

FIVE REPRESENTATIVES from CIO attended an international trade union confab in London last week to work out methods for full representation by European unions in European Recovery Program machinery in the aid-receiving nations.

The meeting was one in a series called by the group, which first assembled last March. The series was inaugurated by the British Trades Union Congress after the World Federation of Trade Unions executive bureau failed to go on record in suport of the Marshall Plan.

CARE PACKAGES donated by the CIO Community Services Committee are being sent to trade union members in Europe at a steady rate.

Leo Perlis, CIO-CSC director, reveals that over 2,500 food packages have been shipped by CIO to Austria, England, France, Germany Greece, Hungary, Italy, Netherlands and Poland. In addition, 500 blanket and food packages have been sent to Israel.

The recent shipments represent CIO gifts totaling $34,198.

ONE OUT OF FOUR unions in Egypt has been suppressed by the government's Ministry of Social Affairs, according to a detailed report filed with the United Nations by the World Federation of Trade Unions. The WFTU has accused Egypt of violation of union freedom in its letter to the UN Economic & Social Council.

A favorite device of the government, according to the WFTU report, is to have all union leaders fired, and then to smash the union on grounds that its leadership does not represent the industry's workers.

The Moslem Brotherhood, which has been responsible for anti-Jewish Pogroms, has also been used to break up union meetings. At one big cotton textile plant, hundreds of active union members were arrested just before a union election.

New laws rushed through by the government hit at the right to strike, make picketing a criminal offense, and ban the union shop by setting up two-year jail sentences for persons who "interfere with the right to work."

Sounds as if the Egyptians have been reading Rep. Hartley's speeches!

WHILE CONGRESS wrestles with civil rights legislation, the Union of South Africa is being charged in the United Nations with gross discrimination against Negro people in the territory of Southwest Africa—over which the Union wants UN approval for continued control.

Francis Sayre, U. S. delegate to the UN Trusteeship Council, opposed the Union of South Africa request. He said that only 10% of Southwest Africa's budget is ear-marked for the Negroes, who make up 90% of its population.

Only two Negroes in Southwest Africa have been graduated from high school since 1919—both at their own expense. Unions are forbidden. Negro miners are paid only 16c a day—compared to 50c a day in the Union of South Africa.

"I DO": Harry Martin, on leave as CIO Newspaper Guild's president, takes the oath of office as labor adviser to Averell Harriman, roving ambassador for the Economic Cooperation Administration. Administering the oath is Katherine H. Davidson, appointment clerk of ECA's personnel division.

McGrath Blasts Steel

SEN. J. HOWARD MCGRATH, Democratic Natl. Committee chairman, can't stomach those steel industry antics. Said he last week:

"Exorbitant price increases and soaring profits that have reduced the actual purchasing power of factory workers despite higher wages constitute the major cause of today's inflation.

". . . Increases in the price of steel since the end of price controls two years ago total more than the entire annual payroll of the steel industry during the past year. Yet every time the steel companies raise prices, the blame is placed on the worker who won a small wage increase."

As for the steel workers, he said, their pay in terms of purchasing power was $2 lower in April, 1948 than it was in June, 1946 before price controls were killed. In April, 1948 real steel wages, based on the 1939 dollar, were $30 a week; in June, 1946 they were $31.90.

Sends GOP Chicken Home To Roost

The change of the Republican Congressional leadership that President Truman's emergency legislative program is a "political maneuver" was turned against the Republicans last week in a statement by Leon Henderson, chairman of Americans for Democratic Action.

The ADA chairman labeled as "shocking" the negative response of the GOP Congressional leaders to the President's message. He called the Republican charge that the emergency legislative program is a political maneuver "an indictment of the Republicans themselves since most of the President's recommendations are included in the Republican platform."

Henderson said the independent voter "can only conclude that the Republican platform itself is purely a political maneuver designed to cover up the failures of the Republican controlled 80th Congress."

The ADA statement called the GOP position that high prices are due largely to exports under the European aid program "clear proof that isolationism is still the Republican order of the day."

Milk Is Increased 13th Time in N. Y. City

A new hike of 1c a quart of milk prices in New York City Aug. 1 marked the 13th price rise for this vital food since 1941. By raising the cost to an average of 25c a quart, it brought the price of milk to 66 2⁄3 over OPA levels.

The price increase was approved by the Agriculture Dept., which also okayed an additional 1c increase to be effective Oct. 1. Actually, the increase set on wholesale prices by the Agriculture Dept. only involves a ½c increase per quart, but dealers have indicated they plan to add a full cent. A small portion of the increase will go to farmers but the bulk will go to the big dealers.

The price increase announcement came shortly after New York City Commissioner of Investigation John W. Murtagh leveled charges of conspiracy to control milk prices against the Borden Co. and Sheffield Farms, Inc.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

Reg. Dir. Joe Walsh, Wilkes-Barre, reports a victory in a privately conducted election at the new plant of the American Chain and Cable Company, West Pittston, Pa. The Steelworkers received 143 votes to none for the United Construction Workers, UMW. USA Staff Rep. Thomas J. Cann was in charge.

Two elections in Philadelphia were won by CIO unions, it was reported by Reg. Dir. George Craig. At the John Bartram Hotel the CIO Hotel and Restaurant Workers won over the AFL by 81 votes to 8. Tony D'Elia, president; Jack Miller, recording secretary, and Steve Rusinko, financial secretary, of URWDEA Local 356 are to be congratulated for this victory. The Textile Employes Workers got 126 votes at the Delaware River jute mill of the American Manufacturing Co. against 58 votes for no union.

* * *

The United Shoe Workers were victorious in five elections. Walter Harris, Arkansas Regional CIO Director, reports that at the International Shoe Co. in Searcy voted 169 for USWA-CIO and 119 against. Employes at the Minot Wood Heel Company in Lewiston, Maine, cast 60 votes for the USWA and 7 for no union. The Clark Shoe Company, Auburn, Maine, tallied 302 votes for USWA-CIO, 257 for no union and 28 for the Lewiston-Auburn Protective Association. Preparations for these latter two elections were handled by USWA Reg. Dir. George Fecteau of the New Hampshire area. Delmond Garst, CIO Reg. Dir. in St. Louis, reports that campaigns there conducted by USWA Rep. Dave Wilson resulted in two overwhelming union shop victories at the St. Louis and Washington, Mo., plants of the International Shoe Company. In St. Louis the vote was 287 for, 19 against, and in Washington it was 791 for and 80 against.

Chester C. Dusten, CIO Dir. in Oregon, reports that the employes of the Great Lakes Carbon Co. Terrebonne, Ore., voted 26 to 5 to be represented by the CIO. CIO Rep. John Brost deserves much of the credit for this victory. This group is now affiliated with the CIO Woodworkers.

CIO Reg. Dir. George DeNucci of Columbus, Ohio, reports sweeping victories for the Brewery Workers in a union shop election held in four breweries in that city. The vote was 485 for, 8 against. Business Agent Charles Demmler was in charge and was ably assisted by the local union officers. An NLRB election at Borden soft drink plant, Chillicothe, Ohio, resulted in 14 votes for the CIO Brewery Workers and 4 against. Brother De Nucci reports that Brewery Workers' Rep. Mel Greenthal was in charge.

A union shop election at the New Haven Clock Shop was won by the Playthings, Jewelry and Novelty Workers, CIO; Edward McCrone, Connecticut CIO Reg. Dir. reports. The vote was 664 for, 37 against.

Thomas J. Gallagher, director of organization of the Shipbuilding Workers, reports that the employes of the Gold Medal Powder Company, Spanish Fork, Utah, voted 84 to 59 to be represented by the IUMSWA-CIO.

Employes of Libby, McNeil and Libby in Portland, Oregon, voted to be represented by the Woodworkers, George Brown, Director of Organization, reports. The vote was IWA 175 and AFL 88.

* * *

The Steelworkers won an election at the Kaiser-Frazer plant in Ironton, Utah, it is reported by CIO Utah Reg. Dir. Frank Bonnacci. The vote was USA-CIO 110, IAM 45. The election was conducted by the Utah Labor Relations Board despite a challenge by the NLRB which contended that it had jurisdiction. The NLRB is seeking a restraining order in Federal District Court against the State Industrial Commission certification proceedings in this election. The company and the union have entered into negotiations anyway and, according to Bonnacci, are progressing favorably.

Ben Henry, Iowa Reg. CIO Dir., reports that the UAW won an election over both the AFL and the IAM in the Dubuque plant of the John Deere Co. The vote was UAW-CIO 1149, AFL 41, IAM 18.

The Chemical Workers' convention, which I attended and spoke to last week, was the largest since its organization. The delegates were determined and enthusiastic in their overwhelming support of CIO policy on political action and all other matters. The convention re-elected Martin Wagner as president, Cecil Martin as secretary and C. W. Dannenberg as vice-president. Joe Joy of West Virginia was elected vice-president for his first term.

This convention was held in Milwaukee, Wis. I was gratified at the coincidence of so militant and progressive an organization meeting in the State which has long been a citadel of militancy and progress. It was in Wisconsin that the Abolition movement obtained early support. Here, too, the workers have been successful for many, many years in electing progressive administrations in Milwaukee. From Wisconsin came the great statesman, the late Bob LaFollette.

While in Wisconsin I met with our PAC groups there and found our members determined to drive forward with CIO policy.

UAW Forces Radio To Make Retraction

Following full public retractions broadcast over radio station WJR, the CIO United Auto Workers and Samuel Jacobs of the UAW's Education Department, announced last week that they would take no further steps toward suing station WJR and its newscaster, John L. Denman, for libel.

The UAW and Jacobs had instructed their counsel to proceed against Denman and WJR following a broadcast which was allegedly based on news reports of Gov. Kim Sigler's investigation of charges made by General Motors economist Adam Stricker that "Marxist" doctrine was being taught in the classes sponsored by the Univ. of Michigan. Jacobs has been acting as an instructor at the university.

YEP, IT'S ME! AND READY TO GO RINGING DOORBELLS WITH YOU, MARGIE!

UNITED LABOR PRESS

OH, PETE! YOU... YOU DON'T KNOW HOW HAPPY I AM!

I'VE BEEN A FOOL, MARGIE... NEVER REALLY UNDERSTANDING THAT YOU WERE WORKING FOR OUR OWN GOOD... AND FOR THE GOOD OF OTHER FOLKS JUST LIKE US! I'M SORRY...

NOW, NOW, YOUNG 'UNS! DON'T YUH GET SENTIMENTAL! THAR'S LOTS OF WORK WE GOT TO BE A-DOING!

SNIFF

SURE, POP! YOU JUST SHOW ME WHAT HAS TO BE DONE!

WHAT'S NEXT ON THE PROGRAM, POP?

WELL, ALL THE BIG CONVENTION HOW-DE-DO IS OVER AND THE ELECTION PROGRAMS ARE ALL WRITTEN UP AND THE POLITICIANS ARE FIGURING OUT THE EASIEST WAY OF BREAKING ALL THE FINE PROMISES THEY BEEN A-MAKING!

SO WE AIN'T AGOING TO LET THEM BREAK THEIR ELECTION PROGRAMS! CONGRESS HAS BEEN CALLED BACK INTO SESSION -- WE GOTTA START MOVING TO MAKE CONGRESS CARRY OUT THEIR PROGRAM BEFORE THE ELECTIONS!

SO WE GOTTA START RINGING DOORBELLS AND GET FOLKS TO WRITE TO THEIR REPRESENTATIVES TO PASS PRICE CONTROL, THE CIVIL RIGHTS BILLS, REPEAL THE TAFT-HARTLEY UNION-BUSTING LAW.....

AND AT THE SAME TIME WE DO THIS.... WE GOTTA START SEEING TO IT THAT FOLKS REGISTER TO VOTE! THET MEANS RINGING DOORBELLS IN A BIG WAY! AND GETTING AS MANY UNION MEMBERS BUSY DOING THET AS WE CAN!

SO WE GIT TO WORKING IN TEAMS OF TWO TO GET THE DOORBELL RINGERS MOVING!

OKAY, POP! AS USUAL, YOU'RE RIGHT ON THE BALL! PEGGY AND I WILL TAKE LOCAL 612!

MEANWHILE, IN THE HOME OF "GENIAL" JIM FYKSOR, BIG-TIME POLITICIAN OUT TO SMASH LABOR'S POLITICAL ROLE..

NOW, SEE HERE, JIM... WE'RE PAYING YOU GOOD MONEY TO KILL THIS POLITICAL ACTION THAT THE UNIONS ARE ORGANIZING! IT'S DANGEROUS TO OUR INTERESTS! BUT WE HAVEN'T SEEN RESULTS YET!

I DIDN'T FIGURE ON OLD POP STORM COMING OUT OF RETIREMENT TO SPARK THE UNIONS!

WELL, GET RID OF THE OLD MAN! IT SHOULDN'T BE HARD!

I'VE ALREADY DECIDED TO DO JUST THAT! I'M HAVING MY BOYS SEE TO IT THAT HE DOESN'T PLAY ANY PART IN THE ELECTIONS FROM NOW ON!

Chemical Workers Spurn Third Party

OVERWHELMING rejection of the third party, communist party "efforts . . . to interfere" in union affairs and anti-administration candidates for union office gave the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers' administration a clean sweep in the GC&CW convention July 21-24.

The 433 delegates represented a membership which had increased by 14,000 in the past 20 months. And results of their efforts back home showed up in reports on wage gains, many locals reporting straight hourly boosts totaling 46c since V-J Day.

Meeting in Milwaukee, Wis., they spurned Republican presidentitl candidate Thomas E. Dewey as decisively as they did Progressive Party Candidate Henry Wallace. Delegates made no indorsement, but resolved to follow CIO and CIO-PAC policy if and when the parent bodies support a presidential candidate.

Principal speakers were Allan S. Haywood, CIO organizing director; CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey; CIO PAC Director Jack Kroll and Assistant Labor Secy. John Gibson.

IN his address, Kroll indicated that he might not be opposed to supporting Pres. Truman for re-election as a result of his strong defense of labor and civil rights at the recent Democratic convention.

"It may be," said Kroll, "that the plain people of the U. S. have found another champion. It may be that Pres. Truman has found himself; at any rate, he has a new look now, and I must say that the new look becomes him. It may be that henceforth we as a nation will walk with sure feet along that road that was built with so much effort in the years that followed 1932.

"Let there be no misunderstanding. The CIO and the CIO-PAC have made no presidential endorsement. Before they make any indorsement they will study carefully the record and the promises that are made. They will weigh and study past actions and the actions of the immediate future."

Haywood urged his listeners not to permit themselves to become divided by political ideologies at variance with CIO policy. In addition, he bitterly attacked as untrue a story in the Daily Worker charging him with working to defeat the re-election of Ralph Helstein as president of the CIO Packinghouse workers.

CIO's organizing progress in the South has done much to wipe out sub-standard wages, said Haywood.

CONFINING himself to discussion of CIO's foreign policy, Carey hit at opponents of the European Recovery Program and invited questions from the floor "while I can answer them."

He compared ERP to the wartime Lend-Lease program. Under Lend-Lease the Soviet Union received $10,902,089,000 worth of production from the U. S. and that contribution was not made to enable this country to "get its foot in the internal affairs of the Soviet Union," he asserted. Neither was ERP an attempt to meddle in internal affairs of other nations, he declared.

The European aid program, Carey stated, is the only hope of the world to prevent future war. The CIO must combat the general attitude that war is inevitable, he said. The way to avoid such a catastrophe is to eliminate conditions which cause war, he explained, "and that means the standard of life of all the people must be increased."

A constitutional amendment adopted at the convention bars from holding union office members of the "communist party or Nazi or fascist organizations or any organization which owes its allegiance to any government other than the U. S. A. or Canada, directly or indirectly." Members of organizations promoting "doctrines of racial or religious discrimination' also are barred from office.

A companion resolution placed the union on record as rejecting "efforts of the communist party or any other political party or their adherents to interfere in the affairs of the union.'

Other resolutions denounced the 80th Congress, called for extension of social security coverage, nttional health insurance, passage of the Thomas-McCormack 75c minimum wage bill, price control and rationing.

Pres. Martin Wagner was unanimously returned to his fourth term as head of the union. Two vice presidents elected were Joseph Jay, Charleston, W. Va., and C. W. Danenberg, Greensboro, N. C. They defeated former Vice Presidents William Ross, Newark, N. J., and Charles A. Doyle, Niagara Falls, N. Y. In the race for the secretary-treasurer post, Cecil Martin was reelected to his fourth term over Alcott Tyler.

These successful candidates, all backed by the administration, were elected by overwhelming majorities.

NAACP To Press Ingram Defense

The fight to free Mrs. Rose Ingram and her two teen-age sons will go on, the Natl. Assn. for Advancement of Colored People announced after the Georgia supreme court upheld the murder convictions of a lower court.

The Ingrams were convicted by a jury for the self-defense slaying of a white farmer. They were sentenced to die in the electric chair.

Rieve Flays Congress at ADA Rally

A PANEL of three labor speakers, together with a former Congressman, attacked the 80th Congress at an ADA rally in Hazelton, Pa., last week.

The three labor speakers were Emil Rieve, vice president of the CIO and president of the Textile Workers; Lewis G. Hines, AFL national legislative Representative, and Byrl A. Whitney, Railroad Trainmen's research bureau. The former Representative was Daniel Flood, who is running for Congress with labor support.

All four denounced the Congress for passing Taft-Hartley and for failure to enact such vital legislation as public housing, minimum wage improvements, adequate social security, tax reduction and other matters.

Saying that the "odds are great," Rieve urged the election of liberals. "It must be done," he declared.

It was the first time in Hazelton's history that representatives of the three large labor groups had spoken from the same platform.

Profits Rising

Net income of 297 manufacturing corporations for the first quarter of 1948 was 26% above the comparable period last year, according to a New York Times survey.

Seattle Office Pay Tops Boston Rate

In January 1948, office clerical workers in Seattle were receiving substantially higher salaries than their Boston counterparts. This was revealed in recent studies made by the U. S. of Labor Statistics.

Women general stenographers in Boston had salaries averaging $37.31 a week in January 1948; the average in Seattle was $56.62.

'WFTU No Place For Cream-Puffs' — Carey

MATHEW WOOL for years has been a leader of the AFL isolationist bloc and an advocate of old-fashioned wing collars. In recent months his favorite occupation has been to fill blank pieces of paper with lots of ink, all of it calculated to argue the CIO into leaving the World Federation of Trade Unions.

Last week CIO Sec.-Treas. James Carey gave him a resounding "no" for an answer—and accused Woll of lolling "on the turret of his ivory tower."

The CIO, Carey said, has its coat off and may get its face dirty in the process of effectively fighting totalitarianism—but it's doing far more to help free trade union than Woll's pen-and-ink diatribes.

Carey's statement appeared in the New Leader, New York Social-Democratic paper, which had previously given Woll a page to expound his arguments against CIO's role in the World Federation of Trade Unions.

Woll has gotten considerable newspaper space for his long letters to CIO Pres. Murray urging that the CIO leave the WFTU—an organization to which the AFL is the only significant non-member.

CAREY said the AFL's attitude and its propaganda drive against CIO's membership in the world labor body spring both from a shop-worn isolationism and a desire to force the CIO into a secondary role in international labor affairs.

He recalled that Woll's isolationist record has included a fight against more liberal immigration laws, opposition to Reciprocal Trade Agreements, and opposition to the appointment of foreign-born U. S. labor men to posts as labor attaches for the State Dept.

He added that Woll's flat opposition to dealing with any government-controlled unions cannot be reconciled with his devotion to the American railway brotherhoods, which, during the recent period of government ownership were "government-controlled in exercise of the vital individual and union right to stop work."

THE CIO secretary-treasurer acknowledged that there are Communists in the WFTU—and also in the AFL, the CIO and the United Nations. But that's no reason to stop fighting for democratic ideals in any of those organizations, he noted.

"There have been difficulties within the WFTU," the CIO official said. "There will be more difficulties. A struggle is going on, and the arena is no place for cream-puffs.

"At issue is the question of whether or not the labor movements of the world will be taken over by reactionary totalitarianism. The CIO has elected to enter the arena and engage in the struggle; Mr. Woll prefers to loll in his ivory tower."

Carey pointed out that the CIO has "outstanding commitments" to free union forces in the French CGT, in the Italian CGIL and to the labor movements in Britain, Scandinavia, the Low Countries and alsewhere, all of which are members of the WFTU.

"These folks have their coats off, and we have our coats off too," Carey pointed out.

"Sure, we'll get our faces and hands dirty. We are not prepared to write off as lost to real democracy Czechoslovakia, Eastern Germany, Hungary, Yugoslavia and the people of the other nations that have fallen within the Communist orbit.

"Mr. Woll apparently is prepared to write them off and allow the free labor forces of other European countries to be written off along with them."

Carey recalled that Woll—who heads the AFL's international relations committee—has tried to make believe the CIO doesn't exist so that he may apply for an AFL monopoly of labor posts in government international agencies.

"The CIO is here to stay," he reminded Woll, "and we of the CIO will continue to run interferences for the free trade unionists of Europe in the light of their own experience, against the Communists and all other forms of reaction.

"Our past and continuing contributions to the welfare of the American people lead us to believe that our presence and participation inside and outside the WFTU alongside the free labor unions of Europe will inspire their confidence."

This page is as bare as the record of accomplishment of the 80th Congress at its special session.

How's Your Red-Rating This Week?

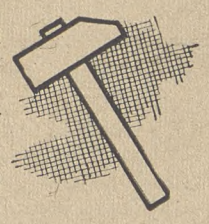
By ARTHUR RIORDAN

THEY talked until they were red in the face.

Which was perfectly all right—all left, should we say?—because it was the Communist Party's 14th annual convention last week in New York.



HAMMER

The convention was the most deadpan of all the conventions this year, except perhaps that of the Socialist Workers' Trotzkyites.

CP delegates heard the word, "Wallace," almost as often as they did the words, "Soviet Union." Peace—the Russian brand, natch—was another oft-heard phrase. And, there was bitter denunciation of the present drive by the Government against Communists.

To paraphrase it: the attack on the CP was, if you'll pardon the use of the term, a red herring to hide the misdeeds of the "bipartisan" 80th Congress.

And labor? Well, labor is a bad boy these days. Here's what Eugene Dennis, general secretary of the party in this country, had to say, sadly, of the state of the unions:

Right wingers: "Class collaboration policies pursued by the official national leadership" of the unions is an aid to Fascism. How is this done? Says he: by supporting the Marshall Plan, adhering to the two party system, red-baiting and anti-Soviet activity.

(Random thought: What's he mean, two-party system? Didn't speaker after speaker at the Wallace convention claim that the Democratic party is dead and that therefore the choice lies between GOPism and peaceism—which is Wallaceism?)

Who are Comrade Dennis' culprits? Well, there's Phil Murray, he says, and there's Dan Tobin. "It shows itself in the Murray-Tobin counsel to adopt a no-strike policy. It leads to the spectacle of trade union leaders who are against wage increases if the corporations are against them.

(Murray and Walter Reuther, head of the CIO Auto Workers, are usually the targets of Communist attack on the CIO. Murray's Steelworkers and Reuther's UAW recently won pattern-setting "third-round" wage increases.)

Left wing unions: Dennis gave them some hell, too. Leaders of these groups, he declared, including some Communists, have, too, "at times underestimated the fighting spirit of the working people. They have subsequently failed to give adequately bold and militant leadership and develop a broad united front on such issues as peace, against Taft-Hartleyism, for the rights of the Negro people and of the Communists."

He waxed more bitter. Why, he shouted, in some sections of the left wing, while a militant wage struggle was waged, there were "strong tendencies toward economism." And what's economism? The Daily Worker defines it as "the theory that workers have only economic but no political interests."

Dennis went on, saying he had noted particularly a hesitancy to build the new people's party and develop the alliance between labor and other sections of the population.

You have to have slogans, counseled Dennis. His suggestions: "In unity there is strength" and "an injury to one is an injury to all."

Things are mixed up, Dennis continued: "Division, confusion and backwardness still exist in the labor and progressive movements. We cannot gloss over these factors which enable the most aggressive and reactionary monopolies to press forward and advance the drive to fascism and war.

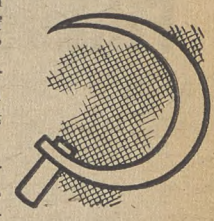
"But neither can we fail to appreciate the new trends in and the great strength and potential fighting capacity of the working class and of the entire anti-fascist and anti-imperialist camp."

WILLIAM Z. Foster, chairman of the CP, in his keynote speech (yes, the CP has a keynoter, too), declared: "They are brazen liars who charge that the Communist party is trying to dominate the new party or claim the credit for its formation."

But, in his address, Dennis stated: "It is essential that everything be done to build the new party organizationally, as a grass roots movement, and as a mighty shield and permanent bulwark for the people."

In May the CIO's Murray, addressing the Textile Workers' Convention, declared: "I charge that the Communist Party is directly responsible for the organization of the third party."

On May 20, the Worker, Sunday edition of the CP's official organ, stated in a "Draft Resolution for the National Convention of the CPUSA"—the convention which was held last week—that:



SICKLE

"The Communist Party, from the earliest days after the end of the war, understood that its traditional fight for a people's party directed against the two-party system of the monopolies had once more been placed by events in an immediate, practical question before the American people, and, acting upon this understanding, it boldly proclaimed the need for such a new people's party."

Anyway, Foster said the Progressive—Wallace—Party is in no way a Communist Party. Why, he insisted, the Progs—many of their leaders, that is,—"believe that the badly crippled world capitalist system can be saved and transformed into 'progressive capitalism'."

But, Foster declared, Wallce and his running and singing mate, Sen. Glen Taylor, will "rally hosts of workers, Negroes, farmers, veterans, women, youth, intellectuals and other patriotic Americans.

Where was Earl Browder, the bad boy who was expelled from the CP for Browderism? He was (a) having his reinstatement application rejected, (g) was still no doubt selling the Russian books of which he is sole agent in this country.

SWP Chides CP

The Socialists Workers' Party, through Farrell Dobbs, its Presidential candidate, has called on the Communist Party to forget "our profound political difference" and form a "broad united front" against the Smith Act, under which 12 top CP leaders have been indicted.

Dobbs recalls that in 1941 the SWP had been the first victim of the Smith Act and 18 SWP leaders were tried and jailed. He recalled that the CP at that time "ignored the danger inherent in the conviction" and "sought to obstruct all efforts to arouse the labor movement." "While you did not come to the defense of the Trotskyists, we have already made public our opposition to your indictment," Dobbs said.

Taylor Rebuffed

The plan of Sen. Glen H. Taylor, running mate of Henry Wallace, for a world government would bear the label, "made in Moscow," according to George Field, executive secretary of Freedom House.

Field's statement was in the form of a rebuff to Taylor's efforts to get Freedom House to back his plan.

Bolt Wallace

Six New Mexicans have bolted the Wallace Party, denouncing its attitude toward Communism and Russia.

The six are Frank A. Minns, state executive committee member; Alfred H. McRae, his wife, Camille, Wallace National committeewoman for New Mexico; Rafael Alfau, state party treasurer, and Norman Pear.

CIO'S ANTI-DISCRIMINATION AWARDS

ARCHBISHOP RITTER

THE CIO has announced these recipients of the annual awards of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination.

They are:

Most Rev. Joseph Ritter, Catholic Archbishop of St. Louis, who instructed all parochial elementary and high schools in his archdiocese to admit Negro students, despite the fact that the St. Louis public school system has a segregation system.

Branch Rickey, president of the Brooklyn Dodgers, for taking the leadership in admitting Negroes to the major baseball leagues.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organizations, for his years of organizing workers into unions where they share equally in the benefits, privileges and leadership, regardless of race, creed, color or national orgin.

Carl Holderman, president of the New Jersey CIO council, for his victorious campaign to secure anti-discrimination planks in the new State constitution.

The American Veterans' Committee, through its chairman, Chat Paterson, for its tireless campaign against discrimination in the armed forces and for fair treatment of all veterans.

Dr. Frank M. Furstenberg, Baltimore, who organized 50 physicians on a non-racial basis to aid members of the CIO Shipbuilding Union during their strike against the Bethlehem yards.

Clement Nitka, of the CIO Paper Workers, Elkhart, Indiana, for leading a successful campaign to end racial discrimination in that city's public schools.

NITKA started his crusade against scholastic segragation at the behest of his little daughter, who complained because twin Negro girls, who had been her playmates, were unable to attend the public schools because of their color. The twins attended a Catholic parochial school, which barred segregation.

Nitka, through his position as president of the Elkhart CIO Council, began his campaign through the school board in 1946.

When that board refused to end discrimination, he and the CIO backed candidates in the school board election. They failed in 1946, but last fall, when political action by the CIO scored a large number of liberal victories in Indiana's municipal elections, three anti-segregation candidates were elected as the majority of the school board. The mayor was elected on a similar pledge. The board immediately banned segregation.

A photograph of Clement Nitka had not arrived at the CIO News office at the time the paper went to press.

Pres. Madison Must Have Rolled Over in Grave

Republicans Aid Dixie Filibuster

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

Who are to be the electors of the Federal Representatives? Not the rich, more than the poor. Not the learned, more than the ignorant. Not the haughty heirs of distinguished names, more than the humble sons of obscurity and unpropitious fortune. The electors are to be the great body of the people of the United States.

THE words were written by a man from Virginia. He went to Princeton, returned to Virginia, studied law, eventually rose to high office.

His name was James Madison, fourth President of the United States.

Last week the special session of the 80th Congress played him for a sucker.

After days of the politest filibuster in recent history, the Senate bowed from its waist to the little band of men from the Southern states who were fighting the bill to outlaw the polltax. By a majority of 69-16 they voted an over-night adjournment on August 4.

The vote knocked the House-passed anti-polltax bill off the Senate calendar and into the 80th Congress's heaping legislative wastebasket.

The Southern Senators—largely from the seven states that still keep the tax as a requirement for voting—won their round. They did it with the help of an obliging GOP, which had talked civil rights but failed to practice what it preached.

ACTUALLY, the anti-polltax bill never reached the Senate floor.

It was Sen. Wherry (R. Nebr.), GOP Senate "whip" who brought the matter up for consideration. Wherry, early in the session, moved that the Senate consider the anti-polltax bill. The talk-talk artists from the polltax states took over at once.

It wasn't a rant-and-rave festival, such as the polltax defenders have conducted at various times in the past. This year, they talked about "grave constitutional problems" and "states' rights."

The Republican majority listened—and grinned. There was cooperation when the Dixiecrats needed time to gather documents, and liberal interpretation of the Senate rules.

The show ran on until Aug. 2. Then Wherry filed a petition—signed by 12 Republicans, 4 northern Democrats—asking that debate be limited. But, the polltax block appealed.

Debate can be limited only on "pending measures," not on parliamentary motions such as the one to "consider" the anti-polltax bill, the southerners argued.

And Sen. Vandenberg, the Michigan Republican, upheld their appeal.

Even Sen. Taft said the ruling left an "impossible situation," correctible only by "physical exhaustion" in keeping the Senate in session day and night until the polltaxers had worn themselves out on the rostrum.

The Vandenberg rule—that cloture can't be applied to motions to consider a bill—finished what little fight there was to achieve civil rights legislation at the special session. Two days later, the Republicans threw in the sponge and the polltax issue was wiped off the calendar.

BEFORE the talking was finished, though, Sen. Wayne Morse (R. Ore.) took the floor to blast the polltaxers, and to demand that the Senate next year change its rules in order that debate may be limited.

Morse, in a masterful analysis of U. S. election history and of the Constitution, argued that the polltaxes are "an effective economic barrier" to voting by all the people, as James Madison would have wanted.

Nearly 21 million live in the seven Southern polltax states, Morse pointed out.

"The polltax has an immediate . . . paralyzing effect on their privilege and opportunity to participate in the American electoral process," he said. "About half of them are disfranchised outright by the polltax requirement."

The final 69-16 vote to drop all further discussion of the anti-polltax bill found all Southern Democrats, with the exception of Sen. Pepper (D. Fla.), firmly allied with the GOP majority.

He said he'd offered the Republicans a plan for breaking down the filibuster—but had been told that Sen. Vandenberg and others had "bitterly opposed it."

Congress Gives You Something To Remember in November

HERE'S a point-by-point comparison (as of Aug. 5) of what the CIO asked Congress to do—and what the special session is doing about labor's demands.

CIO PROGRAM	CONGRESSIONAL ACTION
1. Cost-of-living controls through price freezes; excess profits tax; anti-monopoly legislation.	Substantially nothing. GOP preparing weak bill on credit controls—which may pass but won't stop inflation.
2. Housing program—including public housing, slum clearance, farm-area home building, low-rent projects.	Substantially nothing. GOP leadership fighting Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill; may pass weak do-nothing measure affecting mortgages and bank financing of homes.
3. Taft-Hartley Repeal.	Nothing.
4. Minimum wage bill improvements.	Nothing.
5. U. S. Aid to Education.	Nothing.
6. Civil rights bills—anti-poll tax, anti-lynch, anti-discrimination.	Nothing. With GOP cooperation, southern Democrats filibustered anti-polltax bill off the calendar.
7. Improved social security program.	Nothing.
8. Natl. health insurance program.	Nothing.
9. Adjustment of veterans' benefits.	Nothing.
10. Improvement of Displaced Persons Act.	Nothing.
11. A permanent farm program—with farm credit, soil conservation and similar provisions.	Nothing.
12. Approval of $65 million loan to UN for headquarters in New York.	Approved by House Committee; due to be passed by House and signed by President.

Senate Unit HearsBanks, Ignores CIO

WHEN you read this paper, Congress may already have packed up and gone home.

Writing a story about Congress before it's adjourned is like describing a baseball game on the basis of the seventh inning score.

But as Congress comes close to rounding up the second week of its special session, the final results seem pretty obvious. The special interests won, the people lost—again.

The Republican leadership didn't want it to be an active session, and they succeeded. Tom Dewey called the convening of Congress a "frightful imposition" on 531 men who are paid good salaries to represent the people.

So the GOP settled down to a toast-and-water legislative diet for the special session. The civil rights program was butchered. A phony anti-inflation bill and an even weaker housing bill were introduced and prepared for passage. They won't keep prices down, they won't build homes—but they'll give Republican candidates the ghost of an alibi during the months ahead, CIO leaders said.

ABOUT the only bill definitely slated for passage was the $65 million loan to the United Nations.

While the Republicans ran the show, many of the Democrats failed to show much pep in the Congressional punching contest.

When the anti-inflation hearings opened before a Senate Committee, no Democrats were present. Few Democrats attended the hearings, though the anti-inflation program was the foundation of Pres. Truman's message to Congress.

The CIO attempted to present its anti-inflation program to the Senate Banking Committee. They weren't interested.

Committee members told the CIO that only "government witnesses" would be welcome. But the committee scheduled testimony from a group of private bankers.

Scarcely batting an eyelash, committee officials "explained" that banks belong to the Federal Reserve System, and therefore bankers qualify as "government witnesses." (You pay social security taxes, and by the same reasoning could be a government witness, too.)

CIO Sec.-Treas. James Carey, in wires to leaders of the Senate and House, asked the Republican bigwigs to reverse themselves and permit CIO officials to testify.

ABOUT the only battle of the Congress came when Sen. Charles Tobey (R. N. H.) insisted that the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill be passed, and that the GOP substitute be dumped. He demanded that the House pass the T-E-W bill, as the Senate had done last spring.

But some committees, of course, were busy. The House Labor Committee badgered leaders of New York CIO department store unions. Rep. Clare Hoffman (R. Mich.) scooted off with a Labor sub-committee to muddy the waters of the Univis strike in Dayton, Ohio.

Lobbies Spent 3½ Million In 6 Months

LOBBIES—good, bad and indifferent ones—reported they spent $3.5 million in the first six months of 1948 to influence the activities of the 80th Congress.

Nine organizations spent more than $100,000 each during the first six months, it was revealed in a survey of the lobbying registration forms made by the Congressional Quarterly. The figures are kept on file in the office of the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The law is unclear, however, as to what constitutes a lobbying expense. Some outfits include all their expenses; some list only those they think apply directly to lobbying.

Biggest lobbying expenditure came from the Citizens Committee on Displaced Persons—a united group supported by labor, business, civic, and minority organizations—which listed expenses of $286,467. (The Displaced Persons Bill passed by Congress was severely criticized as biased and insufficient by the Committee, which is now seeking improvement in DP legislation.)

Some $244,012 was spent during the half-year by the Committee for Constitutional Govt., Inc., an ultra-conservative group in which Frank Gannett, upstate New York publisher, is the kingpin. The committee asked for lower taxes, lower government expenses and repeal of the Wagner Act. It got most of what it asked for.

A lobby with a fancy name which gets much of its money from drug manufacturers was third on the list. It's the Natl. Physicians Committee for the Extension of Medical Service, and it spent $240,727. This lobby is against the health insurance program advocated by labor and liberal groups.

The fight to repeal oleo taxes brought up big money on both sides. Two organizations—the Natl. Association of Margarine Manufacturers and Leo Burnet Co., a publicity firm working closely with the trade group—together spent just over $300,000 in support of oleo tax repeal. The Natl. Cooperative Milk Producers Federation, battling successfully to keep the oleo taxes, spent $128,590.

Two big trade associations were also among the top nine spenders listed with the House Clerk. They are the Natl. Association of Electric Companies, representing the power trust, which reported all expenses at $148,354; and the Natl. Association of Home Builders, which fought like crazy against the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill. The NAHB's expenses for the half year were $131,640.

The Committee for the Marshall Plan—which had varied support from all groups in the population—spent $129,495 in its effort to get ERP adopted.

Here are figures for other big industrial and trade groups:

Association of American Railroads	$83,628
Independent Bankers Association, Portland, Ore.	76,694
Natl. Association of Real Estate Boards	66,952
States Rights Association, Houston, Tex.	66,597
Southern States Industrial Council	49,075
National Association of State Chambers of Commerce	44,724
Chamber of Commerce of the U. S.	40,407
Natl. Economic Council, Inc.	38,348
Natl. Association of Manufacturers	Not Yet Filed

P. S.—If someone gives you a spiel about the "all-powerful labor lobby," remind him that CIO's lobbying expenses for the half-year were $12,694—far below the amount spent by many of the business groups.

The Awful, Awful 80th

A few weeks ago we hung the tag "Awful 80th" on the Congress that had packed up and gone home without tackling two of the nation's most serious problems—inflation and housing.

Today we're changing the phrase so it becomes "Awful, Awful 80th."

That having been done, we now take off our gloves and wade into those august gentlemen who have turned the special session into a nauseating farce.

First, let's dispose of the question of who's been playing politics with whom.

Harry Truman, Tom Dewey, the Democrats, the Republicans, the Progressives and the Dixiecrats are playing politics—clear up to the hilt.

And now let's take up the question of who's getting whacked over the knuckles by the fiasco on Capitol Hill.

Just take a look at your own hands, unless you're rolling in profits, and you'll find the answer.

The people, as differentiated from the special interests, are taking a beating.

They're taking a beating on prices and housing and civil rights.

Maybe they'll strike back in November, when the voters have their chance to express approval or disapproval of those up for re-election.

WE SIMPLY DON'T CARE

We, frankly, don't care whether pure humanitarian motives or impure political motives prompted President Truman to call the 80th Congress back into session on Missouri's Turnip Day, July 26.

He did call a special session and he did place before Congress a program worthy of serious consideration.

He provided the GOP-controlled body with an opportunity to tackle the serious cost of living and housing problems and to act on other important matters.

Congress not only muffed the opportunity but provided the nation with a disgraceful demonstration of its contempt for the public's respect.

The anti-Truman Southern Democratic bloc stalled the session with an anti-polltax filibuster—and the Republican leadership just stalled.

Parliamentary maneuvering was substituted for consideration of the problems at hand.

THE PUBLIC IS LOSER

We won't know until November—if then—who the winner was in the legislative-political sham battle that has been going on in Washington, but we can name the loser without any difficuty.

He's known in many quarters as John Q. Public.

He's the guy who's been suffering from high prices and inadequate living quarters.

He's the guy who's been yelling that something should be done to curb inflation.

He's you and me and the family that lives next door.

As this is written it appears possible that the GOP leadership may poke a puny finger or two into the holes through which the forces of inflation are gushing.

But the leaders themselves had already made it plain they wouldn't double up their fists and really slam away at the major causes of high prices.

As we said before, it's a nauseating farce!

They've Been Swallowed Up Rapidly

2450 Formerly Independent Companies 'Disappear' In Less Than Eight Years

By ALLAN L. SWIM

YOU have about as much freedom and independence as a convicted burglar when you live in a "company" town.

The company you work for also is your landlord—and your grocer—and your clothier.

You walk on company-built sidewalks, live in a company-owned house and ride on company-built streets.

The schools and churches are company dominated and the law enforcement officers are company selected.

The only way to get away from the company, even for a moment, is to get out of town—and that's what you'd better do if you get in bad with the boss.

That's because you're a victim of monopoly.

ANY person who ever worked in or tried to organize a union in a "company" town should be able to appreciate the recent warning of the Federal Trade Commission:

"No great stretch of imagination is required to foresee that if nothing is done to check the growth in concentration, either the giant corporations will ultimately take over the country or the government will be impelled to step in and impose some form of direct regulation in the public interest.

"In either event, collectivism will have triumphed over free enterprise and the theory of competition will have been relegated to the limbo of well intentioned but ineffective ideals.

"This is a warning which the Commission has repeated time and again, and one which some of those who have the most to gain by the preservation of competition seem determined to ignore."

IN effect, what the FTC said was that if monopoly is not curbed the U. S. will become a "company" nation or it will place stringent controls on big corporations.

The FTC, which doesn't go around yelling "wolf, wolf" just to scare people, had good reason to issue such a warning.

It had made a survey which showed that since 1940 a total of 2450 formerly independent manufacturing and mining companies had "disappeared."

They were victims of what the FTC termed "the merger movement"—and a merger is a business marriage based on the theory that two can make more money if they become one than if they remain separate.

OH, so "monopoly" and "mergers" are dull subjects which you ordinarily read about only on the financial pages—if you read the financial pages.

Maybe so, but the men responsible for the "merger movement" aren't dull. They make the headlines and are featured in the news.

They make thumping speeches about "preservation of free enterprise" and about "competition being the life of trade."

They're quoted at length after they make heated public pleas for "restoration of the American way" and after they shout "down with collectivism."

They're the guys who set the wage patterns, boost the prices and lead the fight against unions.

NO, this is not a blanket indictment of the nation's business and industrial interests.

Many small firms have been forced to merge to keep from being forced out of business by their giant competitors. Many independents have sold out to the big corporations to avoid bankruptcy.

But this hasn't made the threat of growing monopoly any less serious.

The country faces the choice of preventing and breaking up monopoly today, of controlling it later or of being subjugated by it.

You can kiss democracy and real free enterprise goodbye if we settle for control or submit to subjugation.

NARROWING CORRIDOR AT HOME

N. Y. Times Probes Rep. J. P. Thomas

MILTON LEHMAN tried to find out for the New York Times what goes on in the mind of Rep. J. Parnell Thomas, chairman of the House Un-American Activities Committee, which is currently probing the Communist influence in the U. S. government. Excerpts from Lehman's article which appeared in the Times' Sunday magazine section follow:

Asked to define such labels as "Communist," "Fascist," "subversive" and "un-American," the Congressman buzzed for his secretary and asked her to bring in "that list on communism and the rest of it I always use." He wagged his finger. "Every time I define them," he said, "I do it differently . . ."

Congressman Thomas' secretary appeared at the door with a carbon copy of his definitions. He read them aloud.

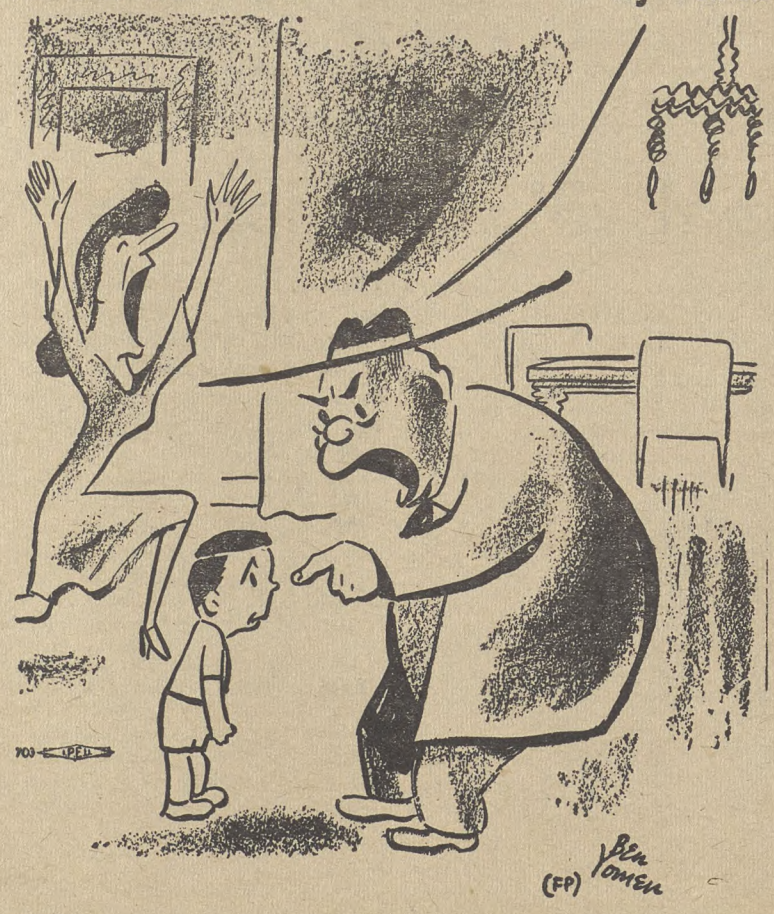
"Communism," he said, "is the enslavement of the people through a dictatorship of the proletariat.

"Subversive is the attempt to undermine and destroy the accepted form of government.

"Un-American is the attempt to harm America."

Lehman reminded Thomas that he had not yet defined fascism and asked him if he could also say what democracy meant. "Fascism," he ruminated. "I guess I've never been asked to define it. I'd say it's just like communism, dangerous to America. And democracy," he concluded, "why, everybody knows what that it."

CONGRESSMAN DRIP By Yomen



"My own flesh and blood! Couldn't get through a picketline!"

Yes, Yes, It Was Mighty Bad, But--

THE badly-beaten organizer was carried into the hospital emergency room and stretched out on an operating table.

The doctor tackled the worst wound first. It was a nasty gash—and the man groaned as it was sewed up.

Finally the job was completed and the CIO man, still wearing a blood-soaked shirt, slid from the table and walked on wobbly legs from the hospital.

He was not the first—or last—person connected with the organizing drive at the big rubber plant to suffer a company-inspired beating.

FINALLY a union was established at the plant—but there was more trouble ahead—much trouble.

Management refused to play ball with the union. It took the position it wouldn't do a thing for its employes unless forced by the union to do so.

Soon a "strike wave" started and hardly a week passed without at least one department being shut down by a walkout.

THE nation learned soon after Pearl Harbor Day that it was suffering from an acute rubber shortage.

Workers at the "strike-happy" plant buckled down to their jobs. Before long they were working six days a week, then seven.

Later the shortage eased a bit—and management began turning the screws again.

Men and women—overworked and worried by the war—were given a bad shoving around. There was stalling on negotiations and stalling on settlement of grievances.

Things gradually went from bad to worse.

Then, one day, a small group of workers turned off their machines and walked out of the plant in the middle of a shift. Others followed. Within a matter of minutes a full-fledged unauthorized strike was under way.

UNION leaders, bound by a no-strike pledge, pleaded and cajoled in an effort to get workers to return to their machines.

They wouldn't budge. "Get things straightened out first, then we'll go back," they said.

Officers of the union and the city industrial union council got together and searched for a possible solution.

They wanted to get management straightened out, get the workers back on their jobs and avoid denunciation by the press.

Finally, somewhat in desperation, they set up a "fact finding Committee," which worked for hours and then issued a report.

ONE newspaper carried the full report on its front page and commended it editorially. Another paper gave it a good play.

Management pulled in its horns and the strikers went back to work. Production was soon back to normal.

Requests came in from many parts of the country for copies of the report, which had sharply criticized both employer and employe.

THE report said the workers had no business staging a wartime walkout, especially in violation of a no-strike pledge.

It charged management with taking advantage of the no-strike pledge and provoking the walkout.

Strike-curtailed production, the report said, about equaled production deliberately curtailed by management in an effort to make a good impression on military "brass" and Radio Commentator H. V. Kaltenborn.

The company had been shutting down its machines for an hour or so before each group of visitors arrived—just to make sure there would be enough material on hand for all workers to be operating at full blast during the inspection tours.

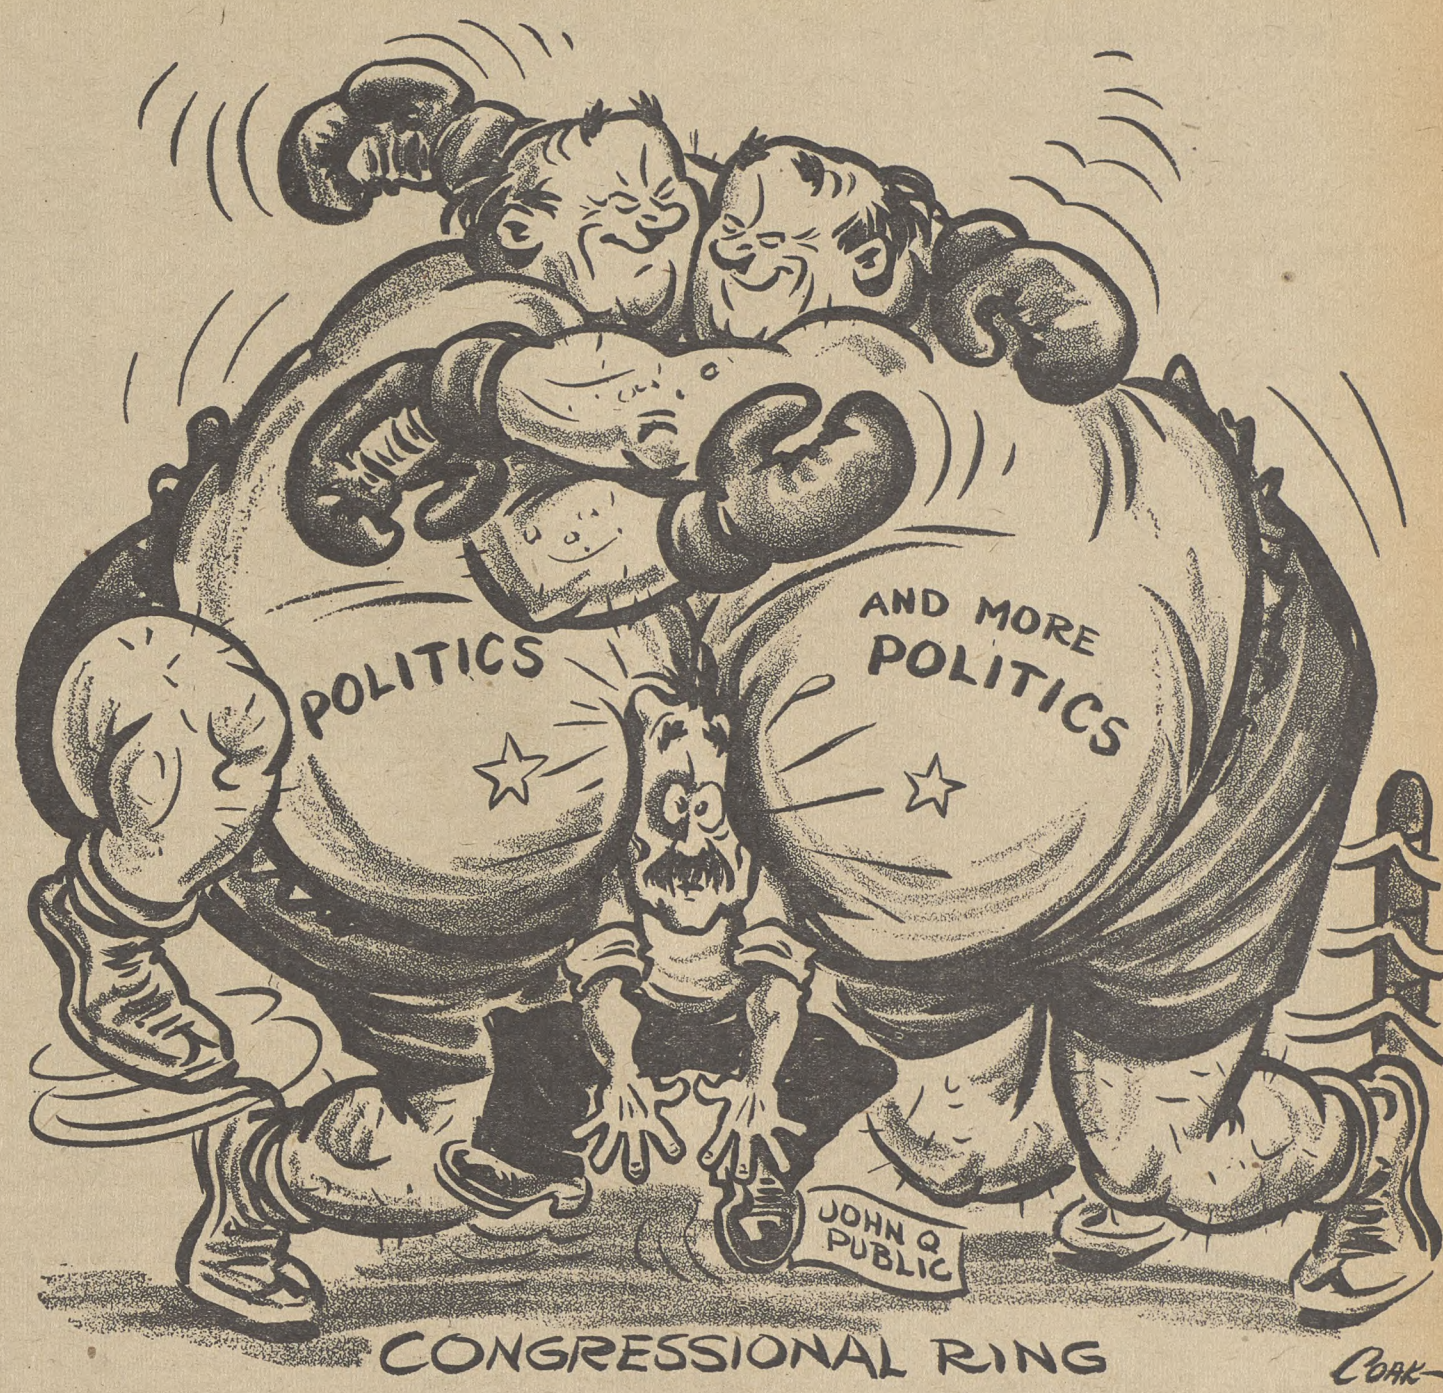
We Don't Know Who Is Winning--But We Know Who Is Losing



A Union Man Is An Honest Man

THE following item is from the CIO Brewery Worker. It needs no comment:

A few weeks ago, Gerald Edell, a member of our Beer Drivers' Local 24, Brooklyn, received the following letter from Mr. Philip Liebmann of the Liebmann Breweries, Inc., (Rheingold Beer) of that city:

Dear Mr. Edell:

It has always been our opinion that the Rheingold employe group—especially the trailer drivers—was a fine one, but it is very pleasing to have confirmation of this from an outsider.

We thought you would be pleased to see the attached copy of a note we received from Ethel J. Eisemann, and the copy of our reply.

The other members of the management join me in telling you how very deeply we appreciate your kindness and loyalty in converting Miss Eisemann's gratitude to yourself into a nice boost for our company.

Many thanks for a swell job of public relations!

The letter from Miss Eisemann referred to by Mr. Liebmann was addressed to the "Personnel Director" of Liebmann Breweries and said:

Dear Sir:

To meet with honesty in this day and age is a most gratifying experience. On Tuesday night, I lost my wallet, and before I even discovered my loss, a Mr. Edell called me to say he had found it. I called at Mr. Edell's home to recover my loss. On examination, I found its contents, including eleven dollars in cash, to be intact. I offered Mr. Edell a reward, which he refused. This act of kindness and honesty on the part of Mr. Edell has won a new customer for Rheingold Beer.

I couldn't let Mr. Edell go entirely unrewarded, therefore this letter of merit to his employers. Thank you for such a fine selection of personnel.

In his reply to Miss Eisemann, Mr. Liebmann wrote:

Dear Miss Eisemann:

It was most gratifying to us to receive your kind and courteous note about our driver, Mr. Gerard Edell, and to know that he was able to be of service to you.

We are delighted, of course, that Mr. Edell's admirable act has won a new customer for Rheingold, but it is infinitely more pleasing to us to learn that it is through the personal integrity and sterling character of one of our employes that so much good will is reflected to our organization.

We know that you will agree that we are mighty fortunate to have a man of Mr. Edell's fine calibre working for us. Many thanks, again, for your thoughtfulness in bringing this to our attention.

The incident became known to the officers and members of Local 24, and they thought it merited a story in The Brewery Worker, a thought with which we are in full accord. The above letters speak for themselves, so there is nothing we need add except that Brother Edell is a credit to our organization, and we like to think that his "personal integrity and sterling character" are typical of our entire membership.

TWUA Honors Hero

A gold life membership card has been presented to Marine Tech. Sgt. James F. Dowd by Local 227, CIO Textile Workers, Lawrence, Mass.

Dowd, a paraplegic, was formerly employed in the Ayer Mill, Lawrence. Life membership had been voted to Dowd some months ago, but last week was the first time he was well enough to attend a banquet in his honor. He had undergone numerous operations. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel F. Dowd, sat proudly at each side of his wheel chair as he received his card.

Laud Ewing's Stand

Federal Security Administrator Ewing was applauded last week by Local 17, CIO United Public Workers, for his decision to abolish discrimination against Negro workers in the Baltimore offices of the Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors Insurance.

Max Shain, Chairman of the Social Branch of the Baltimore UPWA Local, pointed out that Ewing's agreement with the Union came during the week before the President's Order against discrimination in Civil Service was issued.

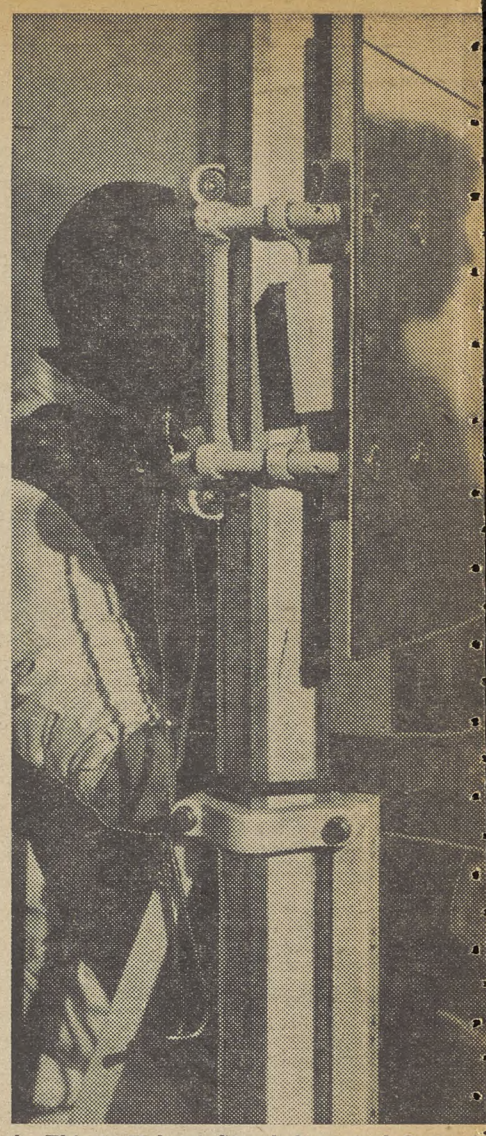
Here Is Helmut

On this page, the CIO News prints the simple story of a lad you never heard of before — Helmut Stoeckel.

Helmut is a trade unionist. He is an Austrian. He was undernourished until his union, with the unstinting aid of the American Friends Service Committee, sent him to a rest home in Austria's Carinthian Alps. The pictures on this page show graphically the story of Helmut—who is symbolic of the hardship that youth of postwar Austria is undergoing.

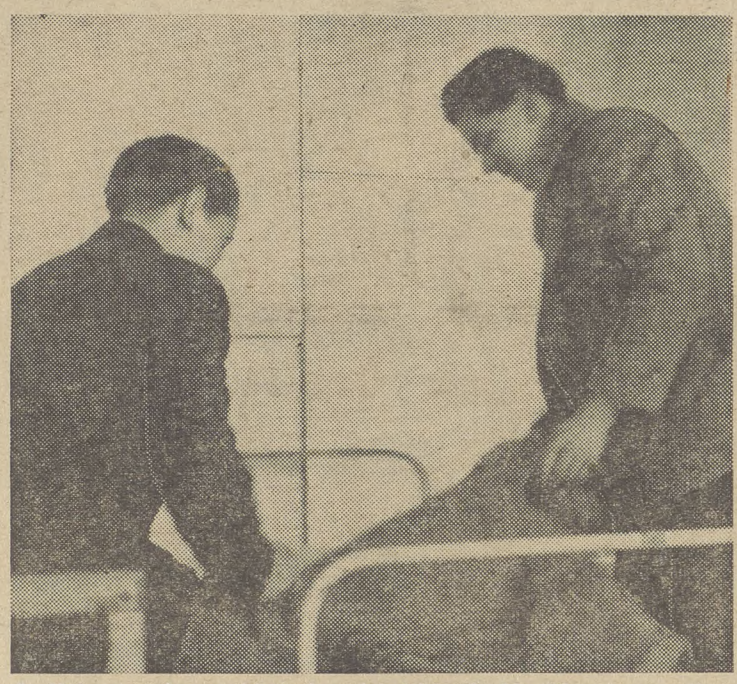
Most of the 67,000 Austrian apprentices — like Helmut — have to live and work and try to keep healthy on a diet which consists largely of black bread, ersatz coffee, soup and occasionally meat.

2. Master Painter Johann Franke shows Helmut how to apply priming to a chair. The Austrian apprentice system has been in effect for centuries. Helmut gets 30-odd schillings a week, practically nothing. (If he bought a meal out, it would cost 15 schillings.)



1. This is Helmut Stoeckel, central figure in trade unions and the American Friends' S you will note, Helmut is being put through a His age? Looks 12, but actually is 17! Dr. practitioner supplied for the Nussdorf Ap trade unions, finds that Helmut, still under gerously underweight, must go to a rest ho tices who reported in January for a routine c to be tubercular.)

3. Helmut and his colleagues laugh over comic books—even as American boys do. They are reading the books in the day room of the Nussdorf Apprentice Home. There are 100 boys in the home, which is located in Vienna's suburbs.



4. Helmut makes up his bed, assisted by a buddy. These apprentices have learned Austria is one of the most heavily unionized countries. Of a population of less than 7,000,000, Austria has more than 1,200,000 union members.

5. Helmut noted that he seemed to be allergic to paint fumes, so he went to the welfare division of his union. Here, Mrs. Mela Svacek, founder of the rest home program, gives him a sympathetic interview. The doctor then found he was underweight. Mrs. Svacek put him on the list for the rest home. (The headquarters of the Friends' Committee is at 20 S. 12th St., Philadelphia, Pa.)

INCOME

Here's how the average Austrian working family spends its income, according to a study in "Solidarity," the Austrian trade union magazine.

A skilled machinist, with a wife, a 16½-year-old daughter and a 2½-year-old son, earns about $15.60 a week. His daughter, an apprentice worker, contriubtes aout 10 schillings a week to the family fund.

More than two-thirds of the family's budget goes for food —about $10.25. The diet includes small amounts of milk; bread; canned horse meat; a variety of dried foods like raisins, spaghetti and oatmeal. Rent, carfare, taxes and miscellaneous items amount to another $3.

Clothing must be bought and maintained out of a $1.90 a week left over after paying the costs of day-by-day living expenses.

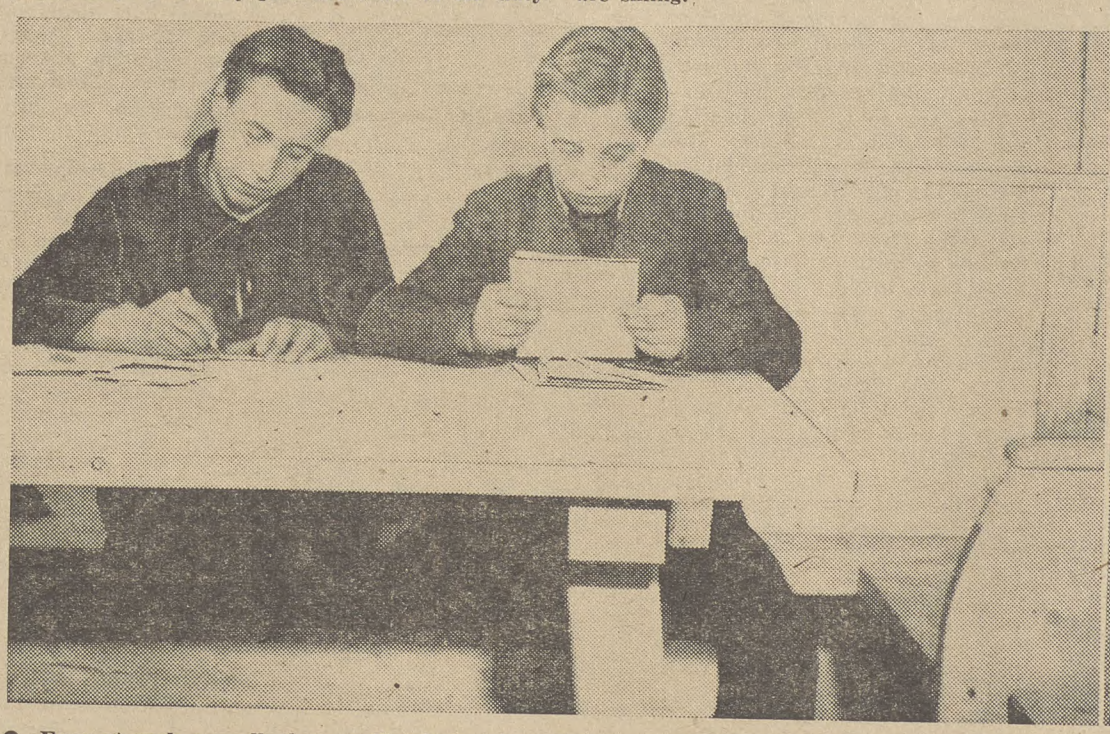
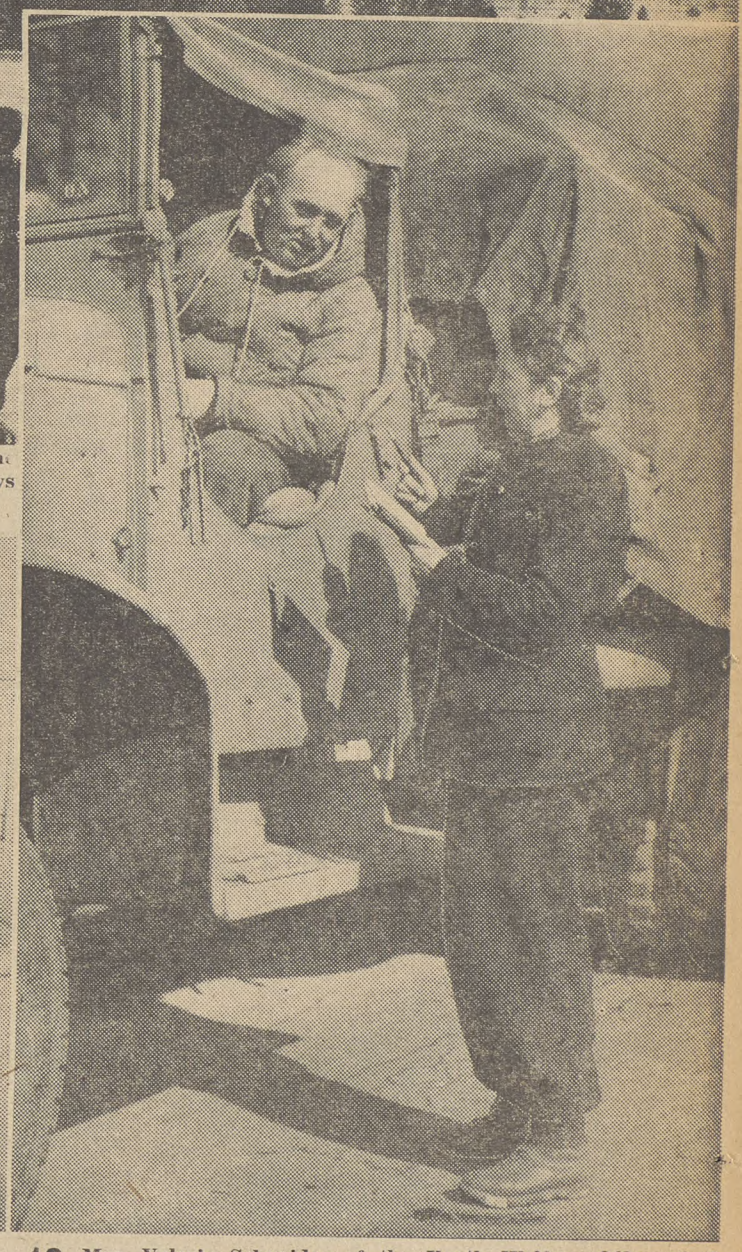
6. This was Helmut's first glimpse of the Moosham rest home. Note the sign giving credit to the American Friends for their aid. Moosham, a cluster of barracks, is located in a valley of the Carinthian mountains. The temperature varies 40 degrees a day, so that at midday one can loaf in the sun without a shirt.

7. Helmut basks in the sun at midday, warm despite the snow beneath him. He has already lost his city pallor.

8. Everybody must pitch in and help at Moosham. Each day, 10% of the boys are on kitchen police duty. And, they pick the order of KP duty themselves. At right, Helmut gazes in awe at the breath-taking Carinthian mountains. Other boys are skiing.



9. Even at such a swell place as Moosham a boy naturally gets a little homesick. So. Helmut and another boy write home. The day at Moosham had been a restful one. Up at 8, the boys had a good breakfast. There was fun, then lunch, the "quiet time" (napping or reading), more fun, a dinner, usually thick stew, evening entertainment and bed at 9. Contrast that to Helmut's routine at the Nussdorf home. Up at 5, make bed, breakfast (three slices of bread, ersatz coffee); work, back at 6, dinner, lights out at 9. Helmut's Moosham stay added 12 pounds to his weight.



10. Mrs. Valerie Schneider of the Youth Welfare Office of the trade union, talks to Karl Zinsler, driver of the Quaker "six-by-six" which brought American Friends' supplies to Moosham —and also to other rest homes, including the one for girls at Mittewald. The cargo consisted of sugar, fats, blankets, furniture and a new stove.

Textile Union Wins Rayon, Cotton Increases Mine-Mill; Shoe Unions Get Rises

WAGE increases won by the CIO Textile Workers from two leading textile manufacturers promise to set a pattern for major rayon producers and the Southern cotton mills.

The union last week broke through three weeks of constant meetings with the huge Dan River Mills, Danville, Va., and came up with an 8% increase for the company's 12,000 workers.

If the procedure of past years holds true again, the rest of the Southern cotton textile manufacturers will follow suit, thus affecting 600,000 workers in both union and non-union mills.

As the Aug. 1 contract expiration date approached, TWUA Exec. Vice Pres. George Baldanzi joined the local negotiations and helped conclude the talks just 24 hours before the deadline.

For the 12,000 Dan River employes the settlement will mean $2 million extra a year. The raise amounts to about 9c an hour and brings the total of increases won by Southern cotton workers since the war's end to about 45c an hour.

SHORTLY after this settlement, TWUA cracked the American Viscose Corp. The new contract raises pay for the 18,000 workers in seven plants by more than 16c an hour. It is expected to set a pattern for settling negotiations now on between TWUA and the Celanese Corp., Cumberland, Md., and Rome, Ga.; and Industrial Rayon Corp. plants in Cleveland and Painesville, O., and Covington, Va.

The increase adds 15c to the basic hourly rates, but the boost in shift premium, calculated on a percentage of the base rates, pushes the actual increase up to 16c. On some key jobs, such as spinning, the increase will be 17c. Retroactive pay to June 27 will bring an additional sum of $40 to $50 to each worker.

Since V-J Day Viscose workers have won 47½c in pay boosts, bringing average hourly earnings to $1.45.

SHIP: Eugene Grace, head of Bethlehem Steel Corp., made two separate announcements last week, one about profits and one about pay.

He reported that in the last three months, Bethlehem cleared almost $16,000,000 after taxes had been paid—with a special increase in the corporation's shipbuilding business (backlog of ship orders $100,000,000).

He also issued a statement condemning the CIO Shipbuilding Workers for seeking ratification from the membership before signing a new contract. Bethlehem offered a 9½c wage package which was rejected by 28,000 workers in nine yards because it only gave them a 7c-an-hour flat increase which they considered inadequate.

Union members said they weren't satisfied with the package because it was not enough, it didn't compare favorably with a 9% increase granted the office workers in the steel division, and steel prices have been raised.

MINE, MILL: An 11th hour settlement with American Smelting & Refining Company's plant in Tacoma, Wash., brought a 12c hourly pay boost to CIO Mine Mill & Smelter Workers. The local's more than 1000 members had been gearing up for a strike.

SHOE: Some 4000 CIO Shoe Workers in New York City will receive an approximate 10c an hour increase under terms of a new agreement with the Shoe Mfgrs. Board of Trade and I. Miller & Sons.

Independent shoe manufacturers were expected to accept the same pattern thus bringing raises to another 2500 employes.

ARMED TO THE TEETH: When 1500 Ohio natl. guardsmen arrived at Univis Lens Co., Dayton, Ohio, where the CIO Electrical Workers have been on strike more than 13 weeks, they found three women pickets. Non strikers are shown here entering the plant between the line of the militia who were armed with rifles, machine guns and automatic tear-gas guns and equipped with armored cars and Sherman a tank.

Two Say Dewey Hit Teachers' Lobby

It's the word of GOP Presidential candidate Thomas E. Dewey against that of Govs. Maw of Utah and Gruening of Alaska, as to whether or not Dewey has called teacher propaganda for higher pay "the biggest lie since Hitler."

Both Maw and Gruening, in statements released by the Democratic Natl. Committee, insist that, at the Governors Conference at Portsmouth, N. H., Dewey had bitterly attacked teachers' lobbies.

They quoted Dewey as saying, in a closed session, that the teachers' lobby "is the most vicious lobby in the nation today. It it isn't stepped on now, it will destroy the nation. It's worse than the power lobby, the real estate lobby, the oil lobby, the liquor lobby and a lot of others."

James C. Hagerty, Dewey's press aide, answered by calling the Maw and Gruening accounts of the meeting "rubbish."

Maryland's ('Free State') Courts Threaten Free Press

NEWS censorship by the courts is having a trial run in the Free State's largest city, Baltimore.

The first show-down on the issue will occur Oct. 1 when five Baltimore radio stations and a radio announcer will be given hearings on contempt charges, based on broadcasts concerning the arrest of a janitor on a charge of murdering an 11-year-old girl.

They are accused of violating rule 904 of the Baltimore Supreme Court, which forbids police, public officials and even defense counsel from making any statement about the conduct of a person accused of criminal offense or to quote him.

The court also bans the publication and broadcast of such statements.

This rule drew the following statements from Secy. - Treas. Ralph Novak of the CIO Newspaper Guild:

"The current effort in Maryland to suppress news through Rule 904 of the code of criminal procedure would deny the public the right to full knowledge of matters affecting the safety and welfare of the people and presents the added problem of screening possible derelictions of duty by public officials.

"There are rules to insure noninterference in the dispensing of justice without gagging the press, censoring the news and keeping the public in the dark."

THE Guild's Washington local, some of whose members are employed on Maryland newspapers, was quick to act on the news gag. A membership meeting passed a resolution attacking the ruling as restricting press freedom in violation of the U. S. constitution and of the Declaration of Rights of Maryland.

The threat to the free press is not confined to Baltimore. A subcommittee of the State Court of Appeals has recommended to the court's committee on rules that the Baltimore plan be extended to the entire state.

An example of how ridiculous the rule is was shown last weekend when a Baltimore newspaper printed a crime story interspersed with paragraphs such as:

"Statement reportedly made by young Livingstone to his father cannot be published because of rule 904 of the Supreme Bench of Baltimore."

$1.05 Minimum Asked In Govt. Contracts

Following up its recent demands for an 87c-an-hour minimum for cotton workers employed on government contracts, the Textile Workers is now asking a $1.05 minimum wage for woolen and worsted workers employed on government contracts.

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve, in announcing the request to the Wage & Hour Division of the Labor Dept., pointed out that minimum wages on such contracts are set by the Secretary of Labor, under the Walsh-Healy Act.

Use Militia To Break Walkout

THE story of how the national guard was used to squelch a strike by CIO Electrical workers at the Univis Lens Co., Dayton, O., reads almost like an account of a major military expedition.

As told by the Chicago Tribune on Aug. 4:

"Maj. William Mussey led a tear gas squad out of the plant's front door, shouting, 'If they get tough, let them have it.'

"Behind the tear gas squad came a helmeted company of guardsmen wearing gas masks and carrying rifles at the ready.

"From one side street came a medium Sherman tank and from another came an armored reconnaissance car.

"The tank moved down the road, while the armored car took to the sidewalk. Both vehicles propelled mobsters in front of them like snow shovels moving through drifts.

"A heavy weapons company moved in front of the plant with a .50 caliber water cooled machine gun. This was set up and trained on the crowd.

"Capt. Norman Witt of Cincinnati led a gas detail across the street, holding a cylindrical automatic tear gas gun in his hands.

"He began firing as he reached the mob . . .

"A truck filled with troops carrying bayonets reinforced the armor in the street. Within 10 minutes the area was reported cleared."

ACTING on behalf of the Ohio CIO Council, Secy.-Treas. William Lavelle emphatically urged Governor Thomas J. Herbert to withdraw the National Guard units he had dispatched to Dayton in the Univis strike situation.

Lashing out at the governor's order, which he termed "unwarranted and deplorable," Lavelle told Herbert "your impatience with rejection by democratic processes of proposed settlement is no justification for use of troops against American workers."

THE 92-day-old strike began when the company refused to bargain with UE. Meanwhile, an NLRB representation election, in which UE was barred from the ballot for failure to file non-communist affidavits and financial data, gave a majority to the AFL.

An agreement to end the strike was finally reached, but was turned down by the UE membership. Although it provided an 11c hourly increase, the proposed pact would have sent the question of the rehiring of 11 workers to arbitration. It would have operated only pending final decision by the NLRB as to whether UE still represented the employes.

Last week the union made another attempt to end the bitter conflict, as national guardsmen escorted strikebreakers through picket lines. The membership voted to empower UE negotiators to make an agreement without subsequent ratification by the rank-and-file. On this basis, Gov. Herbert said he would attempt to arrange another meeting between the union and the company.

MURRAY SPURS PHONE WAGE DRIVE

TWOC Sets Up Action Committee

CIO Pres. Philip Murray has assured the CIO Telephone Workers' Organizing Committee of his "willingness to participate with you personally in your efforts to bring the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. into line with the wage increase pattern established in the third round of increases."

Murray's statement was made after A.T.&T. refused to grant its employes a general wage increase and other benefits.

The TWOC executive board, meeting last weekend in Washington, took these important actions:

1. Elected Richard W. Long secretary-treasurer to succeed Ted F. Silvey, who has been named executive assistant to the labor advisers of the Economic Cooperation Administration.

2. Acted on Murray's statement, which was in the form of a letter addressed to the board, by setting up an Action Committee, which is designed to involve the various communities, all CIO unions and all telephone workers' organizations in a pressure campaign to force a decent wage settlement out of A.T.&T. and its manufacturing and operating subsidiaries.

3. Pledged support to the Association of Communications Equipment Workers (who install Western Electric equipment in exchanges) in their efforts to achieve a wage increase. The motion authorized other affiliates of TWOC to participate if necessary in ACEW's "cold" strike against A.T.&T.

MURRAY'S letter to the organizing committee said:

"I have been observing with concern the economic disadvantage of telephone workers in comparison with other groups of workers in our industrial and service communities.

"I am cognizant of the fact that since 1939, while workers in 30 basic industries have been showing consistent gains on an hourly and weekly wage basis, telephone workers have fallen from seventh to twenty-second place in that group.

"In recent months, while CIO unions have established a pattern in basic industries for the third round of wage increases, the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, parent corporation of the major operating and manufacturing corporations of the telephone industry, has consistently and adamantly ignored the needs of its employes for commensurate wage treatment. During these same months this company's subsidiaries have appealed for and been granted vast sums in rate increases, thereby adding untold millions of dollars to their profits.

"It behooves the Telephone Workers Organizing Committee, with the assistance and active support of the CIO, to overcome with every means at its disposal the stubborn and unwarranted refusal of A.T.&T. to meet its moral responsibilities to its employes by granting them wage increases which will permit them to maintain a decent American standard of living. Our people must not be harried and distressed by an inability to meet the drastically rising cost of living.

"I urge upon you the task of uniting all workers in an effort to win for telephone workers their rightful wage status.

"I want to assure you at this time of my willingness to participate with you personally in your efforts to bring A.T.&T. into line with the wage increase pattern established in the third round of increases. The plight of the telephone worker is the personal concern of every CIO member and shall be regarded as such until victory is yours."

THOSE who attended the working meeting of the TWOC board included:

Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization, who is also chairman of the TWOC board; Long, Ernest Weaver, vice chairman and president of the ACEW; John J. Moran, vice chairman and president of the American Union of Telephone Workers, which covers long lines workers;

Margaret Weiss, president of the Maryland Telephone Traffic Union (operators), which just recently joined CIO; Norma Naughton, president of New York Local 1, AUTW; W. D. Barry, president of the New York ACEW local, and Henry Mayer, attorney.

LONG, a native of Lancaster, Pa., attended Franklin and Marshall College and Northwestern University.

He became vice president of the Federation of Telephone Clerks of Illinois in 1938 and was elected president in 1939. He joined the TWOC and became a board member in 1947.

He is married and has a son and two daughters.

The AUTW and ACEW are the two nation-wide unions within TWOC. A.T.&T. operates the long lines division on a national basis, so AUTW operates the same way. The Western Electric set-up handles installations also on a national basis, thus ACEW has a similar organization.

There are a large number of local and state phone groups in TWOC.

UAW Accepts Die Casters

The CIO Auto Workers Executive Board last week approved an agreement providing for the affiliation of the National Association of Die Casting Workers with the UAW.

Affiliation discussions with the UAW-CIO were authorized by the National Executive Board of the NADCW last July 23. Discussions have been proceeding since that date between committees from each organization. The terms of the agreement will be submitted to a referendum vote of the NADCW membership.

UAW expects that the affiliation will add approximately 20,000 members to the UAW-CIO.

The NADCW was originally organized as an independent national CIO affiliate in 1937. In 1942 it executed a merger agreement with CIO Mine, Mill.

The 24 local unions originally affiliated with the NADCW withdrew from the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers after a conference last June 25 and 27, because of disagreement with the national leadership of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, particularly with regard to the refusal of the leadership to sign the Taft-Hartley anti-communist affidavits. These 24 local unions re-established the NADCW.

NLRB Poll Is Protested

Results of an NLRB election among Oppenheim Collins department store workers in New York City, in which the AFL won a majority, have been challenged by leaders of striking Local 1250, CIO Retail, Wholesale workers and the parent international union.

Local 1250 Pres. Nicholas Carnes charged that the election climaxed "an unprecedented reign of terror by management."

The CIO local was barred from the ballot because its officers refused to sign non-Communist affidavits. Although an attempt by Intl. Pres. Samuel Wolchok to get an injunction restraining the Aug. 2 election, which was timed for the day Local 1250 members went on strike, was denied, he did get an order from Federal Judge Sylvester J. Ryan directing the NLRB to show cause why it should not be restrained from officially certifying the AFL union as bargaining agent.

The NLRB had earlier denied the international union a place on the ballot on grounds that it was "fronting" for Local 1250.

Local 1250 members picketing the two stores Aug. 3 marched in the shadow of huge signs put up by management which said: "The issue is communism." The union said the issue was wages.

Well, Anyhow, They Got Into The CIO

T-H or no T-H, employes of the Fellsmere Sugar Producers Association were going to get into the CIO Packinghouse Workers—even if it meant a triple play from John L. Lewis' District 50 to the CIO Stone Workers to the Packinghouse Workers.

Last October, CIO organizers reported, these workers in Fellsmere, Fla., "were so anxious to get into the CIO that 192 of the 191 signed a petition to that effect. (Presumably, one two-fisted writer signed twice.)"

They wanted to get into the Packinghouse Workers' sugar division, but at that time the union had not taken all the necessary steps to qualify under T-H and so could not appear on the ballot. So the CIO Stone Workers went on the ballot.

By the time the T-H-burdened NLRB got around to conducting the election, the slack season had arrived and only 59 persons were on the payroll—a boon to CIO organizers who would have had several hundred to campaign among if the election had been held when petitioned for. A majority of these voted for the Stone Workers.

Since then the UPWA has qualified under T-H, and Fellsmere workers are expected to complete the complicated switch from District 50 by transferring soon to UPWA.

Long Lines Union May Re-open Pact

PRES. John J. Moran of the CIO American Union of Telephone Workers (Long Lines) has called a special meeting of the union's executive board in New York City Aug. 10 to consider wage reopening.

Under the contract with American Telephone & Telegraph Co., accepted by a 3,043 to 1,610 vote of the membership, the union may reopen wage talks at any time. The contract did not provide a wage increase at the time it was negotiated last June.

Moran pointed to a recent survey by the Labor Department which shows that wage increases averaging 12½c per hour have been won by unions representing 12,000,000 workers.

"The wage picture," he stated, "has changed entirely since AUTW concluded its negotiations. Every major employer has moved on wages except AT&T.

"Prices are at an all time high and there is every indication that they will move still higher. Telephone workers badly need wage increases to keep their heads above water in this inflationary flood.

"Latest profit figures of AT&T reveal that the company's second quarter earnings were $61,601,106; the highest since 1937. For the first six months of 1948, AT&T earned $5.41 per share for an annual rate of $10.82. This annual rate is the highest reported since 1929.

"AT&T has always boasted that it meets wage trends in other industry. That trend is well established. The national pattern is 12½ cents per hour.

"THE company can well afford to meet the wage pattern. In the last year it has won rate increases totalling $141,000,000 in permanent increases and $8,000,000 more in temporary increases. It has pending applications for between $70,000,000 and $80,000,000 more in rate increases and is expected to obtain permission from state regulatory bodies to incorporate about 80% of the amount it is seeking into its rate structure.

"We would be remiss in our duty if we did not continue our fight to win wage increases for our members. We sincerely hope that AT&T is at last ready to deal fairly with us in our efforts to win wage increases for telephone workers that are long past due."

The contract was negotiated last June 2. The 60-day voting period required under the union's contract expired at midnight August 2.

Results of the balloting were forwarded to Cyrus K. Ching, director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, and to Sumner Slichter, chairman of the Board of Inquiry appointed by President Truman to investigate the facts of the AUTW-Long Lines dispute.

The Board was recessed on June 2 to permit a vote by the union members. With the acceptance by the union of the contract, the Board of Inquiry is expected to be dismissed by Truman.

Biz Said No Money For More Pay, Profits Rise 25%

Wall Street Paper Tells Of 'Take'

By GLORIA CAPLAN

WHERE do those extra dollars we pay out in higher prices go?

Industrialists say they go into workers' pockets. They say prices were pushed skyward to cover higher wages.

Well, last week something that looked remarkably like those same "higher price" dollars turned up—not in overall pockets—but among industry's second quarter profits.

The Wall St. Journal—no labor propaganda outfit they—analyzed reports of 141 publicly-held corporations, excluding transportation and public utilities, and found net profits during the April-through-June months had jumped 25.8% over the same period a year ago.

On top of the heap was the fabulous oil industry. Profits for the first half for 27 leading oil companies jumped 82% over the corresponding 1947 period, breaking all previous records. United Press reported the percentage gains ranged from 206% for Superior Oil Co. (California) to 28% for Deep Rock Oil Corp. Eleven of these firms more than doubled their earnings for the first half of 1947, while 15 went up by 90% or more.

The coal industry came in next, with a net take in the second quarter which was higher by 64.4% than in the corresponding period the previous year. Auto profits jumped 44.7%.

(While this rosy profit picture covered the financial pages, Ford Motor Co. announced it would raise its prices a second time in two months. On June 18 the company pushed prices on its 1949 models up by $85 to $125 a car.)

Gross income for manufacturers was right up there, too—15% higher the first half of this year than in the 1947 period, according to the Dept. of Commerce. And the department's office of Business Economics scotched arguments that the jump resulted largely from greater volume of goods sold. While some of it could be attributed to that, most of it came directly from higher prices, the agency pointed out.

Here are some reasons why corporations are happy these days—and while you read them, remember that your dollar is worth less than at any time since the U. S. became the U. S.; and remember, too, that corporations earlier this year vowed they couldn't pay wage increases:

U. S. Steel Return Bigger

BLUSHINGLY the CIO News admits that it added chickens and geese last week and got what you'd expect—the bird.

In computing the profit U. S. Steel made on its recent price increase after deducting increased cost of labor and coal, the writer attributed the entire industry's increased coal bill to this one corporation, instead of U. S. Steel's share of about 35%. Thus, U. S. Steel's gain from its price increase became even more dazzling than reported.

Taking into account figures made available since publication of the story, the corrected picture of U. S. Steel's profits and prices is as follows:

A generous estimate of the cost to U. S. Steel of its recent wage boost is $70 million annually. (This is arrived at by taking 35% of U. S. Steel's share of the $200 million estimated by the industry as the industry-wide cost of the new pay boost.)

The increase in U. S. Steel's coal bill will cost it about $29,750,000 annually, again based on 35% of the industry's own estimate of $85 million as the total increased costed.

Together these add up to about $99,750,000, in increased labor and coal costs. But U. S. Steel imposed a price boost of more than twice that amount.

The annual price increase will amount to about $210,600,000 for U. S. Steel. This is based on the announcement by Iron Age, the industry's spokesman, that the new price increase amounts to $10.53 per net ton, instead of $9.34 as originally announced by U. S. Steel for public consumption.

If U. S. Steel does not sell more steel than last year—20,000,000—this price rise amounts to $210,600,000. Subtracting the increased labor and coal you uncover a $110,850,000 profit for U. S. Steel on the deal.

Now, who causes inflations?

The Department's Office of Business Economics, which advanced the estimate on the basis of preliminary data, pointed out, however, that while there was some gain in the volume of goods sold, most of the jump in the value of sales could be attributed to higher prices.

Finds GIs Eager For Union Information

Frank McCallister, director of the Georgia Workers Education Service, which is supported by all branches of the Georgia labor movement, recently was invited, as a union man, to lead a series of army discussion groups at Ft. McPherson.

More than 800 enlisted men and NCOs attended McCallister's classes. Officers, noting the keen interest of most of the men in the discussion of labor history and trade union practices, were amazed. McCallister even got applause from his audiences. As one officer told him later: "The applause you received was unusual. They rarely applaud even guest speakers in the Army."

One of the enlisted men was heard to remark: "Why don't we have more speakers like that?"

A burglar recently broke into the office of Local 216, Auto Workers, at South Gate, Los Angeles County, Calif., and stole $89.50.

Senators Kill Housing

With Sen. Robert Taft (R., O.) leading the march against his own bill, the Senate last week killed the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill and substituted a weak sop to the real estate lobby and the House GOP leadership.

The Upper Chamber adopted the substitute measure, sponsored by Sen. Joseph McCarthy (R., Wis.) by a 48-to-36 vote. In so doing it abdicated its previous stand of sticking by the TEW bill, which it passed earlier this year.

Twenty-four Democrats and 12 Republicans stood by the TEW bill to the end, while 37 Republicans and 11 Democrats supported the substitute. Among the Republicans voting against TEW was Sen. Irving Ives (R., N. Y.), who usually reflects the views of Gov. Thomas E. Dewey.

The McCarthy bill omits public housing, farm housing, slum clearance and research provisions contained in the TEW measure.

We Say It Again; Rep. "Best Stock" Scott!

THE pace of PAC work throughout the land:

Rep. Hugh (Best Stock) Scott (R., Pa.), chairman of the Republican National Committee, has indignantly — well noisily, anyway—denied that he ever said—as reported a week or so ago right here in these columns—that the Republicans came of "the Best Stock."

Best Stock Scott also denied saying that several years back when the late Philadelphia Record—which was then supporting the Democratic Party—and the Republican Philadelphia Bulletin both had stories quoting him to that effect. Here's the Record's reply:

"Editor's note: The Record news story about Mr. Scott's Lincoln Day speech was written by Thomas P. O'Neil, The Record's political editor for many years. He heard the speech. He states emphatically the Congressman was accurately quoted. Mr. O'Neil's reputation for accuracy and fairness is well known."

(Note: Tom O'Neil is now publicity man for the Pennsylvania Manufacturers' Association, dominated by GOP Boss Joseph Grundy, who reportedly ordered the Republicans to hire his man, Scott, as chairman.)

So, the CIO News repeats:

Rep. Scott once said that Republicans came of the "Best Stock."

The Wisconsin PAC has ousted seven members accused of "misinforming CIO members on the Wallace Party."

The ousted members:

Edward Bobrowicz, Fur & Leather, a candidate for Congress on the Wallace ticket; Phil H. Smith, Electrical Workers; James de Witt, Farm Equipment; Gus Tomlinson, Fur; Allan Bjorklund, Public Workers; Paul Gardner, Food, Tobacco; Richard Morgan, Maritime.

PAC Natl. Dir. Jack Kroll sent a telegram to all presidents of inter-national CIO unions, urging that they "delegate at least one observer from your organization to sit in the Congressional galleries in order that they may report to our members from first-hand observation the conduct of these paid representatives of the people—the guardians of the country's well-being."

The wire was sent as the Congress, ignoring any legislation remedying inflation, was preparing to scram out of Washington.

The executive Board of Local 100 of the CIO Transport Workers' Union has passed a resolution denouncing the American Labor Party, the Communist Party and the Greater New York City CIO Council.

TWU natl. Pres. Michael Quill resigned as president of the council because it refused to adhere to CIO policy against a third party in 1948. The ALP and the CP are supporters of the third party.

The Local 100 resolution also ordered all local officers and staff members to resign from ALP or or resign their posts with the local. The vote was 24 to 10.

In another TWU local, 101, the executive board had voted to remain in GNYIUC. Last week, the Nassau commercial section and the Canarsie clerical section of 101 adopted resolutions demanding that the local quit the council.

Essay Winner:

Why Should Big Biz Be Main Cheese?

PRETTY Catherine Mitcho knows what Congress ought to do for the American people.

And she knows how to put it into writing, too.

So, it wasn't any surprise to her friends that Catherine, a resident of Stockton, Pa., was the winner of an essay contest—"Why Labor Should be Interested in the 1948 Elections"—conducted by the Penn-Appalachian Joint Board of the CIO Textile Workers.

The P-A Joint Board covers Wilkes-Barre, Scranton, Hazelton and a number of other towns in the hard coal section of Pennsylvania. Catherine, who'll vote for the first time this year, is a member of the Local 181, Duplan Corp., Hazelton.

The prize for the best essay—it was open to 5000 members in 17 locals—was a trip to Washington to see Congress in action. With Catherine came three other rank and filers, a staff member and the joint board's educational director, Olga Corey.

They carried a petition, signed by the 1600 members of Catherine's local, asking Congress for action. The petition was handed to Sen. Francis Myers (D., Pa.).

Here is the winning essay:

"Today, the labor in the U. S. is at a critical point. As it is, the government has some control over the unions.

"If the wrong men or women are elected into Congress, we will be helpless. Our Unions will be broken up. Many will lose their jobs. Our wages will be cut. We will have to work twice as hard as we are now.

"If the right men and women are elected into Congress, we will be able to fight for our rights. They will aid us in every way as possible. They will see that such laws as the Taft-Hartley Bill are done away with. They will see to it that our rights are as good as any manufacturer's.

"We should elect someone that will fight for reduction in prices and taxes. They will also fight for our equal rights. We must vote for the people that are reliable and honest.

"OUR recent union shop elections show that we are interested in our unions. We know that since the unions are here, they have aided us in many ways.

"They fought for higher wages, insurance, seniority rights and greater improvements in working conditions.

"All unions must get together in the coming election and vote for the right persons, if they wish to be established forever in this country. Why should the manufacturers be always the main cheese? Give us a chance!"

Boss Crump Beaten With Labor's Aid

THE resurgent people of the South have scored a major victory over political bossism.

In Tennessee last week, an aroused electorate turned on Boss Ed Crump and handed him the first state-wide lacing he has ever taken.

With the full support of every segment of organized labor, Rep. Estes Kefauver won the Democratic nomination for U. S. Senator and former Gov. Gordon Browning became the nominee for Governor. Both defeated Crump's handpicked candidates.

Crump had taken full-page advertisements in newspapers, labeling Kefauver the "tool" of CIO-PAC, even hinting that Tennessee-born Kefauver was a foreigner.

REP. KEFAUVER

But, in Crump's own county, of which Memphis is the core, a group of prominent citizens—businessmen, professional men, civic leaders—united to oppose Crump for the first time. And the editor of the afternoon Scripps-Howard paper there engaged in a running battle with the Boss.

CIO, AFL and Rail Brotherhoods were united for the first time behind anti-Crump candidates. W. A. Copeland, CIO director, put it this way:

"Two years ago, we made a lot of noise, did no work and took a beating. This time we made no noise, worked like hell and won for the people."

Kefauver defeated incumbent Sen. Tom Stewart and Judge John A. Mitchell. Ironically, Crump ditched Stewart in favor of Mitchell, who came in a bad third.

KEFAUVER will oppose former Republican Natl. Chm. Brazilla Carroll Reece in the fall election. Reece defeated Allen Strawbridge in the GOP primary.

Browning won over incumbent Gov. Jim McCord.

It was a sweet victory for Browning. When he was governor in 1936-38, he broke with Crump. In revenge, the boss licked him for reelection. Since then, Browning has been a county judge and served with the Army overseas.

His GOP opponent will be Roy Acuff, a hillbilly singer, who won over Robert Murray.

First Voter

CIO Reg. Dir. W. A. Copeland claims he was the first Tennesseean to vote for Estes Kefauver in the primary.

He mailed an absentee ballot to his polling place in Memphis two weeks ago.

CIO Vice Presidents To Meet Aug. 19

Pres. Murray has called CIO's executive officers to a meeting in Washington August 19.

Attending the meeting, in addition to Pres. Murray, will be CIO's nine vice-presidents and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey. In addition, Director Jack Kroll of the CIO Political Action Committee has been asked to be present.

The nine vice-presidents are: L. S. Buckmaster (rubber); Joseph Curran (maritime); Albert Fitzgerald (electrical); John Green (shipyard); Allan S. Haywood, director of organization; O. A. Knight (oil); Walter Reuther (auto); Emil Rieve (textile); and Frank S. Rosenblum (clothing).

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler of Southern California reports that he has been advised by Robert Person, Brewery Workers Representative, that that union won a unanimous vote in a collective bargaining election at the East Idaho Brewing Co., Pocatello, Idaho. George Bauer of the Los Angeles Brewery Workers office was in charge.

The CIO Shoe Workers is continuing to sweep plants of the International Shoe Company in union shop elections, it is reported by CIO Reg. Dir. Delmond Garst, St. Louis. In St. Charles, Mo., the vote was 726 for, 34 against in one plant and 80 for, nothing against in another. In Sikeston, Mo., the vote was 520 for and 4 against. Shoe Workers Rep. Dave Wilson has been conducting these campaigns.

The Shoe Workers in Ohio, too, are indicating their satisfaction with this union by voting overwhelmingly for the union shop. Reg. Dir. George DeNucci reports that the Columbus plant of the A. C. Godman Shoe Co. voted favorably by 133 to 5. The Logan, Ohio, plant of this company voted 240 for the union shop and 14 against. Shoe Workers Reg. Dir. George Martin conducted these campaigns.

Reg. Dir. Joseph M. Walsh, Wilkes-Barre, reports that the CIO Auto Workers won a union shop election with the employes of the Murray Corp., Scranton, Penna., by a vote of 1017 for to 50 against. UAW Reg. Dir. Martin Gerber and UAW Staff Rep. John J. Spillane recently negotiated an improved contract at this plant which included a 13c an hour wage increase.

The writer, who is Chairman of the Telephone Workers Organizing Committee, met with the committee's executive board last weekend. The CIO is making remarkable progress in this field and conditions continue to become more and more favorable for even greater successes.

The great problem facing telephone workers today is that of bringing their wages into line with the wages of the other workers in the country. To date the American Telephone and Telegraph Co. has refused to meet the wage pattern established by the CIO.

The TWOC and the CIO are determined to take the leadership in breaking down the resistance of A. T. & T. The writer met the week before last with the head of the Western Electric Co., the manufacturing branch of A. T. & T. and received from him the first commitment obtained this year to meet the wage pattern. It will take a little time to work this out and plans are being made to develop the kind of action which will prevent this company from forgetting its promises.

President Murray has interested himself in the cause of the telephone workers and in a letter to the committee's executive board stated that he will participate actively in this fight.

Pres. Richard W. Long, of the Federation of Telephone Workers of Illinois, was elected secretary-treasurer of TWOC to replace Ted Silvey who has left us to take a position with ECA.

Campaign Southern

Natl Dir. Van A. Bittner of the CIO Organizing Committee reports the CIO in the South won 15 elections and "held its own" in a 16th election during the last half of July. In the latter election, the employes of Florida Agricultural Supply Co., Jacksonville, Fla., voted 21 to 3 to retain the CIO United Transport Service Employes as their bargaining agent in a decertification election.

Florida Dir. Charles Cowl reports: Fellsmere Sugar Producers Association, Fellsmere, Fla., 38 votes for CIO Stone Workers, five against. Foley Lumber Co., Jacksonville, Fla., company recognizes CIO United Transport Service Employes without necessity of election. Nacco Fertilizer Co., Jacksonville, Fla., company recognizes UTSE-CIO without election.

North Carolina Dir. William Smith reports: Bryant Rock & Sand Co., Neverson, N. C., 55 votes for CIO Stone Workers, 23 against. Armour Fertilizer Co., Wilmington, N. C., 86 votes for CIO Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union CIO, 4 against. Sterling Cotton Mill, Frankinton, N. C., 175 votes for Textile Workers, 77 against. Eureka Lumber Co., Washington, N. C., 69 votes for Intl CIO Woodworkers, 13 against.

Alabama Dir. Carey Haigler reports: J. R. Raible Co., Alabama City, Ala., no votes were cast against USA-CIO. The company employes 28 men, all members of the union. T. R. Miller Mill Co., Brewton, Ala., (saw mill division) 159 votes for IWA-CIO, 26 against. T. R. Miller Mill (creosoting division) 91 votes for IWA-CIO, 14 against. T. R. Miller Mill (box veneer div.) 183 for IWA, 28 against.

Mississippi Dir. Robert W. Starnes reports: Dixie Pine Products Co., Hattiesburg, Miss., 62 votes for CIO Chemical Workers, six against.

Tennessee Dir. Paul R. Christopher reports: Shelco Milling Co., Memphis, Tenn., 16 votes for IWA-CIO, two against. Bluff City Paper Stock Co., Memphis, Tenn., 11 votes for CIO Paper Workers, 6 against.

Arkansas Dir. Lee F. Tucker reports: International Shoe Co., Searcy, Ark., 169 votes for CIO Shoe Workers, 119 against.

"LABOR has got to go into politics and stay in politics if our people are going to have any security and peace," PAC Dir. Jack Kroll told some 1500 CIO members at a statewide rally. Kroll said he'd 'had enough' of the GOP leadership of the 80th Congress. So had Ohio PAC leaders, who hung a big "Had Enough?" sign on the balcony of their rally hall. For details of the meeting—and for Kroll's comments on Truman, "smug little men with smug little minds" and "stooges for Moscow," and the 80th Congress, particularly the Ohio delegation—see Pages 6 and 7.

U. S. ECONOMIC ADVISER KEYSERLING:

'Ingredients For Economic Explosion Stewing in The Boiler of Inflation'

By GLORIA CAPLAN

THEY listened politely as he laid down before them a skillfully detailed story of the American Crisis. It was a true story, a stark revealing story, an unfinished—as yet—story, and it had all the elements of a tragedy.

Leon H. Keyserling, vice-chairman of the President's Council of Economic advisers, was stepping out of his role as adviser to the President for the first time and was personally pleading with the Senate Banking & Currency Committee to do something about inflation before it is too late. He gave them the causes and effects, the danger signals and — most important—the remedies.

The Republican-controlled committee thanked him, promptly forgot him and his unpleasant warnings and several days later hurried home with the rest of Congress to concentrate on "more important" things — getting re-elected.

Keyserling had told the committee many things they didn't want to hear, things the American people should know:

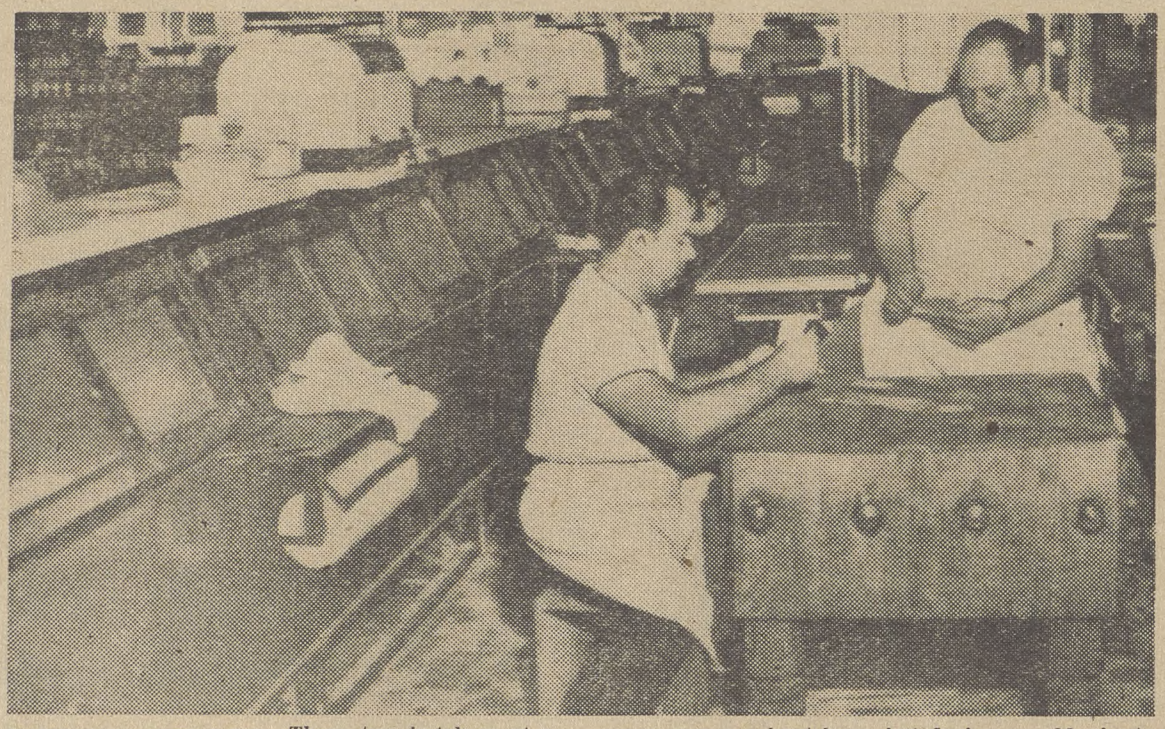
First the economist hit some of the myths big business groups have been circulating:

ERP Jeopardized

"The inflationary process is jeopardizing our whole program of aid to the free countries of western Europe, along with all of our objectives for the restoration of better international economic relations as a foundation for permanent world peace . . . The inflation is affording a talking point for such enemies of our foreign policy within our own gates as look elsewhere than to America's best interests for their guidance or command."—Keyserling.

MYTH: The big money supply is the evil to be combatted in fighting inflation.

KEYSERLING: A big money supply is not bad in itself. Rather, it is the worsening relationship between the various economic factors, for instance, wages, profits and prices—that is dangerous. For instance, he noted that an increasingly smaller share of the national income has been going to employes, while the corporate profits hunk has been increasing.



BUYERS' STRIKE: These two butchers at a Hollywood shop have so few customers that they put in their time playing cards. There are ordinarily so many buyers that seven men are kept busy, but during one 26-minute period these two butchers made only two sales. A number of buyers' strike are in progress through the Country.

In 1929, he said, wages and salaries constituted 65.9% of the nation's financial pie, dropping to 62% the first half of this year. On the other hand, corporate profits constituted 8% in 1929, but are taking up 12.3% of the national income today.

MYTH: Workers are better off than ever before and therefore don't need wage increases.

KEYSERLING: Real earnings have gone down since 1946—a 10% cut for all wage earners, a 15% cut for clerical and professional workers. Savings and debts are another gauge of how well workers are faring. Last year about 57% of the families earning under $1000 a year and about 41% of the families making between $1000 and $2000 went into debt or barely broke even.

By early 1948 about 27% of all "spending units" had no savings at all. About 55% had less than $500 put away. "There can be no disputing the truth that inflation is imposing an intolerable and ever-increasing burden upon millions of families."

MYTH: Increased productivity will solve everything.

KEYSERLING: "Mere increase in production will not by itself correct the maladjustments already indicated in the price-income structure; taken alone, it might even accentuate some of these maladjustments, particularly the general balance between production and consumption."

To support his fear that consumer income would eventually become insufficient to take a general increase in production of goods off the store shelves and counters, he noted that consumer expenditures for goods and services have already started falling. They dropped from 71.1% of the national product in 1939 to 65.2% the first half of 1948. In some areas, however, increased production would be highly desirable, as in steel and housing.

MYTH: Building more houses would be inflationary. (Recently echoed by Sen. Taft.)

KEYSERLING: "If there is a housing shortage and if this is contributing to excessive housing costs . . . then the production of more housing is anti-inflationary . . ."

BUT, he pointed out, two things are necessary to supply the labor and materials and to prevent the housing boom from becoming a bust:

1. Allocation of building materials is necessary to prevent them from being channeled into non-essential building; and

2. There must be greater construction of low and moderately-priced houses, as would have been encouraged by the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill, just killed by the 80th Congress. Unless the industry does this, "there is certain to be a collapse in the postwar building boom" as soon as the "relatively thin market" for high-priced housing is saturated.

MYTH: Curtailment of demand would reduce prices.

KEYSERLING: "This is nothing more than a sugar-coating of the bitter pill that inflation, of course, will be over when unemployment mounts and when the economy passes from a 'sellers' to a 'buyers' market." He warned that we "cannot begin rolling down this kind of hill without rolling into the valley."

MYTH: The problem of restraining industrial prices is less serious than that of restraining farm prices.

KEYSERLING: "The fairly steady upward march of industrial prices . . . is a cause of genuine concern. The reason for this is that these prices are in large part administered or at least partially administered prices, which we know from repeated experience do not respond so rapidly or so sensitively as farm prices to changes in the composition of demand."

(Thus the steel corporations, for instance, arbitrarily impose price increases; while farm prices react immediately to the rises and falls of demand.) In addition, it must be remembered, he said, that the rise in farm income has tended to make up for the disproportionately low share farmers were receiving before the war.

As for industrial prices, there is the serious danger that if they are permitted to go still higher, wide-scale unemployment and large cutbacks in production will precede any voluntary price reductions—the mark of depression.

Keyserling offered the following prescription for this creeping economic paralysis, no part of which could do the job alone, he said:

- Selective price controls
- Allocation of scarce materials
- Higher minimum wage
- Continued farm price supports
- Restraining "such wage increases as would break through necessary price ceilings."

(CIO unions maintain that their wage increases did not necessitate price boosts, but could easily have been paid out of record high profits.)

- Consumer credit controls which would curb buying by those already securing too much instead of further curbing those now receiving too little.
- Bank credit controls.
- Excess profits tax

Strange Paradox

"Nobody can foretell just when the dangers and maladjustments of inflations will culminate in a crash. But is it not a strange paradox that those who believe that this ultimate calamity is some time off should on that ground be skeptical of prompt remedial action?"—Keyserling.

And what did the 80th Congress do? It chose the two parts of the program which Keyserling said would have the least effect on inflation in themselves: bank credit controls and consumer credit controls.

Thus while Congressmen mend political fences . . .

"There is stewing in the boiler of inflation the main ingredients for an economic explosion, and we cannot afford to wait until these ingredients fuse themselves into the combination that will touch off that explosion," Keyserling said.

CIO Repudiates Wallace in Home State

THE CIO in Henry Wallace's home state has repudiated the Progressive Party presidential candidate, overwhelmingly throwing its support behind the CIO-PAC instead.

Showdown on the Wallace issue came at the 10th annual convention of the Iowa State CIO Council in Davenport last week. About 280 delegates attended.

A number of left-wing delegates walked out of the convention after nomination of officers. Edward Filliman, retiring president; Walter Wagner, nominated for secretary-treasurer, and 11 candidates for the executive board withdrew as candidates and joined the exodus.

Elected to succeed Filliman as Council president was Vernon Dale, international representative of the Clothing Workers. Dale was previously a member of the executive board. Kenneth Everhart was re-elected secretary-treasurer. Of the 10 board members only Stanley Smith was re-elected.

Strong support for national CIO policy and opposition to Wallace supporters on the executive board had previously been indicated on two test votes.

The first of these came when delegates on a standing vote adopted a constitutional amendment providing for annual elections. Previously officers were elected every two years, and no election was slated for this year. Adoption of the amendment was interpreted as indicating a desire for a change of officers immediately.

Third party supporters received a second setback when delegates voted to reject Wallace and back CIO-PAC, which has not yet indorsed a candidate for president.

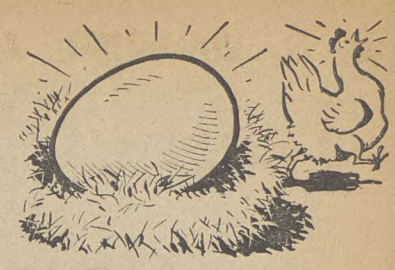
Following the left-wing withdrawal, the principal speaker, R. J. Thomas, Natl. CIO assistant organizing director and former CIO Auto Workers head, asserted, "You don't win ballots by walking out. Minorities have to learn to work with majorities, if you want to have real democracy."

Thomas predicted that the Progressive Party would not receive a single electoral vote or "come close to getting a majority of the trade union vote."

Anthony Smith, national CIO assistant director of councils, told delegates that the CIO program is "worth dying and living for and don't let anyone tell you that any group has a better one."

He pictured the progressive policy of the CIO by tracing the organization's history from its inception.

The '80th' Lays An



By HENRY C. FLEISHER

BY their deeds—and their words—you can judge the 80th Congress.

The special session was long on words, short on deeds. It followed the pattern set at the regular meetings of Congress which started last January.

By now, the do-nothing policy of the 80th Congress is well advertised. Some of the words of Representatives and Senators are less well known. Here's a capsule history of the special session—told in the words of Congressmen and of people who tried to get Congressmen to act.

CIO's words on the record of the regular session were spoken in June by:

CIO PRES. MURRAY: "The record of the 80th Congress is not a pleasant one. It failed to meet the needs of the American people, and it sacrificed to the greed of the vested interests, the belief that government should be not only of and by the people, but for the people."

★ ★ ★

The same critical view of Congress obviously was held by Pres. Truman. At the Democratic convention he made a speech:

PRES. TRUMAN: "Now, my friends, if there's any reality behind that Republican platform, we ought to get some action out of the short session of the 80th Congress . . . What this worst 80th Congress does in this special session will be the test. The American people will not decide by listening to mere words, or by reading a mere platform. They'll decide on the record."

★ ★ ★

But the Republicans made it clear from the outset that they didn't want to act. TOM DEWEY called the special session a "frightful imposition" on the poor Congressmen. One member of the House indicated his anger at being prodded into legislative activity:

REP. FREDERICK SMITH (R.Ohio): "There is no good reason for this special session of Congress. It is a political move, pure and simple . . . I do not believe anything has developed in either the domestic or international scene since the adjournment of Congress on June 19 that justifies the calling of this special session."

(ITEM: The U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics announced that the consumers price index, based on 900 commodities, had risen to the highest level in all history.)

★ ★ ★

On the second day of the special session, the President came before the GOP-controlled Congress to demand action.

PRES. TRUMAN: "Our people demand legislative action by their government to do two things: First, to check inflation and the rising cost of living, and second, to help in meeting the acute housing shortage. There are matters which affect every American family."

And two days later, speaking on a national radio network:

CIO PRES. MURRAY: "I charge that this conduct of American industry since the end of OPA is a national scandal. It invites the scrutiny of our government . . . But an investigation is not enough. Legislation is imperative. We must roll prices back to reasonable levels. We must see to it that the basic necessities of life are available to all of our people at prices they can pay. We must re-enact the excess profits tax law to recapture speculative and exorbitant profits."

Of course, there was another viewpoint:

REP. REED (R.N.Y.): "I note that the President has recommended an excess profits tax to provide a brake on inflation. An excess profits tax in peacetime is one of the most inflationary measures we could adopt."

★ ★ ★

In the Senate, Republican leaders quickly brought up the anti-polltax bill (which had been passed months before in the House), knowing it would produce a southern Democrats' filibuster. It did.

Debate—if that's what you want to call it—meandered leisurely:

SEN. TAFT (R.O.): "We have spent three days on a motion to take up the bill."

SEN. RUSSELL (D.Ga.): "Two days. The Senator from Ohio (Taft) used considerable time in discussing extraneous matters."

★ ★ ★

SEN. RUSSELL (D.Ga.): "I desire to lodge a point of order against what purports to be a cloture petition (to limit debate)."

SEN. VANDENBERG (R.Mich.), acting as president of the Senate: "The point of order is sustained."

★ ★ ★

SEN. WHERRY (R.Nebr.): ". . . It has become crystal clear that until the Senate's rules on cloture are amended, it is impossible to take action on House Bill 29, the anti-polltax bill . . ."

SEN. BARKLEY (D.Ky.): "There has been a resolution on the calendar for 17 months to amend the rules of the Senate. So far as I recall, no effort has been made to bring that resolution before the Senate for consideration . . . The American people do not understand all the maneuvers and the parliamentary devices the Senate may resort to in order not to transact its business."

★ ★ ★

A letter to CIO unions from PAC Director Jack Kroll, August 4:

"Current Congressional action is incredible. It must be seen to be believed. I therefore suggest that you delegate at least one observer from your organization to sit in the Congressional galleries . . . in order that they may report to our members from first-hand observation the conduct of these paid representatives of the people."

The Congress did nothing on the polltax—and it did nothing to pass a decent housing bill. The course was pointed out on the opening day of the special session by a non-conformist Republican:

REP. JAVITS (R.N.Y.): "The Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill remains the one comprehensive housing measure before the country . . . It can be passed by the House . . . while we are in session, if . . . "

In the House, parliamentary devices prevented success for a discharge petition to bring the T-E-W bill out of the Rules Committee.

In the Senate, a majority of the Banking & Currency Committee upset GOP leaders by endorsing not the weak McCarthy bill (the GOP's substitute on housing) but the T-E-W bill. Said the leader of the GOP "rebels":

SEN. TOBEY (R.N.H.): "We are going to vote . . . on whether . . . we shall strike from the housing bills provisions for public housing, slum clearance and urban rehabilitation . . . There is just one duty on us this afternoon: That is to back up the Taft-Ellender-Wagner Bill; repudiate any substitution for it, and carry it through, as we are all pledged to do, both great parties having pledged themselves to it."

But a sponsor of the T-E-W bill spoke up against his own housing program:

SEN. TAFT (R.O.): "This is a peculiar session . . . We cannot treat legislation in the ordinary way . . . It (the T-E-W bill) is a permanent, long-range program . . . So, the truth is, that if we want the session to finish, we have substantially to agree with the House . . ."

SEN. BARKLEY (D.Ky.): "The Senator from Ohio may surrender his position, either through conviction or expediency or at the point of a shotgun, but I do not myself propose to surrender my convictions upon the housing situation.

"The veterans of the country have asked us to provide them the possibility of building or buying houses. Instead of giving them a house, we do not even give them a dugout or a pillbox."

FROM THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD: " . . . The question is on the substitute (to the T-E-W bill) offered by the Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. McCarthy). The result was announced—yeas 48, nays 36 . . . So, Mr. McCarthy's substitute was agreed to."

★ ★ ★

The people and the President had asked for protection against inflation, but the GOP leadership agreed only to curbs on installment buying and technical changes in the rules of the Federal Reserve system. In the House, there was sharp protest against a rule against amending this GOP bill, and against plans for only limited debate. But the House Banking Committee chairman defended the curbs:

REP. WOLCOTT (R.Mich.): "I am inclined to think at the present time that 40 minutes altogether would probably be ample to cover the whole situation."

The Senate Banking & Currency Committee refused to hear any but government witnesses and private bankers discuss the anti-inflation program. CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey sent wires to Republican leaders:

CIO SEC.-TREAS. CAREY: "The meaningless bill now being considered makes it mandatory for organizations representing the public interest to be heard. . . . Instead of acting, Congress is bickering about who is to blame for high prices.

"Congress must accept 'distasteful' and 'repugnant' controls if it is at all interested in protecting the living standards of the mass of the American people."

"If no action is taken, the stigma shall be indelibly imprinted upon this Congress that it has acted in the special interest of only a limited few who stand to benefit from continued inflation."

In the Senate, members got all tangled up on the complex fiscal problems of Federal Reserve Board operations. For instance:

SEN. DONNELL (R.Mo.): "As I see it, there will be as much decrease in the ability to buy bonds as is equal to the increase in requirements of reserves if such increase is brought about by the pending measure."

SEN. TAFT (R.O.): "No, that is not so . . . Because what happens is this: If a Federal Reserve Bank buys $10,000,000,000 of bonds it issues $10,000,000,000 of notes before it increases its deposits $10,000,000,000. Consequently it is necessary to take the existing liabilities which are approximately $23,000,000,000 of notes and $20,000,000,000 of deposits, or a total of $43,000,000,000, and it is necessary to increase that to about $54,000,000,000 without increasing the gold reserves . . ."

And so on. Then Sen. Barkley (D.Ky.) offered an amendment to add to the Republican bill the President's anti-inflation program, with power to curb prices and allocate scarce materials. He said:

SEN. BARKLEY (D.Ky.): "Although the bank-credit provision and the consumer credit provision (in the GOP bill) may help a little, I doubt if they will ever reach down to the $1,000 or $2,000 a year families . . . I think the amendment I have offered . . . not only will be able to stabilize the cost of living for all these families, but it may stop the increase in the cost of living."

SEN. TAFT (R.O.): "Price control will not work in America in time of peace . . ."

SEN. CAIN (R.Wash.): "I think we are compelled for a period of time to suffer because of the difficulties which confront us . . . I think it is incumbent upon us all to cooperate with self-sacrifice in the hope that in the early part of the next session we may cure for the first time some of the causes of the ills which we suffer."

FROM THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD: "The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 53. So Mr. Barkley's amendment was rejected."

ITEM: General Motors reported net profits for the first half of 1948 at $206 million; Standard Oil of New Jersey reported profits at $210 million, with the oil industry's profits running 85% higher than in 1947.

★ ★ ★

When it was all over, comments came from all directions. A few of them:

REP. EBERHARTER (D.Pa.): "Where is Governor Dewey? Where does he stand? Is he going to try to lead the Republican Party? Why hasn't he spoken out on behalf of his views at this special session? The American people are entitled to know."

REP. BUCHANAN (D.Pa.): "When the story is written on housing in the Eightieth Congress, when the story is written on price controls, when the story is written on excess profits, you may recall the theme song of the Republican Party, which was 'Have You Had Enough?'.

"I believe the American people in 1948 are going to offer their version of the theme song by saying that they have had enough of nothing."

SEN. BARKLEY (D.Ky.): "The theme song of the Republican party between now and November should be 'I've got plenty of nothing.'"

REP. HUGH SCOTT (R.Pa.), chairman of the Republican Natl. Committee: "Calling the session was a particularly cheap brand of politics."

RAYMOND A. McCONNELL, Jr., Editor of Nebraska State Journal, in a letter to Sen. Wherry: "It would be a lot smarter if you and the other Republican bigwigs would listen to what the folks back home are saying, instead of to each other."

PETER EDSON, Scripps-Howard columnist: ". . . The GOP leadership has openly embarked on a policy of delay and do-nothingism . . . All that's wanted now is a simple little cut in the cost of hamburgers, haircuts and autos."

SEN. TOBEY (R.N.H.), criticizing failure to pass anti-inflation bill: "The mountain has labored and brought forth a mouse."

CIO SEC.-TREAS. JAMES CAREY (on radio broadcast): "Congress can go into session again between now and November and give the people a real test as to whether or not they are being kidded by a political party's adopting programs and then ignoring them."

EVERYTHING'S OK NOW

Sit back and relax—and quit worrying about high prices. Make like you're a Republican congressional leader.

There's nothing to worry about—really.

Most of your financial troubles are imaginary—not inflationary. And you'll be able to get adequate housing in a few years.

Those big profit figures you've been reading don't mean a thing. They're based not upon real but upon inflated dollars.

And, besides, you've now been protected from yourself. You can no longer get yourself in a bad hole by buying on the installment plan the necessities for which you're unable to pay cash.

What are you griping about, anyhow? You're working, aren't you? Things are better than they were when millions were unemployed.

Suppose round steak does cost more than a buck a pound. You don't have to eat steak, do you?

And why be so stupid about economics? Haven't you learned that it's fitting and proper for the big corporations to act like hogs now and then? They're going to use their profits to expand, not so they can make more profits but so they can provide jobs when they're needed.

There's really nothing to worry about as long as the Repubicans are in power and the corporations make bigger profits every year.

And if you don't believe it just ask the Republicans and the corporation executives.

But don't ask us. High prices and the housing situation have us in such a dopey state we might tell you the truth. And the truth bears no resemblance to the GOP-big business story.

THERE'S SOME SILVER LINING

There's no doubt about it; that special session of Congress put us in a foul mood, as well it might. So we started hunting for a bit of silver lining in the dark cloud which hung over us.

We found it down in Tennessee, where Estes Kefauver and Gordon Browning tossed a couple of monkey wrenches into old Boss Crump's political machine.

Crump, who had been riding high and wide if not so handsome for 20 or more years, really bit the political dust. And one of the groups which helped him achieve defeat was the CIO, which the Crump forces years ago threatened to run out of Memphis.

It was good to see a man like Kefauver win the senatorial nomination over a man Crump backed and a man Crump had just cast aside.

It was good to see Browning, who was once defeated by the Crump machine, prove that a man can stage a gubernatorial comeback.

But it was even better to see a group of fighters shatter the great illusion that "in Tennessee you can't win without Crump's support."

THEY ARE CHISELERS

The record is bad enough, but we wonder just how much worse it would be if the Wage & Hour Division had enough money to carry out the inspection job it would like to do. Although operating shorthanded, the agency found during the year ending June 30 that——

Slightly more than half of the firms inspected had violated the minimum wage, overtime or child labor provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

More than 100,000 workers were chiseled out of more than $4 million by their employers.

Tom Can't Escape It

Record of the 'Awful' 80th Congress Will Be Draped Around His Neck

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THE guy who tried to make a silk purse out of a sow's ear had a job no more difficult than the one confronting Tom Dewey.

Dewey faces the task of convincing the people that the Republican Party—which has been kicking the public on its shins—is just absolutely wonderful.

Or—

He faces the equally difficult task of selling the public on the idea that the GOP will reform if he's given a four-year lease on the White House.

Indications are that he may try the latter, which would mean running for president on his own and permitting Republican congressmen to shift for themselves.

DEWEY might well like to have it otherwise, but the record of the Republican-controlled 80th Congress will figure prominently in the campaign.

It's a bad record, insofar as the average citizen is concerned.

It's bad on the basis of what was done—and it's bad on the basis of what wasn't done.

Much of the legislation adopted bore the NAM and big business tag. Most of the measures supported by labor were ignored, pigeonholed or defeated.

Congress simply refused to attempt forthright solutions of our two most pressing problems—inflation and housing.

DEWEY is a man who likes to learn in advance the direction from which the wind is blowing and then set his political sails so as to capture the strongest breeze.

That's the smart way to get where you're going, perhaps, but Dewey's got a difficult navigating job ahead.

He can't travel to victory on the hot air manufactured by the GOP leadership of Congress—and the wind of public opinion is beginning to blow with increasing intensity in a direction directly opposite from that in which Congress moved.

Even his throaty oratory can't draw public attention from the miserable record of his political party.

And the public is unlikely to accept the GOP argument that Congress gave Harry Truman all the powers needed to combat inflation.

DON'T mistake this for a prediction that Dewey won't be elected, or for a prediction that he will.

We're merely predicting that between now and Nov. 2 Tom Dewey will find himself in the uncomfortable if not ridiculous position of having to indorse or repudiate his party's congressional leadership or of having to keep his mouth shut regarding the 80th Congress.

You can bet your last badly inflated dollar that Harry Truman and his colleagues will hang the record of Congress around Dewey's neck at every opportunity.

And they will keep chanting, "He's head of the party that refused to do anything about inflation and housing."

A LARGE number of editorial writers and commentators "elected" Dewey the day after he was nominated.

They did so without knowledge that Truman would call on the GOP to make good on its promises before and not after the election.

The GOP shouted "politics" and grabbed the headlines with its spy hunt, but it failed to deliver the goods during the recent special session of Congress.

This put another sharp curve in the road that leads from Albany, N. Y., to Washington.

And it put a lot of curves in a lot of roads that lead from many states to the halls of Congress.

Attack Brookings Report on Health Plans

First attack on the Brookings Institution's report, The Issue of Compulsory Health Insurance, was launched last week by two research organizations.

Dr. Michael M. Davis, chairman of the Committee on Research in Medical Economics, and Dewey Anderson, director of the Public Affairs Institute, in a 17-page public document entitled Medical Care for the Individual, scored the Brookings Report as "confused, contradictory, and not based on any statement of the facts or any analyzed body of experience."

They report that although the tenor of the Brookings Report is a defense of "poor man's medicine" and a plea for the continuation of a medical dole, it is forced to the conclusion that health insurance should be made compulsory. It proposes that the Government compel individuals to subscribe to voluntary health insurance plans.

This impractical recommendation is rejected by Davis and Anderson: "It would be complex and confusing, very costly, and require an invidious degree of public regulation and place the benefits of public taxing power in private hands."

The Davis-Anderson report was undertaken at the request of Sens. Murray (D. Mont.) and Pepper (D. Fla.), both of the Senate Sub Committee on Health which has been considering national health programs.

NLRB Rule Seen As Bargaining Threat

THE NLRB is threatening to disrupt long-established bargaining procedures by refusing to permit international unions to contract directly with employers in place of the local union, CIO Textile Workers Pres. Emil Rieve has charged.

Rieve's blast at the Board grew out of an NLRB ruling which barred the international from appearing on the ballot at a representation election at the Memphis plant of the Kimberly-Clark Corp. An AFL union is seeking bargaining rights at the plant.

Since 1946 the CIO international union has been the certified bargaining agent at the Kimberly-Clark mill. Because the local is not a party to the contract, it did not file the data required for qualifying under the T-H Act.

For many years it has been the practice of TWUA and other unions to sign contracts with some companies in place of the local. "This," the TWUA head told the NLRB "is a practice approved by management as a means of fostering responsible unionism."

TWUA was one of the first to sign the T-H non-communist affidavits. He said that if every local union were forced to file under the Act, it "would impose a huge burden of useless paperwork on both unions and the NLRB."

V. Reuther in Germany

Victor Reuther, UAW-CIO education director, is spending a month in Germany and Austria to talk with union officials in the two countries. Reuther went to Frankfurt, Germany, after attending labor meetings in London.

'No Comment' Was What The Man Said

UNION leaders were burned up about the situation and in a mood to damn the editors for nearly everything under the sun.

They'd been getting bad breaks in the local newspapers— particularly on strike stories—and they didn't like it.

So they decided to hold a "school on publicity" and invite a former labor reporter—a Guild member—in to tell them, if he could, how they could get their story across to the public.

The reporter accepted the invitation and at the opening session of the "school" jumped right down the union officers' throats, figuratively, of course.

HE said he knew all about the thinking and the anti-labor prejudices of many editors and publishers and added that "I doubt you can do anything about that."

"But", he said, "you can do something about your own stupid handling of press relations.

"You union officers are responsible for many of the bad breaks you get in the newspapers. I sometimes think you're more interested in raising hell with the press than in getting your story across to the readers.

"I used to work as a labor reporter and I can tell you that getting information about a strike from the average union official is about as hard as pulling a wisdom tooth with a pair of light tweezers."

ADMITTING quite frankly that he had written many "badly lopsided, pro-management strike stories," the reporter continued:

"These stories were lopsided not because I wanted to make them that way and not because I was under any orders to slant them.

"They were unfair stories because guys like you let management outsmart them and because they outsmarted themselves.

"Too many of them gave management's side of the story and ended with 'Union leaders would make no comment' or 'Union leaders could not be reached for comment'."

He discussed the importance of deadlines and the value of establishing a "working relationship" with labor reporters.

ONE of the union leaders attending the "school" demonstrated a few months later that he had learned something about publicity.

He told a labor reporter, in confidence, that "things are getting pretty bad out at our plant, so there's likely to be a strike. I'm trying to avoid a walkout and any story even hinting at the possibility of a strike might upset my strategy, so you can't print a thing now.

"I want to give you the whole story today because I'm likely to be so busy for a couple of hours when the strike is called —if one is called—that I won't be able to talk with you more than a minute or two."

ONE morning a few days later the union official called the reporter and said, "It looks like there might be a walkout about noon today and I thought I'd better tip you off.

"What's the very latest I can call you for a story in the 'noon' edition?"

The reporter said he could handle the story up to 12:10.

At 12:05 workers in the big plant went on strike. At exactly 12:10 the union official called the reporter and said, "The men walked out five minutes ago. I can't add anything to what I told you the other day."

The strike story was carried on the front page. It quoted the union official at length. It ended with the terse statement:

"Company officials said, 'No comment right now'." A. L. S.

'I Have a Bad Habit Of Speaking Up In Company'

THIS prayer by an imaginary housewife who was fearful of smudge pots was written by Edwina Dodge Schaefer for the Saturday Review of Literature:

PLEASE, dear God, protect me. The smudge pots have been lighted and they are belching smoke. I am only a housewife; but just the same I am frightened because I have a bad habit of speaking up in company. This evil you must help me overcome lest I find a smudge pot burning under my window.

So please, God, do not let me argue in favor of a society in which all men may be allowed equal rights, or even let me say that I believe in the Brotherhood of Man.

Also please cleanse my thoughts so that I may say convincingly that I believe all captains of industry to be noble, just honest men. Let me say that the reason they find it necessary to amass huge profits today is that during the war they were practically poor men, they were taxed so heavily. Let me feel sorry for them and let me cheer them on their way so that we may again have great tycoons to whom we can point with pride.

Please help me to hate all Labor leaders and to approve all legislation which puts the laborer under the kind heel of the great industrialists.

And God, help me to believe in the infallibility of the law of Supply & Demand. All the good people believe implicitly in this unwritten law. Don't even let me suggest right now that there might be a better way of working out our economy than by this rickety seesaw method.

You can let me say, God, that I believe in Free Enterprise, but please don't let me add: "but Free Enterprise can become a menace unless restrained." This appendage would be interpreted as a slur against our great monopolies. The pure in heart believe that monopolies are lovely institutions, the bulwark of our economy. So don't let me so much as aim a verbal peashooter at the lovely institutions' rafters, at least not today.

As you know, dear God, I wholeheartedly believe in our democratic form of Government, but don't let me, not now while the smudge pots are out, be so foolish as to even hint that there might be room for improvement. Too, put it in my heart to cheer all forms of Senatorial investigations. Let me say that these investigations are just and what they unearth is a greater menace to our country than the confusion of thought they evoke and the impure tongues they silence.

Now that you've heard my plea, dear God, I beseech you to please get busy and make me pure so that I may be worthy of joining the ranks of the good 150 percent Americans. Amen!

'Don't Throw Peanuts To (GOP) Elephant'

The June issue of the Republican News, issued by the GOP Natl. Committee, carries a quarter-page advertisement. The ad says: "Don't Throw Peanuts to the Elephant."

"Many of our friends feel that, entirely apart from other important considerations, the least they can do to express their appreciation is to contribute substantial part of their tax savings for this year to insure the re-election of the Congress which made this possible."

The table shows tax savings for families in various income groups—$78 a year for people making $2,500. And $7,633 for people making $50,000.

From the figures you can see where that GOP elephant is going to get his feed—and it ain't gonna be peanuts!

Too Many People Too Loyal?

Washington spy hearings are worrying many government officials—because U. S. employes are "too loyal."

State of anxiety among these high officials is reported by the ardently anti-Communist Washington Times-Herald, in a story describing inquiries by the GOP-controlled House Appropriations Committee into Uncle Sam's loyalty investigation.

"Many officials are worried about the present situation in which many bureaus will have to report 'zero' loyalty dismissals," the paper says.

"They are telling their heads that unless their agencies do better on the loyalty picture, the committee will take it out on their fiscal hides when they ask for new budgets."

In other words—unless your agency can fire some people as disloyal, the GOP won't give you an appropriation. And if there aren't any disloyal people, presumably you'll have to call some disloyal—to make the statistics look right.

They've 'Had Enc

And They Plan To Do Something About It!

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THEY'D had enough—and they said so without mincing words.

Actually they'd had more than enough and were fed up—fed up with high prices, inadequate housing, the Taft-Hartley Act and abrogation of civil rights.

They said some changes needed to be made.

And they said they were going to help make them.

They didn't pull their punches.

The 80th Congress at its special session, they declared, "reached a new and degrading low mark in the history of democratic institutions in America. Congress has earned the oft-repeated epithet that is 'is the best that money can buy'."

Then they called on the people of Ohio to "look at the record and demand from our Republican representatives in Congress an accounting of their role in this shameful and revolting spectacle."

JACK KROLL, PAC's major domo, shifted the meeting into high gear before it was a half hour old and kept it running at a fast pace for five hours.

He said he'd had more than enough of the leadership of the 80th Congress and he sounded as if he meant it. Early in his speech he declared:

"A more arrogant, cynical lot of politicians never assembled in any legislative body at any time. No Congressmen in our history were more brazen in their obvious intention to serve the greedy few at the expense of the many and to play politics at the expense of the country's welfare.

"I am sure that an equal number of school kids would have approached the urgent problems that President Truman put before the special session with more sense of the needs of the country."

Kroll told of parliamentary maneuvering which prevented the poll tax repealer from coming to a final vote in the Senate, and added:

"I think it's probably the first time in the U. S. Senate's history that we've had a filibuster on a filibuster with another potential filibuster in the background.

"And these are the men who talk about featherbedding!

"These are the guys who want to tell us how to run our unions.

"Any union that ran its business the way the U. S. Senate has been running the country's business for the past several weeks wouldn't last a month. And any working man who laid down on the job the way the U. S. Senators have laid down on the job would get fired in a minute. And no union would protect him!

"No wonder PAC indorsed more Democrats than Republicans," Kroll continued after citing the record of Ohioans in the 80th Congress.

"On 16 issues the people of Ohio were vitally concerned with our senior senator, Robert A. Taft, was absent four times.

By Bus, Car, Train, Plane

CIO members from all over Ohio attended the PAC meeting.

They arrived in Cincinnati singly, in pairs and in groups. Some traveled by plane, some by train and auto, and many used chartered buses.

Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas, stalwart of liberal Democratic forces in the House, received round after round of applause at the Ohio PAC rally as she lashed out at the Republican leadership of the 80th Congress. She charged the GOP made no real effort to solve the problems resulting from inflation. The Republicans believe, she declared, that helping "the low and middle-income groups is socialism," and that if government aids Big Business, the people will eventually benefit.

Jack Kroll, Committees, is of the rally. Th Newspaper Gui CIO-supported secretary-treasu

Anti-Taft-Hartley placards like the one shown here on the balcony railing called attention to the CIO's legislative program. Among attentive listeners at the rally was Henry Zon (seated nearest camera) acting publicity director of National CIO-PAC.

Back Nobody For Governor

NEITHER of the Ohio gubernatorial candidates, Frank J. Lausche or Thomas J. Herbert, "has established a record deserving of the indorsement of the Ohio CIO-PAC," says a statement approved at the Ohio PAC rally.

"We vigorously condemn the action of Gov. Herbert in calling out heavily-armed troops to be used against Ohio workers. We likewise deplore the actions of Frank Lausche when, during his administration, he used the governor's office to unnecessarily and unfairly intervene in labor disputes so as to prejudice the just rights of workers.

"Neither candidate has demonstrated an interest in the vital social problems affecting the welfare of all of the people of Ohio so as to warrant the indorsement of the CIO-PAC."

The Ohio PAC has indorsed the following congressional candidates, all Democrats:

Stephen M. Young, congressman-at-large; Morse Johnson, First District; Earl T. Wagner, Second; Edward G. Breen, Third; Earl Ludwig, Fourth; Andrew T. Durbin, Eighth; Thomas Burke, Ninth; Joseph C. Allen, Eleventh; Walter B. Huber, Fourteenth; Robert T. Secrest, Fifteenth; John McSweeney, Sixteenth; Michael J. Kirwan, Nineteenth; Michael A. Feighan, Twentieth; Robert Crosser, Twenty-first; Jack Day, Twenty-second.

Others indorsed (all Democrats):

Charles E. Sweeney, for Secretary of State; Joseph T. Ferguson, Auditor; Harry V. Armstrong, Treasurer; Herbert S. Duffey, Attorney General; Robert S. Sohngen, Supreme Court judge.

Nearly 1500 CIO members jammed the Netherland Plaza's famous "Hall of Mirrors" for the Ohio PAC rally Aug. 8. The group heard speeches, indorsed Ohio candidates and approved a CIO-sponsored program designe the taxation and governmental ag Ohio. They also got the low-down dominated 80th Congress.

savings and the earnings of the people.

"The Republicans are concerned with maintaining a high profit level regardless of the human values involved.

"The Republicans believe that if the government is going to help the people it must do it through Big Business.

"To them, helping Big Business is free enterprise—but helping the low and middle income groups is socialism."

The Republican leadership, she said, would rather pay the high cost of maintaining slums—pay in terms of larger police forces and larger mental institutions—than to replace the slums with decent houses at public expense.

KROLL, and a number of speakers who discussed resolutions, laid it right on the line:

"You can't win elections merely by holding meetings like this; you've got to get the people to register and vote."

"You can't run a political campaign without money, so dig down and bring up a buck for PAC."

"You've got to get out and ring doorbells and tell folks about the record of those seeking re-election."

And resolutions pledged the group to . . .

". . . do everything within our power to defeat those in the 80th Congress who have consistently and persistently worked and voted against the interests of the American people . . .

". . . undertake to build a great block workers' organization spreading into every CIO community in the state . . .

". . . call for a realistic and hard-hitting price control law . . .

". . . campaign to repeal the Taft-Hartley Law and expunge its very vestige from the statute books of the land . . .

". . . call for legislation setting up a Fair Employment Practices Committee, an anti-poll tax act, appropriate legislation to end lynching, and the abrogation of segregation in the armed services."

And when the big rally ended, some 1500 CIO members had enough "ammunition" and enthusiasm to keep a real political action drive rolling until Nov. 2.

Handcuffs

State Auditor Joseph T. Ferguson, speaker at the rally, called the Taft-Hartley law the "handcuffing act of the 80th Congress."

On several occasions he referred to Senators Taft and Bricker as "the Ohio Gold Dust Twins."

These charming young women—CIO Telephone Workers—added a dash of color to the lively political rally at Cincinnati by serving as usherettes and guides. They are (l. to r.) T-H and You

You will want to own a copy of the new CIO-PAC pamphlet —"Taft-Hartley and You."

Filled with lots of pictures, charts and quotations, the pamphlet spells out—in non-technical lingo—just how T-H serves to hamper free unionism. And it carries one moral: get out and vote in November to get T-H repealed.

Copies may be ordered from CIO-PAC, 728 17th Street N.W., Washington 6, D. C. Prices: $4 per 100; $18 for 500; $35 for 1,000.

Every union should have lots of copies on hand.

CIO News Takes A Bow

Usually the CIO News staff scratches its collective head to get a good picture idea for page 1. The head scratching went on as usual before last week's edition. Several ideas were born only to be rejected in favor of the idea of Henry C. Fleisher, assistant publicity director which attracted much attention.

Not only did the press but also the radio comment on the small type in the center of the front page which called attention to the fact the page was "as bare as the record of accomplishment of the Eightieth Congress at its special session."

The Associated Press sent out a story which was carried on Page 1 of the Baltimore Sun. The Washington Post also ran a story. The St. Louis Post-Dispatch carried a yarn from its Washington Bureau. The Washington Daily News used the story in the lead of its World Today column.

The Democratic National Committee distributed newspaper mats showing a reduced facsimile of the page.

George DeNucci, CIO regional director at Columbus, became a news vender for a day. His sales talk went like this, "You can't keep up with the political campaign without reading the CIO News." He's shown talking with Florence Bonar, Cincinnati Amalgamated Clothing Workers member, about the CIO News 1948 Voters Guide.

Against Smug Little Men, Red Stooges

PAC Dir. Kroll spent litte time discussing presidential candidates. Regarding them he said:

"Labor is not interested in smug little men with little minds who sit behind little black mustaches waiting to see which way the wind is blowing.

"And, of course, I am talking about the Republican candidate, Thomas E. Dewey.

"And while we're talking about stooges let me say that neither are we interested in stooges for Moscow. On July 24 . . . Henry Wallace at a public press conference told reporters that the Communist Party was taking control of his organization and that it was costing him votes.

"More and more often these days I get asked whom labor will support for President.

"I don't know. I don't know whom the CIO and PAC will indorse or if they will indorse anyone.

"In Milwaukee recently I said that the White House has a 'new look' and that I think the 'new look' is becoming. I think that's right. I think that it does have a 'new look' and I hope that President Harry Truman stays in fashion and keeps on fighting the fight for the many and not the few."

Labor 'Can Do Most For ERP'—Harriman

SPURRED by official top-level acknowledgement of the need for labor cooperation with the European Recovery Program on both sides of the Atlantic, leaders of the free trade unions of Europe decided in London recently to fling their full support behind the Economic Cooperation Administration, charged with conduct of the Marshall Plan.

Representatives of both CIO and AFL attended the two-day meeting July 30-31.

The International Trade Union Conference agreed unanimously on a strong declaration backing ECA in unmistakable language and taking positive steps to implement the words with action.

CIO's five-man delegation was coomposed of Secy-Treas. David J. McDonald of the steel union; UAW Education Director Victor Reuther; Vice-Pres. John Grogan of the shipbuilders; CIO Intl. Affairs Director Michael Ross; and Elmer Cope, CIO representative at World Federation of Trade Unions headquarters in Paris.

The Americans joined with European leaders in urging the need for vigorous representation for labor at Paris headquarters of ECA and OEEC— the organization of European governments receiving ERP aid.

The confab voted to strengthen and formalize its set-up with this end in mind. Leon Jouhaux, veteran French union leader, will represent the group in Paris pending final arrangements. The British Trades Union Congress has assigned a research expert to the Paris union committee offices to assist him.

Arthur Deakin, British union leader, voiced hope that ample supplies of raw materials would be sent to his country to help its recovery plans.

McDonald—of the CIO steel union—urged close contracts between European and American unions on ERP problems. Victor Reuther offered labor's help in countering any trend in the use of recovery funds that would limit the European peoples' right to establish democratic forms of socialism in their own countries.

LABOR'S suport for ERP won praise from W. Averell Harriman, ECA's "roving ambassador" in Europe. He said that labor, of all non-governmental groups, "can do the most for European recovery."

"The American people hope for a greater unification of Europe because they feel that the future of Europe can best be built on greater unification, a greater amount of trade, greater removal of restrictions to the flow of goods, services and people," Harriman said. He is ECA boss in the Paris European Headquarters with the rank of U. S. Ambassador.

"All non-government organizations can play a great part in ECA," Harriman told the confab. "But of all these groups, the international Labor movement can do the most. It has been your tradition to step across state boundaries in your search for ways in which the standards and living conditions of labor can be improved."

Harriman said ECA feels the need for help and advice from the labor groups. ECA "stands ready to discuss any matters that this organization feels should be taken up either in the Paris Headquarters or ECA Missions in the various countries," he added.

He emphasized that "the great trade union organizations of the U.S. participate in the ECA organizations; their representatives in Washington, in the Paris headquarters and in the country missions share responsibilities for the decisions that are made."

"These officials drawn from labor organizations also have the special duty of working with European unions on problems directly affecting labor," Harriman continued.

Though aware that great progress has been made following the war's terrible destruction, he expressed hope that European trade union groups "would set their sights even higher and would join in the mutual objective of recovery—not just recovery to an old standard, but an advance, a forward movement, a revitalization of the life of Europe with higher objectives than it has ever had."

"America has offered aid for four years; the time is short," Harriman said. "A sense of urgency must be instilled in Europe. The aid will come to an end, for America wants to get out of extending extraordinary outside assistance after the end of the four-year term. . . .

"We want your help, we need your help, we will accept your help—through any working arrangement which you feel it is desirable to make."

Harriman's words were reinforced by talks from Clinton S. Golden, former CIO Steelworkers vice-president, and Bert M. Jewell of the AFL Railway Labor Dept. Executives Association, who are now labor advisers to Paul G. Hoffman, ECA administrator, in Washington.

Also present were Boris Shishkin, AFL economist, and Harry Martin, president of the CIO Newspaper Guild. It was announced at the Conference that Martin will serve as labor information specialist and adviser to Harriman, and that Shishkin will be chief of the ECA Labor Branch in Paris.

The Conference president, Evert Kupers of the Dutch unions, steered the group through a two-day discussion session concerning problems in the various countries. Participating were union leaders from Great Britain, Belgium, Denmark, Austria, France, Italy, Germany, Greece, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, and the exiled Spanish and Basque unions of Spain.

LABOR PARLEY CALLS ERP STRONG PEACE FOUNDATION

Following is an important part of the text of a statement approved by the Intl. Trade Union Conference in London July 30-31 on labor's role in the European Recovery Program. The meeting was attended by European and U. S. union spokesmen!

THE Conference again emphasizes that the fundamental purpose of the program is to correct the distorted economy which was produced among the countries of Europe and so enable them to achieve economic reconstruction and an economy of abundance, the Declaration by Europe's Union leaders said.

The Conference has noted with attention the propaganda delivered by the adversaries of the Marshall Plan regarding the possibiliay that the program may be used by capitalist interests in the United States to achieve the economic destruction of Europe.

We have taken account, too, of the possibility that the funds which become available under ERP may, in some cases, be used to redeem state indebtedness which has no connection with the present conditions of emergency. We have recognized, too, the existence of a fear that ERP funds may be used to re-establish the position of old industrial dynasties, such as that of the Krupps and the chemical combines in Germany.

WE welcome the repeated declarations of the ECA Administrators that there will be no interference with the internal affairs and policies of any participating country and are unanimously resolved to resist any unacceptable conditions that may be imposed in the further development of ERP.

We are confident that with the help of our American trade union comrades these declarations will be honored in both the spirit and the letter. We pledge our united decision to remain vigilant to prevent any provision or arrangement of the program being exploited for unworthy and improper ends.

We are convinced that by removing many of the barriers which now impede the free exchange of goods and services, and through the gradual unification of Europe, the rebuilding and integration of their national economies will be facilitated. Only in this way can the small countries on the continent be relieved from the menacing pressure from the outside.

The attitude of the Trade Union movements we represent toward ERP is not that it "buys a breathing space" even for a period of four years in which an artificial standard of living might be built up. Rather, it is our wish and intention, even at the cost of continued hardship, to lay the strong foundations upon which economic, reconstruction, security and international cooperation can proceed.

OUR Conference has kept steadily in view throughout its deliberations the primary object of ERP. We define this basic purpose as encouragement and the provision of means for European countries to ascertain and coordinate their resources as a whole and to enable them to make up deficits which become apparent from American and other sources.

The stage has now been reached where the program is going into full operation. In order that our national Trade Union centers should be fully informed of the progress made and the decisions taken by ECA in Washington and Paris and the various European countries, the Conference has decided that a regular service shall be set up between our national centers and the Trade Union representatives attached to ECA, for the reciprocal exchange of reports through the Secretary of our Advisory Committee.

IN the furtherance of this purpose, we recommend the appointment by each national center of a responsible full-time officer to specialize in ERP problems. Furthermore, the Committee shall give guidance to the national centers in the mobilization and coordination of their activities.

And finally, this Conference calls on the people of all the countries concerned to give their best in loyal support of the policy of cooperation to which our national movements have pledged themselves.

Through the noble and farsighted purpose embodied in the great plan of economic recovery, we are confident that the economic, political and social disorders which have brought so much suffering, hardships and anxiety to the European peoples can be overcome.

And organized labor, in whose name we speak, having inescapable responsibilities in this work, will assuredly respond to the call of our Conference for effective cooperation.

Asks Session After Voting

Joseph A. Clorety, Jr., acting chairman of the American Veterans Committee, has urged his entire membership to demand another Special Session of Congress immediately after the November election.

Pointing out that "the need for inflation control, passage of the T-E-W Housing Bill and the civil rights program was not solved by stalling tactics" in the recent special session of Congress, Clorety said:

"The only people who benefited from the fiasco perpetrated by Congress were the transportation companies. Through fantastic subsidies, they already have adequate Congressional representation. The rest of us do not."

POSTMAN'S HOLIDAY?: All these young people, shown during rehearsal for an amateur production, do not earn their bread and butter as actors, but are publicists and office workers, who with 3,000 members of the CIO Office and Professional Workers will seek pay increases from the leading movie producers this month. They are (l. to r.) Muriel Newfield, Gene Singer, Helen Grabow, Martin Newman, Joe DeGuise; kneeling Thelma Gelfand, Jean Barbalat.

Boom Town Bill's Now Doing OK, Thanks

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

They have taken untold millions that they never toiled to earn,

But without our brain and muscle not a single wheel can turn.

We can break their haughty power, gain our freedom when we learn

That the union makes us strong.

THE strong union to which those words of "Solidarity Forever" applies most aptly convened last week.

It convened while papers were carrying stories about the fabulous profits the oil industry of America—and Canada is amassing.

Right at the start, the union—through its international president, O. A. "Jack" Knight—warned the American people that unions would not take the blame for high prices. "When your chicken is stolen, look where the feathers are," Knight asserted. And, he listed the profits of various oil companies.

The Toledo convention—19th for the 31-year-old union—did and heard and saw these things:

• Opened the way for affiliation of several thousand Canadian oil workers, cheering three fraternal delegates to the rafters.

• Heard Alex McAuslane, vice president of the Canadian Congress of Labour, CIO, tell of the need for American international unions in the Canadian field. In oil, for instance, the American monopolists are entrenched in Canada, too. (McAuslane was a member in Scotland of the same mine union local that CIO Pres. Philip Murray once belonged to—that at Lanarkshire.)

ALEX McAUSLANE

• Listened to—and cheered—Jack Kroll, PAC director, when he urged all to get in and pitch this fall.

• Heard a detailed analysis of Toledo's famed Labor-Management Citizens' Committee—the Toledo Plan—from Mayor Michael V. DiSalle. (One out of every five Toledo residents is a CIO member.)

• Applauded Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, when he declared that industry's claim that labor is to blame for high prices is "a lot of baloney." "You won't get reduced prices from industry," he quipped, "because it's not in the nature of the beast." To those who might say the Republicans are not so bad, his answer was "oh, yeah!"

• Heard addresses by Samuel Sponseller, CIO regional director; Tom Burke, CIO member who is vice mayor of Toledo, and others.

• Worked hard and long.

• Heard one delegate sing a song in Cajun dialect.

HOW successful has been this union of Boom Town Bill and of the rig builders, crew pushers, of the drillers, of the derrickmen, of the tool dressers, of the floor men, of the roustabouts, of the roughnecks (that's a classification, not an insult), of the rig builders and his apprentices, and countless others?

Well, let Jack Knight tell it as he did dramatically in his opening address:

"Early in 1941 we got 5c an hour—$104 a year. Later that year, we got 10c more—an additional $208 a year. In 1942, we got 5½c, another $114 a year.

(Then, the union was held up from getting general raises during the war because it had exceeded the War Labor Board's Little Steel Formula. But, a number of fringe benefits were won.)

"In December, 1945, we won 22½c an hour. That's $468 more per year. In January, 1947, we settled for 25c an hour, which is $520 more a year. This year, we've won 17½c—$364 a year.

"Thus, the average member, supposing he had been working all the time since the first '41 raise, has had his pay upped a total of 85½c an hour or $1778 a year. The total that he put into his pocket in raises is $4928. And, mind you, I'm not counting shift differentials, classification changes and other plant benefits, of which we've won a lot.

"What did this cost Mr. Union Member? The maximum dues he could have paid is $204—which is one-twenty-fourth of $4928.

"And, what did it cost your union? About $3,760,000 to get $1,262,000,000."

AND what do the members of the union think about what has been done for them—and what they've done for themselves?

This reporter talked things over with five Jefferson County, Tex., local presidents. They were E. J. Landry, Local 23; John Syers, Local 254; F. J. Foster, Local 243; O. C. Hebert, Local 249, and R. E. Felver, Local 228.

Political action is their business, they say. And, said Landry, acting as a sort of spokesman, "we're in the Democratic Party to stay." They told me of the county convention, at which they helped rout the Dixiecrats. More than half of the delegates were Oil members or close friends. At the State convention, they'll be about 75 OWIU members and friends from Jefferson. (Jefferson is the home of Port Arthur, Port Neches, others).

How do they carry on political action (incidentally, Negro members, thanks to a Supreme Court ruling, now vote in the Democratic primary and are delegates to the various conventions)?

Well, one way is to buy poll tax receipt books, have yourself made a deputy, and stand outside plants, at banks, at stores—and sign up voters. Most of Jefferson's 13,000 OWIUers are registered.

Landry and the others told me about the days before CIO. "We got no service from AFL," Landry said. He declared that things were so bad—working conditions, that is—that "we all felt so hopeless we had no recourse but to cry." Wages were about 38 cents an hour. (Now the average is $1.95 an hour.)

In those days, if you squawked, you were told to quit. And, since one had to try to support a family, one had to take it. Under Texas' "secret ballot" system, the boss could tell you how to vote and would fire you if you didn't follow orders.

In Texas, every ballot is numbered. You sign for a ballot, with a number opposite your name. So, it was easy to check on how you voted.

"We were slave labor," Landry said.

OUT in District 2 (Rocky Mountains), there is an executive council member named Wilfred A. Urban. Urban's been a member of the union for 15 years. Twelve times in those 15 years he has been elected to the international executive council — and was opposed only once.

W. A. URBAN

He works in the rennery at Sinclair, Wyo.—works as a treater.

His eyes glow when he states, "I am proud of the success of this union, one of the most democratic in the world. I am impressed by the unity of our district. The smallest in OWIU, it has contributed as much to the defense fund and PAC as any two other districts. We're for OWIU and CIO policy 100%.

"We hope this fall to defeat Sen. Robertson (R., Wyo.) and will exert every decent method to defeat Anaconda Copper and keep Sen. Murray (D., Mont.) in the Senate."

He was particularly happy about the Canadian affiliation, since his mother came from Canada. He recalled with pleasure the various courses at the Univ. of Wyoming which had been so helpful to the union.

KNIGHT quoted Pres. E. H. Gendke, Local 227, as saying: "Every member should be conscious of the improvements since we affiliated with OWIU."

He listed improvements in pay, is ending a vicious layoff system, in gaining overtime pay, in obtaining regular working hours.

"By active participation we can safeguard our future and maintain our present improvements," Gendke declared.

That's what rank and filer think of their OWIU.

* * *

GOLDEN GATERS: E. L. "Butch" Stanfield (that's he way up there at the left) talks things over with fellow California delegates. He is president of OWIU Local 547, El Segundo. The girls, only women delegates at the convention are Agnes Keitge, vice president of Local 589, Shell Department, Emeryville, Anna Mae Lovato and Mrs. Dorothy Brown, also of 589. The three, plus Joe Brown (Dorothy's husband), secretary-treasurer of the local, and George Finigan, drove 2515 miles from Emeryville to Toledo, stopping only to eat, in three days. All five are lab assistants.

Strikes

The CIO Oil Workers are conducting six strikes. The strikes and number affected:

1. Standard Oil of Ohio: Toledo, four plants in Cleveland, pipeline from Illinois to Cleveland— 1700 members; 2. Agua Dulce (sweet water), Bishop, Tex.—19; 3. Celanese Corp., Bishop, Tex.—650; 4. Sherwood Refining, Warren, Pa.—40; 5. Dodge and Olcott, Newark, N. J.—20; 6. Southern Acid and Sulphur, Port Arthur, Tex.—20.

LEARN EARLY: Billie Dean Saulmon and Frances Jane Saulmon, grandchildren of OWIU delegate W. T. Saulmon (Local 330, Sapulpa, Okla.) examine an OWIU exhibit at the convention hall.

HOWDY: Edward Skene, son of E. H. Skene, vice president of OWIU Local 447, St. Rose, La., and a convention delegate, shakes hands with OWIU Pres. Jack Knight during one of the sessions.

Phone Unions Team Up To Ask More Pay

Independents, CIO-TWOC Unite in Wage Demands

ALONG about Sept. 16 the giant American Telephone & Telegraph Corp. will find itself face to face with a united working force dead-set on obtaining a raise this year.

This new unity was forged last week when the two dominant telephone unions—the CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee and the independent Communications Workers of America met in Washington. They mapped out strategy for a concerted drive to obtain wage increases from the world's largest corporation, the only major corporation in the country which has steadfastly refused its employes a 1948 raise.

Invitations to a second strategy conference on Aug. 20 in Washington were mailed last week to 27 independent unions in addition to CWA and TWOC affiliates.

Other terms of the CWA contracts and the one recently signed by the American Union of Telephone Workers (TWOC), the unions may give 30 days' notice for a wage reopening at any time. Thus, as part of the new cooperation between unions, CWA and AUTW both will forward reopening notices to the corporation simultaneously this week.

One month from this date—on Sept. 16—AT&T will be engaged in wage talks not only with CWA and AUTW, but with the other CIO telephone unions, which have not yet signed agreements.

In a joint statement following the Washington conference, CWA and TWOC said:

"It is time for the obstinate telephone managements to move. In the past few years 'phone workers have dropped from 7th to 22nd place in basic wages. Among all groups of workers they are almost the poorest paid."

TEXTILE: A 16c hourly wage increase granted on the contract expiration date averted a strike by 8044 CIO Textile Workers at the giant Celanese Rayon plant in Cumberland, Md.

This is the first time, the union pointed out, that the corporation has met wage scales set by the American Viscose Corp. without a strike. The Celanese unit is the largest in TWU.

Workers also won $12 each in back pay and improvement in seniority and holiday provisions.

Previously the local had won a union shop election by a vote of 7530 to 75. Celanese had refused to consent to the balloting, forcing a several weeks' delay. When the election date was finally set by the NLRB, the company then refused to permit balloting on its premises.

As this is written, no settlement has been reached with the Celanese plant at Rome, Ga., where the contract is due to run out Aug. 20.

MINE-MILL: CIO Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers announced "indefinite postponement" of a threatened strike against the giant Kennecott Corp. after the company agreed to extend all provisions of the contract which expired June 30 and to grant retroactivity of a 12c hourly wage increase.

Previously the company had refused to negotiate on grounds that the union's officers had not signed non-communist affidavits and had rejected a series of union officers' offers to prove their loyalty by any other means.

A strike would have shut down the world's largest pit copper mine, at Bingham, Utah; two crushing mills in Utah, three mining and refining operations in Nevada and two in New Mexico.

SHIP: In a second vote, employes of the Bethlehem Steel Shipyards accepted a contract providing a 9½c hourly package increase. The CIO Shipbuilding workers had originally rejected the proposed contract.

AUTO: The 116,000 CIO Auto workers at Ford will soon be benefiting from a new insurance program, which provides $18 to $36 weekly for 26 weeks in sickness and accident benefits; death benefits equaling one year's pay and 1½ years' wages in compensation for dismemberment resulting in total disability.

PACKING: CIO Packinghouse Workers have signed one-year agreements with Armour and Cudahy packing companies, both similar to that recently reached with Swift.

Contracts permit reopening for wage talks once a year, dues checkoff, and triple time for holiday work.

OFFICE & PROFESSIONAL: The CIO Office & Professional Workers' 3000 screen employes are preparing to enter negotiations with nine big screen companies, faced not only with the companies' union-busting efforts, but AFL raiding attempts as well.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray pledged CIO's support in the Screen Office & Professional Guild's fight to beat AFL raiding. "Such activity," said Murray, "whether by the AFL union now engaged in this activity, or by any union which seeks to weaken the status of employes in collective bargaining, can bring only harm to the welfare of American workers."

The big screen companies' profits rose from 314% to—in one case—2181% from 1941 to 1946. Eight of these are currently being charged by the U.S. Government with violation of anti-trust laws by allegedly conspiring to knock out competition by controlling main theater outlets.

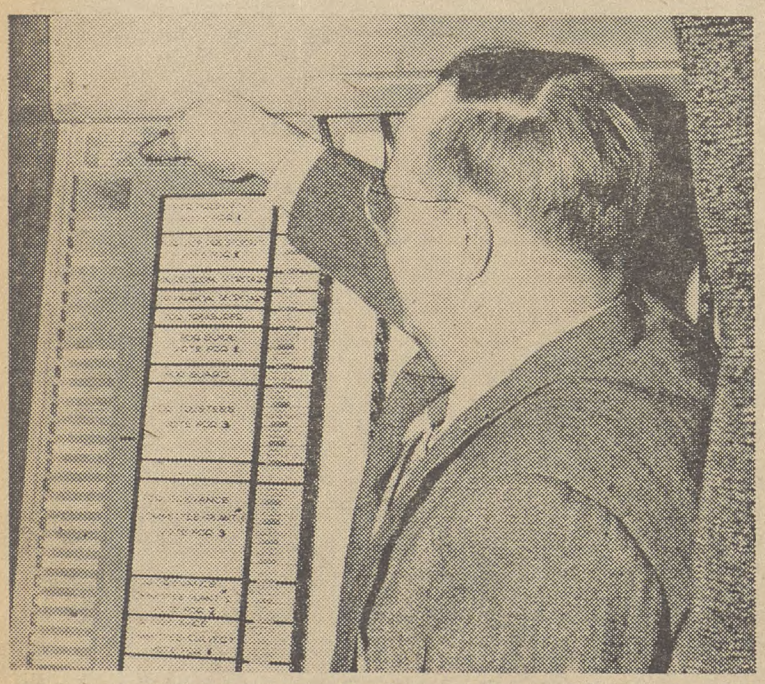
NEW MEMBER: Sister Elizabeth Kenny, Australian nurse famed for her treatment of infantile paralysis, signs up with the CIO Newspaper Guild in New York City as Jack Shelby, director of the local's Guild Club, looks on. Sister Kenny came to the Big City as a reporter for the North American Newspaper Alliance, covering the Intl. Poliomyelitis Conference.

9 TWU AIDES RESIGN FROM ALP

Nine staff members of CIO Transport Workers Local 100, New York City, have resigned from American Labor Party committee positions under an order from the local's executive board.

The nine blasted the order as "an infringement of our political rights and beliefs as American citizens." They also suggested that TWU Pres. Michael Quill resign as a member of the New York City council, since he was elected on an ALP ticket.

Subsequently Quill offered to give up his seat, but the move was "almost unanimously" rejected by the TWU executive board.



MAKE 'EM, USE 'EM: Members of Local 2345 of the CIO Steelworkers use the voting machine they make at the Berger Division of Republic Steel, Canton, Ohio, in choosing their local officers. Retiring Local Pres. Roy Kaufman is using the machine.

Workers Return At Univis Plant

CIO Electrical workers at the Dayton, O., Univis Lens Co., have returned to work after accepting a company offer to rehire "without discrimination or loss of seniority" all except 11 strikers, whom the company accused of law violations.

Thus ended a bloody 96-day strike, filled with police violence and state guard interference, arrests of pickets and court injunctions.

The case of the 11 strikers accused of law violations by management will be put to mediation, and the status of the union as bargaining agent at the plant will be decided by the NLRB. UE recently lost an NLRB election to an independent, but the CIO union is appealing the election, charging company coercion.

A 11c hourly raise is also provided in the agreement.

Registration Aim Of Joint Drive

Every CIO member a qualified voter is the aim of an intensive drive put on in Portsmouth, Va., by a joint committee sponsored by the Southern School for Workers and CIO unions in the area.

The work of the committee was reported at a Town Meeting held to discuss the subject, "Citizenship, Its Duties and Privileges." John Edelman, legislative representative for the textile union and Dr. Luther P. Jackson, historian and author from State Teachers College at Petersburg, Va., were the key speakers.

Two weeks prior to the meeting, Archie Graham, representative of the CIO Steelworkers, in area assisted the school and local union leaders in checking every union member against the poll tax books to see just what the voting status of the CIO is.

Wage-Hour Division To Hear ACW Case

Hearings on a CIO union petition to lift the minimum wage from 40c to 75c an hour for workers engaged in filling government contracts for cotton garments, will be opened by the Wage-Hour Division Sept. 23.

The Amalgamated Clothing Workers filed petition for the increased minimum under terms of the Walsh-Healey Act. Under that law, the Secretary of Labor can fix minimum pay rates for work performed by employers selling materials to the federal government.

NOW THEY KNOW: Taking advice of PAC Dir. Jack Kroll that the antics of Congress had to be seen to be believed, these union members visited the Capitol. They are, left to right, front row, Kay Longo, Catherine Mitcho, Mary Daniels, all of Local 181, Textile Workers, Hazelton, Pa.; Olga Corey, TWUA representatives; Claude Old, Local 186, Chemical Workers, Philadelphia; Panfilo J. Ciampa, Local 738, Auto Workers, Baltimore; Alban Camer, Local 181, TWUA; John J. Smith, Natl. Maritime Union, Baltimore; John Tomsho, Local 181, TWUA; Eric Nordholm, Telephone Workers Organizing Committee, Washington, D. C., and Frank Brown, Local 457, Laundry Workers, Washington, an affiliate of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

UNION LOVELIES: This flower-decked float was the CIO Oil Workers' contribution to the golden jubilee celebration of Port Arthur, Texas. Local 23, OWIU, proud of its members' part in building the port, bought a full page ad in the Port Arthur News to tell the world. The gals on the float are (l. to r.): Mona Rae Mouton, daughter of Arthur Mouton, Local 23; Shirley Hotard, Billye Venable, Tommy Lou Kelly, Local 23's candidate for Port Arthur's beauty queen, and Nonee Young. (OWIU officers were so proud of this float and the gals that they weren't even mad over the fact that Miss Hotard had almost completely blanked out the CIO emblem.) Driver is Charles Turano, who was the envy of all Port Arthurians.

AVC Parley Against Bias

THE American Veterans' Committee is sponsoring a civil rights conference over Labor Day weekend at Durham, N. H.

Leaders of conference workshops will include George L-P Weaver, director of the CIO Natl. Committee to Abolish Discrimination. Applications for participation at the conference must be made before Aug. 21 to the New England Civil Rights Conference, American Veterans' Committee, 294 Washington St., Boston, Mass. The registration fee is $3.

It's Political Double-Talk

ELECTION Day—Nov. 2—is only 81 days off. Politicians and candidates were very busy last week.

Remember the theory—which has held true since Dear Old William McKinley first took office—that a candidate with double letters in his names always wins?

Well, that theory gave us—or so it is said—WiLLiam McKinley, Theodore ROOsevelt, WiLLiam Taft, WOOdrow Wilson, WaRRen Harding, Calvin COOlidge, Herbert HOOver, Franklin ROOsevelt and HaRRY Truman.

This year, some soothsayers are saying, it's gotta be HaRRy Truman or Henry WaLLace. But, the CIO News, in an "exclusive," wishes to point out that there is another Presidential candidate who just can't lose, if the double letter theory must prevail.

For he has three doubles.

He is FaRReLL DoBBs, candidate of the Socialist Workers' Party.

Aftermaths

Snorted Boss Crump, after his candidates were snowed under in Tennessee's primary:

"The CIO-PAC and the sales tax beat us. The record vote in the labor wards indicates that CIO-PAC spent barrels of money."

Said the Chattanooga Free Press: "Crumpism was defeated by CIOism. Of the two we prefer Crumpism."

P. S. The CIO blushes.

Other political news:

● One more Congressman who voted for the Taft-Hartley law—Rep. John J. Riley (D., S. C.) was defeated for re-election. He lost to a war vet, 27-year-old Hugo Sims, Jr., in the 8th District. Sims had strong labor support from CIO Textile Workers and from AFL unions. He had waged a successful fight against anti-union bills in the state legislature, to which he was first elected five years ago. (In South Carolina, nomination in the Democratic primary is a guarantee of election).

● Strong, united labor support came close to giving John Young Brown, former Kentucky governor, the state's Democratic nomination for U. S. Senator. Bucking a strong political machine—which had indorsed Rep. Virgil Chapman for the post—Brown trailed by only 10,000 votes.

The Louisville Courier-Journal, noting that Brown carried Jefferson County (Louisville) by almost 2 to 1 in a startling defeat for the machine, commented:

"Labor's victory definitely gains it prestige in politics in Jefferson. It obviously must be given great consideration in future elections."

● In Connecticut, liberal Chester Bowles—former OPA administrator—announced he would seek the Democratic nomination for governor. Bowles is almost certain to receive union indorsement.

Tobin Takes Labor Post

MAURICE J. TOBIN, newly-appointed Secretary of Labor, has long been considered a friend of unions in his native state of Massachusetts.

Tobin has served both as governor of the Bay State and as mayor of Boston. He ran with labor endorsement. He is on record as opposing the Taft-Hartley Act and calling for its repeal.

"I am opposed to any discriminatory oppressive legislation, whether it applies to labor or business," Tobin told reporters last week. "I consider that the Taft-Hartley law comes under this classification."

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey said:

"In appointing Maurice J. Tobin of Boston as Secretary of Labor, President Truman has brought to his cabinet a man whose friendship for the aspirations of American workers and their unions is tested and of long standing.

"We look with satisfaction on this appointment, and we look forward to close, cooperative relationship with him in the coming months. Such a relationship has existed for many years between the leaders of the CIO in Massachusetts and Mr. Tobin, during the period when he was mayor of Boston and governor of the state.

"We can only express regret, however, that the department to which he comes has been so seriously shorn of its operating funds and personnel by the Republican-controlled Congress. The Department of Labor, under these circumstances, can scarcely accomplish its assignment of caring for the welfare of workers.

"We shall strive constantly to rebuild the Department out of the wreckage left by the 79th and 80th Congress—and we know that Mr. Tobin will be of very considerable help in this drive to restore to the Department of Labor the stature it deserves."

Acceptance of the Cabinet post led Tobin to remove himself as a candidate in the Massachusetts Democratic primaries, where he was seeking the party's nomination for governor. He had held that office from 1944 and 1946.

The Department has been without a top executive since the death of Lewis Schwellenbach early this summer. It has been administered by Asst. Sec. John Gibson, former Michigan CIO president. Gibson has not indicated his future plans.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

Connecticut Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone reports that the UAW-CIO won an NLRB election at the Federal Electric Co. in Hartford. The workers voted 257 for UAW and 18 for no union. In Rockville, Conn., Brother McCrone informs us, the CIO Textile Workers won an election at the American Dyeing Co.

The UAW-CIO won an election at the Burlington, Iowa, plant of the Kimbell Electric Co., it is reported by Iowa CIO Reg. Dir. Ben Henry. The results of the election were UAW-CIO 57, IBEW-AFL 16, no union 6.

George Brown, Director of Organization for the CIO Woodworkers, reports that the Portland, Oregon, plant of Libby, McNeil & Libby voted overwhelmingly for the union shop. The vote was 196 yes to 15 no.

Martin Gerber, Director of Region 9, UAW-CIO, reports that Federated Metal Division of the American Smelting and Refining Co., Newark, N. J., voted in an NLRB election 121 to 1 to be represented by the UAW-CIO.

Irwin L. DeShelter, CIO Director for Southern California, reports that the CIO Textile Workers won a union shop election at United Piece Dye Works in Los Angeles by a vote of 80 to 0. Harry Stillman, Textile Workers representative, was in charge.

Intl. Rep. Francis M. McMahon of the CIO Playthings & Jewelry Workers reports that a union shop election at the A. T. Wall Company, Providence, R. I., was won by a vote of 37 to 0.

Frank J. Bender, Maryland Regional Director, reports that the National Labor Relations Board after determining the validity of challenged ballots in an election held in March at the American Steam Laundry Co., Piedmont, West Virginia, has certified the CIO as the collective bargaining agency.

The Union Laundry, Inc., Cumberland, Md., recognized the United Laundry Workers, LIU No. 40, as the representative of those employes by a show of cards. The union has negotiated a contract with a wage increase.

Director Bender also reports that the CIO Textile Workers won a union shop election in the huge Cumberland plant of the Celanese Corp. of America. The vote was 7530 for a union shop and 75 against. Ninety-five per cent of those eligible to vote cast a ballot.

National TWUA Rep. James A. Blackwell, Local 1874, Pres. Playford Aldridge and Business Manager John G. Thomas are to be congratulated. This is TWUA's largest local. Of 679 union security elections engaged in by the TWUA, only three have been lost. This record speaks eloquently of the job this CIO Union is doing for its membership.

As a result of a meeting on Aug. 7 with the officers of the independent Communications Workers of America, a program of joint action by all telephone organizations has been decided upon for the purpose of winning wage increases from the American Telephone and Telegraph Corp. and its operating and manufacturing companies. Representing the CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee at this meeting were the writer, Vice-Chairman Jack Moran and Secy.-Treas. Richard W. Long.

CIO and CWA telephone unions will re-open for wage increases those contracts which are not now in the process of negotiation at approximately the same time. A meeting is being called which will include representatives of all unaffiliated telephone organizations to set a co-ordinated plan of action and time-table to make these wage re-openings success and beneficial to the pay envelopes of the workers.

SOUTHERN CAMPAIGN: Florida fishermen are cautious souls. Not much given to taking snap judgment. 'Way back in June, 1947, Charles Cowl, CIO Southern Drive Director in Florida, wrote the president of an independent fisherman's union suggesting that their group should affiliate with the CIO. Cowl enclosed a self-addressed stamped envelope for reply.

Last week Cowl received an answer—in the same self-addressed envelope. Yes, the fishermen would be interested and would like more information.

Nope, Florida fishermen refused to be stampeded into action. They sort of want to sleep on it before making up their minds.

Blockworkers Do Everything

ON THIS PAGE is pictured the most publicized part of CIO-PAC activities—and also the least publicized, up until this time.

Over there at the left, Veronica Janetski, PAC captain for the 87th precinct of Wheeling, W. Va., rings a doorbell in her block work activities.

To the right of her, top row, Mary Kretchen does some baby sitting with Penny Susan Steele, 3 months old, so Penny's parents can take part in political activities.

Next, top row, Mary Kolenc is carrying back from the grocery store a week's supply for an ailing resident of her block area.

Just to the left, below, is Clement (Mrs. Robert) Edge, cleaning dishes as part of her block work. Mrs. Edge is the mother of four sons, the oldest 21. She, the two Marys and Veronica are members of the CIO Steelworkers, Local 1290, Wheeling Machinery Products. Their work, and that of countless others, is part of of the PAC work of Steelworkers' District 23. That district is holding seven gigantic Labor Day rallies, two of which will be addressed by Philip Murray, president of the Steelworkers and the CIO.

For more details of District 23's PAC work see Pages 6 and 7.

CIO TO TELL PEOPLE OF CONGRESS' FAILURE

CIO executive officers and vice presidents last week declared the Progressive Party "offers nothing but division and defeat to progressive Americans," and proposed making the failure of the 80th Congress "known to all of the American people." The vice presidents also assailed the Republicans and Dixiecrats. (Story Page 3)

GALLUP FINDS 56% WANT PRICE CONTROL

The Gallup Poll has announced that 56% of the people surveyed want restoration of controls and rationing to check rising prices, as widespread strikes of meat buyers brought anguished wails from dealers. Packinghouse Workers' economists said Big Business, including the packers, was chiefly reponsible for high prices. (Story Page 2)

Gallup Poll Shows in Cities

Price Control Sentiment Is Growing

By FRED ROSS

"BUSINESS ain't what she used to be" was the theme of a song being sung last week by many meat dealers.

While buyers continued their boycott on meat, the lamentations of the meat merchants could be heard from coast to coast.

In New York City, where prices remained high despite strikes, Albert Wendell, president of the New York State Association of Retail Meat Dealers, said shippers of meat might divert their supplies to other cities. Then New York City prices, he said, would go even higher.

In Philadelphia, a newspaper made a survey which showed that business is so bad that many meat dealers will close up shop if it doesn't improve by fall. The United Press reported that in the same city some independent packing houses were put up for sale.

(Record profits by the big packers guaranteed that they would stay in business.)

In Los Angeles where there was another strike, Clyde D. Lightbody of the Meat Dealer Association said:

"What the hell can we do? We're only the tail of the dog. The head is out there on the ranges of Wyoming and in the cornfield of Nebraska. The tail can't wag till they feed the head, and the tail is dropping."

THE CIO United Packinghouse Workers' economists took a much broader view of the meat price rises than either Wendel or Lightbody.

They denounced the "farmer is the villain" theory.

UPW economists pointed out in the "Meat of It":

"Livestock farmers are plenty touchy on this subject (that he is the villain). For the city editor ignores such factors as the sky-high feed costs and other excessive burdens—including the farmers own cost of living."

The UPW says that the increase has occurred on three levels, the price paid for livestock, and the wholesale and the retail prices of meat.

"Farmers will be interested that the price packers charge retailers have gone up much more than the price paid to farmers by the packers—120% against 74%. (The increase occurred from June 1946 to June 1948.)

"If the Big Packer and Big Newspaper explanation for high prices, 'high consumer demand'—based on 'excessive purchasing power'—is the real explanation, why have wholesale prices increased somewhat more than retail? . . .

"By far the chief responsibility—yes guilt—belongs with Big Business (including the packers) for extortionately high living costs. And, for most of the high costs in farm operation: farm machinery, fertilizer, and manufactured feeds."

—Memphis Commercial Appeal

This Cold Shoulder Cut Comes High, Too

RECOGNITION of the rising tide of consumers' resentment to all types of high prices was expressed by answers given to Gallup poll questions. Gallup reported last week:

"If the President makes an appeal for limited controls in his campaign speeches, he is likely to get a sympathetic hearing from his audiences, particularly in the big cities. Among the city consumers, especially the housewives, sentiment for price controls is overwhelming."

The reason was that in April a coast to coast survey showed that only 39% were in favor of restoring controls, 52% were opposed, 7% expressed no opinion and 2% favored price controls but not rationing.

But a recent Gallup survey shows that the tide has turned. Now the score is: 56% for controls and rationing, 33% opposed, 2% for controls but not rationing and 7% without opinions.

The Wall Street Journal last week said that an "11-city survey of eateries ranging from the swank hotel spots to hamburger-and-coffee counters turned up this story:

"Business is off. More than half the restaurants and chains queried reported sales down from this time last year. Most of the others said profits are slipping even though they are taking in more cash.

"They're inching up prices as costs climb, but many a meal merchant admits he's afraid to charge much more."

Stick to Price: The Journal said that the chewing gum industry will stick to its traditional price of a nickel a pack. The reason for this, the newspaper said it was told, was that the industry is able to keep the price down because it has shifted to synthetics—as the base of gum—from natural chicle, which is high priced.

The Journal reported that Americans this year are expected to chew enough gum to girdle the globe three-and-a half times more than last year, when the gum would have wrapped around the world "34.5 times at the equator, without stretching."

Philip K. Wrigley, chairman of the world's largest chewing gum corporation, gave the public this to chew over:

"There's a lot of nervous tension today. People are worrying about the draft, Russia and what's happening in Palestine. The more nervous people get, the more gum they chew."

Textile Industry Slump Blamed on High Prices

Thousands of cotton textile workers are wondering whether it's the handwriting on the wall or just a fleeting shadow. They're hoping it's the latter, because otherwise, they fear, it's a forecast of stormy weather in the not-too-distant future for themselves and a lot of other industrial workers.

In New England and in the South cotton textile workers are being put on a four-day week. A number have been laid off at some mills which cut out the third shift. In the midst of the highest profits the industry has ever reaped, the highest prices the industry has ever charged, there's a rash of production curtailment.

The CIO Textile Workers blame high prices for the slump. Consumers haven't the money to pay current prices for clothes and are cutting their purchases to the bone, they say.

The Wall St. Journal reported one New York retail cloth buyer as attributing the cut-backs to a "foolish attempt to keep prices of goods up."

Industry executives were quoted by the newspaper as saying the decline was the result of "consumer resistance to prices" or a big reduction in foreign orders.

BUT the cotton textile industry appeared to be an exception in the price-profits picture, as other corporation profits and prices continue their trek upward.

The Federal Trade Commission last week gave the public a good view of the extent of the corporations' postwar prosperity. In a report on the rate of return for 508 corporations in 25 industries, comparing the most prosperous pre-war year, 1940, with 1947, it found all but two industries reaping unprecedented profits.

What used to be considered a good return on an investment—6% to 8%—applied to only two industries: 1. engines and turbines; 2. snuff, plug and smoking tobacco. These were at the bottom of the profit list. For the other 23 industries, profits were coming in at the rate of from 10.2% to 24.9%.

To cite a few:

- Steel mills, which averaged an 8.1% return on investment in 1940, made a net 11% last year.
- Paper and allied products jumped from 9.4% in 1940 to 20.5% last year.
- Auto manufacturers rose from 17.6% in 1940 to 18.5% last year.
- Rayon manufacturers made 8.6% in 1940; 18.4% last year.
- Office & Store machines climbed from 13.2% in 1940 to 24.9% in 1947.

Murray To Talk Labor Day

CIO Pres. Philip Murray is scheduled to deliver a Labor Day address over the CBS network from Wheeling, W. Va.

Murray's radio speech will be broadcast at 6:00 P.M., EDT, on Sept. 6 and will be heard in all parts of the country over Columbia's coast-to-coast network.

Other CIO radio appearances in coming weeks:

Aug. 28—3:30 P.M., EDT, CBS, "Cross-Section U. S. A." Sam Jacobs, UAW-CIO Education Dept., talks on "Boom or Bust."

Sept. 4—3:30 P.M., EDT, CBS, "Cross-Section U. S. A." Vice-Pres. Milton Lapine of Newspaper Guild, talks on "Steady Jobs."

Sept. 11—3:30 P.M., EDT, CBS, "Cross-Section U. S. A." CIO Counsel Arthur Goldberg, Clinton Golden of Economic Cooperation Administration, talk on "Causes of Industrial Peace."

Sept. 18—3:30 P.M., EDT, CBS, "Cross-Section U. S. A." Workers and management at Forstmann textile plant talk about good industrial relations. Comments by Allan L. Swim, CIO publicity director.

DISCUSS HIGH PRICES: Mrs. Faye Stevenson, president of the CIO's Congress of Women's Auxiliaries (standing at right) addresses the CIO Oil Workers' Auxiliary at its recent convention in Toledo. Mrs. Stevenson and the Auxiliary members had long discussions of their most pressing problem: high prices. They were bitter in their condemnation of the "do-Nothing" 80th Congress. Left to right, front row, are the Oil Auxiliary's officers: Mrs. Marie Born, Enid, Okla., educational director; Mrs. Irene Bradley, Augusta, Kans., Mrs. E. J. Galbraith, Port Arthur, Tex., acting president; Mrs. G. L. Allen, Cushing, Okla., secretary-treasurer; and (beyond Mrs. Stevenson) Mrs. Laura Urban, Sinclair, Wyo., acting recording secretary. Standing at left, asking a question, is Mrs. Betty Aikins, Kilgore, Tex. Seated at table at right is Helen Blanchard, director of organization for CIO auxiliaries.

Vice Presidents:

CIO To Make Record of 80th Congress Known to All The American People

HERE is the statement issued by Pres. Philip Murray, as authorized at a meeting of the executive officers and vice presidents in Washington on August 19:

THE record of the 80th Congress on domestic issues is bare of constructive accomplishment. A coalition of "do-nothing" Republicans and bigoted Dixiecrats refused to take action to cope with the grave issues which confront the nation.

The Congress contributed to rather than checked inflation. Adequate housing for those who need it was not provided. The Republican leadership of the Congress acquiesced in the filibuster against civil rights conducted by Southern Democrats.

The iniquitous Taft-Hartley law was enacted and then retained on the books despite the experience of the last year proving without doubt, that it has brought chaos into industrial relations and has undermined the national policy established during the administration of President Roosevelt to encourage collective bargaining.

Although the Social Security Act needs extension and improvement, all that the Congress did was to take away its benefits from millions of American workers. National health insurance, imperatively required for our general welfare and common defense, was shelved in committees of the Congress. Federal aid to education, universally recognized to be necessary to sustain our educational system, was withheld.

No action was taken to increase the inadequate 40c Minimum Wage Law to meet the rising cost of living. The Congress, acting at the behest of the public utility lobby, has sought in every way possible to hamper TVA's operations and to prevent other necessary valley authorities. Contrary to our traditions of hospitality the Congress enacted a discriminatory Displaced Persons Bill, and although given an adequate opportunity at the special session, it refused to eliminate the discriminatory features and thereby remove this blot on our national honor.

THE record of failure on the part of this Congress is plain and evident. The Congress has fostered inflation, has promoted the special interests, and has contributed to insecurity. Big Business and the real estate lobby have flourished throughout the regular and special sessions. The people have suffered.

Instead of action to protect the interests of the American people, the Congress is providing a circus in the form of the so-called "spy investigation" currently in progress. The CIO has no brief for anyone who engages in espionage against our country in the interests of a foreign power. Persons charged with such violations of our laws can be brought to justice.

They are entitled to be tried and make their defense in the American way before a judge and jury and not be subjected to an inquisition before an irresponsible committee of the Congress. It must be obvious to all that the present investigations are patently political and intended to distract the attention of the people from the inadequacies and failures of Congress.

We are not fooled by this spectacle and we know that the people will not be diverted from the real issues of the coming campaign.

THE political parties have recently concluded their conventions. We regard it to be significant that the platform of the Democratic Party unequivocally endorses President Truman's Civil Rights program and forthrightly declares for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law and the liberalism of the Wage-Hour law. We note and shall have occasion to point out during the ensuing campaign the failure of the Republican platform on these and other important issues. The Progressive Party, despite its platform, offers nothing but division and defeat to progressive Americans.

Last January the executive board of the CIO, after full and democratic debate, rejected by a decisive vote any Third Party at this time. This action was taken in conformity with prior convention action of the CIO. Events since last January fully demonstrate the soundness of the CIO's position on the Third Party.

The so-called Progressive Party has created disunity and has weakened the forces of liberalism and progress in this country. It has and is contributing to the growth of reaction by sponsoring candidates in the various states and congressional districts against liberal office-holders and candidates. It thereby gives aid and comfort to the candidates of reaction.

The Third Party does not and cannot command the allegiance and support of laboring men and women and their organizations. It is clear that the Progressive Party will not and cannot in any sense serve the interests of the American people.

THE record of the 80th Congress is now before us. The CIO proposes to make this record known to all of the American people. We will not allow any Taft-Hartley Law to stand in our way. We propose to do everything within our power to elect to the 81st Congress representatives and senators who will serve the people's interests instead of the special interests.

We call upon the membership of the CIO and their friends to join in the work of our Political Action Committee. We have in the past demonstrated the effectiveness of PAC. We shall demonstrate this again on November 2.

Board Will Act Aug. 30 In Endorsement Question

CIO's 51-man executive board meets in Washington August 30 to take up the question of endorsements in the coming election campaign.

Pres. Murray announced the meeting at the end of a session on Aug. 19 attended by Sec.-Treas. James Carey, CIO's vice-presidents, Director Jack Kroll of the Political Action Committee and heads of the CIO headquarters staff.

He said the vice-presidents had no constitutional authority to make endorsements.

The vice-presidents authorized Pres. Murray to issue a statement attacking the record of the 80th Congress, the Republican platform, the record of the southern Dixiecrats and the splitting effects of Henry Wallace's Progressive Party. The statement was endorsed by an 8-1 vote, with Pres. Albert J. Fitzgerald of the United Electrical Radio & Machine Workers opposing.

Pres. O. A. Knight of the oil union did not attend because of a death in his family, and Pres. Walter Reuther of the auto union was represented by UAW Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey.

Grabbing Headlines But Voting Wrong

MEMBERS of the House UnAmerican Activities Committee are far better at making headlines than at building good voting records.

While the "spy" hearings staged by the Committee have attracted national attention, the day-in, day-out records of the group's nine committeemen have received little notice.

A check of the Committee members' standing in the 1948 CIO News Voting Record shows that as a group the nine Congressmen voted right only 25% of the time on the 16 issues selected by CIO as most important during the 80th Congress.

Rep. John Rankin (D. Miss.)—a virulent race-baiter and union-hater—has the "most liberal" record of the Committee members. He voted "right" on 8 of the 16 issues.

All the UnAmerican Activities Committee members voted for the Taft-Hartley Act.

All of them voted for crippling amendments to the Wage-Hour law.

Three of the committee members voted against the European Recovery Program. Four voted right, four voted wrong on a proposal to tax the excess profits of big business.

BY FAR the worst of the nine voting records was that of Rep. J. Parnell Thomas (R.,N.J.), UnAmerican Activities Committee chairman. He was absent for 13 of the key votes. He voted wrong twice—for the Taft-Hartley bill and for the Wage-Hour Amendments. He voted right only on the anti-polltax bill.

Many of Thomas' absent votes are explained by an illness contracted when he went on a trip to the Panama Canal Zone early this year.

Rep. Vail (R.,Ill.) voted right only twice, voted wrong 14 times.

Three Congressmen voted right three out of 16 times. They were Reps. McDowell (R.,Pa.), Mundt (R.,S.D.) and Nixon (R.,Calif.).

The Committee's four Democrats—all southerners—did little better. Rep. Rankin voted right 8 times; Wood (Ga.) and Peterson (Fla.) voted right 6 times each, and Hebert (La.) voted right only 5 out of 16 times.

Rankin takes the floor almost daily when the House is in session to scream against Negroes, Jews and liberals. Rep. McDowell has referred to the displaced persons of Europe as "loud-mouthed refugees from European poorhouses" whose principal aim has been to get away on "the dead run from compulsory military service."

Don't Pay Gabbie With Wooden 5c's

The taxi cab drivers of Laurel, Miss., are members of the CIO Woodworkers.

It happened this way—the drivers, mechanics and grease monkeys at Yellow Cab wanted a union, so they called on State Director R. W. Starnes of the CIO Southern Drive. Starnes assigned F. D. Wheeler who helped them form a local. The company recognized the union without necessity of an election and a contract has been signed calling for double time on four holidays, paid vacations and a union shop.

Next, the Morgan Co., another taxi concern, also recognized the union and a contract is being negotiated.

The cab drivers were put in the Woodworkers at their request as they wanted to be in the same union as their fellow townsmen at Masonite, Mengle, Green Lumber.

It remained for one droll taxi jockey to remark, "Don't try to pay your fares with wooden nickles just because we are in the Woodworkers."

Guild Issues Bonds

The CIO Newspaper Guild is financing the purchase of modern accounting equipment through the sale to locals and members of $100 notes bearing 3% interest. Already 20 locals and three members have pledged to underwrite $10,700 in notes. The issue will total $25,000.

Hiring Hall Ruled Illegal By NLRB

THE union hiring hall, which American seamen won after years of bitter struggle, has been declared illegal by the Natl. Labor Relations Board.

The ruling applied specifically to the CIO Maritime Union's hiring hall on the Great Lakes. The Board contended that the union, in giving preference to union members, discriminated against non-union men and thus violated the Taft-Hartley law.

In addition, the NLRB charged the union and its officers with violating the law by refusing to accept any contract without the cherished hiring hall provision. Thus, reasoned the Board, the union "refused to bargain."

The complaint against the union was brought by four Great Lakes tanker corporations, one of which, the Texas Co., had already reached an agreement with the NMU.

The NLRB decision threatened to renew dissension between the union and companies with which it has contracts by invalidating the crucial hiring hall provision. Almost simultaneous with the NLRB ruling came announcement of an NMU settlement with 35 Atlantic and Gulf Coast ship companies and three tanker companies. The hiring hall dispute was settled in these contracts by an agreement to maintain the practice intact until the issue has been settled by the courts. Thus it appears likely the union will appeal the NLRB ban up to the Supreme Court if necessary.

Immediate reaction came from NMU Pres. Joseph Curran, who said outlawing of the hiring hall "can wreck the whole industry."

At the same time CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg termed the decision "entirely unsound" and objected strongly to the board's order banning a strike in support of "just demands."

"This patently violates the constitutional right of unions to strike for their just demands and amounts to involuntary servitude," said Goldberg.

Carey To Address Women's Parley

A group of young women from 26 countries are attending the first International Study Conference on Women and World Reconstruction now in session at Teachers' College, Columbia University, New York City. The conference, sponsored by the National Board of the YWCA, opened Aug. 18 and is holding daily seminars lasting through Sept. 14.

CIO Secy-Treas. James B. Carey will address the conference Aug. 24, as one of a group of visiting lecturers.

SPIES AND HIGHS

Oh, boy! It's just like one of those old-time meller-drammers in which the fair maiden in distress is rescued by the brawny hero while the villain twirls his waxed mustache and scowls.

In this case, however, the maiden in distress wasn't rescued until after she had heaved herself out a fourth-story window and banged herself up considerably in her fall.

The lady, it seems, didn't want to go back to Russia and leave the "decadent, imperialistic, war-mongering" U. S. behind.

Of course, this version of what happened is based on the reports of the capitalistic press and is somewhat different from the one given by Soviet officials.

From the average reporter's standpoint, the story was a honey—and the Republican politicos viewed it in the same light.

It was an exciting anti-climax to the GOP spy hunt in Washington, which at times has looked suspiciously like a witch hunt.

Be that as it may, however, the GOP strategists and the trend of events have been setting the stage for one of the phoniest political campaigns in history.

The principal issue, as we pointed out weeks ago, will be Republicanism vs. Communism, if the Republicans have their way.

Under this plan, Dewey et al will be the champions of true American democracy and the current White House occupant will be the dupe if not the friend of the Kremlin.

INFLATION? FORGET IT!

This scheme reminds us of the fellow who tried to cure his toothache by drinking whiskey. He really gulped it down and while he was drunk he didn't notice the pain. His head hurt so much the next two days he didn't particularly mind his original ailment.

Right now the nation has a bad economic toothache called inflation. Old Doc Truman and the Democratic liberals wanted to apply the forceps—or at least the drill—but the GOP boys didn't see it that way.

"We'll focus the patient's attention on something else and make him forget his high prices ailment. We'll intoxicate him with Red scares and that will turn the trick," the Republicans said.

It was a case of digging up spies to hide the highs—and the highs we're talking about are spoken of in news stories which say, "New highs in prices and profits were reached last week."

SOMEBODY IS LYING

One of Washington's leading humor writers, confused by conflicting testimony in which the accused and the accusers told different "spy" stories, commented, "Of only one thing am I sure. Somebody's lying!"

He was right, of course, and far be it from us to attempt to put the finger on the culprits.

But we're sure of one thing the humorist didn't mention—and that is that civil rights have been taking a real kicking around in Washington lately.

The fact that there's probably considerable fire behind all of the smoke doesn't justify the tactics used by the House Un-American Activities Committee and other investigating groups.

And it doesn't provide justification for the GOP plan to conduct a campaign from behind a Red smokescreen.

So, may we suggest that when you hear a politician declare there's a Commie under every bed, you tell him:

"Hell, mister, we can't afford beds at today's high prices!"

Two Bad Beatings -- Years Apart

Organizer Smith Got His In Late 30's, Boss Crump A Few Weeks Ago

(Following is an "open" letter to Norman Smith, reported by friends to be working in the steel plant at Fontana, Calif.)

DEAR BROTHER SMITH:

You may not remember me, but I'm the fellow who interviewed you in your room at the Ambassador Hotel just a short time before you were beaten into a bloody pulp near Main and Linden in Memphis.

That was about 11 years ago, if I recall correctly. Anyhow, it was the year Old Boss Crump's boys made public statements that the CIO "wouldn't be tolerated" in Memphis.

All of you "dangerous, radical, foreign agitators" were going to be run out of town. Remember?

You didn't leave, so they worked you over with some "blunt instruments."

WHEN he heard about what happened to you, W.A. (Red) Copeland nearly blew a gasket. So did Ed Meeman—and so did I.

Perhaps you remember Red. He was one of the founders of the Newspaper Guild in Memphis. Meeman was editor of the Press-Scimitar, the paper which blasted the city administration for permitting beatings such as yours.

Me? Oh, I was the young fellow assigned to help Labor Reporter Ben Stong when the going got so rough one man couldn't keep track of all of the violence.

I counted a lot of bruises and saw a lot of bloody heads that year and in the years to follow.

COPELAND and I became Guild delegates to the Memphis CIO Council—and darned if I wasn't elected president of the outfit almost before I knew it.

At about the same time, Copeland became president of the Tennessee CIO Council.

We made a lot of speeches about political action and, frankly, nobody took us very seriously—at least not at first.

"Crump can't be beat," we were told time and again. Maybe we were just too dumb to believe it.

A lot of other guys were in there pitching, too — guys like State CIO Director Paul Christopher and Memphis PAC Chairman Dick Routon.

We took a shallow dive into politics in 1946 and got our ears pinned back, but good.

BUT this year, Norman, it was different, and I want to tell you about it although you probably know most of the story.

Copeland, CIO regional director in Memphis, headed the Tennessee PAC campaign. All labor groups in the state got together.

Ed Meeman, who ripped the hide off the Crump boys after they had beaten the hide off you, helped organize an anti-Crump Citizens' Committee in Memphis.

It was a bang-up campaign, in which Crump did the customary amount of smearing.

When the votes were counted the anti-Crump candidates—Estes Kefauver and Gordon Browning —were declared winners.

THERE are some other fellows, Norman, to whom I might have addressed this message.

There's Harry Elder, who got worked over just a short time after you were beaten. He was a friend of yours, I believe.

Then there were George Bass and "Chink" Bedgood, who were given the works during the Firestone campaign a few years after you helped organize Ford.

There were a lot of others, too, who got banged around with lead pipes, monkey wrenches and blackjacks.

But you were one of the first to really get "the business" and I thought you might like to know the last man to get a bad beating in Memphis was Ed Crump!

IT WOULD be nice if you could get together with 21 of my associates who have been beaten since "Operation Dixie" — the CIO's latest organizing drive—began.

You could say to them, "Boys, it's tough—mighty tough—but it pays off in the long run."

You could tell them how you felt when you learned Crump had been beaten at the polls.

You could point out that there's more to this business of being a CIO man than merely negotiating higher pay.

And nobody would blame you if you said, "I helped beat a political dictator on his own home ground."

Fraternally yours,
ALLAN L. SWIM,

Helstein Blasts Daily Worker For Inaccuracies

THE Daily Worker, Communist party paper, was taken sharply to task by Pres. Ralph Helstein of the CIO Packinghouse union for "inaccuracies" in reporting the union's recent convention.

In a letter to the newspaper, Helstein said that statements made by George Morris, the paper's labor columnist, concerning the activities of CIO Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood, Asst. Organization Director R. J. Thomas and other CIO staff officials attending the packinghouse convention, were "completely inaccurate and in no way reflect what actually transpired at the convention."

The story—which accused Haywood of conspiring against the union's leadership — "misrepresents the role of Mr. Haywood during the course of our convention," Helstein wrote.

"The facts are that Allan Haywood and his assistants in no way attempted to influence the decisions of the convention except to the degree they would be helpful in bringing a degree of unity.

"Mr. Haywood's address to the convention and his activities throughout contributed substantially toward unifying various conflicting viewpoints represented at the convention.

"It would seem that before such inaccuracies are published that some effort would be made to ascertain the facts. Certainly, no useful purpose can be served by comments of this character. I trust that the necessary action will be taken to correct these misrepresentations."

In recent months, Morris' columns in the Daily Worker have been frequently devoted to bitter attacks on Pres. Murray and other CIO leaders—often with little regard for the facts.

NAM Story Credits TWUA

A considerable part of the credit for the success of a plan to give employment to physically handicapped workers at the big Botany textile plant in Passaic, N. J., is credited to the CIO Textile Workers by the company's director of industrial relations, Maj. Gen. Irving J. Phillipson.

An article in the Aug. 14 issue of NAM News, where a union is seldom mentioned favorably, quotes Gen. Phillipson as praising the CIO union's encouragement of the company effort to give jobs to maimed persons.

"Whenever some exception to our routine was necessary, they were always with us," Phillipson said. "It would be unfair for Botany to claim all the credit, for a considerable part of it belongs to the Textile Workers Union of America, CIO."

He Told His Story To The Wrong Man

THE wheels played a fast-tempo clickety-clack tune on the rails as the train sped eastward toward Washington.

Passengers watched the scenery through the windows, read magazines, drank in the lounge car and did the other things travelers usually do.

Back in one of the Pullman cars two strangers began a casual conversation. One of them, the younger of the two, seemed anxious to talk and the other seemed content to listen.

The younger man—a lawyer—was bubbling over with enthusiasm. He was on his way to the Capital to show one of those blamed federal agencies a thing or two! Yes, he was.

THE older man encouraged the lawyer to tell his story—not that he really needed encouragement.

The lawyer was representing a company which had a contract with a CIO union—and the union had been seeking a wage increase which the company didn't want to grant.

There was the customary amount of stalling and then the company decided to toss the matter into the lap of the War Labor Board.

Finally the case had reached the "big" board in Washington and it was before this group that the attorney intended to strut his stuff.

IT was quite apparent that the lawyer was a bit contemptuous of federal agencies in general and the WLB in particular.

And besides, he said, he had an "airtight" case.

And furthermore, he bragged, he was going to "twist the board right around my little finger."

"That's interesting," said the older man, "and how do you intend to do it?"

"Well, now, I'll tell you," replied the attorney, and outlined his case in some detail.

He explained the various steps carefully and it was obvious he thought his companion didn't quite understand what he was talking about.

He concluded with some remark about the union "really taking a beating on this one."

THE conversation switched to baseball, football and other subjects as the big Diesel and its long train of cars ate up the miles.

The attorney was in high spirits and his companion was in a jovial mood.

Finally the train pulled into Washington's Union Station. The attorney, as cockey as you please, grabbed up his new briefcase, waved a jaunty good-bye and disappeared into the crowd in the station.

As he departed the older man said, "Good luck," and under his breath murmured, "You'll need it."

NEXT day the WLB took up the case in which the young attorney was interested.

The lawyer walked into the room and glanced at the Board members. His face suddenly turned red—then white.

He was on a bad spot and he knew it. One of the men who was to sit in judgement on his case was his traveling companion of the day before—Van A. Bittner, now director of the CIO's Southern membership drive!

The union won the case. A.L.S.

THE BEAR FACTS!

Washington Post Raps Rep. J. Parnell Thomas

HARRY DEXTER WHITE, former Assistant Secy. of the Treasury and U.S. executive director on the International Monetary Fund, was accused by Elizabeth T. Bentley and Whittaker Chambers, both former communists, of being a member of a "Soviet spy ring."

The economist requested permission to appear at the Un-American Activities Committee's hearings to defend himself. On the stand he emphatically denied all charges, terming them "unqualifiedly false."

As he appeared before the committee, White handed Chairman J. Parnell Thomas a note, in which he requested a few minutes' rest after each hour of questioning. "I am recovering from a severe heart attack," he explained. Thomas ignored the witness' request that the note not be broadcast.

"I can't see how you can sit there and tell us all about your volleyball games and tennis matches after you handed me this note," Thomas snapped. Then he read the message aloud.

Three days later Harry Dexter White was dead. Commented the Washington Post:

MR. WHITE'S work in the Government, to which he came from a university appointment, was done chiefly at the Treasury, finally as Assistant Secretary. He was Mr. Morgenthau's alter ego . . .

Mr. White could be called the Father of the World Bank as well as the Monetary Fund, and became the first American director of the Monetary Fund after its establishment, where his astringent personality was just as pronounced as it was at Bretton Woods . . . He was undoubtedly responsible, for instance, for the Morgenthau Plan for the treatment of Germany which, had it been accepted, would have resulted in such a deindustrialization as to make Germany to all intents and purposes an agrarian economy.

These are the monuments to Mr. White's career, and they certainly lend no credence to the terrible charge that he was playing the Russian game in his 13-year service with the Government of the United States. Soviet Russia has nothing to do with either the World Bank or the Monetary Fund. Why? Because they are capitalistic conceptions, destined to return a war-torn world to a world economy based upon free enterprise and multilateral trading.

TO THE charge of fostering and willfully giving classified information to a Soviet spy ring, Mr. White offered the only defense open to him under the procedures followed by the Un-American Activities Committee—an unequivocal denial under oath. "The principles in which I believe and by which I live," he told the committee, "make it impossible for me ever to do a disloyal act or anything against the interests of our country."

Mere denial is, of course, a weak riposte to sensational allegations, but it was entered with no diminution in the force and mordancy which were part of his character.

Mr. White stayed in character in other parts of his testimony on his accused associates. He showed he was no fair weather friend, and he asserted friendship forthrightly even for persons under deep suspicion. When Representative Thomas tried to make him call Gregory Silvermaster a Communist, Mr. White replied firmly: "You cannot erase seven or eight years of friendship with a man that way. Unless I see evidence, unless the court declares he is, and until they prove he is guilty, I believe he is innocent."

No doubt many of his friends will feel the same way about Harry White, and others who did not know him will repudiate the unfair and un-American manner in which he was treated.

Is An Old Ghost Writing GOP Speeches?

Representative Hugh D. Scott, Jr. (R., Pa.), chairman of the Republican National Committee, began a recent speech in Hartford, Conn., by declaring, "We shall have no time for mudslinging or name-calling."

Scott said the GOP would run an "affirmative campaign."

Here are some of the "affirmative" things Scott had to say in that same speech:

". . . disgraceful era of New Dealism . . . instructed clique of power-grasping bureaucrats . . . indescribable mess . . ."

At Wheeling, for instance, there'll be one of the largest golf tournaments ever held in the state; there'll be track and field events; horse shoe contests, rolling pin competition, pie-plate throwing, softball, regular baseball, lots of other fun.

And there's no entry fee. All that is required is a $1 PAC ticket. The prizes for the contest include an auto, washers, radio-phonographs, silverware, deep freezers, bicycles, refrigerators, etc. There are more than 100 on Chm. Robert Clark's committee. And, Duke Ellington's son, Mercer, will provide the music for dancing. There will be square-dancing, too.

At Steubenville, where the proceedings will open with a mass to be sung by the Archbishop, the day will include a luncheon, a parade before the Murray speech, attendance by every elected city official and three judges and myriads of prizes.

How District 23 Dir. Paul Rusen will be able to get around the big district in one day is a toughie.

All this leads to the drive to win for the people in November. In West Virginia, there is the important senatorial fight, in which it is hoped Sen. Revercomb (R.) will be defeated. In Ohio, Congressional races hold the limelight. PAC's determined to do its bit with the rest of the representatives of the people.

CANDIDATE BURKE:

Has A Platform For All The People

THOMAS H. (Tom) Burke, husky father of five children and grandfather of two, has served the State of Ohio and the City of Toledo for eight years.

Next year, he hopes to serve the Nation as well.

And Tom Burke, vice mayor of Toledo and secretary-treasurer of the CIO Toledo Industrial Union Council, makes it unequivocally clear to the more than 400,000 voters of the 9th Ohio District (Lucas and Ottawa counties) just what he thinks the people's Representative should seek to achieve in the 81st Congress.

He wants a People's Congress.

Burke brings a long labor and public record to his campaign for Congress (in which he'll oppose incumbent Homer A. Ramey.)

THE Democratic candidate was born 44 years ago in Toledo and was schooled there. He served five years in the Navy as a pharmacist's mate and 12 years in the Naval Reserve.

His union card bears the name of Local 12, CIO Auto Workers—Spicer manufacturing. In fact, the dismissal of Tom Burke in 1934 caused the first strike ever conducted by UAW. It was won in one week. He has served his local for 12 years in various capacities.

In 1940, he was elected to the 94th General Assembly of the State of Ohio, serving as a representative in the biennium of 1941-42. In 1943, he was elected to the Toledo City Council. Last fall, he won reelection, receiving the fourth highest vote under proportional representation. The winners included five Democrats, an independent Democrat and three Republicans (the GOP had indorsed the independent). When the Council organized itself, Burke became vice mayor under Mayor Michael DeSalle.

In the recent primary to choose the 9th's Democratic Congressional candidate, Burke defeated William Sturm, regional director for the AFL, and two other candidates by 7000 votes. Now, the AFL, Brotherhoods and all non-company union labor are solidly behind Burke.

TOM BURKE

Paul Block doesn't like him.

WHAT'S the history of the district? In 1946, when the Republicans were swept back into Congressional power, Ramey defeated DeSalle, 59,394 to 59,057—by exactly 357 votes.

This year, the Democratic Party and civic, liberal, professional, business and labor groups that are backing Burke are not overestimating that close '46 vote, which some observers consider at least in part a tribute to the popular DeSalle.

So, they'll leave nary a stone unturned in getting out votes for Burke. The district includes the agricultural, stone quarries and industrial sections of Ottawa and the rural and Toledo areas of Luca.

Ramey's record? The CIO Voting Guide shows that in the 80th, the former municipal judge voted right on three issues (anti-polltax, oleo repeal and ERP) and wrong 11 times on 15 issues (absent once).

IN his previous campaigns, Burke was an extremely active campaigner. He attended as many as 12 meetings a day, rarely less than seven, speaking at all on the issues.

He addresses civic, club and other meetings, as well as union gatherings. His wife, Lucille Burke, takes a quiet, but effective part in his campaigns. Their modest home is in the South End workers' district.

In council, Burke has sponsored a study of revision of the city tax system, which he hopes will lead to levying taxes on ability to pay. He definitely did not—he wants the world to know—sponsor Toledo's onerous wage tax.

In the Legislature, he sponsored labor's unemployment compensation bill and a measure to increase weekly compensation. He lost on the first, but won on the latter, which he sponsored with Jacob Clayman, now attorney for the Ohio CIO, and John Buckley. Another success: a vocational rehabilitation bill.

The two local newspapers, Burke says, never give him a break, no matter what he does. "Why," he put it, "if I hung by my teeth from a top story window of City Hall, the Blade and Times would have a story saying a Councilman had gone nuts, omitting my name." The two papers are controlled by Paul Block.

Tom Burke wants it definitely and emphatically known that he does not desire the indorsement of the Wallace Party.—A. R.

PAC Staff Addition

APPOINTMENT of Charles M. Campbell as a staff representative of the CIO Political Action Committee has been announced by CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll.

CAMPBELL

Campbell replaces Henry Lee Moon who has resigned to become public relations director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Prior to coming to PAC Campbell was Servicemen's Secretary at the Harlem Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association and previously he served for two years as activities secretary at the Newark, N. J., YMCA. He was also chairman of the Register and Vote Committee of New York City and was active with Harlem labor groups.

Campbell holds a master's degree in sociology from Columbia University and a master's degree in religious education from Howard University. For two years he taught sociology, history and economics at Bethune-Cookman College in Miami, Florida.

As president of the National Christian Youth Council of the A. M. E. Zion Church, Campbell attended the World Christian Youth Conference in Amsterdam, Holland in 1939 and in 1946, as executive secretary of the American Federation of Negro College Students, he again visited Europe meeting students from the liberated countries.

Campbell was born in Red Springs, N. C. in 1918.

Golden to Unions: Back ERP to Thwart Reds

EUROPEAN labor's longtime dream of close international cooperation must be turned into reality to make the European Recovery Program work successfully.

That statement made last week in Washington by Clinton S. Golden and Bert Jewell, CIO and AFL advisers, respectively, to Paul Hoffman, head of the Economic Cooperation Administration. The two labor officials have returned to the U. S. after conferences with pro-ERP union leaders in western Europe.

Unions across the Atlantic are awakening to the needs of Europe, Golden said. He hailed the acceptance by British employers and unions of a proposed Anglo-U. S. Council on production "as a landmark of the new order."

The Council, as now planned, will consist of 20 persons—12 from British labor and industry, eight from American labor and industry.

Other nations will follow in establishing similar groups for the exchange of production know-how, Golden and Jewell predicted. They said every possible means will have to be tried to raise European output by as much as 45% during ERP's four-year term.

TRAINING programs will be necessary in most of the aid-receiving nations to develop more skilled manpower, better management and development of both power and natural resources, the two officials told a press conference.

Golden said it's important that European unions know that American workers are giving continuous and militant support to the ERP, since Communists on the Continent are skillfully cultivating adverse propaganda based on time, hunger and fear.

"The people of Europe are suffering from fatigue and hunger," he said. "This is reflected in the thinking and attitudes of responsible people in the European non-Communist labor organizations. They need more than anything inspiration, stimulation and sound encouragement."

BY active support to ERP, American unions can disprove constant Communist propaganda that the Marshall Plan is merely a device of Wall Street and American imperialism to enslave the world, Golden emphasized.

Despite the fatigue and war destruction, the ECA labor men said they saw "evidence of energetic individual enterprise, tilled fields, fat cattle, truck gardens, repair of damaged roads, homes, churches and towns.

"But this cannot be enough. There must be a cooperative and collective effort within each nation, and there must be new concept of democratic kinship and human brotherhood that will cut across national boundary lines.

"Because labor is more accustomed to such international cooperation, labor has an unusual role to play . . . The inspiration for a new concept of international relations between the democratic countries of Europe should come from American labor."

Georgia Institute

Leo Perlis, director of the National CIO Community Services Committee, will be a featured speaker at the second annual Labor Leadership Training Institute of the Georgia Workers Education Service.

The five-day institute, which will be held Aug. 28-Sept. 1 at Laurel Falls Camp, near Clayton, Ga., will take up the subject of building better communities for Georgia. Perlis will discuss the training of union members for community activity in a speech scheduled for Aug. 31.

TWUA Give $5000 To Build Hospital

The CIO Textile Workers has contributed $5000 to an emergency fund being raised to build a polio hospital in Greensboro, N. C. More than a thousand victims in the state so far have been struck down by the disease.

The TWUA's gift, the largest to date, and the first from a national organization other than the Natl. Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, brought the contributions to the fund to $165,000. George Baldanzi, TWUA executive vice-president, presented the union's gift in a brief ceremony broadcast over station WBIG.

Construction of the hospital, to be known as Central Carolina Convalescent Hospital, is already under way.

CIO Sends Letter 'To The Farmer'

Cooperation between union members and farmers will improve everybody's standard of living, the CIO points out in a new pamphlet.

Called "To the Farmer—From His Customers," the pamphlet is in the form of a letter from Joe Doakes Jr., "who works on an assembly line," to his Dad—and "the chances are his letter goes to an RFD route out Valley Center, or Pretty Prairie, U. S. A." The pamphlet was prepared by the CIO Dept. of Education & Research, headed by Kermit Eby.

High wages and fair profits keep farmers prosperous, the pamphlet says, but "when profits become exorbitant and wages so low workers can't buy the essentials, it becomes dangerous to farmers, to labor and to America."

Farmers are often told by corporation propaganda that wages are responsible for high prices—but in the farm implement industry a 2.2% price increase would have covered higher wage costs. Instead, the farmers were charged 11.4% more, the pamphlet says.

Copies of "To the Farmer—From His Customers" can be ordered from the CIO Research & Education or Publicity Departments, 718 Jackson Place N. W., Washington 6, D. C. Prices: 10c a copy, 25 for $1, 100 for $3.50, 1,000 for $30, 5,000 for $125.

N. J. CIO: Give Us 70%

AND EVEN WITH HENRY WALLACE IN THE RACE, WE'LL WIN

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

"EVEN with Henry A. Wallace in the field, we in New Jersey can elect a liberal U. S. Senator and four liberal Congressmen—at least four Congressmen—if 70% of labor registers and votes."

With those words, Stephen J. Moran, Political Action Committee chairman for New Jersey, gave the keynote last week for labor's fall campaign in that state.

PAUL PORTER

Moran was one of a number of featured speakers at the State PAC conference held at Veterans' Hall, New Brunswick. Others included State CIO Pres. Carl Holderman, Paul Porter, former assistant to Pres. Truman and former OPA director; Archibald Stevens Alexander, Democratic candidate for U. S. Senator, who has been indorsed by PAC; CIO Rep. Philip Weightman, who is assigned to PAC work; State CIO Secy-Treas. Peter J. Flynn and Alex Barkan, CIO Textile Workers PAC director.

The conference was attended by nearly 600 delegates and several hundred guests and spectators. (Including the one described in an adjoining column.)

Moran, a member of Steelworkers' Local at Worthington Pump, Harrison, declared that "we of labor in New Jersey have the prize opportunity of all, that of having the chance to wipe out the infamous records of Rep. Fred Hartley (R., N. J.) and Sen. Albert Hawkes (R., N. J.), neither of whom is running for re-election."

Moran declared that much of the blame for the victory of the Republicans in 1946 was due to lack of registration. Even now, he said, there are 924,000 eligibles not registered in New Jersey.

(New Jersey registration closes Sept. 23.)

He noted that in 1944, Hartley won out by 8400, but that in 1946, the first year of statewide PAC work, Hartley won by only 5595 over Democrat Peter J. Rodino. (Rodino, backed by PAC, is a nominee again this year.)

Moran said there were enough unregistered CIO members—not to mention countless others—to have beaten Hartley in 1946.

This year, he remarked, "we've got to win; we're going to win—that is, if every one of us gets out and works."

"Those who have succumbed to the blight of the Wallace third party," Moran declared, "tell us that the American people, after four or six years of reaction and tightening of the belt, would realize that we must return to the New Deal.

"I repeat, even with Wallace, we may elect a liberal Senator (Alexander over GOP candidate Hendrickson) and four liberal Congressmen." (The four, he explained, would be in addition to Democrats Mary Theresa Norton and Edward Hart, both of Hudson County, who are conceded to be sure winners.)

ANOTHER highlight of the convention was the reading of the credentials committee report. It was recalled that at the State CIO convention a number of locals walked out in what was described as a left-wing bolt.

The PAC credentials report showed that the 592 delegates represented 294 locals with 226,852 members in 16 counties. Not present were 109 locals with 46,880 members. Of those missing locals, groups representing 16,000 members had sent legitimate excuses for absence.

That left about 30,000, most of whom presumably are those being "misled," as the committee chairman put it, by the Wallace group.

The statistics on the CIO Electrical Workers, many of whose locals led the State CIO convention walkout, were interesting. Anthony De Aquino, Local 447, UE, representing 5000 Federal Telephone and Radio workers, announced that there were officially present UE delegates representing nine locals with approximately 18,000 members and that unofficial delegates representing 6000 more members were present.

Porter opened with the "sad" box score of the special session of Congress. He noted that the Republicans said they had three answers to inflation: limitation of exports, government support of bonds should be ended and that Pres. Truman was afraid to do those things because he feared a depression.

Porter's answers:

ALEXANDER

Exports: The Republican theory would make us break our word to the needy nations of the world. And, anyway, our exports in the first quarter of 1948 were at the rate of only 2.5% of our output compared to 5% in 1947.

End of bond market support: Need the nation be reminded that a similar move after World War I cut the value of the bonds, purchased patriotically by the people to win the war, from a par value of $1 to 80 cents on the dollar.

ALEXANDER, an attorney who comes from the family that founded Stevens Tech., Hoboken, N. J., had an outstanding record in World War II.

He said he "hates Communism. What to do about it? We need the FBI, we need the attorney general, we need courts, we need investigations and counter-espionage. But, I do not believe we should go after un-American people in an un-American way under Kleig lights."

In this election, he said, "there are three roads: (1) to the left, where there are consulates out of which people jump and down which road Henry Wallace would lead us to Russia; (a) to the right, the road that leads back out of sight to the '20s and '30s, the road of the Republicans; and (3) down the middle, a good Democratic road. That's the one to travel."

WEIGHTMAN, former vice president of the CIO Packinghouse Workers, discussed the necessity for PAC block, precinct and other work and reminded the delegates that the UPWA has indorsed CIO policy against a third party in 1948 and in favor of ERP.

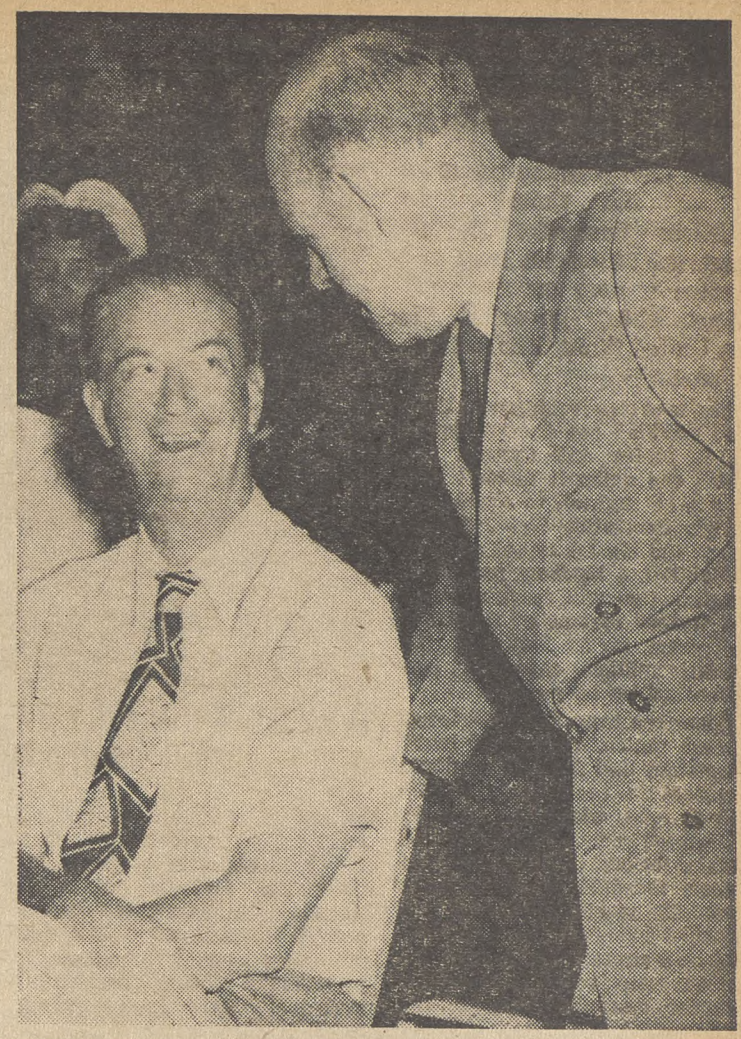
Barkan reviewed recent PAC successes in the South, declared it could be done in New Jersey.

There were detailed and full reports from the various county PAC Chairmen.

(This writer was born in Scobeyville, Monmouth County, N. J. He is glad to report that the Monmouth PAC chairman pronounced it "Mummuth," like all us Monmouth natives.)

In its resolutions, the convention pledged itself to turn to CIO-PAC for "leadership and guidance in this all-important fight for survival." It also indorsed the executive board's O. K. of Alexander, Rodino of the 10th; Charles Howell, of the 4th; Charles Joelson, 8th; Hugh J. Addonzio, 11th, and Harry Dudkin, 12th.

MORAN



DEMOCRAT: Pres. Carl Holderman, at the New Jersey State PAC meeting, said "we have an unexpected, but welcome, guest here today who is seeing democracy in action. We are happy to have with us a gentleman who is taking notes on our meeting—Albert Hermann, chairman of the Republican State campaign." Here they are together, Holderman standing.

NOTE THOSE DATES: Bea Bloch and Marilyn Swyer point to the dates to remember for 1948 in New Jersey. They are in the balcony of Veterans' Hall, New Brunswick, during the State PAC conference, which was attended by delegates from every one of the State's 16 Congressional districts. Delegates heard such famous speakers as Paul Porter, ex-assistant to Pres. Truman, and Archibald Stevens Alexander, Democratic candidate for U. S. Senator. All PACsters are determined to make 1948 THE year.

UAW Divides Nation into 17 Parts For 'Fun'

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

THE man cleaning the office of the United Auto Workers' Recreation Department leaned on his mop and studied a map on the wall. "Since when," he asked, "is the United States divided into 17 parts?"

The man was looking at a UAW map marking out the 17 regions in 40 states and Canada into which the union is divided. The map is on the wall to remind the UAW's Recreation Dept. personnel of the big job ahead of them in building a far-flung recreation program that will reach out into the various regions of the UAW and draw in as many of the union's million members and their families as possible.

There are from 25 to 131 locals in each region, nearly 1100 locals altogether, and from 15 to 65,000 members in each local. In the Detroit area, where the industry is concentrated, some 350,000 workers belong to the UAW. The union's members work in more than 220 plants, including the principal assembly plants in Michigan, and aircraft, parts, farm implement and regional assembly factories scattered through the U. S. and Canada.

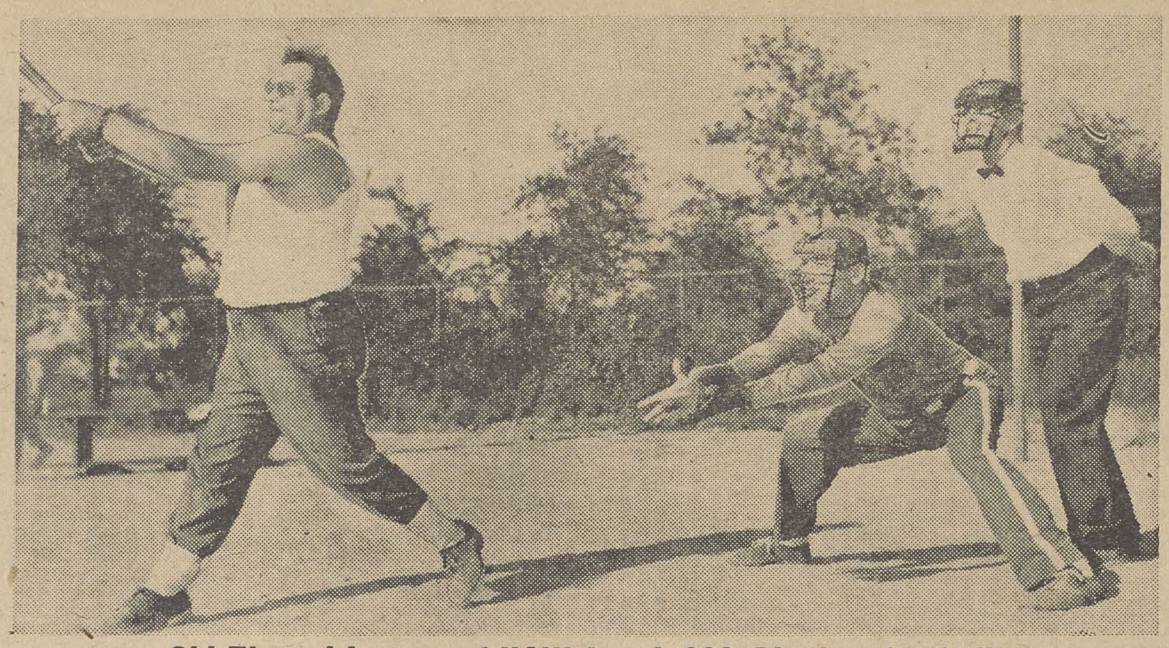
The UAW's Recreation Dept. is directed by Olga Madar, the only woman department head in the UAW International setup. A former school teacher who got her training in physical education and recreation at Michigan State Normal College, Miss Madar worked at the Willow Run Bomber plant during the war, where she did volunteer work in women's recreation for Local 50.

In 1946 she was appointed assistant to the International Recreational Director, and in 1947 became director.

THE UAW constitution provides that one-half cent of the per capita dues be set aside for a special fund for the recreation program to be apportioned to each region. This is the minimum amount. In addition, locals may set aside any amount they choose for recreation. In some locals this is as much as 4c a month per member.

Many people—and some of them are good union members—think recreation programs are a useless frill not worth spending money on, or they think that workers should be let alone in their free time to choose their own recreation as they please.

Others think it is the responsibility or privilege of management to provide recreation plans for the workers in its plants. The UAW has different ideas. Although it concedes that some excellent management-sponsored programs have been developed, particularly during the war, it finds many flaws in the average company plan.



Old Timers' League of UAW Local 600 Playing Softball

One of these is paternalism. An example of the condescending, paternalistic attitude commonly found in management appears in a study on Industrial Recreation by Diehl and Eastwood, published by Purdue University to help companies initiate recreation programs for their employes.

Speaking of the increase of a leisure time in industry through the reduction in hours of work as a problem of industrial recreation given to management, the authors hand this out to workers:

"If a man has an extra hour or two of rest thrust upon him and doesn't know what to do with it, he may drink, gamble, go to cheap shows, overeat, quarrel with his wife, or squander his money and time in other profitless ways."

In another place they urge management promotion of recreation by saying: "Human material has to be treated carefully for effective productivity."

The UAW points out other objections to company-sponsored recreation plans. Some of the programs center around all-star teams wearing the company's uniforms for advertising purposes. In most of them workers have no voice in the leadership of the program. Racial discrimination is widely practiced.

Moreover, "recreation is sometimes used as a wedge to drive between the worker and the union," says the UAW Recreation Dept. in a summary of its activities. "It is used as a substitute for higher wages, a cleaner, safer shop or a pension plan."

MANAGEMENT is often interested in recreation chiefly as a means of getting higher production through boosting the worker's morale and making him feel friendlier toward the company so he will work harder.

The UAW, on the other hand, regards the union member "first as a person who needs recreation, not as a means to an end, but as an end in itself."

The CIO Auto union decided early not to leave the field of recreation to the "spider-to-the-fly techniques" of management. Its Recreation Dept. was set up in 1937 and the main aims and policies which it still follows were laid down.

Points strongly emphasized are that recreation must be organized for all age groups and both sexes; must be run on a strict policy of no racial or religious discrimination, and should be related to the total union program.

"Quite often it can be the first step of an educational process toward good union membership," says a UAW leaflet.

The program functions under the Intl. Recreation Dept., through regional recreation councils in areas where there is a concentration of UAW members, and through recreation chairmen in the various locals.

Regional councils are composed generally of the recreation chairmen from each local in the area. The local union recreation chairmen are the real core of the program. Elected by the members of their locals, they serve as the links between the rank-and-file and the Intl. Recreation Dept.

THE men and women from the shops and production lines who lead recreation programs on the local and regional level get their formal training at summer school recreation institutes conducted each year in UAW regions under the direction of the Education Dept., usually in public park camp sites leased for the purpose.

In Michigan, the FDR-CIO Camp at Port Huron, owned by the Michigan CIO Council, is used both for the Michigan CIO summer school and the Recreation Institute.

Activities offered under the UAW recreation program include practically everything in the way of leisure-time pursuits. They include team games, individual sports; social recreation, dancing instruction, handicrafts, and cultural and educational activities such as choral groups, dramatics, movies, children's hobby clubs, orchestras, bands and health and charm classes.

While some of these varied leisure-time activities may be included in programs sponsored by management, the big difference in overall approach still remains. The union program is concerned with the well-being of its members, and is run and controlled by the members. A company's main concern is its production record, and its recreation activities are handed down from the top with that aim in mind.

Should Work Both Ways?

The Cumberland, Md., radio station has been deluged with phone inquiries as to whether or not it endorses the views expressed in the Bromo Seltzer and chewing gum commercials which it airs.

The phenomenon had station executives scratching their heads, until they remembered that someone had told announcers reading spot announcements paid for by Local 1874 of the Textile Workers to add the tag-line, "This announcement was paid for by the Textile Workers Union, and the opinions expressed do not necessarily represent the views of the station."

The union-financed spot announcements told the time and place of the union-authorization election held at Cumberland by the Natl. Labor Relations Board in which the union received the votes of of more than 95% of the 8044 eligible voters in the Celanese Corp. plant.

80 Office Employes Attend Institute

Eighty white collar workers attended the annual workshop of the Summer School for Office Workers July 24-Aug. 7 on the campus of Ohio State University at Columbus.

Representatives from six CIO unions were among students from 15 states and 28 cities who attended. In addition to CIO and AFL unions, the students also came from various community and professional organizations, including the YWCA, Wisconsin Nurses Assn., Japanese-American League, Urban League and Natl. Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

George Guernsey, associate director of the Natl. CIO Education Dept., and Secy.-Treas. William Lavelle and Orville C. Jones of the Ohio CIO Council were among the resident faculty and guest speakers.

Eleanor G. Coit, director of the American Labor Education Service, is also director of the Summer School for Office Workers and coordinates the workshop activities.

Sec. Tobin Will War On T-H

MAURICE J. TOBIN, new Secretary of Labor, shows every evidence of planning a steady, loud fight against the Taft-Hartley Act.

The former governor of Massachusetts, who took over last week as head of the anemic Labor Dept., told his first official press conference that the T-H law is a "blow at unionism."

Indicating that he will take the stump during the coming campaign, Tobin added:

"I am going to have a great deal to say to the American people in the coming months about the drastic cuts in the Labor Dept."

The Department's budget has been cut by the GOP-controlled Congress far below the level of any other cabinet agency, and in fact below that of many minor federal bureaus.

Tobin said he hoped that John Gibson, former head of the Michigan state CIO, would stay on the job as assistant secretary of the department. Gibson had been acting secretary in the period between the death of Lewis Schwellenbach early this summer and the appointment of Tobin.

The Bostonian, who withdrew from the Democratic primary race for governor of Massachusetts to take the U. S. post, said he plans early talks with CIO Pres. Murray, AFL Pres. Green and heads of independent unions.

He blasted the Taft-Hartley's ban on closed shop provisions in union contracts.

He rapped the involved procedure necessary for unions to get the right to ask for union shop or maintenance - of - membership provisions. He said the arrangements are "cumbersome" and expensive.

Tobin also fired a shot at the law's ban on political expenditures by unions.

"A union could not even pay for a hall for the purpose of conducting a meeting to discuss candidates or issues in national elections," he said.

WAGE ROUNDUP

NMU, Ship Owners Agree In Atlantic, Gulf Pact

AGREEMENTS expected to stave off an Atlantic Gulf Coast shipping strike on Sept. 2 have been reached between the CIO Maritime union and 35 ship companies. Three Great Lakes tanker lines also signed up.

Wage increases ranging from $5.23 to $30.32 a month were provided, as were increases in maintenance and cure pay for injured and sick seamen and a liberalized holiday provision.

Dispute over the hiring hall was settled by agreement to maintain the current practice until the courts rule on its legality. Last week the NMU's hiring hall on the Great Lakes was declared illegal by the NLRB.

A pact similar to this appeared likely to be accepted by two other CIO unions, the American Radio Association and the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association.

These three unions, plus the CIO Longshoremen & Warehousemen, an AFL union and an independent on the West Coast, are now working under a federal injunction, issued under the T-H Act, which banned a strike originally scheduled for June 16.

The strike ban expires Sept. 2, and if agreements are not reached by that time, a shipping tieup is expected.

ILWU Pres. Harry Bridges branded the Waterfront Employers' "final offer" as "ridiculous," and other union officials said "it still looks like there'll be a big long strike" by Pacific Coast Maritime unions.

TELEPHONE: Another strike possibility loomed, meanwhile, in the telephone industry, where workers' growing irritation at the corporations' "no pay raise" policy was bursting into the open.

The CIO Communications Equipment workers, whose officers already have been authorized to call a strike, set a strike date which they did not disclose and warned that a nationwide walkout may be called on "short notice."

Negotiations with the Western Electric Co., American Telephone & Telegraph subsidiary, continued in a last-ditch effort to obtain a wage boost without a strike.

A union spokesman said the corporation had made no counter proposal and expressed "disgust" at the company's bargaining attitude. Sporadic strikes by ACEW locals occurred last week in Milwaukee, Tucson, Phoenix, Albuquerque, El Paso and throughout Washington and Oregon, he said, adding that the union had "great trouble" getting its members to return to work.

Representatives of CIO and independent telephone unions met in Washington last week to coordinate strategy in the industry-wide wage drive.

PACKING: CIO Packinghouse Workers at the Morrell Packing Co., Ottumwa, Iowa, were ordered home by their foreman last week when the employes insisted on settlement of grievances.

The dispute arose when the company posted new working rules after expiration of the contract. The new rules did not include provision for processing grievances. The company charged that workers "cornered" department foremen while they presented their grievances. "Our people are just trying to work out their troubles the only way they can," said the local's chief steward Ed Filliman.

AUTO: Some 24,000 CIO Auto workers in six Intl. Harvester plants walked out last week as union and company negotiators continued efforts to reach an agreement on grievances, apprenticeship and arbritration procedures.

TEXTILE: In an effort to win the same benefits the company recently granted its Cumberland, Md., employes, 2200 CIO Textile workers last week closed down the Rome, Ga., plant of the Celanese Rayon Corp.

The Cumberland employes received a 15c hourly boost, but officials of the Rome plant insisted on the southern cotton textile pay rise pattern, which is somewhat lower.

A settlement covering 300 New York and New Jersey dyeing and finishing plants last week averted a walkout by some 15,000 Textile workers. Employes won a 12c raise, a seventh paid holiday, improved insurance provisions, and a 5c hourly differential for "wet work."

SHOE: Some 6,000 union shoe workers are expected to be affected by a contract settlement reached between the CIO Shoe Workers and the Chicago Shoe Mfgrs. Association.

Following a four-weeks strike, union won an 8½c raise, plus an increase in beginning rates.

In New York, there appeared the possibility of a city-wide shoe manufacturers settlement as I. Miller cracked the Manufacturers' Board of Trade resistance, by granting a 10c hourly boost. In addition, the union won improved vacation and hospitalization provisions plus an increase in minimum rates.

Orders Spur Ship Trade

A "sitdown strike" by American ship operators was smashed last week when the American President Lines contracted to build three passenger-cargo vessels under terms laid down by the U. S. Maritime Commission.

The construction contract, amounting to upwards of $32,000,000 and providing 750,000 man-days labor, goes to the New York Shipbuilding Corp., Camden, N. J., home of Local 1, Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America.

Camden City officers welcomed the contract.

Terms of the contract, providing a 44.05% construction subsidy by the government, "represent a major victory for the IUMSWA," said Pres. John Green.

Ship operators, backing the Weichel subsidy bill, had demanded a flat 50% subsidy. "From April, during the regular session of Congress and into August for the special session, the operators refused to undertake any shipbuilding while they tried to enforce their profit-padding plan," Green said.

"Ignored by the operators was the nation's critical need for peacetime shipping. Ignored were the pleas of national defense officials to restore a balanced merchant marine as an adjunct of the navy.

"Heavy pressure of the shipping industry was applied to obtain a short-range, all-out building program with bonus subsidies. Effect would have been to perpetuate the boom-bust cycle of American shipbuilding that had long made the industry one of the most insecure for workers."

Green and IUMSWA demanded the ship operators "be compelled to comply with their obligations under the existing subsidy laws."

25% of Us 'Dip' Into Savings

ARE you a "dis-saver"? The chances—says the Federal Reserve Board—are one-in-four that you are.

A "dis-saver" is a person who saves no money in the course of a year, but in fact dips into savings to pay current bills.

About 28% of American families had to dip into the kitty to meet living expenses during 1947, the Board declared last week.

Total savings in 1947 were lower than in any other post-war year. The number of "dis-savers" also rose sharply over 1946 to a total of about 14 million families.

In about 60% of those million "dis-saving" cases, the family budget was unbalanced by purchases of big items like autos, furniture, radios, etc. But in 40% of the cases—about six million families—the reason seemed to lie in the rapidly rising cost of living.

Gary, Ind. Paper Finally Pays Arbiter's Award

The Gary, Ind., Post-Tribune has finally given Charles S. Smith, discharged chief photographer and former president of the Gary Newspaper Guild, $1600 in dismissal pay as ordered by Arbiter John A. Lapp. The newspaper delayed payment of the arbiter's award while it asked Lapp to reconsider evidence presented during the hearing.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

George DeNucci, CIO Director, reports that the CIO Paperworkers Union won a union shop election at the Shellmar Co. in Mt. Vernon, Ohio, by a vote of 475 to 2. Rep. Forest Calvert was in charge.

The Wills-Spedden Shipyard, Inc., Baltimore, Md., voted for union shop 111 to 4, it is reported by Thomas J. Gallagher, IUMSWA-CIO Director of Organization.

Maryland CIO Director Frank Bender reports that the employes in the machine shop of the Baltimore plant of the American Radiator Co. voted to be represented by the CIO Auto Workers. In 1944 the UAW won the right to represent the production workers of this plant. The International Association of Machinists represented the machine shop. This election eliminates the IAM entirely and gives the UAW-CIO a complete industrial unit. Peck Windsor was in charge for the UAW.

The United Steelworkers won collective bargaining rights at the Beckworth Tool Company in Dover, N. H. The vote was 62 for the USA and 4 against.

Martin Gerber, Director of Region 9, CIO Auto Workers, reports two victories for this week. In the American Smelting and Refining Co., Perth Amboy, N. J., the officers and engineering employees voted 79 to 15 for the UAW. At the General Motors Parts warehouse, Philadelphia, Pa., the UAW defeated the IAM in the NLRB election. The IAM formerly held bargaining rights for this group.

The worst Congress on record has packed its bags and gone home. As representatives of the electorate it was a miserable failure. Instead of being a Congress of the people it was a Congress of big business. The Republican reactionaries were joined by the Southern Democrats to flagrantly ignore the needs of the people.

The housing requirements of the nation were lightly skipped over and given treatment which failed to face the issue.

Civil rights. They never heard of them.

Legislation to deal with inflation and the upward spirals of the cost of living begged the issue.

Now that they are home these legislators should be forced to meet the voters and they should be told what the voters think. The CIO is determined to hold to account those who have harmed the cause of the people. Unfortunately these agents of special privilege who are our legislators are being aided by the third party which is nominating people to run against those few liberals who are still in Congress. This division of votes can only add to the ranks of the reactionaries.

Loyalty to the union also includes the union policies democratically arrived at. Stay with the ship. Splintering can only result in injury to the membership and the Union. He who divides injures most.

Political action, the campaign, union activities . . . all of them will make interesting, "must" reading during the months ahead.

You'll be lost as a sheep in a blizzard—unless you read America's best labor paper each week.

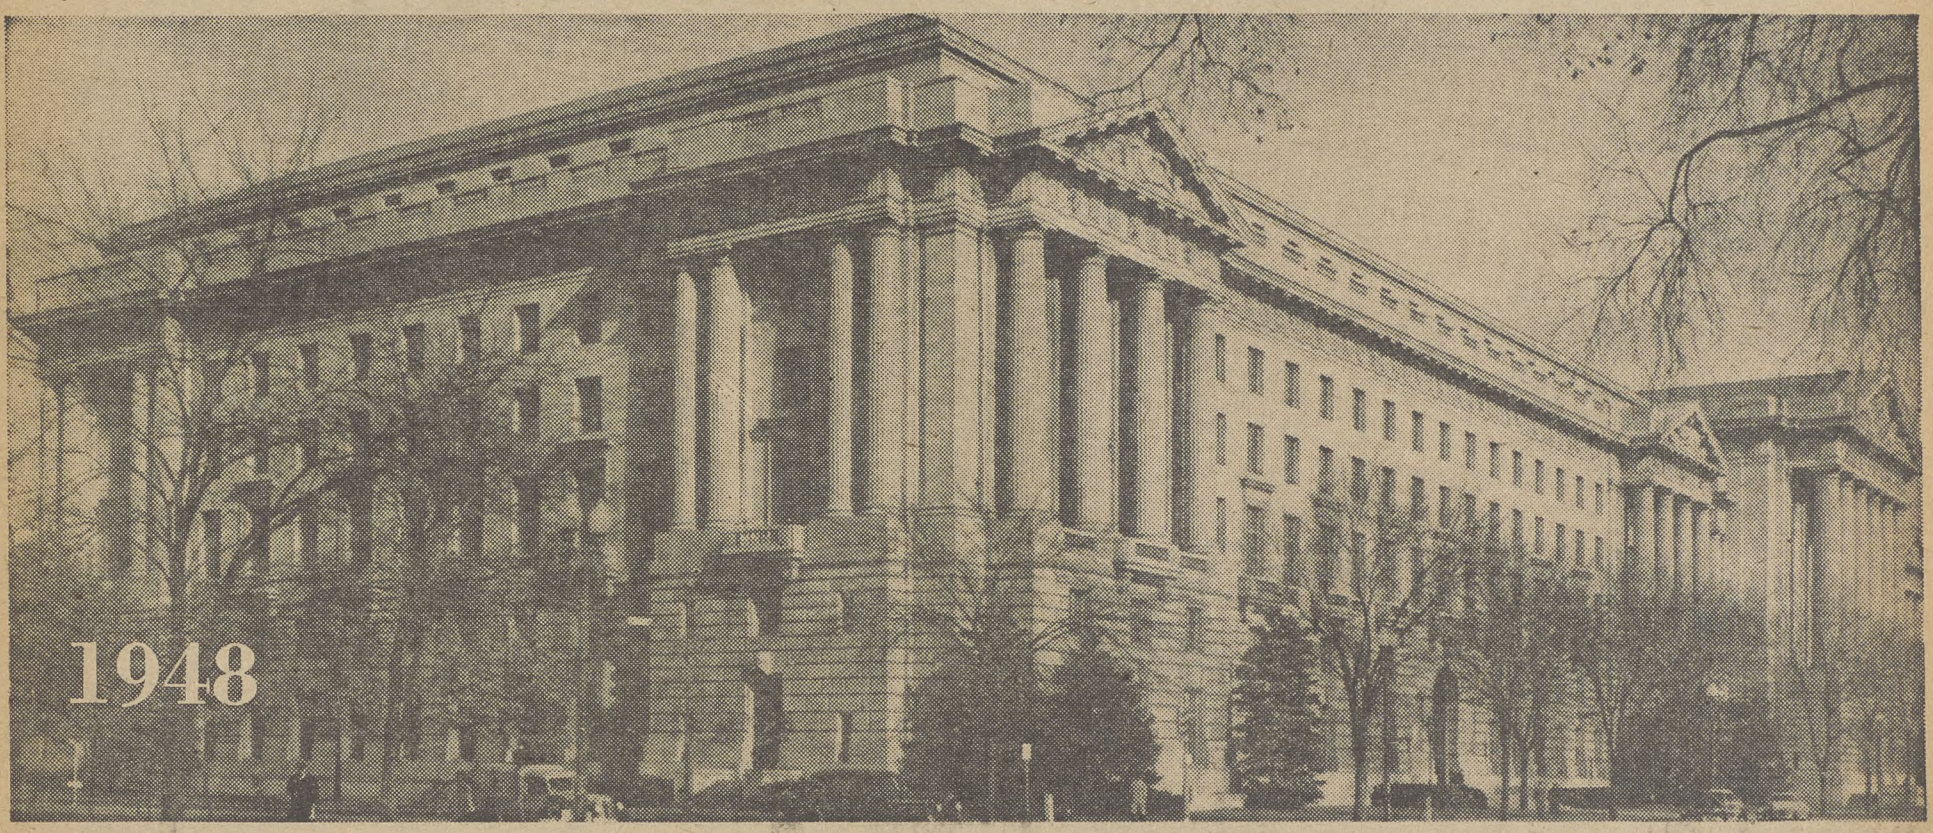
They're Trying to Take This....



....And Put It Back Here

BROKEN PLEDGES: What the GOP has done to the Labor Dept. shouldn't happen to a dog. In 1944, the Republicans promised that, if elected, they'd restore all labor functions to the Labor Dept. (upper picture is present headquarters; lower is site of first Labor Dept.) What has happened is graphically told on Pages 6 and 7.

Smith Labors—and Brings Forth Smith

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

MOVE over, Candidate Henry Agard Wallace.

You're not the only one setting his sights for 1952. If you'll pardon the use of the expression, so is Gerald L. K. Smith—and any seeming similarity between you and Mr. Smith is purely—and how—coincidental.

To nobody's surprise, Gerald was nominated last week to run for the Presidency. The name of his party? The Christian Nationalist Crusade.

And he's got a running-mate, too. It's Harry A. Romer, who calls St. Henry, Ohio, home and who is modestly described as "a prominent merchant and a former leader for the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin," G. L. K. S.'s old pal of the 30's.

Don Lohbeck, editor of Smith's "The Cross and The Flag"—which paper is just what you'd expect of Smith—immediately announced that "we realize the impossibility of winning an election this year, but we do expect to elect our candidates in 1952."

The Smithereens held their convention in Kiel Auditorium, St. Louis. The delegates were few in number—perhaps about 200—and mostly old. To reporters present, the delegates seemed almost like puppets, because every time Smith asked for applause, they gave of it generously.

EVERY political party's just got to haye a platform, and the Crusade has one, too.

It calls for:

Turning the atom bomb over to Arm$ control; repudiation of all "secret agreements" entered into by Franklin Delano Roosevelt; re-establishment of friendly relationship with Spain; building of a strong Germany to destroy "Communist domination;"

Don't stop reading. The hottest is yet to come.

Deportation of all Zionist Jews and all Negroes, each family in the latter group to be paid $5000; deportation of all non-citizens and "non-desirables" (who are defined as all Jews); the homes of the deportees to be turned over to veterans; opposition to labor "racketeers;"

Adoption of a Constitutional amendment to make racial segregation a federal law and to outlaw intermarriage; withdrawal from the UN because it is "the product of international manipulators who do not have the interests of the U. S. at heart."

The same procedure was used in adoption of the platform that was employed in the nominations. After nominating Smith and Romer, Rev. Leland L. Marion, pastor of the Christian Temple at Pontiac, Mich., asked that "all those, who favor these men to lead in this great crusade, stand." All stood, natch.

IT was quite a collection of characters. Emory Burke of Atlanta, was one of them. A character, that is. He's former head of the Columbians, Inc., broken up two years ago by federal authorities.

Burke, who is free on appeal from a three-year chain gang sentence for impersonating an officer, shouted that attacks on the Columbians were "lies, lies, lies." And the Jews? Cried he of them: they're the "spearhead of the anti-American spirit."

There was also a character named George Voss, who holds the position of Chicago representative for the Crusade. In a voice shaking with emotion, he darkly declared that while he was a captain during World War II he was "persecuted" by a Jewish colonel.

Voss revealed that he (Voss) had reecived a court-martial conviction for selling Government property, but declared he was "framed." All the delegates agreed with him.

ANOTHER character showed up. In fact, his prospective appearance started rumors that Oswald Mosley, head of the British Fascists, was going to attend the Smith convention with the rest of like thinkers.

However, the Moseley who arrived was Retired Gen. George VanHorn Moseley, who has been a darling of the Smithereens for quite some time. He crossed up his old comrades—pardon me, chums—be declaring in a speech that Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, the Republican nominee, was more in line with his political thought. The audience did not applaud.

Then, there was a character clad in a black and white checkered suit, black and white sport shoes and a red flowered tie (of course he had on a shirt and other stuff, too). This charter calls himself George Griffith, says he resides in Kansas City. Griffith announced he was an ordained Northern Baptist minister, but that he is now doing "independent work" as pastor of a tabernacle.

SMITH had a new wrinkle in getting contributions. He called for "twenties and fives to pay the bills" and said that every lucky person who wrote the name of the evening's speaker on the envelope would receive as a prize a free anti-Semitic book.

He also hit one of the 1948 campaign lows when he sacriligiously declared that "We are the only political force on this earth committee committed to Jesus Christ."

The Smith a mighty demagogue is he.

(Yes, We Have No Bananas)

Is it animal, vegetable or mineral?

It's vegetable and it threatens to become an international political and literary issue.

Something terrible has happened, says the American Vegetarian Party. George Bernard Shaw, the party declares, is guilty of hefesy.

Why, shouts that party, GBS has taken liver injections and favors cod liver oil!

Symon Gould, vice-presidential candidates for the Vegs, has sent GBS an ultimatum: renounce your heresies or cease calling yourself a vegetarian.

Stern words, those.

In reply, GBS sent a postal card:

"When I was 82 (he's 92 now), I tried them (liver injections) to cure an attack of pernicious anemia. Result —I dropped apparently dead twice and have not since had any injections.

"Abstention from killing is impossible. If you know nothing on locusts and white ants, you have at least heard of the Colorado beetle. GBS."

CONGRESS VS. STATES

THE problems that Congress failed to solve are increasingly confronting the State legislatures.

During the past week the New Jersey law makers were called upon to vote an appropriation for unemployment insurance, and the Connecticut legislature was holding a special session to take steps to alleviate the housing shortage.

Representing the Conn. CIO Council at a hearing at the capitol at Hartford, John Glynn declared:

"Had the 80th Congress met the housing challenge of our times by passage of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner Bill, this session would not be necessary. Had Sens. McCarthy (Wis.), Cain (Wash.), and Bricker (Ohio), Reps. Martin (Mass.), Halleck (Ind.), and Wolcott (Mich.), all Republicans, listened to the voice of the people, instead of to the National Association of Real Estate Boards, this session would not be necessary.

"To date, the only state action we have had as a result of this promise is Public Act No. 405 guaranteeing bonds to the amount of $15,000,000. Translated into housing units, we will get approximately 1,500 moderate rentals in the face of a 37,500 need."

In New Jersey, the State CIO Council called for an immediate emergency appropriation of at least $1,000,000 for administration of the Unemployment Compensation Commission to "alleviate the chaos and confusion caused by Congress' action in cutting the funds for the UCC."

In a letter to Acting Governor Summermill, Chairman Harry Kranz of the New Jersey CIO's Legislative Committee stated that there was "nothing to prevent the State Legislature from appropriating funds for the UCC" and urged "decisive and prompt action.

CIO To Consider Indorsements

CIO's 51-man executive board meets in Washington this week to take up the question of indorsements for the coming national election.

The meeting, opening on August 30, is expected to run over until Tuesday. In a statement approved by the CIO vice-presidents last week, Pres. Murray voiced criticism of the Republican Party platform, the action of "bigoted" Dixiecrats, the division and disruption caused by the Progressive Party.

The executive board meeting is the first since January, when the CIO took a stand in support of the European Recovery Program and against the Wallace third-party movement.

Murray Speech To Be on Radio

Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO will deliver his annual Labor Day address over the Columbia Broadcasting System coast-to-coast network at 6:15 p.m., Eastern Daylight Time, on Monday, Sept. 6.

(Last week the CIO News incorrectly listed the time of broadcast as 6:00 p.m., EDT.)

Pres. Murray will speak from Wheeling, W. Va., where he will have attended Labor Day festivities during the afternoon. Earlier in the day he will appear at a meeting in Steubenville, Ohio, just across the river from Wheeling.

The speech will be made available to all CBS stations throughout the country. Local radio programs should be consulted for the exact time of the broadcast in each city.

Voters Stay Home, Rankin Wins

OLD (66 years) John Elliott Rankin was mighty proud, suh, last week.

Hadn't he again showed that those Damyankees couldn't beat him in his own 1st District. For, Old John, shouting against Negroes and labor and all sorts of things, handily won renomination for his 15th term. Of course, as any fool can plainly see that primary victory means Old John'll win in a walk come Nov. 2.

But, when you analyze the vote of last week, it becomes a sad commentary on represetnative government.

Mississippi's 1st District, according to the 1940 census, had 263,367 residents, both white and Negro. That would mean, anywhere except in lily white districts like the 1st that about 164,000 persons were 21 or better and eligible to qualify for voting. (The Government estimates that 62.3% of the population could qualify for the ballot.)

In last week's primary election, Rankin received 15,000 votes to about 9,000 for two opponents. That means only 14.6% of the potential voters bothered to go to the polls. (How many Negroes there are in the district we don't know; but Old John sees to it that their chances of voting are mighty slim.)

NEW YORK: Wallaceite American Labor Party officials were talking bravely, but last week's primary gave them no consolation.

In several cases, they tried to invade the Democratic or Republican primary and took a terrific lacing.

The Dems and Reps just weren't having any of Henry's politics, thank you.

The vote was light, which was understandable, since there were so few contests. But, again, the apathy was appalling.

* * *

DELAWARE: The Democratic convention picked J. Albert Frear, Jr., Dover, to run for U. S. Senate against GOP incumbent Clayton Douglass Buck.

Democratic nominee for Congressman-at-Large is J. Carl McGuigan, a member of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen.

In Delaware, you can't turn in any direction without bumping into a duPont. The Democratic convention was no exception. The party selected Alexis I. duPont Bayard, of Wilmington, to run for lieutenant governor.

A motion to incorporate Pres. Truman's civil rights platform in the state platform was defeated.

However, the Delaware Dems called for "genuine equality of opportunity for all people, regardless of race, creed or color" and urged "immediate steps be taken to place education in both white and colored schools on an equal footing."

Delaware, in many respects, resembles a Southern state in its treatment of Negroes. However, there are no bars to Negro voting.

TUGWELL 'UNEASY'

Rexford Tugwell, reported to have been astounded by many actions of the Wallace convention, now is quoted as saying he is an "uneasy member" of the Progressive Party.

Tugwell, who was co-chairman of the Natl. Wallace for President Committee and chairman of the platform committee at the Third Party convention, now says he holds no office in the party.

And, asked if he would vote for Wallace, Tugwell told the Baltimore Sun:

"At the present time, my mind is open."

GM Workers Know Cost-of-Living Bonus 'Does Not Raise Their Living Standard'

By GLORIA CAPLAN

BEGINNING Sept. 1 there will be an additional three cents an hour in the pay checks of the 330,000 hourly-paid General Motors employes. But the CIO Auto Workers aren't too happy about it.

The extra pay—which is in addition to an 11c hourly boost put into effect May 30—is a cost-of-living allowance. Because the raise means that prices have continued to spiral since its last contract was signed, the UAW reacted with mixed emotions to the boost.

T. A. Johnstone, director of the UAW-GM division, said: "GM workers welcome this increase as a means of keeping the buying power of their wages in step with rising prices . . . But General Motors workers are not kidding themselves as to the true significance of this wage increase. They know it does not raise their living standards."

"Above all," he continued, "they know that the cost-of-living rise from which this wage increase flows marks another defeat for all American consumers in the long fight against inflation."

The GM contract stipulated that employes would receive a 1c hourly increase beginning Sept. 1 for each 1.14 points rise in the Bureau of Labor Statistics Consumers Price index. Conversely, if the cost-of-living descended, workers would take a 1c cut for each 1.14 points decrease. But a limit of 5c was placed on the amount by which pay could be cut.

THIS procedure is to be repeated quarterly throughout the life of the two-year contract. The next cost-of-living adjustment will be Dec. 1, based on the Oct. 15 index.

The adjustment which becomes effective next month is based on the price rise between April 15 and July 15, latest BLS figure available.

On April 15 the index stood at 169.3. Three months later it had jumped 4.4 points to 173.7, an all-time high. Since the contract provided a 1c increase for each 1.14 points in the rise, workers were entitled to a 3.8c boost. The fraction, presumably, was dropped.

In his statement to the press, Johnstone pointed out that in a letter to all GM locals on July 29, the UAW-GM Dept. urged them not to let the contract's cost-of-living protection "lull you into a false sense of security with respect to the long-run dangers which inflation presents to the stability of the entire American economy."

GM workers were reminded at that time that the market for cars which they produce depends on the consumers' purchasing power. "If that buying power is eaten away by further inflation, General Motors workers' jobs will be endangered."

Attacking the "scandalous" price increases imposed by auto corporations "in the face of the lushest profits in the industry's extraordinarily profitable history," the letter said almost every major corporation in the country could roll back prices. "The General Motors workers would prefer it that way," it concluded.

BESIDES reports from the Bureau of Labor Statistics, proof of what every housewife knows issued last week from the Commerce and Agriculture Depts.:

Living costs are going up faster and higher than ever before.

Agriculture Secy. Charles F. Brannan said there was little hope that meat prices would go down in the next year. Even though grain prices are dropping, he said, it would take at least a year for the decrease to be reflected in the price of retail meat. Another gloomy prediction: Americans will have five pounds less meat per person next year than this.

The GOP-controlled Congress "should have granted authority to stop the rise of meat prices and thus protect the country against the inflationary pressures that are fed by the meat shortage, commented the Agriculture Secretary in a radio interview.

Blame the Republicans, said Brannon.

Remember?

Advertisement of the Natl. Association of Manufacturers, May 4, 1946:

"OPA MEANS LOW PRODUCTION — LOW PRODUCTION MEANS BLACK MARKETS — BLACK MARKETS MEAN NEEDLESSLY HIGH PRICES.

"Isn't this the answer? Remove price controls on manufactured goods, and production will step up fast. Goods will then pour into the market and, within a reasonable time, prices will adjust themselves naturally and competitively, as they always have, in line with the real worth of things. This is the way you can get the goods you want at prices you can afford to pay. Write your Congressman your views—today!

"NATL. ASSOCIATION OF MANUFACTURERS"

'Illusory!'

Immediately after OPA controls were removed in June, 1946, prices raced upward. By July 15 of this year they were 30.3% higher than in the last month of effective price controls.

In the month between mid-June and mid-July this year, says the Bureau of Labor Statistics, coal went up 2.4%; such miscellaneous items as autos, public transportation, auto insurance rose 2.2%; meats, poultry and fish climbed 2.6%.

But forget all that. The Natl Association of Manufacturers said on Aug. 7 that "the apparent increase in living costs since OPA days is largely illusory."

T-H a 'Signal Failure' After Year's Operation

ROBERT Denham, general counsel of the Natl. Labor Relations Board, is pleased as a lark with the Taft-Hartley's first year of operations.

He said as much at a special "Happy Birthday" press conference on Aug. 23, the first anniversary of the date on which T-H became effective.

"This has been a most satisfactory year in the administration of the law so many people called iniquitous," Denham told reporters. "I make no bones about saying this has been a most successful year."

He went on to praise NLRB employes who have stayed with the organization since the days when it administered the Wagner Act.

"They had to change their methods of thinking," Denham frankly stated.

"Businessmen have told me that the change in atmosphere in the field offices is almost miraculous."

The changed outlook praised by Denham has also been noticed by unions, which have charged that their cases have been subject to delays while employer complaints were given the green light and fast handling.

The first anniversary of T-H found labor groups throughout the country demanding that the anti-labor law be repealed.

CIO Pres. Murray, writing for a news syndicate, charged that the law has been a "signal failure."

"It has failed to achieve industrial peace. It has failed to promote equality in the complex business of collective bargaining between management and labor. It has failed to improve harmonious relations between the unions or workers and the managements of corporations."

The CIO president said that the operation of the law was "no surprise" since union members knew it was "based on false assumptions."

He said these assumptions—principally in the minds of corporation lobbyists and reactionary Congressmen—were based on the idea that workers hate unions, that unions halt rather than help progress, and that "arbitrary" government interference can replace "old-fashioned American common sense" in the handling of labor relations.

Labor has not yet felt the full fury of the Taft-Hartley Act, Murray pointed out, because many corporations have been making so much money it doesn't pay them to use the Act's weapons against labor.

"If the profit rate turns down, if jobs become scarce—then employers will see that the new anti-labor law is used in all its severity," he predicted.

"Americans don't want this type of industrial warfare. Yet the Taft-Hartley Act leads us to it inevitably. That is why I think it should be repealed, and repealed quickly."

The first anniversary of the law's effective operations found two major groups of workers being harassed by anti-union directives of the Labor Board.

The AFL Intl. Typographical Union had been told that its closed shop policy—maintained for decades as an aid to industrial peace—was illegal, and that its efforts to win comparable job security must be stopped.

The NLRB had obtained an injunction forbidding the ITU to ask for closed shop employment clauses in its contracts; ordering it to sign written contracts with publishers; and to stop trying to get publishers to give priority to union members.

The NLRB last week asked a federal district court in Indianapolis to find the AFL Typographical Union and its four top officers guilty of contempt for allegedly violating a drastic injunction issued under the Taft-Hartley act.

Meanwhile, the ITU stood fast by charges that Sen. Robert Taft (R.,O.) had demanded of NLRB attorneys that they push action against the typographical union.

Gerhard Van Arkel, union attorney, said his charges were based on a "so far undenied story" in the New York Times of August 14.

"That account made it clear that Sen. Taft summoned NLRB attorneys to his office, and in the presence of the Chicago newspaper publishers, some of whom had supported Sen. Taft's bid for the Republican presidential nomination, demanded that contempt proceedings be instituted.

"It is quite evident that Mr. Denham and his staff are merely the willing tools of the Chicago newspaper publishers and Sen. Taft in a strike-breaking effort."

Maritime unions, whose hiring hall systems have come under NLRB attack, are also voicing sharp criticism of the Labor Board and the Taft-Hartley Act.

The Board voted that hiring halls on the Great Lakes are outside the law, and similar action is expected on the halls on the Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific Coasts.

The halls have brought orderly sharing of jobs for seamen and west coast CIO longshoremen, and have eliminated racketeering over "sale" of work. Unions believe that the decision, unless overturned in the courts, will bring back chaos along the nation's waterfronts.

CIO Plans To Aid Sponge Industry

The CIO is preparing to go to bat for some 800 sponge fishermen and a vanishing generation of sponges.

Down in Tarpon Springs, Fla., the sponge fishermen, members of the CIO, are losing their livelihood as a result of a sponge blight. Details of how the sponges are dying off were brought out at a Marine Laboratory Institute held recently in Miami Beach by the University of Miami.

CIO representatives attending the sessions were Charles Cowl, CIO director for Florida; Ed Stone, publicity director, CIO Organizing Committee; David Robb, CIO staff; and Pres. Nick Mahinis and Cimos Angelis of the Sponge Fishermen's local.

The CIO will spearhead a drive for federal legislation for some type of subsidy for the idle fishermen and for a U. S.-sponsored sponge conservation program.

. . . AND IT CAME TO PASS

Back in 1944 the CIO at its national convention in Chicago adopted a resolution which stated:

"A third party would serve only to split and divide the forces of progress at the very moment when unity is our greatest need."

Three years and two months later the CIO Executive Broad, meeting in Washington, registered the stand of the 1944 convention and adopted a resolution stating:

"We do not agree with the argument that a third party Presidential campaign would mean a larger vote and a greater possibliity of electing progressive Senators and Congressmen. We believe that our support of a third party would weaken the possibility of electing a progressive Congress.

"We should not support a third-party movement in 1948."

Shortly thereafter, the CIO News said editorially that the third party's only practical function would be to make it easier for conservatives and reactionaries to get elected to Congress.

At this point the Wallaceites set up a terrific howl, accusing us of attempting to sabotage their wonderful new movement by painting them falsely as aids of the reactionaries.

The Communist Daily Worker, which sings the same tune as the Progressive Party, aimed its editorial pop-guns in our direction and pulled the trigger.

LOOK AT 'EM NOW

What has happened during the past few months should be enough to convince even the skeptical that the so-called Progressives are either extremely naive or are adhering to the stupid theory that they can win in 1952 if they give the U. S. a big dose of super-reaction for the next four years.

They have put candidates into the field in several states in opposition to Democratic liberals with good labor records.

They are spending about as much time damning the Democrats as condemning the Republicans whom they profess to hate.

They have been sowing dissension in the labor movement, attacking the leaders of the CIO and trying to build up the illusion that there is very little connection between the Communist and Progressive parties.

They have been trying to picture themselves to the public as a united group bent on saving mankind and establishing everlasting peace—although behind the scenes the Progressives are fighting among themselves.

THE ISSUES ARE SIMPLE

Anybody who has taken the trouble to study the record of the 80th Congress should know that the issues involved in the forthcoming elections are comparatively simple ones that affect all the people.

These issues center around our domestic problems—how we're going to combat inflation, how we're going to secure adequate housing, the kind of taxes we're going to have, the manner in which labor unions will be treated.

The record of those seeking re-election should by now be crystal clear.

So, it seems to us, the job of intelligent CIO members is to engage in the type of political action which provides the best chance of electing to office men and women who will vote for the things they want and need.

Casting a ballot on the basis of an ideological dream or on the theory that "maybe we can win in 1952" simply won't do the job that needs to be done in November 1948.

Uncensored Confession of Former Spy!

Editor Reveals He Plotted, Schemed and Obtained Secret Documents

By ALLAN L. SWIM

I have decided to tell all—to confess that I'm an ex-spy.

My connection with subversive and un-American activities dates back some 10 years.

By devious methods I came into possession of secret documents which outlined methods of destroying the human rights which true Americans hold near and dear.

I often worked secretly and under cover. I had "agents" in a number of cities—agents who kept their secret papers in locked filing cabinets.

I'm sure the FBI—and perhaps other governmental agencies—were aware of my activities.

MY early training as a spy was more or less accidental—but it was good training.

A group of bankers and loan agents, an informant told me, was engaged in a large-scale swindle designed to cheat many small farmers in Arkansas and Missouri out of their land and equipment.

After driving hundreds of miles and checking with dozens of persons I had a mountain of concrete evidence showing the group was using federal farm loan funds to operate a nasty racket.

The evidence — which should have sent at least a half dozen men to prison—was turned over to government authorities and I sat back to watch the wheels of justice turn.

The props were knocked out from under me when a bookkeeper, who had virtually nothing to do with the policies of the group, confessed he alone was responsible for the swindle.

He received a light sentence and the others went free—but I had received good training for my future activities.

DR. SAMUEL GREEN, top man in the Ku Klux Klan, will tell you I'm a dirty spy bent on destroying the brand of "Americanism" which his outfit preaches.

After all, didn't I do some underhanded snooping and then reveal secret plans of Green and his night-riding companions to revive the dying Klan a few years ago?

Yes, sir, Green will say, I plotted to destroy the self-appointed protectors of "pure, white Southern womanhood." I schemed to aid those "foreigners" from Africa and those subversive dupes who dare not breathe without first asking the permission of the Vatican.

A really bad guy, me!

MY most despicable spy job was the one involving a Catholic priest. This undoubtedly proved that I was undermining religion.

The priest threatened to sue me and my associates all the way from Birmingham to Moscow and back because I pictured him as an anti-Semite with fascist tendencies.

Threatened legal action failed to materialize after the bishop took away the man's priestly privileges. Shortly thereafter the priest joined forces with the great American known as Gerald L. K. Smith and was arrested in Chicago on a charge of "inciting to riot."

Incidentally, I did a bit of spying on Smith's organization and attempted to undermine it.

HAVING become fairly well established as an underground agent, I plied my talents in various parts of the nation.

One of my innocent victims was an outfit called the Commoner Party, which later changed its name to Free White Gentile American Army (or something like that).

My activities, the head of the party will testify, aided in the "diabolical plot of the Jews to use the Negroes to seize control of the nation."

I gave aid and comfort to the Communists by spying on Fight for Free Enterprise and then revealing it was collecting large sums of money to run the Reds out of Texas. The dirty thing I did was to reveal that the heads of FFE knew the name of only one Texas Commie.

MY record kept getting worse as I spied on organization after organization and I revealed my true colors after I became editor of the CIO News.

With great joy, I blasted the House un-American Activities Committee and I opposed the Mundt-Nixon subversive activities control bill.

A reporter for the Daily Worker was in my office for a few minutes the other day.

Gee, I must be just a masculine Elizabeth T. Bentley!

It looks like some Congressional committee would call me up on the carpet and make me tell what I learned when I was working as a spy.

But, maybe the Capitol Hill probers are interested only in the Red brand of totalitarianism.

Britains Wary of Industrial Unionism

By GORDON SCHOFFER

Political and industrial correspondent of Reynolds News (London Sunday paper), and radio commentator. Member of Executive Council, National Union of Journalists.

AMONG nearly 100 resolutions submitted for Britain's Trades Union Congress in September is one on trade union structure, which brings into the open one of the most difficult and deep rooted problems of the trade union movement in Britain.

It is a demand by the United Rubber Workers Union for an examination of the structure of unions "with a view to acceptance of the general principle of one union for each industry."

The rubber workers have a membership of only 1,000, but their general secretary, H. Eastwood, who is expected to move their resolution, is one of the best known figures and most witty speakers at the Trades Union Congress.

In raising this question, however, he will certainly bring a hornet's nest about his ears, for his motion in an attack on the big general workers trade unions, who organize scores of different categories of employes and who exercise a decisive vote in all Congress discussions.

DEMANDS for a reorganization of a British trade union movement have been made at intervals over the last quarter of a century. As far back as 1924 the TUC declared that the number of unions should be reduced to an "absolute minimum" and that organization as far as possible should be by industry.

A few smaller unions have combined but the only important amalgamation has been between the two unions catering for the distributive workers. Their combined union, with a membership of nearly 400,000, has succeeded in eliminating rivalries over the the whole of the distribution field and has been making big progress.

Amalgamation between other competing unions appears as far away as ever. There has, however, been a much closer working together of individual unions. The Confederation of Engineering and Shipbuilding Unions for example which embrace 36 separate organizations, now works in a much more coherent way.

"Poaching" of members by unions competing in the same field has been much diminished by inter-union agreements defining their fields of operation.

CONGRESSMAN DRIP By Yomen

. . . and I promise you, as a true friend of labor."

A Very Peculiar Kind Of 'Legal Justice'

THE plant superintendent, a guy who talked tough and acted the same way, rolled up his sleeves and waded into the CIO.

He had called all of the workers under his direction together and had told them the company would not "look favorably" upon their forming a union.

The workers, quite a few of whom had already signed CIO cards, just stood around listening, giving no indication of how they felt about what he was saying.

The super became bold, then bolder.

Then he said that anybody caught joining the union would be fired "then and there" and that he would throw them out of the plant!

A CIO organizer named Carl, who was helping the workers set up a union, heard about the superintendent's threat.

He had worked at the plant for a short time after he got out of the Navy and was fairly well acquainted with the superintendent.

So he decided to run over to the super's home for a little chat—for a friendly chat, he hoped.

He wanted to set the super straight on a couple of things, avoid trouble if he could and make his own position clear.

The super, remembering Carl and thinking, perhaps, he was seeking a job, was friendly at first. Then Carl said he was working for the CIO.

At this point the super became angry (Carl termed it "flying into a rage") and paid scant attention to what the organizer was telling him about unfair labor practices.

The super then consigned the organizer to the hot place and threatened to kill him if he was caught on the streets of the town.

Carl said he didn't want to argue, that he'd made the visit merely to inform the company official about the union's rights.

The superintendent kept right on ranting—and then the red-haired Carl, who has a bit of Irish blood in his veins, said his little piece.

CARL told the super where the CIO's office was located, mentioned that "he was out on the streets almost every day" and that he intended to continue using the public thoroughfares.

The super modified his threat. He wouldn't kill Carl just because he saw him on the street but he'd do it if he caught Carl near the company's plant or near the super's house.

"Oh, I'll be around the plant from time to time, distributing leaflets," Carl said.

The super then yelled at a man standing in the front door of his home.

"Bring me a gun and I'll kill this %$#*&%$!!" he declared.

Carl quickly walked to his car and drove away—not leisurely!

THERE'S a little legal document known as a peace bond—and next day one was slapped on him.

The super charged Carl had threatened to kill him and a justice of the peace placed him under a $1000 peace bond.

Then the J. P. gave Carl some "friendly" advice.

"Things like this wouldn't happen to you if you changed jobs," he was told.

Friends who know about this incident can appreciate what Carl means when he says something about "a very peculiar kind of justice."

A.I.S.

Let's Put On The Squeeze

Repeal 'Only Sure Way To Correct T-H'

The New York Post last week reviewed the first year of the operation of Taft-Hartley and found that "the only sure way to correct T-H's many abuses is to repeal the entire act." The editorial says in part:

The T-H law takes credit for a decrease in jurisdictional strikes, brought about by its provision that disputing unions should submit their conflicting claims to peaceful arbitration.

In some cases it has worked to cut down on featherbedding (padding an employer's payroll with unproductive workers), and here it must be said that organized labor's valid insistence that a worker's pay should be commensurate with the worth of the job he performs, acquires a sickly cast whenever a gold brick sidles up to the cashier's window.

But in its blanket outlawing of the closed shop, for example, the T-H Act has tried to strike a mortal blow at all unions.

The worst that can be said of the closed shop by an employer is that it eliminates his right to hire whomever he pleases. It has also deprived some workers of the right to earn a living in their chosen trade unless they become dues paying members of the union concerned.

But in many trades and industries, the closed shop, with its apprentice and other training provisions, has become traditional—simply because it seems the most economical way to assure the employer of a steady supply of skilled workers, and insures the worker of protection against having gains won at great cost, lost by the willingness of some to work longer hours for less pay.

For instance, although the National Labor Relations Board has ruled that the Great Lakes hiring hall of the National Maritime Union is, in effect, a closed shop and "illegal and discriminatory" under the T-H Act, East Coast operators have signed a contract with the NMU continuing the hiring hall system until "a court of competent jurisdiction" decides the hall's legality.

Under the hiring hall set-up, the NMU has control over booking seamen for passage. Only men who are in good union standing are considered eligible and preference is given to seamen who have been in drydock the longest.

Some ship operators apparently favor this system of union hiring because they remember all too well the "chaotic" days when agents combed the waterfront, trying to round up enough competent seamen to weigh anchor.

If the Supreme Court ultimately rules that hiring halls violate the T-H Act, the operators may be forced into "bootleg," off-the-cuff agreements with the NMU to continue the practice.

Before it encourages widespread disobedience, which relegates decent citizens to the criminal rung of society, T-H's ban on the closed shop should be modified, permitting some leeway when management and labor agree that the closed shop does more good than harm.

The Taft-Hartley Act also outlaws secondary boycotts. The intent here was probably to prevent a total stagnation of services merely because a single labor unit had gone on strike. But, in some cases, the provision has actually forced workers to strike-break against their fellow union members.

In Chicago, under conceivable threat of injunction, suits for violation of contract, etc., commercial printers are setting advertisements for newspapers which are being struck by their brothers in the printers union.

Again, the T-H Act would need some heavy rewriting to prevent workers from being legally required to smash the very unions which protect them.

Finally, T-H forbids labor unions to spend funds for political purposes. This is a totally unjustified, undemocratic attempt to do away with effective labor campaigning before elections in which all Americans, including dues-paying unionists, have a stake.

The only sure way to correct T-H's many abuses is to repeal the entire act. Then our legislators would have a fresh start on writing a labor law which reflected common sense, rather than senseless revenge.

Deserved Defeat

Campaigning for the U. S. Senate, Rep. Bryan Dorn appeared during shift change at the gates of the Woodside mills, Greenville, S. C. Introducing himself to one of the men in overalls, he handed him his "vote for Dorn" card and asked for his support.

"What have you ever done for labor, Mr. Dorn?" the worker asked.

"Well, for one thing I voted for the Taft-Hartley act," Dorn replied.

"That's just what I know, Mr. Dorn," the man in overalls said, "and that's why you're not going to get my vote." Tearing up the campaign card, he handed it back to the Congressman.

Dorn had bumped up against one of the shop stewards of Local 268, CIO Textile Workers.

Incidentally, Dorn lost the race.

GOP RENEGES ON '44 PLATFORM

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

"The Dept. of Labor has been emasculated by the New Deal. Labor bureaus, agencies, and committees are spread far and wide . . . and have no semblance of systematic or responsible organization. All governmental labor activities must be placed under the direct authority and responsibility of the Secretary of Labor."

Thus, in bold language spoke out the Republican platform of 1944.

Well, the GOP didn't win in 1944. But, in 1946, it took over control of Congress and thus was given an opportunity to show whether or not it would practice what it preached in 1944. You've guessed it—the Republicans didn't practice, only preached.

They have, in effect, murdered the Labor Department.

Ironically, the Labor Dept. became an agency of Cabinet rank by Cabinet rank by signature of Pres. William Howard Taft—as his last act in office before handing over the job to Thomas Woodrow Wilson. That's ironic, because Taft's son, Robert, is doing everything in his power—and he's got a lot of it, chum—to wipe out the last vestiges of the department.

Few people realize how young the Labor Dept. is. It came into being as a result of a combination of Democrats and "wild jackass" Republicans of the Middle West—back in the days when the Middle West GOP was the nation's

He was the first Secretary of Labor liberal group. Here's what the bill set forth:

"To foster, promote, and develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States, to improve their working conditions and advance their opportunity for profitable employment."

William B. Wilson, a handsome Pennsylvanian, became the first secretary (under Wilson) of the department.

Oddly though, the tenure of office in the job has generally been long. Wilson held the post eight years. James J. ("Puddler Jim") Davis was in nearly 10 years under three Presidents. (William N. Doak filled out the rest of Herbert Hoover's regime.)

Frances Perkins was in nearly 13 years. Then came Lewis Schwellenbach, who died this year. Maurice Tobin, whose appointment has been hailed by labor, now is secretary.

JUST what have the Republicans done in ignoring their pledge to the American people?

Well, here's the record:

JULY 31, 1946: Children's Bureau transferred to the Federal Security agency.

NOVEMBER 15, 1946: Public employment offices transferred to state control.

FEBRUARY 24, 1947: National Wage Stabilization Board liquidated.

FEBRUARY 24, 1947: Wage Adjustment Board liquidated.

JUNE 30, 1947: Retraining and Reemployment Administration liquidated.

JUNE 30, 1947: Shipbuilding Stabilization committee liquidated.

AUGUST 22, 1947 Conciliation Service set up as a separate agency under the Taft-Hartley Law.

JULY 1, 1948: The United States Employment Service transferred to the Federal Security Agency under an appropriations bill rider.

WHAT does that leave in the department? Well, there are now just six departmental divisions in being: The Bureau of Labor Statistics, the Bureau of Apprenticeship, the Bureau of Labor Standards, the Women's Bureau, the Wage-Hour and Public Contracts Division and The Veterans' Reemployment Rights Division.

That's all—

Let's go back a minute to the words of the original Labor Dept. Bill. "To foster, promote, and develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States; to improve their working conditions and advance their opportunities for profitable employment."

All of the agencies and powers that were taken from the Labor Dept. were concerned with the welfare of the worker. But, two were most highly important to the industrial peace of America. They are the Conciliation Service (now known as Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service) and the USES.

Ah, says Congressman Hotair, but we still have retained those divisions, one as an independent agency and another under the states! But, dear Congressman, that's not what you told the American people in 1944; then you realized that labor agencies could function more efficiently, more for industrial accord, under one department. Now, it is obvious to all that you have split them up to end industrial peace.

THE President of the United States, Harry S. Truman, has fought tooth and nail against these emasculating moves. Take his veto of the H. R. 6355 —"making supplemental appropriations for the Federal Security Agency for the fiscal year 1949, and for other purposes."

H. R. 6355 contained the sneaking rider that shunted USES from the Labor Dept. to the FSA.

Protested Truman: "It is apparent that a system of public employment offices to secure jobs for the workers is directly related to the major purpose of the Dept. of Labor, which is 'to foster, promote and develop the welfare of the wage earners'.

"Is is equally apparent that it would be far less appropriate to place the Employment Service, together with its auxiliary Farm Placement Service and Veterans' Employment Service, in the FSA, which is primarily concerned with matters of health, welfare and education.

"Neither the House Committee on Education and Labor nor the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare was given an opportunity to consider the measure. Instead, it was conceived by a subcommittee on appropriations and tacked onto the appropriations bill.

"I do not believe that it is in the interest of good government that legislation of such importance should be enacted in such a manner. As I stated in Dec., 1945, in withholding my approval from an appropriation bill which contained substantive legislation, 'a matter of such grave importance as our public employment system deserves not only permanent legislation, but legislation carefully and separately considered.'

"What makes this matter even more disturbing is that the present bill is another in a series of legislative actions stripping the Dept. of Labor of essential funds and functions. To remove the USES from the department would further weaken and demoralize it and reduce the entire department to such a minor status as to raise seriously the question of the validity of its continuance as a separate department."

Strong words, Mr. President.

Let's get back to what's left of Labor.

(When you dial the Labor Dept.'s number, the operator there answers: "This is Labor." Washington gagsters think it should be changed to "This used to be Labor).

CIO Auto Workers' contract, for instance, the BLS index determines the workers' wages. Many other contracts have similar provisions.

If Taber and Schwabe had won out in the end, the BLS would have had to go back to quarterly indices. As it is, its plans for much needed expansion have of necessity been put aside.

The Woman's Bureau asked Congress for $336,000. It got $274,200, compared to $322,100 in fiscal 1948. As a result, the bureau has had to close its field offices in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, St. Louis and San Francisco.

The Veterans' Reemployment Rights groups asked for $509,000, got $207,500, down from $552,946 the previous year.

The result: It has had to drop 50 of its 85 employes and close 20 of its 35 field offices.

And so it is along the line.

LET'S put the Labor Dept. situation this way:

The Dept. of Labor has gone down from an appropriation of $[illegible],000,000 in fiscal 1947, to $20,000,000 in fiscal 1948 to $15,000,000 in fiscal 1949.

That puts the department at almost the exact figure — $15,036,000 — that Herbert Hoover got for the department in the depression year of 1932. Who says the GOP doesn't want to go back to Hoover?

The staff of The Labor Dept. was 7,000 in '47, 4,000 in '48. Now it's 3,300.

Here's what people think about Congress' stab in the back of the Labor Dept:

Secy. Tobin: "The department has gone through trying times as the result of budget cuts and the removal of functions. Throughout this ordeal, the employes have remained steadfast to their ideals of serving the wage earners with skill and efficiency, despite the efforts to the 80th Congress to obstruct their work.

"The damage that was done by Congress can and must be repaired if the department is to carry out its full duties and responsibilities to the wage earners and all the people."

Rep. John Fogarty, (D., R: I.): Blasted his colleagues during the debate on the FSA rider. He reminded them that the FSA was set up in 1939 to act as a sort of catch-all for the Social Security Board, the Office of Education, the Public Health Service and a group of miscellaneous services which all had a welfare or educational base. Fogarty assailed the "concerted move" to build up FSA and knock down the Labor Dept. He warned that FSA might swallow all of Labor.

Sen. George Aiken (R., Vt.): "We are going directly contrary to the pledges of the Republican platform of 1944."

The Republican platform of 1948 has an ominous omission. There is not one single word about the Labor Dept.

Democratic Platform: "We urge that the department be rebuilt and strengthened, restoring to it the units, which properly belong to it, and which the Republican 80th Congress stripped from it over the veto of Pres. Truman (note: he also vetoed the Taft-Hartley Law, which then was passed over his veto).

"We urge that the department's facilities for collecting and disseminating economic information be expanded, and that a labor extension service be established in the department."

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey: (urging passage of the $16,600,000 proposed appropriation for Labor): "It is only one dollar a year for every union member and less than 50c a year for each wage earner or low salaried worker whose welfare might be advanced.

"In contrast, over a billion dollars is included annually in the budget for the Dept. of Agriculture, or well over $100 for every farmer. Forty-five million dollars was spent to keep up the price of potatoes, and yet essential funds are denied to throw light on how many workers do not earn enough to buy potatoes at a reasonable price."

Ewan Clague: (testifying before the Subcommittee on appropriations) "Bear in mind the fact that thus this bureau (BLS) is one of the three most important statistical agencies of the government. Outside of finance's and agriculture, we produce well over half of the current economic indicators issued by the government.

"We have recurring and continuing reports on housing, employment, earnings, prices and the cost of living, wage rates, industrial accidents, strikes and so forth, Such reports must be issued promptly if they are to be of use."

SUPPOSE heavy cuts were made? Clague asked. "We would be without all information on productivity; yet this is a serious issue in wage negotiations.

"We would be without information on the outlook in particular occupations or industries to help the young people decide whether it is worthwhile to invest four or five years in training for a specific occupation or profession.

"We would be unable to tell what industrial accident rates are for the highly hazardous industries.

"We would be unable to service the public and the Congress in answering about the foreign labor situation.

"We would be unable to answer questions on the changes in the general level of prices. The Wholesale Price Index has been the barometer of the price level since 1890."

Assistant Labor Secy. John W. Gibson (a CIO member): "The meat-axers used the dishonest subterfuge of an appropriations bill rider to accomplish a change in basic law, and even the Republican controlled committees were not permitted to pass on the wisdom of the act."

EWAN CLAGUE
He fears vital services will halt.

What Congress has done to the Wage-Hour division isn't fit to print.

MANY Washington observers feel that the GOP 80th Congress has particularly aimed its guns at BLS because it fears that bureau's statistics will put the blame for high prices on the proper doorstep, that of the Republican Party's National headquarters, 1337 Connecticut ave., N.W., Washington, D. C.

And well it might.

The CIO feels the people—most of whom are workers—will think more and more about the slaughter of their Labor Dept. as the Presidential campaign rolls on. It will be a key issue. Shall we return to a department whose purpose is:

"To foster, promote, and develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States; to improve their working conditions and advance their opportunities for profitable employments."

Or will we go back to Hoover?

Costly

"We've Had Enough," a leaflet just issued by CIO-PAC, tells the story of prices in one smashing picture.

The leaflet quotes a bitter piece of history, recalling: "The big business boys—in Congress and out of it—said, 'leave it to us' prices will come down. They said, 'leave it to us' and you'll get housing."

So out of 91 million people who might have voted, only 34 million went to the polls two years ago.

To bring home what happened, PAC just reprints two grocery ads—one from 1946 when you could buy two quarts of milk for a quarter and one from this month, when milk was offered at a "new low price" of 19c straight, or four quarts for 72c.

Copies of "We've Had Enough" are offered at $3.50 a 1000, $2 for 500.

The copies can be obtained from the Political Action Committee, 728 17th St., N.W., Washington, D. C.

'Supreme Motive'

William B. Wilson, first Secretary of Labor, in his first annual report:

"In the execution of that purpose (stated for the Labor Dept. in the law which set it up and quoted elsewhere on this page), the element of fairness is of equal importance and the department has in fact made fairness between wage earner and wage earner, between wage earner and employer, and between each and the public the supreme motive and purpose of its activities."

Phone Labor Calls For Right Number

TELEPHONE workers are warming up for a showdown with "Ma Bell."

Meeting in Washington, D. C., last week, representatives of 423,450 telephone workers joined forces for a united attack on the giant American Telephone & Telegraph Corporation's "no raise" policy.

The conference was called by the two largest telephone groups —the CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee and the independent Communications Workers of America. Besides these unions, 15 independents were represented.

Blueprint of tactics to be pursued in the nationwide wage drive calls for public demonstrations, public letter-writing campaigns, joint committees of the public and telephone workers, and an all out public relations campaign to "advertise the poor wages of the telephone workers as compared with workers in other industries."

"Bell Telephone workers are just about at the end of their patience," TWOC Chairman Allan S. Haywood said. "It's about time this penny-pinching corporation—the world's largest—be made to understand that its employes cannot live on platitudes and company paternalism."

MOST of the unions submitted one-month notice of wage reopening on Aug. 16, which means that wage talks should begin on Sept. 16. Unions which have not yet signed contracts are expected to coordinate their bargaining talks with these.

In his report to TWOC affiliates on the conference, R. W. Long, TWOC secretary-treasurer, stated that the Bell System has indicated it is "ready to come through with wage increases." In a number of instances, he said, the company has made small wage offers which he termed "completely unsatisfactory and inadequate." These have been accepted by only one group, he said—the Illinois Plant employes, affiliated with the AFL Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

Long said that although acceptance by this group "would weaken the position of all the others," a united front of all other Telephone unions can overcome this initial disadvantage.

Meanwhile, the CIO Communications Equipment Workers' "cold strike" against the Western Electric Co., an AT&T subsidary, began to grow warm.

Although the union has not called a national strike, at least a score of its locals in major telephone centers around the country have engaged in spontaneous unauthorized walkouts in the past two weeks.

MARITIME: Three West Coast Maritime unions have decided to boycott a forthcoming Taft-Hartley vote on the employer's final offer, and beban tooling up for an anticipated strike on Sept. 2.

Sept. 2 is the expiration date of the T-H injunctions, which prohibited a strike originally set for June 15. Under the T-H law, the NLRB must conduct a secret ballot among the employes on the employers' last offer before the 80-day injunction is lifted.

The unions which voted not to participate in the voting are the CIO Longshoremen & Warehousemen, Marine Cooks and Stewards and the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association.

Previously the Longshoremen, at a series of stop-work meetings, voted to reject the employers' offer—its only offer since negotiations began last spring. Branded "insulting and inadequate" by ILWU Pres. Harry Bridges, the offer would have excluded about one-fourth of the membership from contract coverage and would have resulted in a wage cut for the others.

The merbership's rejection of both the company offer and the forthcoming NLRB poll "makes a strike on Sept. 2 a certainty," the union stated.

The Regional NLRB set Sept. 1, day before the scheduled strike, as the date for a hearing on a complaint that the ILWU insistence on retention of the hiring hall violates the T-H Act. On Sept. 9 a hearing on a similar complaint against the Marine Cooks & Stewards will be conducted.

On the Atlantic and Gulf Coasts agreements were coming in rapidly last week as the strike deadline neared.

Carey Writes About Reds

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey has written the lead article for the September issue of the American Magazine, which will be on newstands throughout the country on Labor Day weekend.

The article is entitled "We've Got the Reds on the Run." It describes successful efforts by union leaders and members in the CIO to defeat the Communists' bid for control, both in American unions and in the World Federation of Trade Unions.

The story should be of interest to every CIO member.

Some 12,000 CIO Marine Engineers are covered by a settlement with 44 Atlantic & Gulf Coast shipping concerns. A 6% monthly pay boost is provided.

An agreement with 30 major oil transportation companies will give 10,000 CIO Maritime Unionists increases of $12.50 a month, with boatswains getting $25.

AUTO: The strike by 24,000 CIO Auto workers at seven Intl. Harvester plants rounded out its second week with a refusal by the company to continue talks on a company-wide basis.

Responsibility for settling the walkout was placed on the individual plants involved, and the Memphis plant led off with immediate negotiations. The company's move was its reply to the UAW's proposals last week for ending the strike. Holidays, wage inequities and other demands are the issues in dispute.

Support of the UAW strike came from the CIO Farm Equipment Workers, which has contracts in eight I H plants. FE Pres. Grant W. Oakes called on all his local unions to "give full moral backing to the UAW strike and prevent the company from using one union against another."

The FE head also called for a permanent negotiating committee composed of representatives of both unions to bargain jointly with IH management.

AROUND THE COUNTRY: In Philadelphia, about 450 CIO Electrical workers at the Proctor Electric Co. were on strike for wage boosts . . . At Oak Ridge, Tenn., 2700 CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical workers won increases of from 5c to 24c an hour. . . . In Des Moines, Ia., CIO Rubber workers at the Armstrong Rubber Co. voted to walk out. . . . A 6c hourly boost has been won by 4500 CIO Paperworkers at the West Virginia Pulp & Paper Co., bringing the total won this summer to 11c and the total since V-J Day to 48c. The mills are in Covington, Va.; Luke, Md., and Williamsburg, Pa.

BRITISH UNIONS are showing deep interest in the Anglo-American labor-industry production council recently proposed by ECA Administrator Paul Hoffmann, according to an article by Herbert Tracey of the British Trades Union Congress.

"British workers do not require any exhortations to work harder; they are as energetic as any other wage-earners in the world," Tracey writes. "But it would be foolish to say that their hard work cannot be more skilfully applied.

"Far too much energy is often expended for meager results in many of Britain's manufacturing plants—too much fetching and carrying, too slow an acceptance of new and less laborious methods of work."

Many investigating groups have pointed to these "defects and deficiencies" in industrial organization, Tracey declared, and "that is why the TUC is prepared to learn from the experience of the Americans and is willing to cooperate with the proposed advisory council."

The council is expected to include six British and four American unionists, as well as a similar number from management in the two countries.

FRENCH WORKERS, meeting in convention, have received warm greetings from Pres. J. E. Fadling of the CIO Intl. Woodworkers of America. In a letter to Sec. R. Arrachard of the French Union, Fadling expressed, on behalf of the IWA membership, "deep sympathy for the plight of their fellow workers in Europe."

He assured the French union that the "vast majority" of American woodworkers will be "supporting the forward-looking democratic political policy of our great CIO" during the coming campaign.

"The rank and file of American labor is out to elect a Congress and a President who will kow-tow neither to capitalist greed nor to the schemes of any political party for national or world dictatorship."

Court Refuses To Silence the Press In Philadelphia Tax Scandal

A Pennsylvania court has served notice that it will not silence the press to keep the public from knowing about the three million-dollar scandal in GOP-dominated Philadelphia.

The amusement tax chief several months ago confessed to his political sponsor, a deputy sheriff, that there was a quarter-million shortage. It subsequently developed that the shortage may amount to three million dollars. City Tax Receiver W. Frank Marshall stands in threat of impeachment proceedings.

Marshall's counsel appealed to Judge Joseph Sloane in Common Pleas Court to halt press criticism of his client, charging that newspaper accounts were "part of a deliberate campaign calculated to stir public sentiment against the respondent."

The attorney also called on the court "to give careful scrutiny to the scurrilious attacks," which he held "are contumacious of this court."

Nonetheless, the court upheld the right to proceed with impeachment proceedings and replied as follows to the requests for a press gag:

"THE press has the right to speak within the precious freedoms of our State and Federal Constitutions and under their limitations.

"The press has the right to bring to the public news and proper comment.

"The press has a further right to make its proper and thinking effort and contribution toward the preservation of the purity of community institutions.

"There comes to us from other parts of the world shuddery words of the indicia of tyranny, of the throttling vise on the press, and we cherish and hug the more closely our right of free expression."

Although the attempt to gag newspapers was rebuffed in the Keystone State, freedom of the press is endangered in the Free State of Maryland.

Five Baltimore radio stations and a radio announcer will be given hearings Oct. 1 on contempt charges based on broadcasts concerning the arrest of a janitor on a charge of murdering an 11-year-old girl.

Standing Order: Ignore Facts, Blame it on the Unions

PERHAPS you have read about the sad plight of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Perhaps you have seen headlines like the one in the adjoining column (from the Washington Post) and read stories which gave the impression that "impossible" demands of the AFL American Guild of Musical Artists and 11 other unions were forcing the Met to cancel its season.

Last week, the Met announced that, after all, it would have a season.

Just to set matters straight, here are the real facts of the case:

A The Met has been in financial straits for years as have many other musical ventures. Contributions and benefits make up the deficits.

B There were no wage issues involved in the contract negotiations. In fact, the musicians had received no wage increase for two years.

C Local 802, American Federation of Musicians, declares that a welfare fund was the sole remaining bargaining issue. Local 802 offered to give its service gratis for several benefit concerts, the proceeds of which would go into a welfare fund to benefit all crafts. To that, the Met replied "no," though it would cost the Met nothing.

D In previous years, the members of the musicians union have contributed cash to help wipe out the Met's deficits.

E No meeting of the Met's board was held before the decision to cancel was announced.

F Last week, the Met announced it would have a season after all—which came as no surprise to opera goers. The Met also agreed that it would take steps to give social security coverage to its union employes.

Mass. Unions In Fight For Life

MASSACHUSETTS unions are engaged in the political fight of their life—and for their effective life.

When the voters go to the polls on Nov. 2, they will not only elect their Congressmen, but they will also decide whether to turn back the clock in industrial relations in the Bay State.

They will vote on three anti-labor referenda sponsored by Mass. Citizens Union These proposals would outlaw every form of social security, including the union shop, the closed shop, maintenance of membership; would require the majority of all eligible votes be cast to authorize a strike, and would regulate union elections.

Faced with these threats, the unions in Massachusetts, CIO and AFL, aided by Americans for Democratic Action, are conducting an intensified campaign to register every potential voter, particularly union members. (The voting lists are checked against union membership rosters.)

The Mass. CIO Council last week stated that all reports indicate that a large number of names have been added to the registration lists. The books have closed, but the drive will be renewed from Sept. 15 to Oct. 1 when the books will be opened again prior to the final election.

IN North Adams sound trucks were used in the registration drive. In Lowell the Textile Workers were able, despite opposition, to get city council to pass a resolution calling for increased registration.

TWUA persuaded the registrar of voters to set up shop at the Roxbury Carpet plant, Saxonville, and the Barre Wool & Combing Co. plant, South Barre. At Haverhill union officials believed that the campaign was responsible for a large number of the 1077 additional registrations.

The CIO registration work was supervised by Cyril O'Brien, executive director of the state CIO council and director of both the TWUA and the State CIO Political Action Committee. (Council President is Joseph H. Salerno, secretary-treasurer is J. William Belanger). In several parts of the state the textile union assigned staff members to full time work on registration.

THE Mass. Citizens Union is the same outfit that intervened in the strike of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers at the Bethlehem shipyard at Quincy, Mass., by running full-page newspaper ads.

The "citizens" attempted to turn public sentiment against the strikers by asserting that the latter were being supported by public welfare funds and that union members were fined for not reporting for picket duty.

Both charges were denied by the local union, which reported that there were 25 men who received payments under the GI Bill of Rights. The local also offered $500 to the "citizens" to prove that any member had been fined—a challenge that was ignored.

All three refrenda were introduced first as bills in the State Legislature, which rejected them. Under the Massachusetts law, a measure that has obtained 5000 signatures may be submitted to referendum.

UNITED FOR ACTION: CIO, AFL and ADA joined hands in Massachusetts to get out the registration. Their concern is over referenda which will be on the ballots in November. This picture is symbolic of the unified campaign, clockwise, Cyril A. O'Brien, director of the Mass. CIO Council and of the State PAC; Michael J. Ryan, Steelworkers' assistant regional director; Mrs. William Schaft, ADA secretary; Robert M. Segal, counsel for the Mass. AFL and ADA member; Prof. Duncan Ballantine of the Mass. Institute of Technology, and Reginald H. Zalles, executive director of ADA. (Right) One of the 111,000 buttons that were distributed along with more than 800,000 pamphlets urging registration.

Japanese Firms 'Lose Face' By Disobeying Their NLRB

IN American-occupied Japan, the Central Labor Relations Board — the Japanese equivalent of NLRB —operates under a law which gives it good set of "teeth" to make employers treat unions fairly.

That is the opinion of Iwao F. Ayusawa, American-educated executive director of CLRB, who helped draft the Japanese law.

In the U. S. to study the NLRB, Ayusawa did not comment on the Taft-Hartley Act but he freely discussed the Japanese labor law.

Perhaps the most startling thing he said was that the CLRB has power to subpoena the books of a corporation which claims that it cannot afford to meet a union's wage demands. CLRB's executive director said that not only does the board have that power but uses it. The CLRB has another weapon to use against recalcitrant employers which the NLRB does not have, largely because the Oriental mind operates differently from the Occidental. To illustrate his point he told of the Nippon Electric Power Generating Co., which had refused to obey an order of the board to increase its employes' pay as well as its rates.

The board took its case to the public through the press and radio. Asyusawa said that the company refused to obey the order for a couple months, but finally obeyed because "it was losing face."

(Ever hear of a U. S. corporation losing face?)

Larger than the five-man NLRB, the Japanese board has seven management members, and a similar number of members representing the public and labor.

In addition to the national board, there are 46 perfecture board having power to make final rulings on intra-perfecture cases. Auysawa said that a great many cases handled by the national board are grievances of government employes.

Ayusawa said that whereas before the war there were only 400,000—or—6%—of the workers organized into unions that lead a precarious existence there are now 7,000,000 organized workers —54% of the working population.

Industry's Scheme Bared

INDUSTRY'S sudden about-face on 1948 wage increases was due to realization that labor could be used as a scapegoat for a new round of unjustified price increases and mounting profits.

That charge is made by the Economic Outlook, published by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research. headed by Kermit Eby.

The bulletin asserted that industry's original opposition to wage increases asked by labor unions was based on a "conclusion that prices could be raised no further in 1948. Therefore, any wage increases granted would have to be absorbed out of profits. And on this industry was adamant: 'We will not reduce our profits."

"If prices could not be raised, not a cent of their exorbitant profits were to be sacrificed to prevent workers' living standards from declining further," the Outlook observed.

The change-over in management thinking developed about mid-March, the Outlook said, and was based on a "changing economic outlook" indicated that prices could be raised in 1948 because of the effects on the U. S. economy of the European Recovery Program, passage of the Knutson tax bill and the national defense program.

"THE European Recovery Program, and the 70-group air force, the new preparedness program and the tax cut, all contributed to a change in the economic outlook from deflation to inflation," the CIO publication said.

"Business recognized this and saw open sledding for further price increases. Business also recognized that prices could not be raised without an excuse—and a scapegoat. Each time in the past when industry groups raised prices, they used increases in wages as an excuse. And they always raised prices far above the amount necessary to offset increased wage costs.

"Therefore the late spring of 1948 saw a remarkable about-face on the part of big business. Corporations that had branded wage increases impossible and disastrous, were willing to raise wages."

GENERAL Motors was the first to break the no-increase front, the Outlook recalled, and it was quickly followed by many other big corporations.

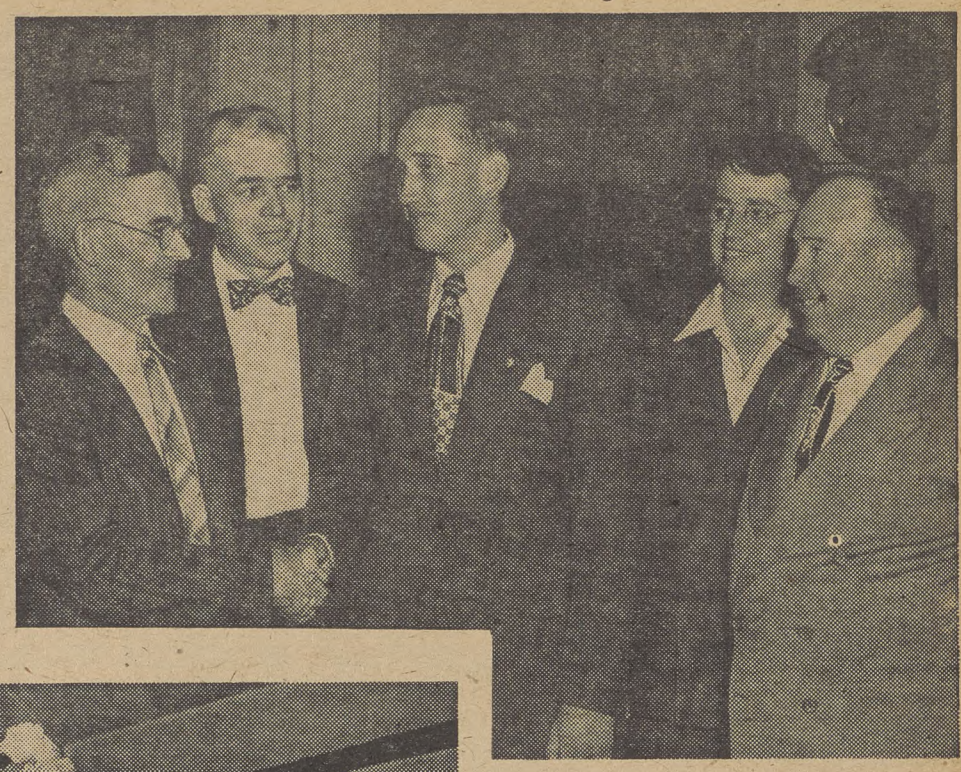
"Simultaneously, industries began to announce a new round of price increases, again using wage increases as the main excuse.

"But these wage increases no more necessitated price increases than did previous wage changes. The CIO has shown repeatedly, through its analysis of government figures, that the present all-time high profits could absorb wage increases and still leave ample profits.

INDUSTRY profits, now running at the rate of $20 billion a year, are being diverted from the center of public attention by false but repeated claims that wage boosts are the cause of high living costs, the CIO bulletin declared.

Prices are continuing their upward movement, the Outlook said, and they will bring "higher and higher profits" for industry.

CIO—Part of Community Life



The pictures on this page came from Minnesota, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Alabama. They show CIO members and their families in a wide range of activities, including health, sports, politics, and education. These activities reflect a healthy participation by CIO members in the life of their communities. They are typical of the many interests our members take in the American scene. They want the rest of the community to benefit from their union gains.

FIGHTING SPIRIT: These seven members of Local 125, CIO Auto Workers, were on strike four weeks at Durkee-Atwood Co., Minneapolis, when they answered the call of Local 2381, Steelworkers, Hibbing, Minn., for blood donations. The blood was needed to fill the blood bank depleted by transfusions given Robert Gessner, Local 2381 member. The donors are, l. to r.; Robert Dillon, Bert Swestby, John Gorski, John Barry, Pete Krystosek, Reuben Sontegard and Bernard Buchanan.

WINS CIO AWARD: Winner of the first $1200 scholarship awarded by the Greater Johnstown (Pa.) CIO Council, Joseph F. O'Kicki is being congratulated by Council Pres. Raymond E. McDermit. He was selected by a committee of three from a list of candidates—all of the 1948 class—submitted by the principals of nine high schools in the Johnstown area. Standing between McDermit and O'Kicki is Council Secy. Harry E. Hildebrand, while Vice Pres. Richard K. White and Secy.-Treas. Earl W. Graham beam their approval. The council plans to award scholarships every year to outstanding students in the Johnstown section.

BLOCKHEAD POINTS MORAL: As a reminder to other union members to register, these members of the CIO Textile Workers, Minneapolis, built Bessie Blockhead and then took her for a walk through the Loop section of their city. Fixing her up are, l. to r.; Marie Johnson, Lillian Owens, secretary-treasurer of the union's Twin Cities Joint Board, and Ann Vanusek. PAC hopes to defeat Sen. Joseph H. Ball (R., Minn.) this fall and replace him with liberal Hubert Humphrey, mayor of Minneapolis.

GIFT: Sister Rosana of Mobile (Ala.) Hospital receives from J. B. Schmidtt a receipt for an oxygen tent given by CIO Shipbuilding Workers, and others at Alabama Dry Dock. L. to r. Local 18 Pres. Roy A. Thorsby, Sister Rosana, John Sherlock, Addsco supervisor, W. M. Williams, Jr., head of the union's drive; Schmidtt; J. P. Keefe; IUMSWA Rep. Finn.

SALUTE DEMOCRACY: The Fort Wayne (Ind.) CIO Council entered this float in the Rededication Week parade. The week-long celebration preceded the arrival of the Freedom Train. During the week the council and the AFL joined in sponsoring a labor meeting when Rep. Ray Madden (D., Ind.) was the principal speaker.

Blast Plan To Raise G. I. Loan Rates

PROPOSAL of an increased interest rate for GI loans was branded last week by four officials of the American Veterans Committee as reneging on Government promises made to GI's and a boon to bankers at the expense of men and women veterans.

The charge was made in a two-page letter addressed to Carl Gray, Jr., in an analysis signed by Joseph A. Clorety, Jr., Acting National Chairman of AVC; Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., National Housing Chairman; Robert L. Carter, Director of Veterans Affairs, and Jerome H. Spingarn, National Counsel.

The letter-analysis shows that increase in the interest rate from 4% to 4½% yearly would increase the GI's monthly carrying charge on his home by about 4%, working a personal hardship and contributing to the general inflationary spiral.

Contrary to Gray's premise that lenders are not anxious to lend GI's money at only 4% interest, the AVC officials contend in their letter to Gray that "a spot check of a dozen bank and loan companies this morning revealed a great eagerness to invest in GI loans at 4% . . . anxious to place money at 4% with the triple security of the 100% Government guarantee, a young veteran's character and earning power, and a well-built, conservatively-estimated house and lot."

U.S. 'Must Stop' Slighting Disabled-Carey

LIFE is plenty tough for every American citizen these days.

But the people who have full use of their limbs, their sight, their hearing, their nervous systems—these folks are comparative well off.

For the physically handicapped—often rebuffed by industry, neglected by government—the business of living can be pretty grim.

Last week, at an enthusiastic convention in Washington, the American Federation of Physically Handicapped renewed its efforts to help some of the country's most deserving people.

They didn't ask for charity—or for tolerance. They're out to help themselves, and to make the government consider their special needs.

Some 200 delegates were present. Pres. Paul Strachan could see the applause and the cheers—but deafness prevented his hearing the ovations.

Vice-Pres. Bob Allen — news writer and a colonel under General Patton — emphasized the points in a fighting, angry speech with a waving "hook"—a substitute for the arm he lost in combat. Frank Shuber, chairman of AFPH's special fund, handles his own car, heads a family, works full-time as an accountant—but without use of his legs.

"WE have pointed out to the public the dramatic need to fill in many of the missing pieces in today's puzzle of rehabilitation and employment of the handicapped." Pres. Strachan said of the widely-publicized two-day meeting.

"We believe that in our bill, S. 2896, to establish a Federal Commission on Services for the Physically Handicapped, we have the answer," Strachan declared.

CIO—which has given full support to the Federation—was represented at the meeting by Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and by Frank Fernbach of the United Steelworkers.

Carey said that "organization" which brought gains for labor will bring similar improvements for the nation's 28 million physically handicapped citizens.

Three major groups in American industry are on the receiving end of discrimination—minorities, the aged and the handicapped, "is increasingly becoming a union concern."

"You, your families and friends must use your intelligence and united strength at the ballot box," Carey told the group. "And remember, it is not likely that the man who has voted against the aged, the homeless, those seeking education and adequate medical care, who will be the friend of the physically handicapped—no matter how loud his cries of friendship."

HOW serious the problem of the physically handicapped has become is clearly shown by the official figures.

Pres. Strachan pointed out that in 1946, some two million workers were totally or partially disabled—and 16,500 were killed. In 1947 the figure will be even higher.

Uncle Sam is being outstripped by many other nations in care of the disabled, Strachan said. He cited new social welfare programs in Britain, Turkey, Canada and Latin America.

"The time has come when this country must stop its niggardly method of dealing with the problems of its millions of disabled," he said.

The AFPH does not want a "were give-away" program. It wants rehabilitation in all possible cases, so that men and women can have a job.

FOR the seven million persons who are so severely disabled that they are completely unemployable and no means of livelihood, however, the government has a "direct obligation."

To reach that goal, the Federation is seeking support for four bills now before the Congress: S. 2896 to establish a federal commission on services for the handicapped; S. 2319, a census of the handicapped, so that the government and the people will know the size of the problem; HR 6525, a national cerebral palsy institute to help thousands of afflicted persons; and HR 6653, a national leprosy act.

"We shall have to contend with those soul-less corporations and their spokesmen whose chief interest is in profits and not in the welfare of human beings," Strachan declared.

THE lodge members who came to Washington showed clearly they had the spunk and strength to reach their goals.

A large number were visibly handicapped with orthopedic defects, or were blind or deaf. For the most part, they were working men and women. A professional photographer, who gets around very well on his crutches; a steel worker with one leg missing; a victim of cerebral palsy with the I. Q. of a genius, who had difficulty making notes because of poor control of her arms but who spoke convincingly through a microphone; and a man who has spent the past 31 years on a horizontal wheelchair.

The convention brought immediate results for at least one group of persons. A visitor from India, studying social welfare methods in this country, said that in India he had committed cerebral palsy cases to mental institutions. After watching people with similar handicaps handle themselves at the convention, he said:

"Upon my return, I shall rectify past mistakes."

And the delegates hope that American organizations and government will do the same thing for all the physically handicapped. It's about time they did.

AID FOR HANDICAPPED: Paul Strachan, head of the American Federation of the Physically Handicapped, angrily demands action in behalf of disabled citizens, during course of the Federation's meeting in Washington. Group is supporting federal aid bills and asking square deal for the handicapped.

Plenty For Pip Probe

Believe it or not—Uncle Sam spends far more each year for taking care of sick animals than for helping handicapped citizens.

Pres. Paul Strachan of the American Federation of Physically Handicapped told the group's convention:

"Current appropriations for the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture (amounting to $733,000,000) includes seeing why chickens have pip; why sheep are affected by gid; why pigs have cholera; why bugs bite trees and plants; and why cows have miscarriages.

"Appropriations for rehabilitation of human beings amounts to only $19 million."

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

Ralph W. Tillotson, CIO Sub-Regional Director in Erie, Pa., reports that the UAW-CIO won an NLRB election at the Valley Mfg. Co., New Castle, Pa. This company is a subsidiary of the Hudson Motor Car Corp.

The workers voted 343 for the UAW and 41 for an AFL Federal labor union. UAW Reperesentative Peters conducted the election drive. The UAW already has a 1400-member local in New Castle. Since this new plant is expected to increase its empolyment rolls to 1500, New Castle will become an outstanding CIO town.

Irwin L. DeShetler, CIO Regional Director in Los Angeles, reports that UAW Regional Director Cy O'Halloran has informed him of the following two victories in NLRB elections: Grayson Heat Control, Los Angeles, UAW-CIO 298, no union, 46; UAW Rep. Clarence Stinson was in charge; Lincoln-Mercury Plant, Los Angeles, UAW-CIO 904; no union 50; UAW Rep. Les Learned was in charge.

UAW CIO Reg. Dir. Paul E. Miley reports that the union won an NLRB election among the employes of the Harris Seybold Co., Cleveland, Ohio, by 327 votes to 253 for no union. UAW Intl. Rep. Stanley Kwiat was in charge and was ably assisted by the local union committee headed by Frank Kickel.

IMPORTANT ANNIVERSARY On August 25, 1927 the entire world waited with bated breath for an electrical circuit to be closed in the State of Massachusetts. This simple act started the flow of current that killed two heroic men of the people—Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti.

A year ago last week Pres. Philip Murray endorsed the presentation of a memorial bronze bas relief of Sacco and Vanzetti to Governor Bradford of Massachusetts for permanent installation in Boston Common. (The State refused to accept the offer.)

That fateful hour in 1927 held so much significance to the world because the workers and the little people knew that this murder was being committed to discourage them from doing anything that would better their conditions and wages.

Those who were committing the murder, the rulers of governments and the owners of factories and businesses, feared the reaction of the people to the current that killed these men.

Since 1920, when Sacco and Vanzetti were framed on a charge of murder during a payroll robbery, labor and liberals had united in a tireless fight to expose the frameup and free its victims. They delayed the end for seven long years. They proved the innocence of the prisoners. They found the guilty man, got his confession, and told the nation.

But these men were guilty of something else. They had urged workers to organize into unions. They had taken the message of labor into the union halls and out to the street corners. The rulers meant to see them punished for this crime. So Sacco and Vanzetti died.

Their cause lived on, and they became an inspiration and guide to all of us who continue in their footsteps and who fight yesterday, today and tomorrow for the cause of labor.

* * *

These men were not railroaded. Their execution was coldblooded and done with deliberation. Their innocence had been proved beyond any reasonable doubt but they died nevertheless. And labor has had martyrs since then. Many have been killed and many have gone to jail.

We don't want these martyrs. We can't prevent reactionary employers and politicians from framing our leaders and our more militant members. We can, if we act properly and quick enough, save them from being martyrs.

During the recent strike of the Packinghouse workers, three strikers were killed, 215 were maimed, 2,200 were victimized. 540 trials are yet to be held. 17 strikers are still in jail. We must not permit the same fear and hate on the part of the powerful special interests to make martyrs of these, our brothers and sisters.

The writer is Chairman of the United Packinghouse Workers CIO Relief Committee. Your local and national union are being asked to contribute to the defense of these workers. Twenty-eight years ago I contributed, with many other union members, to the defense of Sacco and Vanzetti. That frameup shows us how far these people will go. Stop them from making any new martyrs for labor. Contribute now and contribute to the fullest extent of your ability. Then we can win this no less important new fight.

CIO BACKS TRUMAN

We're for You, Mr. President: Pres. Harry S. Truman greets CIO Pres. Philip Murray at the White House after the CIO executive board decided by a vote of 35 to 12 to support Truman's candidacy for re-election. Murray was accompanied by other CIO leaders. On the front row, left, is CIO Secy-Treas. James B. Carey; rear row, left to right, Auto Workers' Secy-Treas. Emil Mazey, Textile Workers' Pres. Emil Rieve, and PAC Dir. Jack Kroll. (See Pages 2, 3, 8.)

Deweyites, Wallaceites, Dixiecrats Hit

THE CIO Executive Board, hailing Pres. Truman's "uniquely brave stand" on civil rights and other key issues, has voted to indorse him for reelection.

In approving Truman and his running mate, Sen. Alben W. Barkley (D., Ky.), by a 35 to 12 vote, the board rejected GOP candidate Thomas E. Dewey as the "candidate of Big Business"; assailed the "bigoted Dixiecrats" and denounced the Progressive Party as offering "nothing but division and defeat to really progressive Americans."

The executive board of CIO-PAC, meeting after the CIO board session, also indorsed Truman and Barkley.

After voting the Truman indorsement, the CIO board unanimously condemned "the denial of freedom of speech to Henry Wallace during the course of his present tour throughout the South."

THE Truman indorsement, excerpts from which are printed elsewhere on this page, came in the form of a recommendation from a meeting of Pres. Philip Murray, Secy.-treas. James B. Carey and the CIO vice presidents. Only Vice President Albert J. Fitzgerald, Electrical Workers, voted against. He is labor chairman for the Progressive Party.

This cartoon—one of three—was drawn for the Americans for Democratic Action by Al Capp, creator of Lil Abner.

In the Executive Board meet-Fitzgerald and these board members:

Julius Emspak, Electrical; Joseph Selly, Communications; Grant Oakes, Farm Equipment; J. F. Jurich, Fishermen; Donald Henderson, Food & Tobacco; Ben Gold, Fur; Morris Pizer, Furniture; Irving Dvornin, Marine Cooks; Reid Robinson, Mine, Mill; James Durkin, Office; Abram Flaxer, Public.

After the meeting, John W. Livingston, Auto Workers, told the CIO News that his union board had been polled on the question of indorsements. All UAW officers had checked on rank and file sentiment. The results of the UAW board poll: 19 for indorsing Truman; 1 undecided, no replies from 2.

In Detroit, the day before the CIO board meeting, UAW Pres. Walter Reuther announced plans to collect $1,000,000 to support candidates for public office who are favorable to labor and the vast bulk of the people.

Livingston attended the board meeting in place of Reuther, a CIO vice president, because the UAW chief's doctors had refused to allow him to leave Detroit. Reuther is recovering from a wound suffered last winter when a would-be assassin shot him.

PRES. Murray, Carey and Dir. of Organization Allan S. Haywood wired the following to Reuther:

"The CIO Executive Board sends you its hearty congratulations on this your 41st birthday. At the same time, we express our commendation for the brave fight you are making in recovery from the dastardly and cowardly attempt on your life. Our best wishes and prayers are with you."

* * *

ALMOST simultaneously with the CIO's o. k. of Truman, the Americans for Democratic Action "emphatically" indorsed the President.

The previous week, the American Federation of Labor, though it took no formal indorsement, set up an organization to promote Truman's candidacy. The AFL Garment Workers' Union and New York Liberal Party formally added their indorsements.

A number of other unions were to take action in the next few days. The New York newspaper Star (formerly PM) also backed Truman.

IT appears that even the Republicans are ashamed of the record of their 80th Congress. Sen. Irving (R., N. Y.), close confidant of Gov. Dewey, announced:

"Dewey will unfold his own program as his campaign goes on. Before it is over, it is my judgment that most of the candidates for Congress will be running on the position he takes on major issues, and not on Congress' record."

* * *

So, get the dollar to PAC.

5th Columns

In Chicago, a Midlands Conference of 13 Democratic candidates for governor and Senator from eight states declared that if a depression should occur and expose this country to Communist pressure, the "fifth column" aiding the enemy would be "Republican-created."

"They (the fifth columns) will be the slums the Republicans failed to clear, the soil of the farmer they failed to conserve, the social security they failed to extend, the federal aid to states they withheld, the aid to education they denied, the savings they failed to safeguard—and the whole range of social and economic abuses they failed to remove by state or Federal action."

'In Light Of These Plain Facts . . . .'

Recommendations of the CIO Executive Board concerning political action in the 1948 campaign:

The CIO has consistently fought for a constructive program to meet the needs of labor and the nation. This program does not serve the interest of labor alone but that of every section of our people.

Objectives are the establishment of an enduring peace; the maintenance of a domestic economy which will guarantee full employment, good health and adequate social security; and the strengthening of the basis of our democracy to assure full political and civil equality and equal economic and cultural opportunities for all men and women in our country of every race, creed or color.

This program commands the support not of labor alone but of all progressive Americans. Our program has met with bitter opposition from the forces of privilege and reaction. These are the same forces whose purpose it is to wipe out the program of social legislation which we proudly call the New Deal.

These reactionary forces dominated the 80th Congress. A coalition of do-nothing Republicans and bigoted Dixiecrats has steadfastly adhered to the philosophy of the Natl. Association of Manufacturers.

THE Congress contributed to rather than checked inflation. Adequate housing for those who need it was not provided. The Republican leadership of the Congress acquiesced in the filibuster against civil rights conducted by Southern Democrats.

The iniquitous Taft-Hartley Law was enacted and then retained on the books despite the experience of the last year proving, without doubt, that it has brought chaos into industrial relations.

THE record of failure on the part of this Congress is plain and evident. Instead of action to protect the interests of the American people, the Congress is providing a circus in the form of the so-called "spy investigation" currently in progress.

The CIO has no brief for anyone who engages in espionage against our country in the interests of a foreign power. Persons charged with such violations of our laws can be brought to justice. They are entitled to be tried and make their defense in the American way before a judge and jury and not be subjected to an inquisition before an irresponsible committee of the Congress.

UNLESS the trend, apparent in the 80th Congress, is sharply reversed, a serious economic dislocation in our country is threatened and the peace of the world thereby jeopardized.

The record of the 80th Congress has brought sharply home to labor the necessity for effective political action in the 1948 campaign.

The political activity of CIO must and will be continued on an independent and non-partisan basis, giving support to the progressive forces in both major parties.

Last January, the Executive Board of the CIO, after full debate and by democratic processes, rejected by a decisive vote any Third Party at this time.

BOTH major political parties have recently concluded their conventions. We have carefully examined their platforms.

The Democratic platform pledges the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law. The Republican Party, which was chiefly responsible for this law, praises Congress for enacting this evil statute.

The Democratic platform speaks forthrightly for restoration of price controls and other action to halt inflation. The Republican platform is replete with double talk which has no meaning.

The Democratic platform supports the enactment of a comprehensive housing program. The Republican platform, expressing the views of the real estate lobby, relies upon the false assurance that private enterprise can provide low-cost housing.

On other important issues, the Democratic platform parallels the CIO's program. It favors the extension of the Social Security program; the raising of the minimum wage; enactment of a national health program; an equitable tax law; proper support of TVA; federal aid to education; continuation of rent control; and the restoration of the power and prestige of the Department of Labor. On all these subjects the Republican platform is silent or in opposition.

These are the facts. Our members and the people of the nation are entitled to know these facts. We will not permit any Taft-Hartley Law to stand in our way.

We know that the people seek, and that they are entitled to have in all branches of our government representatives who will work unceasingly for the people and not for the special interests, for control of prices, for reduction of the cost of living, for construction of housing, for repeal of T-H, for expansion of social security, for adequate health and educational facilities, for the guarantee and protection of civil rights for all groups, for our economic stability which is essential for the peace of the world.

IN conformity with our tradition, we shall measure all candidates in both major political parties by their record of support or opposition to this program. Indorsements of candidates for senatorial and congressional seats, and for state, county, and city offices will be made locally through our PAC groups.

Upon the Executive Board of the CIO, however, rests the duty of making known indorsement of the CIO on the candidates for the Presidency.

We are conscious of the fact that candidates are committed to the platforms of their parties. The Democratic platform is one that can command our enthusiastic approval. The Republican platform condemns itself.

Pres. Truman stands for and has voiced in large measure the objectives of the program to which we are pledged. With high courage and with great devotion to principles he has carried on the fight to guarantee to all of our citizens the rights granted to them by the Constitution regardless of their color or creed.

Truman's Civil Rights Program will deservedly rank in our history with Pres. Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation as a charter for human dignity and freedom. The CIO supports the President's Civil Rights Program. We commend him on his refusal to compromise on this program. Truman has braved the wrath of bigots in his own party to prove his devotion to the cause of civil rights and free opportunity for all. For this uniquely brave stand he deserves and is entitled to receive our support in this campaign.

Truman vetoed T-H. He has sought to restore effective price controls. He has pleaded for sound and far-seeing housing legislation. He has called for extension and improvement of our social security structure. He has vetoed measures enacted by the Congress taking away much-needed social security benefits from hundreds of thousands of American workers.

On the other hand, Gov. Dewey is committed to his own party's special interest platform. He is the candidate of Big Business.

In light of these plain facts, and in view of the record, the CIO indorses Harry S. Truman for President.

PAC—The Better 'Ole

The whole issue of political action was thoroughly discussed in three items posted on the bulletin board of the Wayne university associate unit of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

Members of the unit posted a tear sheet from the Michigan CIO News showing the voting record of Michigan Congressmen.

The next day a notice appeared under it protesting against alleged "biased and partisan" material on the board.

The following day this notice appeared:

"There will be a meeting of the ostriches at 8 p. m. Bring your own hole."—From Guild Reporter.

CIO INDORSES TRUMAN, BARKLEY

THE CIO Executive Board, meeting for three days last week in Washington, made a number of major decisions. They include:

• An indorsement of the Democratic nominees, Pres. Harry S. Truman and Sen. Alben W. Barkley (Ky.). The vote was 35 to 12.

• A pledge of its "honor to the great and humane endeavor" known as the Southern Organizing Drive—Operation Dixie. Unanimous vote.

• A broad program designed to beat inflation, assailing Congress' failure to attack this issue properly. Unanimous vote.

• Adopted a broad legislative program for the American people, commenting that "we have demonstrated our effectiveness at political action before. We must, and we will demonstrate it again." Unanimous vote.

The board meeting was preceded by a meeting of the president, secretary and vice presidents of the CIO. All the actions of the board came as a result of recommendations made by the officers.

Following the CIO board meeting, the executive board of the CIO Political Action Committee met and formulated plans for the coming campaign.

Excerpts from Executive Board texts are on this page and on pages 2, 8 and 9.

The CIO Repeats:

Wallaceites Trying To Beat Liberals

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

C. B. BALDWIN, Henry A. Wallace's campaign manager, has accused the CIO of being "false and reckless" in charging that Wallace's Progressive Party is bent on defeating liberal Congressmen.

Last week, the CIO Political Action Committee collected facts which speak for themselves on just who is being "false and reckless."

Baldwin had declared that of 56 Congressmen whom the CIO News rates as 80% liberal or better, "there will be few whom we will oppose."

Well, take California, for example. There, the Democrats have a number of outstanding liberals in their ranks. Two such are Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas and Rep. Chet Holifield. Baldwin says in a publicity release that California is "another example of accommodations being made by the Progressives to secure unity. Rating 12 Democratic Congressmen in California liberal, the Independent Progressive Party invited all of them to cross-file on the IPP line, although several of them differed with the Progressives on various issues, notably the Marshal Plan."

"Mrs. Douglas and Holifield refused to cross-file and the Progressives filed candidates to protect their place on the ballot," Baldwin declared.

(In Pennsylvania, the Progressives did not seem so worried about "protecting their place on the ballot." In the 33d (Pittsburgh) District last week Thomas Fitzpatrick, an official of the CIO Electrical Workers, withdrew as Wallaceite candidate against liberal Rep. Thomas Buchanan (D.). A day or so later, the Gallup Poll showed that Wallace would get only about 3% of Pennsylvania's vote, which may or may not have been a coincidence.)

Mrs. Douglas is opposed by Progressive Sidney Moore and Republican W. Wallace Braden. In 1946, she won by about 9000 votes.

Holifield has as his opponents GOP J. F. Quigley and Progressive Jacob Berman. In 1946, Holifield had both GOP and Democratic nominations.

OTHER California liberals who have Progressive opposition are Richard Welch (R.), opposed by Charles R. Garry; Frank Havenner (D.), by Francis McTernan (in 1946, Havenner won by about 6000 votes); George P. Miller (D.); and Harry Sheppard (D.).

In the 23d District, the incumbent, Charles Fletcher (R.) has been blamed for —and boasts about it—the wrecking of effective rent control. Political observers felt that Fletcher's Democratic opponent, Clinton MacKinnon, had a fair chance of winning. MacKinnon is not rated completely liberal, but has pledged himself to fight for effective rent control and other benefits. Yet, the Progressives have entered Harry Steinmetz. They do not explain why they failed to enter a candidate in the 22d, where Rep. John Phillips (R.) is seeking reelection, running on an extremely "wrong" voting record.

In California, it is interesting to note that the founders of the IPP stated that one of the major factors in the formation of their party was the California law which allows cross-filing, thus enabling a man to win both major nominations. In the past—and this year, too—this has benefitted both parties (King and Welch, for instance, won both nominations). But, despite that stated reason, the Progressives have at least three instances of cross-filing.

(Also, Baldwin states: "In eight California districts Republicans won both the Republican and Democratic nominations and that without Progressive candidates in the field, voters in those districts would now be denied even the choice between Republican Tweedledum and Democratic Tweedledee."

(Well, how does that shape up with the fact that Rep. King won both nominations and yet has a Progressive opponent? And with Welch? Don't try to tell us, Beanie, that King is Tweedledum and Welch is Tweedledee.)

THEN, there is New York—where the Progressives admittedly have their greatest strength. Under the banner of the American Labor Party—from which most CIO unions have disaffiliated—the Wallaceites have two ALP members of Congress—Vito Marcantonio and Leo Isacson.

"In New York," the Baldwin release said, "the Wallace forces had endorsed six Democratic Congressmen."

(Baldwin is slightly mixed up. ALP has indorsed four, not six—Democratic incumbents. He apparently is referring to ALP indorsements of Reps. John Delaney, Emanuel Celler, Arthur Klein and Adam Powell and to ALP indorsements of would-be Congressmen Paul O'Dwyer and George Rogers.)

But—and this is a big BUT—the Progressives have entered candidates and in some Congressional races have made the election of reactionaries almost certain against such liberals as (all Democratic except Javits):

Eugene Keough (by Murray Rosof); Andrew Somers (by Mrs. Ada Jackson); Daniel O'Toole (by James Chiesi); Abraham Multer (by Lee Pressman); Sol Bloom (by Eugene Connolly); Jacob Javits (by Paul O'Dwyer); Walter Lynch (by Len Strauss); Charles Buckley (by Albert Kahn).

And, even where a liberal Democrat has a fair chance of nosing out a conservative Republican, the ALP has entered candidates. Take the 26th District as an example. There, the incumbent is David Potts (R.) whose record is consistent with that of most Republicans in the 80th Congress. The Democratic candidate is Christopher McGrath, whose record as a judge has been so liberal that the Republicans have tried to smear him by calling him the "red judge." But, a Wallaceite, Nicholas Cairns, is opposing him.

THE Baldwin release had nary a mention of Illinois, where the Progressives are opposing such tried and true Democratic liberals as Paul Douglas, who is trying to unseat Col. Robert R. McCormick's man, Sen. C. Wayland Brooks (R.), and Adlai Stevenson, who is up against incumbent Gov. Dwight Green, keynoters of the Republican convention.

Douglas' bid is being opposed by Progressive Curtis McDougall and Stevenson's by Grant Oakes. The candidacy of Oakes, president of the CIO Farm Equipment Workers, has been repudiated by the State CIO and PAC, who are backing Stevenson and Douglas.

And, there are situations in other states:

IDAHO: Here, in the home state of Wallace's running mate, Sen. Glen Taylor, there are two typical 80th Congressers named Goff and Sanborn, Republicans. Yet, the third party has entered candidates, imperilling the chance of Democrats to unseat these men. The Progressives are Tom Wood and C. D. Dill.

The same situation exists in the Senatorial race, where Sen. Henry Dworshak (R.) is opposed by Democratic Bert E. Miller—and, of course, by a Progressive, John Derr.

MARYLAND: Last year, CIO Pres. Philip Murray made a test of the Taft-Hartley law—subsequently won in the Supreme Court—by ordering the CIO News to print an indorsement of Democratic Candidate Edward Garmatz in a by-election. This year, a Progressive, Edward Kolinski, is opposing Garmatz.

MISSOURI: John D. Sullivan, outstanding liberal who fell in the 1946 Republican landslide, is attempting a comeback. Yet, the Progressives are in there with Margaret Bush.

MICHIGAN: The Progressives here have invaded the Democratic primary to oppose Congressman John Lesinski, whose performance is perfect in the CIO News Voting Record. Opponent: Stanley Nowak.

NEW JERSEY: Here again, Baldwin's gets kind of fuzzy in his release. He says that "the CIO is running trade union leaders in district where there is no liberal candidate and, in the two districts where friends of labor are running, was supporting Mrs. Mary Norton and Edward J. Hart."

That just isn't so, Bro. Baldwin.

No. 1, the CIO is NOT running any trade union leaders in any of New Jersey's 16 districts.

No. 2, it has not yet indorsed either Mrs. Norton or Rep. Hart. The only labor leader it may indorse is Democratic George C. Miller, a rail brotherhood man who is opposing Rep. Charles A. Eaton (R.) in the 5th.

Two union members who are running on the Progressive ticket— Philip Van Gelder and Addie L. Weber, will NOT receive CIO or PAC support.

OREGON: Mrs. Evans Carlson, Progressive, has been entered in the race against incumbent Rep. Homer Angell (R.)—who incidentally voted to uphold Pres. Truman's veto of Taft-Hartley—and Democratic Roland Bartlett.

PENNSYLVANIA Progressive Thomas Fitzpatrick has withdrawn against Buchanan, but there has been no withdrawal of Wallaceite Joseph Rainey, a latter day public advocate of liberality, in the 4th, where young liberal lawyer Earl Chudoff, who has a good record in the State Legislature, is trying to unseat Franklin Maloney, who has slavishly followed the GOP line in the 80th. This is a close district.

Nor has there been any withdrawal of one Philip Stern, Progressive, in the 5th, where William Green, Jr., who had a perfect labor voting record in the 79th Congress, is trying to unseat Rep. George Sarbacher, Jr., (R.), youngest member of the 80th, who voted as wrong as the oldest Republican member.

NORTH CAROLINA: The CIO helped J. M. Broughton win the Democratic nomination for U. S. Senator from incumbent William Umstead. But, the Progressives have put up W. T. Brown.

And so it goes.

CIO Rides Freedom Train To Get Out Registration

By GLORIA CAPLAN

ARRIVAL of the Freedom Train in Port Huron, Mich., meant something more than a sightseeing trip for union members in St. Clair county. It resulted in the highest registration for the primary elections ever chalked up in the county.

As the train headed toward their area, the St. Clair County CIO, AFL and employers got together and formed a joint labor-management committee to promote the pilgrimage to the freedom document-bearing visitor.

And then the CIO, itself engaged in a register-vote campaign, got a bright idea. What better way, it figured, to demonstrate democracy in action than to combine the Freedom Train's visit with the registration drive?

So under the auspices of the joint committee, 10,000 questionnaire cards were distributed in the plants. They contained four queries:

1. I accept the Freedom Pledge. Yes..... No.....
2. I am a registered voter. Yes..... No.....
3. I am not a registered voter, but will register. Yes..... No.....
4. I will vote for the candidate of my choice in the coming election. Yes..... No.....

Of the 8,000 cards returned to the St. Clair CIO office, about 30% were from persons who had not registered but promised to do so.

THEY must have kept their promise, for when registration booths closed Aug. 25, about 95% of the county's eligible voters had registered, St. Clair County CIO Council Pres. Charles Harris reported.

To Harris the success of the Freedom Day campaign was good news for two reasons. It indicated more active participation in self-government, especially on the part of the 10,000 CIO members in the county. And it boosted the CIO Council's hopes of defeating Rep. Jesse Wolcott in the Republican primary on Sept. 14.

As chairman of the House Banking & Currency committee Wolcott engineered the defeat of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill, battled efforts to obtain price control legislation.

FOR the first time in his 18-year Congressional career, Wolcott has serious opposition in the primary this year. His opponent, Thomas Woods, a political science teacher at the Port Huron Teachers College, has served eight years on the City Commission and eight years on the County Board of Supervisors. In his campaign he is hitting Wolcott where it hurts most—the Congressman's record on housing and price control.

A staunch TEW and price control advocate, Woods has the endorsement of the St. Clair County CIO.

The CIO council knows it has an uphill fight. About one-fourth the potential voters in St. Clair county are CIO members—Auto, Paper, Rubber, Chemical and Utility workers. But St. Clair is only one of the seven counties in Wolcott's district.

THEY SLIP UP ON YOU

You know how it is when you work in a store. Every once in a while you take inventory—find out where you are, what you've got, where you've been, where you may be going.

Today—the 66th anniversary of the nation's first Labor Day celebration—seems like a good time for labor to check up on itself.

First, let's accentuate the positive.

The average American worker is a lot better off than was his counterpart back on Sept. 6, 1882, when a group of unionists paraded up New York's Broadway to Union Square in the country's first Labor Day celebration.

Yes, a lot better off!

And the conditions under which he works and lives are much better than those found in any other nation in the world.

The good things which came to American workers didn't arrive overnight. They weren't handed out on a silver platter.

There was careful planning . . . and bloodshed . . . and sweat . . . and luck. . . and sacrifice . . . and fierce determination in the struggle to improve the American standard of living.

Men were beaten with clubs and blackjacks and other men were shot to death in the founding and building of the labor movement.

Men were blacklisted and evicted and starved in the battle to establish collective bargaining firmly on the American scene.

Despite the hardships and the heartaches, labor moved forward—slowly, gradually. The pace of its progress speeded considerably during the late 30's and the war years. And then—

ENACT LAWS TO HINDER UNIONS

A concerted campaign to curb trade unions was launched almost before the shooting in the Pacific had stopped. It moved quietly at first, then noisily and recklessly—and there's no indication that those waging the campaign will halt it of their own volition.

The old, old practice of hiring armed thugs and goons to work over those who got enthusiastic about unionism was largely abandoned and a new practice instituted.

The new practice was known as legislative union busting.

How far has it gone?

Congress enacted the Taft-Hartley Act. Thirty-six state legislatures passed anti-union measures. There are many indications new "teeth" will be put in these laws if additional anti-labor lawmakers are elected in November.

And American workers, while fighting to stave off Taft-Hartleyism, were subjected to a high prices squeeze that has hurt millions.

NEW TREND FRIGHTENING

Bit by bit—here and there—anti-labor forces have been chopping away steadily at unionism and at the very foundations of democracy and real free enterprise. The trend as a whole is much more frightening than any of its individual parts.

Industry, now more powerful than ever before, has a loaded gun aimed at the trade union movement. The trigger hasn't been pulled yet, but who knows what may happen the minute there's a surplus of workers and products workers produce?

And what follows inflation?

And can democracy long endure if civil rights continue to be trampled?

And what happens to competitive enterprise if the trend toward monopoly continues to eliminate competition?

Things that are bad—like things that are good—slip up on you and change your life almost before you know it.

How about taking an inventory of yourself and your union today?

CIO Takes Political Stand

Executive Board Indorsed Truman In Four-Sided Presidential Campaign

By ALLAN L. SWIM

DRAW up a chair, neighbor, while we tell you about one of the darndest political set-ups you've heard about in years.

In many respects it's as cock-eyed as a well-soused bar-fly and as entertaining as a four-ring circus.

It's likely to turn into a noisy, verbal slugfest with Truman and Dewey shooting strong words at each other—and with Wallace and Thurmond yelling at the top of their lungs on the sidelines.

On the surface it may appear to be just another political show with a couple of new elements added.

But underneath will be a deadly serious struggle for power in a campaign that may bring about new and desirable political alignments.

LET'S start with Henry A. Wallace, the Iowa dreamer who has been unjustly accused by the Republicans of plowing under every third pig—or something like that.

Wallace bolted the Republican Party a number of years ago, pledged undying loyalty to the Democrats, bolted the Democratic Party and became major domo of the Progressives.

In his bumbling way he's campaigning on the illusion that the European Recovery Program is a bad thing and that he's making a contribution to liberalism.

Actually he's helping to entrench the reaction which he professes to hate.

He and his colleagues aren't going to win friends and influence votes among those who believe in Taft-Hartleyism and follow the NAM line.

But they may cut the ground from under a number of liberal, pro-labor candidates.

NEXT there's Thomas E. Dewey, the bemoustached ex-gang-buster who makes beautiful radio speeches and wonderful political deals.

He's the fellow who was going to beat Roosevelt by out-New-Dealing the New Deal. Remember?

Ah, it was some campaign! Dewey was the polite statesman who was going to do everything that Roosevelt did but do it better.

Then, suddenly, he abandoned this line and started heaving mud—some of the dirtiest mud thrown in many years in a presidential campaign.

Now Dewey's back with a new theme song, "Communism vs. Republicanism," but the record of the GOP-controlled 80th Congress is going to force him to sing it to sour notes.

We can put Dewey in the proper category by saying he's the standard-bearer of the boys who have been kicking organized labor in the molars since they gained control of our legislative machinery.

STROM THURMOND is important largely because he heads the Dixiecrats—a group that opposes Truman because of his civil rights program.

He's the chief tub-thumper for the Southerners who in the past voted the Democratic ticket at home to elect men who voted like Republicans when they got to Washington.

Among his chief followers are those who preach race prejudice and the industrialists who have broken most of the laws of human decency in their fight against the CIO in the South.

Thurmond and his running-mate, Gov. Fielding Wright of Mississippi, aren't out to win anything; they're out to defeat Truman.

THEN we have the former haberdasher from Missouri — the little guy who keeps bouncing back after the "experts" count him out.

He's running on a Democratic platform that closely parallels the CIO's program for social and economic progress.

No President since Lincoln has taken a more firm stand on civil rights than has Harry S. Truman. On this issue he split the Democratic Party wide open and, perhaps, opened the way for a realignment of liberal forces under the Democratic banner.

At the recent special session of Congress he proposed a legislative program that might well have been written at CIO headquarters.

He vetoed the Taft-Hartley Act, the "spare the rich" tax measure and a number of other bills to which labor objected.

His fight has been largely against the forces which seek to curb the activities of trade unions.

THE CIO Executive Board last week voted 35 to 12 to indorse the candidacy of President Truman.

It did so because most Board members felt that Truman is waging an honest battle for the things for which the CIO stands.

His forthright position on civil liberties, his fight for inflation controls and his opposition to the Taft-Hartley Act counted heavily in his favor.

And the Board majority felt, too, that support for Truman would be a potent factor in the CIO's drive to change the complexion of Congress.

Hoffman Hails Labor's Support of ERP

Economic Cooperation Administrator Paul G. Hoffman has declared that "since the beginning of the European Recovery Program no group in the United States has given it more wholehearted support, has worked harder for it, or understood it better than the labor organizations of America."

Hoffman expressed these sentiments in a letter to Clinton S. Golden and Bert M. Jewell, ECA labor advisers. Golden represents the CIO and Jewell the AFL. Hoffman wrote:

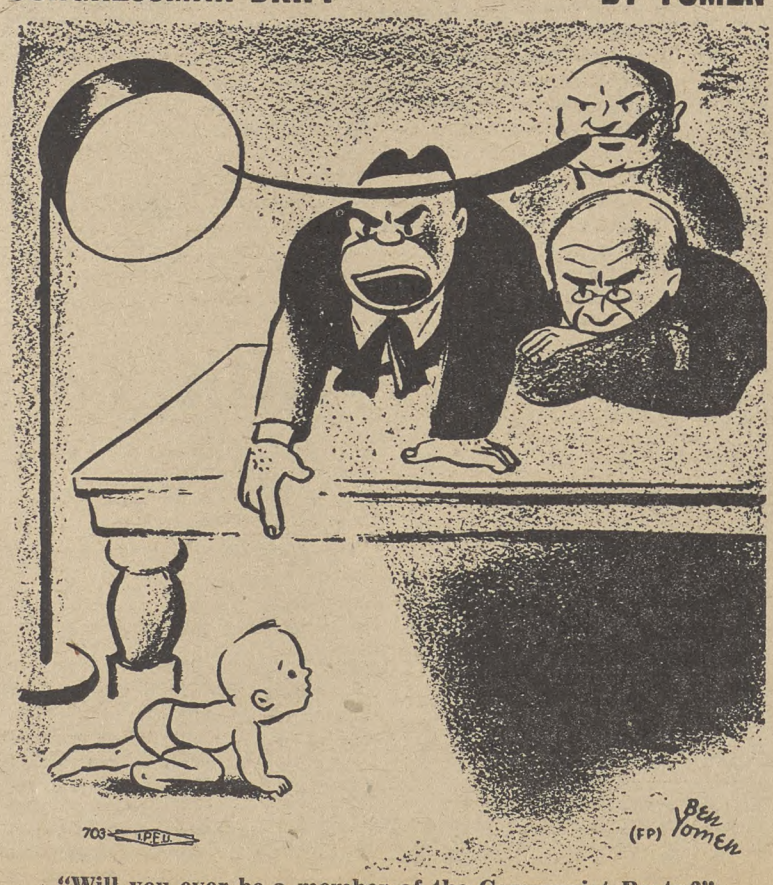
On the occasion of Labor Day, it appears to us appropriate to state again the part labor, at home and abroad, can play in the European Recovery Program. The establishment of labor divisions in both the Washington and Paris offices of ECA signifies, we believe, the importance of labor in the present crucial task of aiding in European recovery.

We can say that since the beginning of the European Recovery Program no group in the United States has given it more wholehearted support, has worked harder for it, or understood it better than labor organizations of America. What we have to do now is to set our sights higher. We must join in the mutual objective of recovery—not just recovery to an old standard, but a forward movement, a revitalization of the life of the free peoples of Europe with higher objectives than ever.

All organizations can play a great part in the European Recovery Program — farmers, businessmen, scientists and educators. In all these groups, the international labor movement can be of great assistance. It has been your tradition to step across state and country boundaries in your search for ways in which the standards and living conditions of labor can be improved.

America has offered aid under a four-year program. The time is short. The urgency is great. Our aim is for America to get out of extending extraordinary outside assistance at the end of the four-year term.

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP — BY YOMEN



"Will you ever be a member of the Communist Party?"

He Had A Dream That Came True

DREAMS, those flimsy things upon which empires, great enterprises and dismal failures are built, sometimes come true.

Take, for example, the dream of the New Yorker who was forced to quit school at the age of 12 and go to work in a drygoods store.

He had a vision of a great nation paying open tribute to those who toiled with their hands.

He had the energy and the courage to turn the vision into a reality, but he did not live long enough to witness really widespread acceptance of the idea he was promoting.

THERE are many stories—both true and false—about this dreamer, to whom America pays annual tribute.

One of the false but oft-repeated ones is that he was an immigrant who came to the U. S. as a boy, made a bit of a name for himself in the union movement, was forgotten by all but a few and then died in misery and poverty.

Actually he was born in New York City and he was an active and well-known union organizer at the time of his death.

One of the rather amazing—and true—stories about him reveals that he spoke to workers' meetings in every state of the Union and in several Canadian provinces. He made more than 2,000 union speeches.

THE man who dreamed of a greatly improved way of life for working people didn't have an easy life for himself.

He became a full-time jobholder at the age when modern youngsters join the Boy Scouts.

Before long he became an apprentice carpenter, learning his trade at nights at Cooper Institute after his day's work in a drygoods store was done.

At the age of 20 he joined a local union—and soon became convinced that what working men needed was a union of local unions. To this end he began working.

In 1881, while living in St. Louis, he started operating a four-page journal which advocated consolidation of the various scattered groups of organized carpenters.

Three months after the journal was established the Brotherhood of Carpenters was formed at Chicago. The dreamer served for 20 years as its general secretary.

THE Big Dream of the dreamer was that the nation should set aside one day each year on which to pay tribute to labor.

He proposed such a holiday in May 1882 during a meeting of the Central Labor Union of New York City.

Four months later—on the first Monday of September—a group of unionists paraded down Broadway to Union Square and then went to a park for picnics and speechmaking.

This was the country's first Labor Day celebration.

Later Congress and every state Legislature in the country enacted laws making Labor Day a legal holiday.

THE dreamer died in Philadelphia in 1906 at the age of 54 but he will remembered as long as there is a labor movement in this nation.

Some will think of him as the founder of the Carpenters' Brotherhood. Some will think of him as an officer of the AFL.

But he will be remembered best as the founder of Labor Day—the man who saw his Big Dream come true.

Many men have used many words to pay tribute to Peter J. McGuire, the "daddy" of Labor Day.

One of the best-known tributes came from a labor speaker in St. Louis, who declared:

"If there is a closed shop in Heaven, Peter J. McGuire organized it."

Carey: 'We've Got The Reds On The Run'

Here are pertinent excerpts from an article, "We've Got the Reds on the Run," written by CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey and appearing in the current issue of The American Magazine:

The big news on the labor front—at home and abroad—is that the Communists are on the run.

In this country democratic trade unionists have given the party-liners a vigorous heave-ho.

Walter Reuther has routed the Communists in the million-member United Auto Workers. Joe Curran has smashed their long-time control of the strategically important National Maritime Union. Mike Quill has trounced them in the Transport Workers. In the national CIO office a thorough house cleaning has recently been completed.

In Europe, the democrats have turned back the totalitarian assault on the World Federation of Trade Unions.

* * *

The Communists went into every meeting with prearranged plans and a tight caucus—a "fraction," in their esoteric parlance. And they always attended meetings, arrived early and stayed late, whereas the average unionist was more interested in bending an elbow or taking the missus to the movies.

If any hardy soul dared challenge their political wisdom, he was denounced as a Red-baiter, a tool of the bosses, and a traitor.

The average union member had to learn about these tactics the hard way. So did I. My years in the United Electrical Workers, which I headed from its origins in 1933 until 1941, provides a case history of successful Communist infiltration.

We got along well enough until the Nazi-Soviet pact in 1939. Then my leftist associates laid off Hitler and started ranting about the imperialist war. Not understanding the dialectical profundities, I didn't change my line—and I suddenly found myself isolated in my own union.

For two years I fought back, but my improvisations were no match for the Communists' machine. Yet the comrades bore no grudges; at the 1941 convention I twice had to reject Communist offers of support in my re-election campaign, in return for future good behavior. After my refusal I ran anyway, and was defeated in a close race.

By tactics such as these the Communists fastened their pincers on many another international union and on innumerable regional CIO councils. But today the totalitarian wave has been reversed.

In short, democrats must be as vigorous and tough-minded as the Communists. And democrats can achieve this military stance without sacrifice of principle.

* * *

AS welcome as these developments has been the eclipse of fellow-traveling influence in national CIO headquarters. For years, Len De Caux, editor of the official CIO paper, and Lee Pressman, chief counsel—together with their underlings—composed a dangerous listening post within CIO headquarters. During the course of the CIO's fight to extend democracy, De Caux, Pressman, and their associates all resigned.

The Communists in the city and state councils are now in full retreat.

Considerable success can also be reported in the fight against Communist domination of the world councils of labor.

This was the situation: The WFTU had been organized in the winter of 1945 to provide a common meeting place for the trade unions of the world—a sort of labor U.N. But the WFTU fell on evil days once the East-West rupture appeared.

I flew to the Paris meeting of the executive bureau to present CIO policies in support of the ERP over the objection of the Communists.

The Communist press launched an all-out campaign of vilification against CIO leaders supporting ERP.

I flew to Moscow with Michael Ross, CIO international affairs director, for a session with Vasili Kuznetsov, head of the Soviet unions. I was in no mood for diplomatic niceties. In effect, I warned that either he called off his dogs in the WFTU or we would get out.

Kuznetsov issued a formal statement agreeing that the unions of each country were wholly autonomous and could take whatever position they favored on ERP. Round one for our side.

Round two came when delegates from federations in the 16 Marshall Plan countries conferred in London in March. Both the AFL and CIO were represented.

Round three: Rome in May, the long-postponed executive meeting of WFTU. I stated flatly that the CIO would pull out unless the administration were overhauled, and all attacks on our organization and our ERP policies stopped.

When the sessions were over, we had what we wanted: The Communist attacks would cease.

Kroll:

Get Out The Vote

CIO-PAC Director Jack Kroll took the occasion of Labor Day to call on "every political action committee on every level . . . to bend the utmost effort to recruit additional blockworkers and to assure a maximum registration and vote." Partial text of message:

In less than two months the people of America will go to the polls to select a President, a Congress and state and local officials who will guide our destiny for the next few years.

On this Labor Day, 1948, we find ourselves a nation strong with the power of a victor in a mighty war, yet we are fearful of the future. We find ourselves a nation equipped with the mightiest productive machine ever devised by any group of people, yet many of our people are without the means to buy the products of that machinery and the number is growing steadily larger.

We find ourselves a nation in which organized labor is at the peak of its capacity to contribute to our nation's welfare, yet organized labor is subjected to an increasing number of attacks from giant industrial corporations and the legislative branch of our government itself. We find ourselves a nation which has spent much of its blood and treasure to preserve the democratic faith, yet a nation in which the application of that democratic faith is sometimes weak and faltering.

THESE are the problems with which the men the voters select on November 2 will have to deal. These are the problems they will have to solve if we are to justify and hold our place as the mightiest nation in the world.

Specifically, on this Labor Day of 1948 we find prices nearly double those of 10 years ago while profits are running at the fantastic rate of $20,000,000,000 a year.

We find the need for 10,000,000 dwelling units to house our people in decency virtually untouched.

We find a Taft-Hartley Act on the national statute books and little Taft-Hartley Acts in 23 states of the union.

We find an 80th Congress that cynically and ruthlessly ignores our headlong plunge toward another depression.

The CIO-PAC has faith in the wisdom of the people. We are confident that if they go to the polls they will exercise sound judgement.

We, therefore, urge on this Labor Day of 1948 that every political action committee on every level —local, county, congressional district and state—bend the utmost effort to recruit additional blockworkers and to assure a maximum registration and vote. We urge every blockworker and every precinct worker to spare no effort to make sure that every person on every block goes to the polls on election day.

The choice we make on November 2, 1948, will determine whether America will fulfill her promise of security, peace and progress for us all.

HAIL LABOR DAY: CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll, left, and CIO Pres. Philip Murray check their Labor Day statements before issuing them to the press.

Catholics Say:

Year of Taft-Hartley Shows Law 'Not Constructive'

THE Social Action Dept. of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, in its Labor Day statement, called for the repeal "of the cumbersome and obstructive provisions of the T-H Act," declaring that the labor movement is setting its own house in order. The statement said in part:

There is reason to believe, too, that these defects, e.g., Communist infiltration—are being remedied from within the movement itself more rapidly and more effectively than they could be remedied by punitive legislation . . .

Accordingly, we repudiate as ill-advised and discriminatory the efforts of those who, not content with the disruptive effects of the Taft-Hartley Act, are clamoring for further restrictions on the labor movement.

We call attention in particular to the baleful influence of certain types of punitive legislation at the state level which are calculated to foster rather than diminish industrial strife.

In addition we recommend that the Taft-Hartley Act itself be reconsidered by the Congress of the United States, and that the cumbersome and the obstructive provisions concerning the labor movement itself be eliminated. At the same times its socially beneficial features should be retained . . .

The chronicle of its (T-H's) day by day enforcement during the past year indicates that the measure was not sufficiently constructive and reinforces our conviction that the Congress ought to dig deeper in its inquiry into the underlying causes of industrial unrest.

At the same time we call upon rank-and-file members of the labor movement to take a more active interest in the day-to-day affairs of their unions.

The record indicates, however, that segments of the organized labor movement which are at long last coming into their own after having had to struggle desperately for their very right of existence have repeatedly invited American industry to discuss with them the establishment of an Industry Council system. Unfortunately, their overture in that direction has been ignored and in some instances openly rebuffed or caricatured irresponsibly as socialistic or worse.

(Ed. Note: A year before Pearl Harbor, CIO Pres. Philip Murray proposed to Pres. Roosevelt the inauguration of the Industry Council plan, which aimed at the democratic planning of the nation's industrial life. Similar plans for speeding war production were made by several CIO international unions.)

The Catholic message continued:

But the time has come to repudiate empty phrases, including the empty phrases of individualism on the one hand and those of collectivism on the other. "Surely it ought to be plain today," the American Bishops tell us pointedly, "that there is no remedy for our economic evils in a return either to nineteenth century individualism or to experiments in Marxianism." We are called upon to establish a new system of economic collaboration in the spirit of genuine democracy.

Foreign Unions Greeted By CIO

CIO leaders have sent Labor Day greetings to the 68 national union centers affiliated with the World Federation of Trade Unions, and pledged the CIO to work "unceasingly to insure" that the European Recovery Program will be carried out in the interests of democracy and economic betterment for people throughout the world.

The letter was signed by CIO Pres. Philip Murray and by CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey. Carey will leave for Paris about Sept. 11 to attend the next meeting of the WFTU executive bureau.

Text of the letter dispatched to foreign union organizations follows:

"On this Labor Day, the traditional holiday of all American workers, we send you our fraternal greetings—to workers throughout the world. The six million members of the CIO are hopeful that this coming year will bring a world of peace, stability and major progress toward economic recovery and strengthening political democracy.

"We regard the European Recovery Program as a prime device for helping attain these goals. We pledge ourselves to work unceasingly to insure that ERP will be administered everywhere and at all times in the interest of true democracy and economic betterment for peoples everywhere."

Protestants Urge:

Living Standard Sufficient For Health, Culture, Hard Luck

SIX principles which should guide Christians are set forth in the Labor Sunday message of the Federal Council of Churches (Protestant):

1. There should be a minimum standard of living to which every person has access. Such a minimum should be sufficient for health, cultural growth, and protection against hardships beyond one's control. It must be recognized that such a minimum standard will be conditioned by the relation of production to population.

2. All persons have the moral right to equal opportunities to develop their capacities. To make equal opportunities available to all children and youth is therefore a special responsibility of the Christian community.

3. Every able-bodied man and woman has the moral right and duty to serve the community in the home, through work under conditions that assure fair compensation, and in voluntary community service.

4. Economic decisions are in large measure group decisions for which both political and economic forms of organization are necessary. The Christian's responsibility includes his taking a vigorous part in those political and economic activities which hold the greatest promise for the realization of Christian objectives. All persons have a moral right to such participation regardless of race, creed, color, or sex.

5. The churches have been right in giving encouragement to the development of the labor movement, both as an instrument for the securing of greater economic justice and as a source of both dignity and morale for workers. Yet, in specific issues that may today separate labor and management, the Church should not prejudge the rightness of either group. While making judgments in particular cases, it should concentrate on the encouragement of all those processes which are in harmony with its ministry of reconciliation.

6. Every national policy must be judged by its consequences for the lives of people in all lands and by its effect upon the economic basis for a peaceful world. There should be tolerance toward the economic experiments and institutions of other peoples, though these must be judged by the same moral principles as our own.

Labor Sunday presents a clear call to every Christian to consider earnestly the possibility and the means of attaining a more Christian economic life than now exists. It summons him to reexamine his own relationships as employer or employee, as buyer or seller. It requires each Christian to revaluate his position on the grave economic issues that have emerged upon the field of political action.

Labor Sunday calls him to ask of himself and to give answer—after rigid self-analysis — concerning his economic activities: Am I right or wrong?

Moscow or Washington

Gov. Dewey said in his Labor Day proclamation:

In so far as we in New York have been able to manage our own affairs, we have achieved what is perhaps the best example of peace on a front where diverse interests must always be reconciled if free labor and free government are not to be suppressed. As the nation's leading industrial state, New York's strike record is second to none. Where we have had trouble, the sources of it may be traced to tap roots which are fed in Moscow or in Washington or in designs of selfish men ruthlessly pursuing power or wealth.

Workers Lauded As True Patriots

"No greater tribute could be paid to the workers of the United States than to credit them for the part they have played in creating the industrial spirit which helped win two World Wars and, at the conclusion of World War II, placed us in the postion of leadership for the establishment of world peace."

With these words the new Secretary of Labor Maurice J. Tobin greeted Labor Day. He continued:

The program that labor has espoused is one of progress and betterment . . .

But the fact remains that the passage of State and Federal legislation restricting labor's hard-won rights, and striking at the very foundations of free collective bargaining, leaves the future welfare of the workers on dangerous quicksands.

The U. S. Department of Labor's appropriations have been cut and important manpower and industrial relations functions taken away. Nothing has been done effectively to curb inflation. Social security benefits have not been increased to meet the cost of living or extended to millions of workers not now covered.

Truman:

Curb Prices Halt Crisis

PRESIDENT Harry S. Truman in his Labor Day statement called for a curb on inflation, a decent minimum wage, adequate social security, national health insurance, an adequate integrated Labor Dept., better labor-management legislation and repeal of the T-H Law without mentioning it by name.

Partial list of Truman's message follows:

The fourth Labor Day since the war affords us an opportunity to pay tribute to the achievements of American labor in the tremendous task of recovering our economy to a peacetime basis.

The skill and energy of American workers have played a major part in the national effort which has resulted in today's all-time high records in employment, production, income and profits.

Free collective bargaining and our free enterprise economy have proved their strength during these trying years and the production of national efforts to bring about world recovery and prosperity and a lasting peace. American labor has never wavered in its support of our bipartisan effort to win peace by aiding other nations in their effort toward industrial recovery.

OUR GOAL now is to continue to increase our production and our standard of living.

Equally important, we must improve the fairness of the distribution of the fruits of our labor.

Our American way of life is the best way of life in the world. But we can and must improve it. Some workers see their actual earnings reduced, despite pay increases, by the rising tide of inflation. We must act to end this economic dislocation. We must curb inflation before it leads us to economic disaster.

Some workers lack the protection of a decent minimum wage. We must relieve such injustice and increase the minimum wage level from 40 cents an hour to at least 75 cents an hour.

Too many workers lack the protection of adequate social security and a national health insurance program. We must provide this security for them.

All American workers lack the services which should and could be provided by an integrated Department of Labor provided with adequate staff and adequate funds. This situation must be remedied.

Finally, there is at present on the statute books a law which unfairly restricts labor unions and their members. It should be repealed.

This year labor, always interested in good government, is making great efforts to get out the vote in November. It is to be hoped that every eligible voter—not just the customary minority of those eligible—will go to the polls and register an opinion on what course the United States should take in the days ahead. Then, the outcome will be the decision of all America.

CIO Legislative Program

"For General Welfare of American People"

THE CIO executive board last week adopted a legislative program. A partial text follows:

The 80th Congress clearly failed to meet its obligations to the American people. Because of the do-nothing policy of the Congress on a wide range of domestic problems, the welfare and security of our people have been seriously impaired.

The Congress ignored the cries of the people for assistance in lowering the cost of living and providing shelter, in strengthening civil rights, in establishing needed social reforms, in improving the status of labor and of the collective bargaining process.

Such refusal to act leads to disillusionment with popular democratic institutions. Unless the new Congress meets the needs of the people, it may set in motion a dangerous trend towards loss of confidence in the machinery of our American democratic government. Responsible members of Congress and an enlightened citizenry must act to change this trend; to remove the legislative body from domination of the special interest lobbies which make Washington responsive only to the will of great corporations; and to restore Congress to the control of the American people.

BAD RECORD: The do-nothing record of the 80th Congress would be serious at any time. Its effect, however, was even more drastic because of the accumulated problems which have arisen during the past 10 years. Substantially, no important reform or progressive measures have been added to the statute books since 1938. In part this was understandable. The necessary mobilization of the country's resources on an emergency basis to carry on the great struggle against our nation's enemies had first precedence during the war years.

The legislative program of the CIO during the post-war period has encompassed not only the interests and needs of union members and their families, but of all the population. Our legislative program has been a program for all America.

THE record of the 80th Congress was one of complete and abject failure on all important domestic issues. If offered no hope to America.

The 80th Congress passed the Taft-Hartley Law over President Truman's veto; and it obstinately refused to consider repeal of that anti-labor legislation. It wrote crippling amendments into the Fair Labor Standards Act, but it refused to lift the minimum over the now outworn 40c an hour level, or to to extend coverage of the Wage-Hour Law. The 80th Congress all but crippled the U. S. Department of Labor, both by cutting its appropriations and by transferring many of its functions to other government agencies.

The record of Congress on the fight against inflation is almost blank. The Congress refused to take those steps necessary to control prices and ration scarce goods. It enacted a "spare the rich" tax law while refusing to pass excess profits taxation to protect national economic stability from the dangers of super-high profits. Its record on civil rights is equally bad. The Republican-Dixiecrats coalition worked together to prevent passage of the Anti-Polltax Bill. Proposals for anti-lynching legislation, for an FEPC, and for anti-segregation policies in the armed services were ignored.

The leadership of the House continually placed roadblocks in the path of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill and prevented our Representatives even from voting on it. Rent control, although extended, was weakened. The social security system needs broadened coverage and substantially increased benefits, but the Congress preferred instead to make drastic cuts in the number of people who are covered by Social Security.

Federal aid to education, necessary to enable our school systems to meet the challenge of high costs and enlarged population, was withheld. National health insurance was not even considered by this Congress. Likewise, it declined to act on a bill to give equal status to women in industry and in our society.

In every case, the Congress preferred to heed the appeals of the special interests rather than of the American people.

CIO's EFFORT: Since the last meeting of this Executive Board in January 1948, the CIO exerted every possible effort to place our program before the Congress and to bring the record of Congress before our members.

We have testified before agencies of the Congress. We have written letters and sent telegrams. We have issued press statements, spoken on the radio, distributed pamphlets. We have called meetings and conferences.

The CIO functioned as an effective instrument devoted to focusing attention on the people's demands.

At the end of the regular session, The CIO published a special 12-page 1948 Voting Record, describing the results of the Congressional session, listing the votes of each Senator and Representative on 16 key issues, and pointing out the necessity of labor political action to change the complexion of Congress. This Voting Record has been printed in well over a million copies.

There follows a partial listing of the communications from the Legislative Department to CIO affiliates.

PROGRAM: The CIO will continue to voice the demands of the American people for legislation to meet the needs of our times and our society. Our legislative program is one around which every American — worker, farmer, small businessmen, professional man—can rally.

Here is our domestic legislative program for 1948 and 1949:

1. Repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, and re-enactment of the Wagner Act.
2. An anti-inflation program to roll back prices to reasonable levels and to recapture excess profits.
3. Passage of a comprehensive housing program along the lines of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner Bill.
4. Enactment into law of the recommendations of the President's Committee on Civil Rights. These include:
   (a) passage of the anti-polltax bill;
   (b) passage of the Fair Employment Practices Commission bill;
   (c) passage of the anti-lynching bill;
   (d) elimination of segregation in the armed forces;
   (e) passage of a home rule for the voteless District of Columbia.

   In addition, we oppose all bills and executive orders to limit constitutional rights of American citizens and curtail the right of organization and association.
5. Improvement of the Fair Labor Standards Act, with a minimum wage of at least $1.00 an hour, and improved coverage of workers not now protected.
6. Strengthening and improvement of our Social Security program, including improved coverage and substantial increases in benefits.
7. An adequate national health insurance program.
8. Federal aid-to-education, properly financed, and an effective labor education extension program.
9. Restoration and strengthening of the U.S. Department of Labor and the return to it of its legitimate functions.
10. Veterans benefits adjusted to meet present high costs.
11. Support of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and other river valley developments, and public power and reclamation projects designed to protect and conserve our national and human resources, to promote our national security and to prevent disasters such as the Columbia River tragedy.
12. A farm program geared to a full economy including reasonable price support, farm credits, soil conservation, and improvement of rural living standards.
13. Extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreement authority on a long-range basis, to promote national economic stability and encourage international trade.

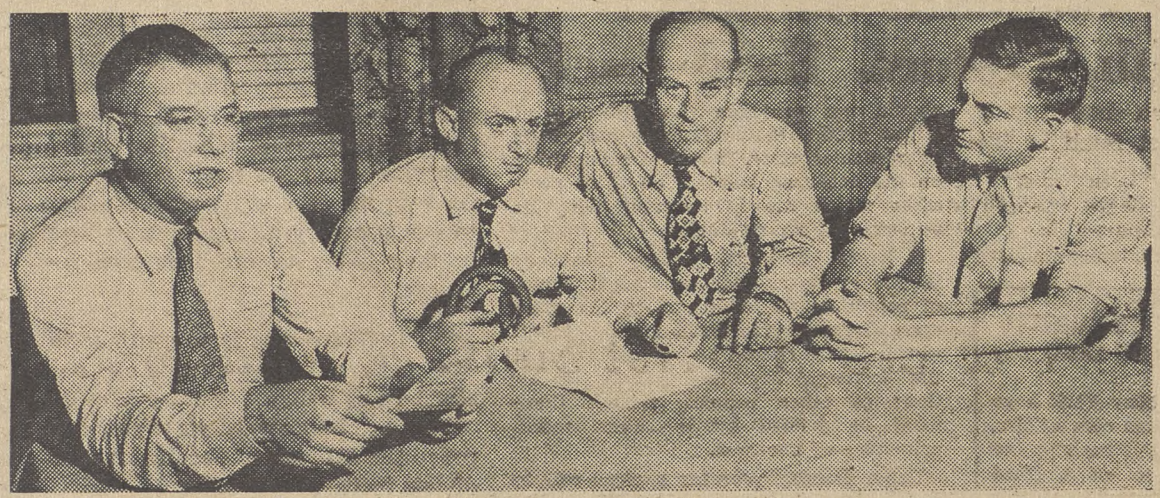
The CIO has fought vigorously for this program. We shall continue to fight for it in the election campaign ahead . . . We call upon and authorize the CIO Political Action Committee to implement this program . . . We feel that if the people vote, representatives of the people will be elected and the program enacted . . . We have demonstrated our effectiveness at political action before. We must, and we will, demonstrate it again.

NAM Admits Poll Favors Controls

More than half the American people want price control and rationing in order to keep prices down.

That fact was announced on the radio last week by—of all people — the Natl. Association of Manufacturers! The NAM, sounding a little embarrassed, said "an impartial public opinion poll" shows 56% of the people favor price control.

NAM's radio spokesman hastened to add that NAM—with 17,000 corporation members—doesn't agree with the nearly 79 million people whom the poll shows in favor of strong anti-inflation measures.



CIO FIGHTS FOR VET: The New Jersey CIO joins in the fight to win the reinstatement of Joseph Kutcher, legless war veteran, fired from his job at the Newark, N. J., Veterans' Administration office because of his membership in the Socialist Workers' Party. (l. to r.): Sec. George Novack of the Civil Rights Defense Committee; Kutcher; Pres. Carl Holderman of the N. J. CIO Council, and Rev. John I. Daniel, chaplain of the Newark Area council of the American Veterans Committee.

PAC Heartily Concurs

FOLLOWING is a partial text of the statement of the CIO-PAC Executive Board:

The CIO Executive Board has clearly and in detail pointed out the choice that lies before the nation. It has indorsed Harry S. Truman for President and Alben W. Barkley for Vice-President.

CIO-PAC heartily concurs in that decision. It pledges the full support and energy of the PAC organization toward making that decision effective.

The platform of the Democratic Party is one that can command our enthusiastic approval. The platform of the Republican Party condemns itself.

We shall measure all candidates for such offices in both major political parties by their record of support or opposition to the CIO program. Those who are responsive to the needs of the people we shall indorse. Those who serve the forces of greed and privilege we shall oppose.

THERE are already over 400 state and local political action committees. Each of these committees is hereby called upon to mobilize all of its resources and direct all of its efforts along the organizational lines which have been successfully developed in the past two years.

These include:

1. An intensive campaign based upon the issues which are today the concern of millions of our fellow citizens.
2. Thousands of blockworkers will carry our stand and the record to the voters of the nation. The already sizeable number of such blockworkers must be increased until there are a sufficient number to cover every block in every precinct and ward in the industrial areas of the nation.

   Blockworkers are the foot-soldiers of CIO-PAC. Their ammunition is facts. Their target is the doorbell.

   Detailed plans for election day must be put into operation. These include transportation for those who would otherwise have physical difficulty in getting to the polls; the distribution of sample ballots; the provisions for poll watchers; checking of laggard voters; baby-sitters for mothers who would otherwise be tied to their households, and all the other important details that will insure a maximum vote.
3. The drive for individual contributions to the Political Action Committee will be accelerated.
4. Intensified attention must be paid to the contests involving state and local office.
5. The final objective of the campaign to be conducted by the CIO Political Action Committee is a record vote of 60,000,000. A vital preliminary is registration, for unless people are qualified to vote there will be no use in getting them to the polls on election day.

WE believe that the judgment of the American people is sound. History shows that our government had fallen into incompetent hands only when a majority of the people failed to exercise their hard-won right to vote. We believe that the platform of the Democratic Party and the record of Truman and Barkley are deserving of the enthusiastic support of every member of organized labor, as well as the supporters of liberalism in other walks of life.

PAC believes that members of organized labor as well as farmers, small businessmen, white collar and professional workers, are by now fully aware of the dangers presented by the tactics of division and disunity practiced by the so-called Progressive Party.

With the loyal and tireless efforts of every member of the CIO devoted to the task, we will secure a vote of 60,000,000 and obtain a victory for the people, in the Congress and in the White House.

Statement On Inflation

'Desire For Profits Causes Much Hardship'

THE partial text of the CIO executive board's statement on inflation follows:

THERE can be little question but that inflation is here and will grow worse in coming months—"A dollar ain't a dollar anymore." Wholesale prices hit an all high again last week according to official figures of the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Dept. of Labor. Retail prices soared to a new high according to the BLS announcement covering the period up through the middle of July, 1948.

Over the past year living costs have increased almost 10% and since the demise of OPA have increased over 30%. In other words it now takes $1.30 to buy what $1 purchased in mid 1946. Food prices have increased even more rapidly. It takes almost $1.50 today to buy the food that $1 would buy in mid 1946. This is inflation.

The outlook for the coming months is not good. There is little indication that prices, generally, will come down. All the pressures seem to be for continued rising prices. In terms of the Wholesale Price Index and the Retail Price Index we have not yet felt the entire impact of the steel, coal, non-ferous metals, electrical products, automobiles, clothing and shoe price increases of the past few months, to mention only a few. These price increases have occurred for no conceivable reason. They were completely unjustified. However, industry unilaterally decided that prices could be increased further in mid 1948 and proceeded to do so.

THERE are those who say that wage increases have been responsible for these price rises in recent months. Wages have not been the cause. As a matter of fact, wages have just been used as the "scapegoat" excuse for further price increases. Industry could have absorbed out of its exorbitant profits the additional cost of the 1948 wage increase.

For example, in the steel industry this year, wage increases will cost the industry about $160 to $175 million. Yet the price increases already announced will increase revenue by $640 million. Revenues from sales as a result of increased prices will be four times the amount of the wage increases.

This vicious practice of American industry in 1948 to once again unjustifiably increase prices will make the corporate profit level of $18 billion in 1947 after taxes look small. Current reports indicate that American corporations will be making $20 billion, after taxes, or $33 billion, before taxes, in 1948. This level of profits, both before and after taxes, is more than five times the level of average profits in the pre-war years and more than double the average profits during the war years.

This trend of profits soaring to new exorbitant levels each year carries within it the implications of serious economic consequences for American life. The share of our national income going to profits increases while the share going to the recipients of wages and salaries decline.

INFLATION: This greedy desire for profits has caused much hardships in recent years. Wages have not kept pace with rising prices. In the past two years average weekly earnings in manufacturing industries increased 22% while retail prices increased over 30% and profits, after taxes, of all corporations increased 60%. The consequence has been declining living standards. To maintain certain levels of living, many American families have been forced to cash in their savings bonds which were purchased quite universally through the payroll deductions plan during the war. Current reports of the Federal Reserve Board indicate that more than one-fourth of our American families in 1947 spent more to live than they actually earned. Many families have been priced out of the market for many items.

The present wage levels are inadequate to maintain even a minimum standard of living of health and decency. The Department of Labor's minimum adequacy budget recently published, if brought up to date, would require for a family of four an annual income of over $3,500 or $68 a week, assuming the individual head of the family worked 52 weeks a year. The current average wage in manufacturing industries is about $55 a week. American families are $13 short of earning enough to maintain themselves at the minimum adequacy levels of the Department of Labor's budget.

PROGRAM: Over the past decade wages have been raised considerably through the strength of trade unions and the use of effective collective bargaining. During the war years a major contribution was made to the living standards of American workers. Wages moved up more rapidly than did prices. Between 1939 and 1945 real earnings, that is, wages of American workers after adjustments were made for rising prices, increased 52%. This meant better living conditions for American workers—a basic and fundamental contribution to the life of American workers through the activity of trade unions. Then came 1945 and the end of the war and the shift from war to civilian goods industries and the elimination of overtime combined with runaway prices to reduce living standards from the high peak reached in 1944 and 1945. Nevertheless, American workers are still 30% better off today than they were in 1939. This is a major success of the trade union movement. This is in line with the basic objective of the American trade union movement to improve living standards of the American people.

It has been the forceful presence of strong trade unions that has prevented living standards from declining further. It would be well to compare the accomplishments of the past decade with the previous period of prosperity, that is the 1920's. During the 1920's, from 1924 to 1929, wages increased by 5%—the equivalent ½c per hour per year for each of the years. This compares with the increase in average hourly earnings of over 100 per cent in the 1940's.

The existence of weak and ineffective trade unions in the 1920's permitted industry to succeed in its practice of no wage increases. We in the CIO, through our leadership and militancy, have reversed the practices of the '20's and have made a basic contribution in this period of the '40's. We shall continue to strive for improvements in the living standards of our people. However, in the past three years we have been losing our battle against price inflation. Our gains in improving living standards have been slipping away from us.

PROGRAM: Unconscionable profit taking which, in the main, is responsible for current inflation and declining living standards must be stopped. It must be stopped if we are to avoid the calamities of an economic depression . . .

These points constitute the basic CIO program to control inflation:

1. Enactment of excess profits tax legislation.
2. Price control of basic commodities.
3. Authority to allocate and ration commodities in short supply.
4. Control of bank and consumer credits.

CIO's FIGHT: The Congress rushed to eliminate the excess profits tax after the war. The CIO pointed out that this was a dangerous move for the government to take. We pointed out that it was too early for the elimination of the excess profits tax.

The CIO also opposed the removal of allocation controls over building materials. Our position on this question was completely justified in the light of the fact that controls over building materials were reimposed a few months following their elimination.

In early 1946 when the Congress was debating whether OPA should be continued, the CIO repeatedly warned of the dangers of not continuing effective price and rationing controls. We urged upon the Congress that every effort should be made to maintain authority over prices, rationing and allocation. However, the voice of the NAM and not the voice of the CIO was listened to in the halls of Congress. The NAM's position that "If OPA is permanently discontinued . . . prices will quickly adjust themselves . . ." was accepted by the Congress, but instead of prices coming down, they mounted to new all time highs.

Since the elimination of all price and rationing controls, authority over allocations and inventories, the CIO has repeatedly called upon the Congress to act promptly. We joined in urging the President of the United States to call a special session of Congress in both 1947 and 1948. However, the Congress, acting in the interests of big business, flatly rejected action to stem the tide of rising prices and stop the decline of living standards of the American people.

ACTION: Therefore, the CIO now calls upon all its members and all of its affiliated bodies to carry on an anti-inflation crusade to bring to the attention of the American people the basic position of the Congress of Industrial Organizations in its fight against inflation. We call upon all our people to sponsor frequent meetings in their own locality to bring to the attention of the public and of the candidates for Congress the need for action to stop inflation.

The CIO, therefore, proposes to conduct an anti-inflation crusade to be carried on by its regional directors, councils, national and international unions. We propose:

1. That there be mass meetmeetings of labor organizations and other interested groups in all localities throughout the nation.
2. That joint consumer committees be established to conduct such meetings.
3. That CIO regional directors cooperating with PAC committees and other CIO groups take the initiative in creating such committees and in sponsoring such meetings.
4. That political candidates and incumbents be invited to speak before such meetings and be urged to support a sound, constructive and well coordinated anti-inflation program such as that advocated by CIO.

How successful we are in stopping inflation will be contingent upon how successful we are in our anti-inflation crusade in confronting candidates for public office with the issues and solutions and electing the proper senators and representatives.

Southern Drive Statement

'We of CIO Are Not Summer Soldiers'

THE CIO Executive Board last week adopted a statement supporting the Southern Organizing Drive. A partial text follows:

The Southern Drive has recently entered its third year. It is appropriate at this time to review the record of our achievements during this period. It is likewise appropriate that we reiterate our determination to carry on and intensify this campaign for human freedom.

The object of the drive was, and it still remains, to organize the unorganized in the South regardless of how long it takes. . . . We knew that the road would be long and the way would be hard. This is still true, but we of the CIO are not summer soldiers. We are enlisted for the duration of this war.

When the Southern Drive began two years ago the CIO membership in the South was about 400,000. Today it exceeds 800,000. During this short period more than 800 new local unions, affiliated with the CIO, have been established. We have grown in the South as much in the past two years as we did in the preceding 11 years.

FOR LIBERTY: Statistics alone, impressive as they are, do not, however, tell the entire story or significance of the CIO's campaign in the South. In our Southern Drive we are striking an important blow for human freedom. The activities and presence of the CIO in the South are a daily and a living testimonial against discrimination and against bigotry. We do not merely preach; we practice democracy. We are organizing the working men and women in the South regardless of race, creed, or color.

The economic impact of the CIO's campaign in the South has been far-reaching. Wages have been substantially increased. Conditions of employment have been materially improved. Industrial peonage has been virtually eliminated. By insisting upon equal pay for equal jobs regardless of race or color, the CIO has improved the economic status of Negro workers in the South and thereby placed them in a position to improve their health, housing, and well-being.

The benefits derived . . . extend throughout the nation. . . . The CIO knows full well that wage standards of unionists throughout the country remain in jeopardy as long as a North-South wage pay differential exists.

Our campaign in the South has throughout been predicated upon true trade union principles. As President Murray has said: "We are going down there on a simple, pure, unadulterated campaign of trade union organization to improve conditions of employment, to increase wages, and to bring about conditions that will be socially better for the people living in the South."

POLITICS: Yet as an inevitable consequence of our trade union achievements in the South, the political impact of our Southern organizing has already become evident. . . . We have won allies among the clergy, the professions, the faculties of schools of learning, public officials, and small businessmen. We have even awakened a measure of response from the Southern press. We have played a part, a vigorous part, in the defeat of reactionary candidates and in the election of liberal officeholders in Florida, North and South Carolina, Alabama, Tennessee, and other Southern states. These are only the forerunners of other political victories that will follow. We will not permit any coalition of Dixiecrat politicians and hardbitten industrialists to stand in the way of political and economic progress in the South.

When our drive first commenced dozens of organizers were arrested and union meetings were prohibited under restrictive ordinances and statutes designed to impose servitude upon the working people in the South. Largely through legal tests, initiated and financed by the CIO, many of these laws and ordinances have been ruled to be unconstitutional abridgments of freedom of speech, press and assembly. In many towns and cities where organizers were formerly molested and beaten, they now operate without legal hindrance or restraint.

AND BITTNER: Director Van A. Bittner, his colleagues on the Southern Organizing Drive, and his hard working staff are to be congratulated upon their record of achievements. Despite tremendous obstacles they have completely justified the faith which the CIO placed in this Organizing Drive. They are entitled to, and they will receive, our full support and cooperation.

The CIO inaugurated the Southern Drive as a crusade; a crusade against poverty, hardship, suffering and economic bondage; a crusade against terrorism, racial intolerance and bigotry. We are pledged to a continuation of this crusade. We have made a good beginning. We are still far from our goal.

We shall continue the good fight. The welfare of workers North and South depends upon this. The welfare of our nation and our democracy depends upon this. We have pledged our honor to this great and humane endeavor. We shall not fail to keep our pledge.

Collect $35,000 For PAC As Murray Hits Reds

CIO Pres. Philip Murray last week-end told 30,000 persons in Hershey Park, near Harrisburg, Pa., that he will continue to fight against "Commie" encroachment in the trade union movement in America.

Thirty-five thousand dollars were collected for PAC at the meeting, sponsored by District 11 of the CIO Steelworkers.

"God forbid that the day should come when the Communist Party should become a potent influence in America," he said. "And I am sure that the thousands—yes millions—of honest Americans affiliated together in the trade union movement feel the same way about the matter."

He condemned the "unholy alliance" of reactionary Republicans and Dixiecrats teamed up with the Communist Party against the CIO and its Political Action Committee.

"I urge you with all my strength to join with your union in fighting off this group," Murray said. "Join with your CIO Political Action Committee to perform a real service on behalf of all the people in America."

MURRAY pointed to the PAC as "the only political organization in the nation" making any kind of substantial fight to correct the abuses of inflation and the suffering it is imposing on the American people.

"I am not a red-baiter," Murray said. "I am a simple American devoted solely to the interests of the people of America. But I do not like splinter movements that are being used to weaken the trade union movement. I have therefore publicly condemned the Progressive Party because I believe it was born in a state of sin. It was brought into being by a few leaders of the Communist Party at a secret meeting in New York.

"Trade union leaders were not consulted about forming any new party, because these few men knew that if the labor movement was brought into any new party that party would grow from the grass roots, from the people in the mills, factories and mines, and not imposed on them by an organization whose motive is to undermine and sabatoge American institutions."

The American people, Murray said, "do not want to have the Communist Party control or dominate their lives, and as a leader of labor in America I shall devote my life fighting the encroachment of the Commies into any trade union in this country."

MURRAY recalled the early days of the war when communists were picketing the White House and denouncing President Roosevelt for his preparedness program while Hitler was sweeping over Europe. He pointed out that the Communist Daily Worker was castigating him for supporting the FDR program.

"Yes," he added, "at that time they were also denouncing and castigating Henry Wallace."

"Then I can remember, too," said Murray, "when Hitler turned on Russia. The very next day the Communist Party announced that the war was no longer an 'imperialist' war. It had suddenly become a 'people's war.' Franklin Roosevelt was transformed into veritable sainthood and Phil Murray suddenly became a great citizen."

"Tomorrow, if it suits their purpose, the Commies and the Daily Worker will come out once again proclaiming that Phil Murray is an outstanding citizen.

"It's all a matter of expediency. You are a hero or a traitor, from day to day, wholly contingent on the Party Line from Moscow. What Uncle Joe thinks in Moscow the Commies here in America think. What Uncle Joe says, they echo. It's to hell with you and to hell with America.

"And I say from this public platform that I am going to fight the hell out of them!"

Elect Textile Man To S. C. House

Eugene C. Neal, an employe of "The Bleachery," has been elected to the South Carolina House of Representatives.

The Bleachery is the Rock Hill Printing and Finishing Co. Neal is a shop steward and member of CIO Textile Workers' Local 710 executive board. Members of the local raised funds so he could file his candidacy and support also came from four other TWUA locals. In the first primary he came within 63 votes of nomination. In the runoff he won by 800 votes. A native of Rock Hill, he served in the Army for five years. Last spring he was a delegate to TWUA convention.

30,000 Walk Off Job

Pacific Maritime Strike On As Injunction Ends

UNION predictions that the T-H injunctions which barred a West Coast maritime strike since June 15 would succeed only in lengthening the period of unrest and postponing settlement were substantiated last week when 30,000 Pacific Coast dock workers and seafarers walked off the job.

Immediately on expiration of the 80-day injunction period and the official lifting of the strike ban by the Federal district court, the marine workers in five unions began leaving the ships and docks.

Involved in the walkout are the Longshoremen, Marine Cooks & Stewards, Marine Engineers Beneficial Association, American Radio Association—all CIO—and the independent Marine Firemen, Oilers, Watertenders and Wipers.

An agreement was reported to have been reached by MEBA shortly before the strike began, but the union joined the walkout as part of the "one-for-all" policy. Each of the unions had pledged to walk out unless agreements were signed with all five organizations.

ILWU Pres. Harry Bridges said the unions were warming up their soup kitchens for "a strike that may last three months."

The highly explosive hiring hall issue had been settled prior to the strike deadline, and wages and other conditions remained the only points in dispute.

ELECTRICAL: Western Electric, one of the last holdouts in the CIO Electrical Workers' 1948 wage campaign, has come through with wage boosts ranging from 9 to 14c an hour for its more than 3000 UE employes.

The new increases apply to Western Electric plants at St. Paul, Minn., and Allentown, Pa.

AUTO: The 16-day strike by CIO Auto workers at seven Intl. Harvester plants ended last week as an agreement on grievance procedure, piece work and apprenticeship was reached.

In Milwaukee UAW officials accused the Allis-Chalmers plant of "arbitrary" action in unilaterally announcing an 8% wage boost just as the union local announced negotiations were at a stalemate. The wage grant "does not relieve them from the responsibility of bargaining collectively," said UAW Reg. Dir. Pat Greathouse.

TEXTILE: The NLRB has ordered the Atlanta, Ga., Aldora Mills of the General Tire & Rubber Co. to bargain with the CIO Textile workers, to reinstate four workers with back pay and to cease interfering with the rights of employes to be union members.

Kenneth Douty, TWUA state director, estimated that the four employes would each be entitled to about $1500 back pay.

According to the union, all the houses, the school and church in the mill village are owned by the company. Village officials, appointed by the district judge, include two top mill officials and a bank president, none of whom live in the village themselves.

When employes began attempts to organize in 1945, the union said, a TWUA organizer was arrested on order of the mill manager for distributing handbills. In April of this year the union won an NLRB election at the plant, but it was three months before TWUA could get the company into negotiations.

NLRB Blesses Strikebreaker

YOU can't vote in an NRLB representation election if you're in the midst of a strike for a higher pay and a strikebreaker is filling your job. But the strikebreaker can vote.

That's the latest ruling of the NLRB under the Taft-Hartley Act, which, its sponsors claimed, was passed to give workers a break.

It was the first time the Board has ruled in connection with Section 9 (c) (3) of the T-H Law, which states:

"Employes on strike who are not entitled to reinstatement shall not be eligible to vote."

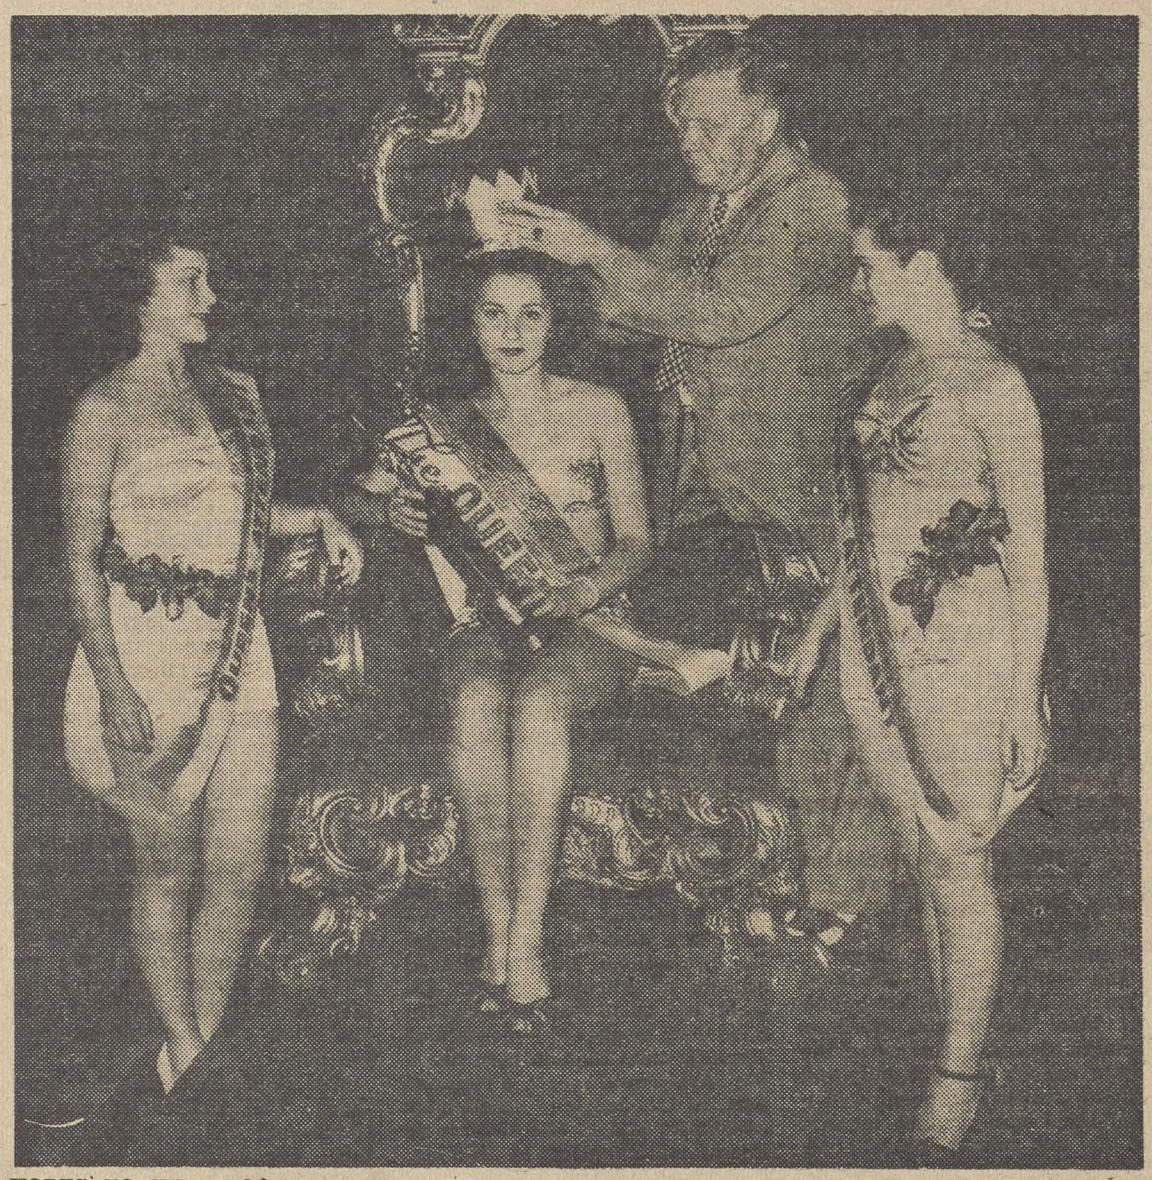
Immediately on announcement of the decision, CIO General Counsel Arthur Goldberg pledged that the "CIO will lend every support to court action to reverse this decision."

The ruling, he said, demonstrates again the "inherent unfair character of the Taft-Hartley Act. Under this decision strikebreakers are permitted to vote and tip the scales in a Labor Board election against actual employes who by their ballots have demonstrated their confidence in their union and their desire to continue to be represented by it."

The decision applied specifically to a local of the CIO Retail, Wholesale Employes, which had a contract with the Times Square Corp., a New York City chain of retail stores. Nine days before the contract expiration date on Aug. 30 an AFL union asked for recognition. Two days later, the employer requested an NLRB election. On that day, the CIO union, which had been seeking wage increases and a new contract, called a strike. Shortly thereafter six CIO members, acting as individuals, filed charges of unfair labor practices against the company. But the NLRB regional director dismissed the charges on grounds that the six were agents of the local, which has not filed financial data and non-communist affidavits.

The CIO union was barred from the ballot, strikers replaced by outsiders were prohibited from voting, and the AFL union won the election.

In another case before the NLRB, the Board reversed some of its earlier decisions to rule that an international union could act in behalf of its locals as bargaining agent if both the local and international have fulfilled T-H requirements.



HOPES TO WIN, TOO: Exec. Secy. Thomas H. Burke of the Toledo CIO Council, who is the Democratic candidate for Congress from the 9th Ohio District, crowns Margaret Sabo, who will reign as Queen of the CIO Labor Day parade. Second choice was Miss Allene Gaiman, left, a Champion Spark Plug worker, and third place was won by Miss Irene Bates, right, of AirWay Electric. The latter two shops are affiliated with Local 12, CIO Auto Workers. Burke is Vice-Mayor of Toledo.

3 Former Officers Expelled By NMU

A membership meeting of the CIO Maritime Union has voted 1462 to 523 to expel three former officers, the NMU has announced.

The three men ousted are: Ferdinand Smith, ex-secretary; Howard MacKenzie, ex-vice president, and Paul Palazzi, ex-New York port agent. They were accused of mishandling funds and conspiring to disrupt the union. All denied the charges, but a trial board report which found them guilty was backed by the meeting. They have the right to appeal to either the NMU Council or next year's convention.

CIO Gives $10,000 To CARE

A THOUSAND union families in 13 war-torn countries will receive CARE food packages on Labor Day — thanks to the CIO.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray last week presented a check for $10,000 for the food packages to Murray Lincoln, head of CARE and president of the Ohio Farm Bureau Federation. The donation was made at the end of the CIO board meeting.

"Members of the CIO are proud to send these CARE packages to unionists overseas," Murray told the CARE official.

"It is a small token of the goodwill and fellowship felt by American workers towards the common people in other nations. We hope that through these gifts we can contribute in some degree to the well-being of families in the nations wracked by war. Hunger, like disease, knows no national boundaries.

"The CIO has supported the European Recovery Program with the same interest in promoting recovery and improving human welfare. For that reason, we will continue to buy CARE packages; and we urge our affiliates and members to purchase CARE packages to the limit of their resources."

At the same time, Vice-Pres. Dorothy Rockwell of the Newspaper Guild presented a check for $500 on behalf of the union to buy 50 CARE packages for needy journalists in Austria, Germany, France and Greece.

THE CIO presentation was arranged by Irving Abramson and Leo Perlis, chairman and director, respectively, of the CIO Community Services Committee. The packages will be distributed by the Committee through its labor trustees overseas.

Present at the ceremonies when the check was handed over to CARE by Pres. Murray were Ivor Thomas, deputy labor attache of the British Embassy, and Marcel Flory, labor attache of the French Embassy.

CIO's gift packages—with their contents of hard-to-get, high-calory foods—will be given to workers in Austria, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Finland, Hungary, Italy, France, Greece, Netherlands, Poland, Great Britain, Germany and Japan.

CARE packages are sold for $10 apiece. Purchasers can designate who should receive them, leave the arrangements to the CARE organization, or make arrangements with relief organizations to distribute them.

CIO's total purchases amount to over 50,000 food and clothing packages, at a cost of more than $500,000.

A CIO gift of 100 CARE Italian food packages for needy families in Foggia, Italy, was accepted last week at City Hall by Council Pres. Vincent Impellitteri on behalf of the CARE Committee for Italy.

Carey, Fitzgerald Tell Committee

House Probe Won't Help UE

A HOUSE Labor sub-committee heard seven hours' conflicting testimony about the affairs of the CIO United Electrical Radio & Machine Workers last week, and then recessed until after the UE's convention.

Witnesses at the hearing were CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, UE president until 1941; and UE Pres. Albert J. Fitzgerald, his successor. Both agreed that the hearings—presided over by Rep. Charles Kersten (R., Wis.) — would be of little value to the UE or its members. On most other points, their views were in considerable conflict.

Brought to the hearings by subpeona after he had declined an invitation from Kersten, Carey said:

"I doubt if the proceedings of this Committee will be of help to union members in clarifying their own affairs."

Under questioning. Carey said he "is not, never has been and never will be" a Communist. But Communists have long sought to infiltrate into the UE and its locals, he testified.

He charged that Fitzgerald, Sec.-Treas. Julius Emspak, Director of Organization James Matles, the editor of the UE paper, the organizing staff and the office staff of the union follow the Communist line. Carey said he had "no evidence of their membership in the Communist party," but that their policies on many problems—foreign affairs in particular—follow those of the Communists.

Differences with this group sharpened after the Soviet-Nazi pact in 1939, Carey said. His belief that locals have the right to bar communists, nazis and fascists from leadership posts led to his defeat in 1941, he said.

He charged that some corporations prefer Communist union leaders because their politics keep them from being "aggressive"—and ascribed the firing of anti-Communist UE members to their criticism of UE's leadership.

Carey hailed the program of the UE Members for Democratic Action, with which he is associated, as leading to a clean up of the union's affairs and the return of its direction to the members.

FITZGERALD, following Carey to the witness stand, voiced "serious doubt" about the ability of the sub-committee to conduct a fair investigation. He noted that the UE had opposed both Kersten and Rep. Kearns (R., Pa.), and that a UE official running on the Democratic ticket is now opposing Kearns in the elections.

Fitzgerald said he believed that the UE constitution's "no discrimination" clause bars any local or the national union from barring communists, fascists or nazis from office. He added that he opposes penalizing any person for his political beliefs.

Closely questioned by the Congressmen, Fitzgerald said the union would not permit a member of the "Russian secret police" to join the UE or continue membership, and that it would turn him over to the police authorities when discovered. He cited the union's constitution permitting expulsion of any member acting against the interests of the union or the government, and said it would be used against spies or saboteurs.

The House Committee, he charged, has failed to offer any evidence of such activity.

Fitzgerald said he did not know if Communists hold top positions in the union; that any law-abiding member may hold office if elected by the membership; and that he could not judge, on the basis of conflicting news reports whether the Communists constitute a political party or an international conspiracy.

He charged that "99% of the stuff in the papers" against UE is propaganda circulated by people who aspire to office in the union, and said he "deeply resents" the smear campaign. Fitzgerald denied collusion or non-militancy by the union in its relations with industry, and cited long strikes in 1946 as evidence.

Give Me Liberty —Or Gravel

Residents of Stonewall Heights, CIO Textile Workers' housing project overlooking Front Royal, now know that political freedom comes high in Virginia.

State officials last fall notified the union that Virginia had taken over the maintenance of the 1800 feet of road between the main highway and the project.

A couple of weeks before the recent Democratic primary, a rumor reached the state highway department that the union's Local 371 might support the candidate of the dominant Byrd machine for U. S. Senate, A. Willis Robertson, instead of the insurgent candidate, Colonel Hart.

State workmen began laying gravel on the road. Two days before the election, the local's Business Agent Charles Leadman formally announced he was supporting the labor-sponsored, anti-Byrd slate.

The next day, the highway department announced that it had run short of gravel and left 200 feet of the road unfinished.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

Millions of men and women are gathered today at rallies, meetings and picnics. Many millions more are sitting at home and resting or taking a trip somewhere with the family.

Those at the meetings, the rallies and the picnics are listening to speakers, great and small, from the President of the United States and CIO President Philip Murray to the president of their own local union, proclaiming the cause of Labor. The ones at home or on trips, as they turn the dials of their radios, are reminded from time to time that today is Labor Day. Some may even listen to a full program on the subject.

Yes, Labor Day is an accepted and comfortable thing. Our Unions are big and respected and reckoned with. Organized labor has 15,000,000 members.

But, when Peter J. McGuire, the father of Labor Day, on May 8, 1882 proposed a fete day for "those who from rude nature have derived and carved all the grandeur we behold, the common man, the working man," it was a very different picture.

There were few Unions then and they were weak and struggling. Each battle meant death and privation to the workers involved. Those were the days followed by the Haymarket riot, the Pullman strike, frame-ups, injunctions and blacklists. In those days workers were just beginning their fight for the 8 hour day. McGuire preached "8 hours for work, 8 hours for sleep, 8 hours for natural improvement." Employers were accustomed to exploiting their workers from dawn to dusk (in the steel industry even the 12 hour day was vigorously opposed by the employers).

One of today's meetings, smaller than most and more reverent, is taking place on a cemetery in Pennsauken township, N. J. Pennsauken has now almost been absorbed by Camden. It is there that Peter McGuire lived, died and was buried. He was born in 1852 in a tenement section of New York's East Side, son of Irish immigrant parents. At 11 he was compelled to support the family. McGuire worked 10, 12, 15 hours a day and attended school at night. He devoted his life unselfishly to the cause of the working man.

When he first proposed a Labor Day and when two years later Congress enacted it, there was not much unionism around Pennsauken. If McGuire could rise from his grave and look around the community he once lived in he would witness one of the wonders of the world. The huge RCA Victor plant is in that city. Its thousands and thousands of employees are members of the CIO, UERMWA. Other thousands are employed by the Campbell Soup Co. and are members of the CIO-FTA. Many thousands more, members of the CIO Shipbuilders Union, work in the shipyards in the community.

Nearly every CIO and AFL Union has a local in this city. Nearly every worker is a union man or a union woman. Here we find a cooperative housing project for the shipbuilders—model low cost homes with playgrounds and green fields for the kids. Here we have a cooperative store and a union owned and operated store which combat the rising cost of living. Here one of the showplaces of the community is the Shipbuilders Union Hall—once the Fairview Country Club. Here we find political office held by workers elected from the ranks of Labor by their fellow workers.

All of the unions have combined to set up the Union Organization for Social Service, an agency which aids union members in solving all of their out-of-plant health and welfare problems; an organization which is building better local communities and developing the abilities of union members through participation in community life. Here we have many other things too numerous to mention.

Peter McGuire, seeing all this, might feel that his dream had come true. We who live and participate in the struggle today know that there is still much to be done. Economic gains through collective bargaining are still a daily need. Civil rights must be extended and guaranteed to all. Our program for social legislation has only begun to be realized.

There is only one way to accomplish these things. We must organize and build more and stronger unions. Through and from these unions will stem our political action. These unions are our cornerstone of civil rights, spreading them through the South and preserving them in the North.

There is no shortcut to this goal. There are no magic formulas or magic words which will bring it into being. No hokus-pokus of political parties will realize our future aims. Only building unions, strengthening unions, organizing workers, will continue in the future the miraculous progress that has been made since Peter McGuire's time and to which he made such a mighty contribution.

SOUTHERN CAMPAIGN

CIO affiliated unions gained 13 new locals as the result of activities of the CIO Southern Drive during the last half of August, it was reported by Van A. Bittner, national director of the CIO Organizing Committee. The Auto Workers and the Woodworkers each won four with one each going to the Textile Workers, Retail-Wholesale, Steelworkers, Oil Workers and Stone & Allied.

Vol. 11 WASHINGTON, D. C., SEPTEMBER 13, 1948 82 No. 36

LAYS IT ON LINE: Harry S. Truman figuratively rolled up his sleeves and started slinging haymakers at the "reactionary Republicans" as he opened his campaign for re-election on Labor Day. He called for repeal of Taft-Hartley Act, termed 80th Congress a "do nothing" Congress. The political season was on in earnest—but Tom Dewey remained silent. He'll start campaigning next week. Henry Wallace, returning from South that alternately gave him cold shoulder and rough treatment, spoke at UE convention in New York. Shown above are part of huge crowds that heard Truman in Michigan and quotations from his Detroit address. Story on politics—and GOP defense of T-H—on page 2.

Opposing Viewpoints—

Truman Hits T-H Act, Stassen Praises It

THE silent Mr. Dewey will speak his piece next week.

The New York governor, who has been quiet on a dozen major issues during the past year or more, will open his campaign with a farm speech in Iowa.

The Republican labor speech was left to Harold Stassen—perhaps because Dewey has little hope that the Republicans will win any substantial number of votes from union members.

Stassen spoke to 3,000 people at the Masonic Temple in Detroit. Pres. Truman had spoken to at least 125,000 in the same city the day before.

The President went down the line for the type of program endorsed by the CIO.

He reminded his CIO-AFL audience that past gains must be protected from "heavy attack by the spokesmen of reaction." He reviewed the record of the "do-nothing" 80th Congress—and he warned that the Taft-Hartley Act is only a "foretaste of what you will get if the Republican reaction is allowed to continue to grow."

IN fact, the President said, if Republican reactionaries get complete control of this government, "I would fear not only for the wages and living standards of the American working man, but even for our democratic institutions of free labor and free enterprise."

Stassen, by contrast, thought that everything that happened during the 80th Congress was all for the best.

The Taft-Hartley Act, he said with a straight face, wasn't anti-labor at all! In fact, unions have fared better, he added, since T-H was passed.

Sky-high prices, said the man who lost to Dewey's machine at the GOP convention, have nothing to do with the end of price control. At one point, Stassen claimed the way to cut prices is to produce more (output is at record levels); at another place in the same speech, he blamed high prices on international developments.

Spokesman of the party which passed the T-H law against labor, Stassen accused Pres. Truman of inciting "class hatred" at variance with the American tradition!

Stassen admitted that "housing is a sorry problem"—but he failed to mention either the Taft-Ellender-Wagner Housing Bill or the Republicans' major role in preventing its passage at the last session.

MEANWHILE, the CIO Textile Workers Union lashed out at Third Party splitting activities.

In a pamphlet entitled "Third Party: Red Ally of Reaction," the TWUA reviewed, state by state, the efforts of third party candidates for President, Congress and state offices to split the liberal vote and thereby insure the election of reactionaries.

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve, in an introduction to the pamphlet, said the union hopes to "open the eyes of those well-meaning citizens who have been too dazzled by the universal yearning for 'peace and prosperity' to see the third party as it really is.

"At every point in its development, and most strikingly at its convention, the third party machinery has been tightly in the grip of Communists," Rieve declared.

"THIS is not merely the observation of newspaper reporters, some of whom may fall short of accuracy; it is the reasoned conclusion of all intelligent liberals, including an observer from our union . . .

"On foreign affairs it is a direct parallel of the Communist platform. Sometimes the same words and phrases are used. I do not think anyone can claim this is a coincidence."

The textile union booklet discussed situations in 12 states—California, Illinois, Indiana, Maryland, Minnesota, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Washington, Wisconsin—where third party races endanger the victory of liberals or insure the election of reactionaries.

The facts, it concluded, show "that the third party is seriously hampering the effort to elect liberals to the 81st Congress. This is no accident; it was planned that way . . .

"Communism can win only if blind reaction strikes at freedom and destroys hope. The Communists know this. The preliminary triumph of reaction is part of their classic plan. A reactionary government, elected by a minority while the majority wars within itself, is a recipe for chaos.

"And chaos is essential to the rise of Communism, here and everywhere. That is why there is a third party today."

T-H Fails To Halt Oil, Longshore Walkouts

THE magic and elaborate strike-settling machinery of the Taft-Hartley Act seemed to be sinking into disrepute last week as two big strikes for higher pay tied up the oil industry and shipping on the West Coast.

Involved in one walkout were 15,000 members, employes of the nation's wealthiest industry—oil. Some 30,000 workers in five unions are involved in the shipping tie-up—CIO Longshoremen, Marine Engineers, Marine Cooks & Stewards, American Radio Association and the independent Marine Firemen, Oilers, Watertenders and Wipers.

The Oil Workers walked out Sept. 4 after seven California companies refused to equalize their pay scales with those of Texas and the East. These companies produce 95% of California's oil.

The cost of living is going down, they argued, standing pat on their refusal to discuss an increase of more than 12½c an hour.

Just before the strike date, the union slashed its demand from 30c to 21c. After negotiations broke off, efforts of the state conciliation service and of the union to resume talks were balked by the employers who at first rejected the conciliator's proposal.

Shortly thereafter Shell Oil agreed to resume talks, with Standard Oil, Texas, Richfield, Union, Lloyd and Rothchild following suit.

AS the Longshoremen moved into their second strike week, the union conducted a referendum among its 14,000 members on whether to accept the employers' final offer and whether to file non-communist affidavits under the T-H Act, as demanded by the employers.

Earlier the union had boycotted an NLRB-sponsored poll on the employers' last offer. The official NLRB figures on the vote:

Eligible employes	26,965
Ballots marked "yes"	0
Ballots marked "no"	0
Total ballots cast	0

Union officials had objected to the last offer on grounds that the proferred 10c wage increase was not made retroactive, approximately one-fourth the union's membership was excluded and no wage reopening was provided. East Coast maritime settlements provided retroactivity for the increase.

Mich. Court KO's 'Tripp' Labor Law

MICHIGAN'S Bonine-Tripp law—one of the worst of the state anti-labor statutes passed last year—is lying unmourned on a judicial scrap heap.

The state's Supreme Court threw out the law—lock, stock and barrel—on grounds of unconstitutionality.

In its decision the court hit primarily at a compulsory arbitration clause in the 1947 act. But it went on to say that that section, clearly unconstitutional, was "inseparably involved" with every other clause of the statute.

Target of the court's decision was a no-strike provision providing for compulsory settlement of all disputes in public utilities and hospitals. The law also prohibited mass picketing, and set up an elaborate system of pre-strike elections by union members and a procedure for carrying out collective bargaining in every type of case.

The knock-out decision arose from a petition by Local 170, CIO Transport Workers, demanding that a judge be prohibited from sitting as arbitrator in a dispute between the union and the Flint Trolley Coach Co.

CIO To Run Special To Convention City

A SPECIAL deluxe "CIO train" will leave Chicago Nov. 18 to carry delegates to the CIO's tenth convention, which opens at Portland, Ore., on Monday, Nov. 22.

Arrangements have been made with the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad for the special train, which leaves Union Station, Chicago at 10:00 PM, CST, on Thursday, Nov. 18. The train will make intermediate stops at Milwaukee, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Butte, Missoula, Mont., and Spokane, Wash. It will arrive in Portland at 7:00 AM, PST, on Nov. 21.

There is no extra fare on the special train, which will be available to convention delegates, their families and friends.

Reservations for the special train can be made by contacting V. L. Hitzfeld, general agent, passenger department, The Milwaukee Road, 200 W. Monroe St., Chicago, Ill., or through local Milwaukee Road agents.

The special train will carry a variety of accommodations: lower berths, sections, compartments and drawing rooms. It will also have a tavern car, serving soft drinks and less soft drinks; a lounge car; and diners.

The schedule from Chicago is arranged to provide a maximum of good scenery. On the first day it will travel through the farm country of Minnesota and South Dakota. The next day it will pass through the mountain valleys and gorges of Montana Canyon.

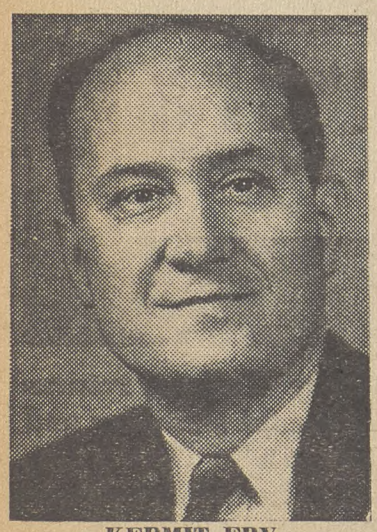
Delegates taking the special train will arrive in Portland a full day before the convention opens on Nov. 22.

The CIO Executive Board will meet in the Oregon city on Nov. 17, and some committee meetings will be held between that date and the opening of the convention. The sessions are expected to end on Nov. 26.

Sessions will be held at the Masonic Temple, and CIO headquarters will be located at the Heathman Hotel, two blocks away.

It will be CIO's first western convention since 1939, when sessions were held in San Francisco. Last year's meeting was in Boston, and Atlantic City was the scene of the 1946 convention.

Eby Resigns As CIO Research Head, Ruttenberg Succeeds Him



KERMIT EBY
Retired as CIO Research Head

CIO Pres. Philip Murray last week announced the resignation of Kermit Eby as CIO Director of Education and Research and the appointment of Stanley H. Ruttenberg as his successor.

Eby resigned to accept a post as associate professor in the division of social sciences of the University of Chicago.

An alumnus of North Manchester College, he took graduate work at the Univ. of Chicago and taught high school until 1937, when he became executive secretary of the Chicago Teachers Union, AFL.

In February, 1943, Eby was employed by the CIO as assistant director of education, becoming director of the entire education and research dept. in 1945.

In accepting the resignation, Murray said:

"The CIO Dept. of Education and Research has made steady progress during the years you have been with us. I quite agree with your expression that strong unionism is dependent on an educated, informed and democratically motivated membership."

SAVE for an intermission of four years during three of which he served in the Army, Ruttenberg has been continuously employed by the CIO since his graduation from the Univ. of Pittsburgh 11 years ago.

His first job with the CIO was as field representative under Paul Fuller, CIO regional representative in Cincinnati. He was employed for a year at Hull House, Chicago settlement house, where as an assistant to Charlotte Carr he helped set up a workers' education program.

Ruttenberg returned to CIO in November, 1939, to assist Ralph Hetzel director of the economic division. After Hetzel left the CIO, Ruttenberg continued to be employed as an economist under Raymond Walsh, the first CIO director of education and research.

From May, 1943, to July, 1946, Ruttenberg served as first lieutenant in the Army. Upon his discharge from the Army, he was reemployed in the Education and Research Dept. as associate director of research. He is married and is the father of two children.

PAC Backs 4 Liberals In New York

"WHOLEHEARTED" support for four liberal Congressmen from New York City districts was announced last week by the New York Regional CIO PAC committee on endorsements.

Pres. Louis Hollander of the state CIO Council made public the endorsements—for three Democrats and one Republican. The announcement preceded by three days a special New York State PAC convention held in Syracuse Sept. 10-11.

Given the nod by the PAC group were four Congressmen running for re-election: Jacob K. Javits (R), in the 21st District; Sol Bloom (D) in the 20th; Abraham J. Multer (D) in the 14th, and Donald O'Toole (D) in the 13th.

All four had excellent voting records during the 80th Congress. Javits, an untypical Republican, took the lead in fighting for the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill, voted against Taft-Hartley, and voted right on a variety of civil rights tests.

In New York's tangled political situation, Javits is being opposed by a Democratic-American Labor Party candidate, Paul O'Dwyer. O'Dwyer is a brother of New York's labor-supported mayor.

Bloom is ranking member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee. Multer, elected to fill a vacancy at a special election in 1947, will be running on the Democratic ticket and will be unopposed by either the Republicans or the Liberal party. His opposition will come from Lee Pressman, former CIO counsel, who has the ALP nomination.

O'Toole, who rolled up a large number of "right" votes in Congres, will also have ALP opposition.

The state CIO-PAC said that all four candidates receiving the endorsement are men "worthy of full support of the CIO in this area. It said "their opponents are men who have no public records and whose views on many issues are unknown."

Too Many Office-Seekers Work For Vested Interests

HERE are excerpts from Pres. Murray's Labor Day speech, broadcast over the CBS network.

Our nation has gone through three wars since the first Labor Day celebration in 1882. Each has left deep scars on us. We fought these wars to establish democracy and peace throughout the world—but today we do not have peace, and we have too little democracy.

Most of us feel like we are sitting on a powder keg and that, perhaps, the fuse has already been lighted.

We have built great industrial enterprises. We have stretched great ribbons of concrete from one side of our nation to the other. We have sent out airplanes hurtling around the world, and made our soil produce great quantities of food and fiber.

We have outstripped the world on production. And yet today millions of our people are sorely pressed in their struggle to obtain the bare necessities of life.

★ ★ ★

PLEASE do not misunderstand me. I am not saying—or even inferring—that the United States has not made a magnificent record of achievement. It has! No other nation has gone so far in such a short time. No other nation has provided so many good things for so many people.

We have made great strides in many fields—but we have not done enough. We can do much more for our people!

We, as a nation, have often placed too much emphasis on property rights and too little emphasis on human rights.

Too frequently we have permitted the wealthy and the powerful to trample on the poor and the weak.

Our giant industrial enterprises too often have treated their employes like machines instead of like human beings.

Too many of our office-seekers now work for the vested interests and too few for the great masses of our people.

We—the American people—are largely to blame for these wrongs.

WE can remedy them. We can make the needed repairs on our political and economic machines. We can make the United States what we want it to be—what the United States should be.

We have the right and duty to go to the ballot boxes next November 2. We must vote into office men and women who will seek to make the American dream of peace, prosperity and equality come true.

We must stamp out segregation and other forms of discrimination. We can remove the voting limitations imposed by the poll tax. We can give real meaning to the civil rights provisions written into our Constitution.

We have the power to curb inflation, to solve our vexing housing problem, to provide all our people with decent medical and educational services.

Power and the intelligent use of power, however, are two entirely different things.

CONCENTRATED in the hands of the few, power is dangerous. Distributed among the many, it is desirable.

It is the concentration of power in the hands of the few which gives me deep concern for the future of our country.

The monopolists are on the march, and make no mistake about it! They have been gobbling up independent factories and business houses at an alarming rate during the past eight years.

Their spokesmen dominated the 80th Congress—the Congress that made no real attempt to curb inflation, to increase the minimum wage, to broaden social security, to provide for slum clearance and real low-cost housing.

★ ★ ★

I believe I would be remiss in my duties as an American citizen if I failed to call attention today to the sensational investigation some Congressional committees have been staging.

They say their "investigations" are designed to rout disloyal people from governmental agencies—and I'm in favor of routing disloyal people from government.

I have no complaint to make about their stated objective because it is a commendable one. My complaint is against the manner in which the committees have abrogated the civil rights of the accused and have engaged in character assassination on the basis of rumor and evidence which no self-respecting court of law would accept.

My complaint, too, is against using this investigation as a smokescreen behind which some political leaders hope to hide their "do-nothing" record on pressing domestic problems.

★ ★ ★

In this country, the people will surely work out their problems in a thoroughly American, democratic manner. We can improve our own conditions, we can strengthen our own institutions, we can expose to the world the falsity of the cold-war propaganda directed against this country—propaganda sometimes, unfortunately, repeated by Americans who should know better.

There are not many countries in the world where the right of free elections is still enjoyed by the people. In the United States, where we accept freedom of the ballot without a second thought, only 34% of the eligible voters took part in the 1946 elections. Our democracy, to be effective and representative, requires that more than one-out-of-three voters use his ballot.

GOP Labor Drive Head Union Foe

THEY'RE scratching their heads in Missouri over the Republicans' new "labor campaign chairman."

Selected by Gov. Tom Dewey's "streamlined" organization to head its labor set-up was Barak T. Mattingly of St. Louis, a lawyer and GOP big-wig.

He was named—said GOP Chairman Herbert Brownell—because of the "mutual respect and confidence" between Mattingly and both CIO and AFL.

The St. Louis CIO Council quickly issued a "who, me?" statement about the Republicans' labor chief.

"We in the labor movement know of no connection that Mr. Mattingly had with us, and it is the first intimation we have that he has any knowledge or sympathy for our problems," declared Secy. Oscar Ehrhardt of the St. Louis CIO Council.

Mattingly has been Republican national committeeman for Missouri for the past 10 years, and more recently has served as general counsel of GOP headquarters. He's listed in Who's Who as president of an airline and vice-president of a laundry.

IN appointing Mattingly to the Republican labor post, GOP Chairman Brownell talked soothingly of his hopes that labor support for Tom Dewey would be welded into an effective political force.

But the reaction of the CIO Council in Mattingly's home town seems to point in the opposite direction.

The St. Louis Council statement said the appointment was received with "feelings of incalculable surprise and astonishment."

The CIO Council statement added:

"Mr. Brownell, the national chairman, is quoted as having said that Mr. Mattingly has the respect and confidence of the representative leaders of the American labor movement.

"Undoubtedly Mr. Brownell believes that Mr. Mattingly's activities in behalf of the passage of the vicious anti-labor King-Thompson Bill and the Madison Act by our Missouri legislature in 1947, and the nomination in 1948 of his hand-picked stooge, Thompson, as a candidate for governor on the Republican ticket, whose name is connected with and stands for the most reactionary anti-labor legislation ever put upon the statute books of any state, reflect the prevailing opinion on labor policy of the Republican high command.

"The nearness of Brownell and Mattingly to Gov. Dewey makes us believe this may become the national labor policy of our government."

PA. To Progs: Why Not Quit?

CHAIRMAN HARRY BOYER of the Penna. PAC used the CIO News Voting Guide in an attempt to convince the Progressive Party to withdraw candidates.

Boyer, who also is president of the Penna. CIO Council, wrote J. W. Gitt, York publisher and Progressive Party chairman in the Keystone state:

"Enclosed are the voting records of the present members of Congress. By this you may really see that in Pennsylvania the Republicans are quite solidly reactionary, while the Democrats are liberal. Yet Third Party candidates are running against some of these . . . "

Boyer said that in the State Senate 34 "reactionary Republicans" were lined up against 16 "liberal Democrats," and that the situation was similar in the lower house.

"Not one solitary Congressional or state Legislative district can a third party candidate carry," Boyer wrote. "But in a close contest he could take votes from a proved liberal and help to elect a reactionary. I do not want to believe that you will indirectly, but nonetheless effectively support the reactionaries to tighten their stronghold in Pennsylvania."

Survey Shows Most Signers of Petition Oppose Wallace

PERHAPS you've wondered just why people sign petitions putting "third" parties on the ballot.

This year, the signing of petitions becomes more important because of the Wallace Progressive Party is attempting to get on the ballot. The party says it will qualify in some 44 States, actually has made it in between 10 and 20 so far. In Missouri and Illinois, though the party is crying "we was robbed," the states say it was unable to get enough signatures.

In Massachusetts, the Progressives made it, however. Somewhat startled by the news that 85,000 persons had signed Wallace petitions, the Boston Herald decided to make a spot check of the reasons for the signatures.

As all political observers know, Massachusetts is traditionally Democratic around Boston and other industrial areas and Republican generally on a state-wide basis. In Presidential years, however, it has gone Democratic every year since it gave its electoral votes to Al Smith in 1928.

THE Herald selected two of its best reporters, Catharine Coyne, winner of a number of awards for journalistic endeavors, and John O'Connor, to make the check. From the petition, they chose from 25 to 40 names at random from addresses in South Boston and 16 other communities. Every person selected was interviewed carefully.

The reporters found that a majority of the signers announced they had no intention of voting for Wallace. And, to charges of Wallace backers that such statements were made because of fear of punitive publicity, the two reporters say they'll bet their well-rounded experience that the answers are truthful.

Why did people sign? Well, a large percentage did it because someone asked them to—someone they knew and for whom they figured they'd like to do a favor. Also, some, though vowing they'd have no part of Wallace or his party, felt that it ought to get on the ballot if it wished to.

Others expressed surprise that their names were on a Wallace petition, then recalled that someone had asked them to sign a petition protesting high prices or demanding better housing, an old trick among politicians, both of the left and right.

ONE housewife said the carrier of the petitions was "a nice looking boy." Some signed to get rid of a "nuisance." Some Republicans gleefully said they had signed because they figured that Wallace would take enough votes to ensure a GOP victory come November.

In suburban Waltham, the reporters interviewed 23 women. All said they had signed at the request of "an old woman." Three said they knew exactly what they were doing and would cast their ballot on the Wallace party line. The other 20 were burned up.

Mrs. Hilda Kelly gave a typical answer:

"I was in Wheeler Square on the way to a restaurant when this old woman came up to me with a paper and asked me to sign for some benefit. I forgot what it was now, but I signed. Later, a man told me I had signed Wallace papers. Well, maybe I wasn't mad!"

Mass. Supports Truman, CIO

Pres. Joseph Salerno of the Massachusetts CIO Council sees the Presidential race as a struggle for supremacy between two camps with widely divergent views.

"The camp led by Dewey," Salerno said, "is the same group that supported the Taft-Hartley law, inflation, high prices and has set the pace for anti-labor legislation throughout the nation. The other camp, led by President Truman, has fought for lower prices, inflation control, minimum wage laws, better housing and social security laws and defeat of the Taft-Hartley law."

RUNS TRUE TO FORM

There's one thing you can say for the Republican's labor policy. It's consistent.

Take the appointment of Barak Mattingly of St. Louis as an example of what we mean.

Mattingly was chosen to direct the labor activities of the GOP because he has "the respect and confidence of the representatives of the American labor movement."

Or at least that's what GOP Chairman Herbert Brownell said.

However, the St. Louis Industrial Union Council, takes a different—much different—view of the matter. The Council issued a statement saying:

"Undoubtedly Mr. Brownell believes that Mr. Mattingly's activities in behalf of the passage of the vicious anti-labor King-Thompson Bill and the Madison Act by our Missouri Legislature in 1947 and the nomination in 1948 of his hand-picked stooge Thompson as a candidate for governor on the Republican ticket, whose name is connected with and stands for the most reactionary anti-labor legislation ever put on the statute books of any state, reflects the prevailing opinion on labor policy of the Republican high command."

This at least would indicate Brownell made a slight mistake in phraseology. What he should have said, perhaps, was that Mattingly was selected to direct the anti-labor activities of the GOP.

* * *

THEY ARE NOT HELPING LABOR

Those of us who live in Washington and work for the CIO have been discussing the advisability of launching a campaign to get Congress to change the names of the "labor" committees it has established.

We found—without doing any difficult checking—that the "agriculture" committees work for the interests of the farmers and the "business" and "commerce" committees work for the interests of business and industry.

But the "labor" committees, consistent with GOP policy, follow an anti-union, pro-Taft-Hartley line.

We think, frankly, that our campaign, if launched, would fall flat on its face.

And we know it would be much better for labor to change the make-up of the committees than to change their names.

That's a job that can be accomplished only at the polls.

* * *

JUST WHO IS LABOR?

Some editorial writers who profess to believe that the Taft-Hartley Act is just simply wonderful have written a new theme song which they probably will sing from now until election day in November.

They haven't given it a title yet but it goes like this:

"Union leaders don't represent labor.

"The workers—the good, honest-to-God American workers, that is—think T-H is a fine law, but the union bosses oppose it because it threatens their stranglehold on the country."

Now, really, doesn't that raise an interesting point? Who—or what—is labor, and who can speak for labor?

Somehow or other we got the idea that the 15,000,000 unionists in the U. S. were entitled to speak of themselves as "labor."

We seem to recall that each year there are thousands of democratically-conducted union elections throughout the country.

And we don't remember a single instance in which an anti-union editorial writer was chosen as a spokesman for labor!

Truman Comes Out Slugging

Tells Workers They Can't Stay At Home and Elect Liberals

By ALLAN L. SWIM

IT'S the beginning of the 10th round and the odds are against the fellow in the far corner.

Up till now he hasn't looked too good—and he's been taking a pretty bad beating.

His style has been mediocre. His punches have lacked power. Occasionally he has swung when he should have ducked.

The bell rings and the fellow who looks like a loser rushes from his corner. He comes out slugging.

He starts hitting where it hurts—and hard.

Now it looks like a fight—not a dance marathon—and the crowd's interest is revived.

THAT'S about the way it's been with Harry Truman, who got into the championship ring in the first place as a result of Roosevelt's death.

For some time he looked like a fellow who should be fighting the semi-final and not the main bout.

He threw some good punches—and he threw some bad ones, too.

He took a bad beating from the GOP-controlled Congress at its regular session and some folks thought he'd be wise to toss in the sponge.

Then came the big battle at Philadelphia—a battle in which he swung a couple of nifty civil rights uppercuts at Southern dissidents in his own party.

TRUMAN'S next major bout was with Congress at its special session—and here he took another beating.

But this time he fought with a new style and he put steam behind his blows.

He stood on the Democrat's pro-labor platform and flailed away with both fists.

Spectators who had been a bit bored up to this point said, "Wait a minute! Maybe this guy's got something!"

And quite a few folks who had been cheering him half-heartedly became enthusiastic and started shouting, "Give 'em hell, Harry!"

ON Labor Day in Michigan Truman let fly a series of haymakers that left no doubt about the kind of battle he intends to wage between now and Nov. 2.

The Taft-Hartley Act, he declared, should be repealed.

He termed the 1948 type of Republican reactionary a man "with a calculating machine where his heart ought to be."

The nation, he said, is threatened by a boom-or-bust cycle.

"You can already see signs of it," he said. "The boom is already on for them (Republican reactionaries) and the bust is on for you."

He spoke of the 80th Congress as the "do-nothing" Congress.

TRUMAN put it right on the line when discussing the possibilities of electing a liberal Congress in November.

"You men of labor can expect to be hit by a steady barrage of body blows," he said. "And if you stay at home on election day you deserve every blow you get.

"It doesn't do any good to talk about voting if you're not on the books. It doesn't do any good to talk about voting if you sit around on election day, too lazy to turn out.

"The interests of this great nation of ours are such that every man and woman of voting age should turn out and vote in November.

"You can elect a reactionary administration and Congress and go into an era of fear, or you can elect an administration and Congress which stands ready to play fair with every American and enter an era of hope."

TRUMAN has told close associates he plans to carry his fight to "every whistle stop in the country."

He has informed them privately he intends to budge not one inch on his forthright civil rights program—not even if his firm stand means defeat in November.

He is campaigning as the leader of a party which has adopted a program the majority of unionists heartily indorse.

And from where we sit it looks like he decided some time ago to quit shadow boxing and start slugging for liberalism.

It's a good fight to make.

'Watchdog Committee' Has Plans For You

Just in case you think things can't be worse, here's an excerpt from a Wall Street Journal story about the plans of the T-H "watchdog committee" headed by Sen. Joseph Ball (R., Minn.):

"You probably won't hear much about what the Ball committee has in mind until after the election, but amendments are already shaping up to:

"Require more union "officers" to take the anti-communist oath, including members of all policy-forming and governing bodies and union representatives who exercise administrative, disciplinary or negotiating authority.

"Empower the National Labor Relations Board to require unions to pay willing workers for time lost because of force and violence in picketing which kept them off their jobs.

"Outlaw strikes against an employer to compel him to sign a contract which violates the Taft-Hartley law.

"Ban or further restrict the use of collective bargaining in deciding employer contributions to union welfare funds.

"Protect anyone who files charges or testifies against a union. The law already affords this protection for those who complain against an employer.

"Exclude businesses 'local in character' from NLRB's jurisdiction."

Guild Sends CARE Packages To Europe

Members of the CIO Newspaper Guild have contributed more than $5,700 in less than a year to send CARE food parcels to European newspaper people who are on a semi-starvation diet.

After having sent $4,200 worth of food parcels overseas, Guild members embarked on a new campaign to raise $5,000 for food packages by Christmas. So far more than one-fourth of this amount has been raised through voluntary contributions of Guild members.

J. Carl McGuigan, Democratic candidate for U. S. Representative-at-Large in Delaware, is a State Senator from Wilmington.

McGuigan, who is business representative for the AFL Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employes, also has served the people of Delaware as a representative in the General Assembly. He is highly respected at the State Capital in Dover for his crusade for legislation affecting welfare and social gains. He has the full support of CIO-PAC,

He Said Only A Few Words, But --

HE was one of those exceptionally smart guys who could act extremely dumb if the occasion called for it.

His apparent lack of knowledge about certain subjects at certain times often tripped up his opponents. After they climbed way out on the limb because of his "stupidity" he'd quickly chop it off.

Frequently they didn't know what had happened to them until it was too late.

He used this technique time and again when dealing with the two groups which he disliked most—chiseling employers and the Communists.

THE CIO was organizing workers fairly rapidly in the city in which the "dumb guy" was located.

The Communists were attempting to do the same thing, but were making little progress.

The "dumb guy" kept getting in their way. Without making much noise and without engaging in much Red-baiting, he chopped the limbs off behind them and cut the ground from under their feet.

The Commies tried to get him over a barrel, to get him fired, to disgrace him.

But he was either too dumb—or too smart—to step into any of the traps set for him.

AS THE organizing drive of the CIO progressed a union was set up among a group of poorly educated, devoutly religious Negro woodworkers.

They were men who had worked under exceptionally bad conditions for extremely poor pay. They had been victimized by the race prejudices which abounded in the city.

The "dumb guy" helped them set up their union and was greatly pleased by the way they "took to" unionism.

Then he got tied up by a strike and other pressing matters that kept him from devoting any time to the union.

At this point the Communists moved in.

THE Commies took full advantage of the "race problem" and the poor conditions under which the new unionists lived and worked.

They said the CIO was a good thing but that the Communists were the only "real friends" of the Negroes.

Only the Communists, they said, could bring about the uprising which would give the Negro his rightful place in the sun.

The party boys worked hard and fast. They talked long and convincingly. They gave much advice to the officers and committeemen.

They were making converts—or so it seemed.

THE union got into serious negotiating difficulties, and the "dumb guy" stepped in and pulled them out of a hole.

During this period he learned the Reds were trying to take over the union. This he didn't like.

So it wasn't entirely by accident that he wandered into a meeting of the new union a short time later on an evening when the Communists were holding a strategy session elsewhere.

He was invited to speak to the group, so he moved to the front of the room. "Suppose you folks just ask me questions about things that are troubling you," he began.

QUESTIONS, dealing mostly with immediate problems of the union, were shot at him thick and fast. He answered as best he could.

A member rose to his feet and said, "I've been hearing reports the Commies are trying to take over this local. Can you tell us about the Commies?"

The "dumb guy" hesitated a minute and then replied:

"Well, I don't know much about 'em—but the one thing I KNOW FOR SURE is that they don't believe in God."

That was years ago. The union is still strongly right-wing. A.L.S.

BOOMERANG!

Right Wingers Win Control of Wayne County Council

TWO tumultuous days of the Wayne County (Mich.) Council convention preceded the seizure of the council by CIO Natl. Rep. Adolph Germer, acting on behalf of the national CIO.

Germer said that the seizure resulted from the violation by the former council officers of the convention call, to which they and the national CIO officers had agreed.

Germer, who took over the council during the convention, described the following elected by the convention of the reconstructed council as right wingers: Pres. Mike Novak of the Auto Workers; Secy.-Treas. Al Barbour and Exec. Vice-Pres. Alex Fuller of the Steelworkers.

The ousted officers, characterized by Germer as left wingers, were Pres. Tracy M. Doll, Secy.-Treas. Samuel Sage and Organizational Director Coleman Young.

The issue came to a head after the credentials committee refused to seat delegates of disaffiliated locals under terms stipulated in the convention call.

Germer said that the committee had refused to make a report to the convention for two days and that he was pleading with it to report when the convention was recessed five minutes early.

GERMER said that he persuaded most of the convention delegates to meet immediately in another hall in the same building. This meeting was continued the next day, he said.

The next day at a readjourned meeting of the old council, the credentials committee finally reported, the national CIO representative said. He declared that the committee violated the convention call by not giving more than one vote and ond delegate to each disaffiliated local which had paid four month's per capita tax.

Germer said that the convention call provided for giving full voting strength to the locals if they paid the four months' tax. Three months of these taxes were to be sent to the national CIO office, to be held in escrow until new officers were elected.

GERMER said that the failure of the committee to report before the recess was "typical of Communist Party tactics to delay with the hope of taking over after most of the delegates had left."

He added that the old officers were so determined to control the convention that they had authorized the employment of 77 sergeants-at-arms at $20 each per day.

Even when the old council convened after the recess, an overwhelming majority of the delegates voted to attend the CIO-recognized council convention.

Transport Workers Local For Truman

New York Local 100 of the CIO Transport Workers has taken the following action:

- Indorsed Pres. Truman for reelection.
- Dismissed Harry Sacher as counsel (Sacher, who retains his post as counsel for the national TWU, accused TWU Pres. Michael Quill of a frameup. Quill declared Sacher had followed the Communist line.)
- Ousted National officers Douglas MacMahon and John Santo, charged with promoting Communist Party interests within the union.

Local 100 is TWU's largest.

Political Action is Theme in Three CIO Schools

Political action was the theme highlighted at the three CIO regional leadership training courses held in the East, Midwest and Rocky Mountain region the latter half of August.

The schools, sponsored by the National CIO Dept. of Education & Research, brought together CIOers from different states, unions and councils for the discussion of CIO policies and programs.

CIO General Counsel Arthur Goldberg and Education & Research Dir. Kermit Eby led discussions at the term at New Windsor, Md., Aug. 16-21 for CIO members from Virginia, West Virginia, Pennsylvania and Maryland.

At the Midwest school at Kimmswick, Mo., Aug. 22-28, discussion leaders included Stanley H. Ruttenberg and Frank Donner of the National CIO. The course for CIO members in the Rocky Mountain area was held at Estes Park, Colo., Aug. 29-Sept. 4, with Natl. CIO Assoc. Education Dir. George Guernsey in charge.

The last of the regional schools, for CIO members in the South, will be held Sept. 19-Oct. 2, at Highlander Folk School, Monteagle, Tenn.

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

CHARLES MASON and Jeremiah Dixon didn't know what they were doing.

They thought that when they were laying out the Mason-Dixon Line they were settling an argument between the Calverts of Maryland and the Penns of Pennsylvania over just where the Commonwealth left off and the Free State began—or vice versa.

But, few are there today who know that the Mason-Dixon Line is the actual boundary between the two states. To millions of Americans—and for generations, too—the Mason-Dixon Line has symbolized the place where the Northern enunciation ends and the Southern accent begins.

Or, the line of demarcation between the industrial North and the Agrarian South.

But, there is a change occurring in Dixieland. And, we don't mean the motley Dixiecrats. We mean in the financial status of the good people of the South, who too long had trailed far, far behind the rest of America in average income.

Now, don't jump too fast to conclusions. The South is still —most of it, anyway—still behind in average income, but the gap has been narrowed considerably.

THERE are a lot of factors involved in this change, But, the CIO can safely say that our Operation Dixie—that mighty crusade to free the South of financial backwardness — has been an important factor.

Average income, in brief, means the total income received by people of any given area or place—total income including wages, salaries, profits, interest, etc.—divided by the number of persons living in that area.

Operation Dixie—officially the CIO's Southern Organizing Drive—is under the direction of Van A. Bittner, beloved veteran of many years of fruitful service for the working men of America, Canada and the whole world. Operation Dixie was launched in June, 1946.

OPERATION Dixie covers Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Florida, Arkansas, Louisiana and Texas.

Two years of Operation Dixie:

CIO membership in the South has more than doubled.

In fact, the CIO grew as much in the South in the last two years as it did in the previous 11 years.

The CIO has struck mighty blows for civil liberties in many areas, and is gradually wiping out further examples of denial of those rights.

The "traditional" wage differential between North and South has been narrowed, and in some cases eliminated. The economic status of workers has been improved.

A STUDY of Dept. of Commerce statistics makes interesting reading for Northerners, Southerners and Southerners who have left Dixie.

In 1947, aggregate individual incomes of the South were one-fifth larger than in 1944. While the South has lost a number of Government projects which were moved there from crowded Washington during the war—and also has lost a large number of job openings at government airports—employment in plants and factories (and the number of plants, too) is up sharply.

Says the U. S. Commerce Dept.'s Survey of Current Business: "Of considerable imporance in the relatively large advance of private income payments in the Southeast from 1944 to 1947 was a 12% increase in factory payrolls.

This gain is in constrast with small increases or marked declines in other regions. (That 12% rise means in the total payroll, and obviously is bolstered by the several wage increases won by Operation Dixie—and is held down by unorganized plants.)

In North Carolina, for instance, manufacturing payrolls were up 37% in the 1944 to 1947 period.

The Commerce Dept. says further, "The fact that after the war the Southeast retained most of its war-period relative income gains is evidence of considerable strength in postwar income flows."

It is also interesting to note that the Southeast as a unit in 1940 had $9,041,000 in total income payments to individuals. In 1947, that had risen to $25,-723,000—higher than the peak war year of 1944, when the total was $21,475,000.

THE CIO is proud to have been of such service to the people of the South. And, it will continue to help increase the wages and improve the lot of the South.

Oh, the magnolias still bloom in the South and the Spanish moss still hangs languidly and picturesquely from the trees. All the old color and glamour of the South remain, but there's something new.

It's the economic improvement which makes the South's magnolias and Spanish moss even more picturesque.

Good luck to you all.

Who Said T-H Doesn't Hurt Unions?

By GLORIA CAPLAN

"IT IS a nonsensical piece of legislation, not only vicious but foolhardy. Nonsensical, and I believe that time will prove it is not workable." Philip Murray in his opening address before the 9th CIO convention, Oct. 13, 1947.

Almost a year has passed since Murray predicted the Taft-Hartley Act wouldn't work.

More than a year has passed since the Act took effect, and on its first anniversary the nation's press and industry spokesmen took a quick look around, discovered the labor movement was still in existence, even growing, noted that there were fewer strikes this year than last, and shouted "Hallellujah!"

Typical of the editorial celebrations was one staged by the New York Daily News. The editorial pointed out that there are no labor concentration camps yet, more people belong to unions than ever before, unions have just won a round of wage increases—and more workers seem to feel "safe now from their leaders' tyrannies."

WHY, then, did workers at Labor Day rallies throughout the country consume so much time lambasting the Act and its sponsors?

"If all this is slavery, we're in favor of its continuing indefinitely; and so, we believe, are most American working men and women," chirps the News.

In the Nation's Capital today there are some 1500 Negro cafeteria workers who could tell the News differently. Their pay averaged $21.90 a week when they asked for a raise. The company's reply: "Taft-Hartley." They lost their strike.

In Nashville, Tenn., today employes of the Nashville Corp. would disagree with the News. They had shown their preference for the CIO Steelworkers in an NLRB election—a 2 to 1 preference. And to their repeated efforts to negotiate a contract, the corporation replied: "Taft-Hartley." It was a long and bitter strike. The workers lost it—and their union.

In California today there are 1500 AFL workers who have been locked for almost a year in a bitter strike on the 20,000-acre DiGiorgio ranch. The NLRB told them they weren't covered by the Law, and so it couldn't order the employer to bargain. But the NLRB did decide that the workers could be subjected to the severe penalties of the Law. The NLRB obtained an injunction against them.

IN Chicago there are several hundred printers who could tell the News a thing or two. Their union, one of the oldest in the country with a long history of stable bargaining relations, is the venerable Intl. Typographical Union. Their prolonged strike is a direct result of Taft-Hartley. To date it has cost the union $7 million dollars, and ITU members throughout the country are paying 5% of their earnings each week to finance their strike-ridden brothers. Don't tell them about Taft-Hartley.

In upstate New York there are several thousand Remington-Rand employes who, after many long and bloody struggles, finally won contracts in six plants about seven years ago. Today, after seven years of bargaining, the company has a new weapon—Taft-Hartley. Because the CIO Electrical Workers has declined to comply with the T-H filing requirements, Rem-Rand considers itself absolved from any obligation to bargain.

Shortly after the Law became effective, it posted notices that agreements, reached only a few months before, were void. The U. S. Government no longer protects these workers' precious right to organize. Under T-H no employer holds are barred when it comes to a non-complying union. And the union hasn't the right even to complain.

IN Seattle, 15,000 Boeing Aircraft workers, now in their fifth strike month, have felt the T-H whip. The walkout was called after 14 months of fruitless negotiations and after workers had gone two years without a raise. Immediately T-H was flung in their faces. Because they did not formally file 60-day strike notices, the company announced it had no obligation to bargain any longer under T-H.

A U. S. District Judge upheld this company view in denying a request for an injunction to force the company to bargain. Subsequently an NLRB trial examiner ruled that prolonged negotiations can substitute for the "cooling-off" period, and pronounced Boeing guilty of unfair labor practices.

But the issue will be tied up perhaps for years in litigation, for the company announced it would fight the case up to the Supreme Court if necessary. Meanwhile, Boeing has filed a federal suit against the union—under Taft-Hartley—for $2,250,000 damages. And, using T-H, the AFL Teamsters are helping crack the strike by raiding the striking union membership.

These cases are but a small sampling of the unions, which in the first year of Taft-Hartley, have been victimized.

Why don't unions like the T-H Act? Here are some of their reasons:

• Before the law was enacted, unions charged that there would be a revival of government by injunction.

Under T-H the NLRB has secured 17 injunctions against unions. On the state and local level use of the injunction has been so revived that hardly a strike has occurred since T-H in which the employer has not succeeded in obtaining an injunction against the union. Injunctions have even been obtained to halt practices later declared to be legitimate. But by the time the union is vindicated, the damage to the strike has been done.

• Unions charged that the law was biased on the side of the employer.

Under T-H, employer charges of unfair labor practices get priority. Meanwhile, hundreds of union charges lie buried in the NLRB's snowballing backlog of cases. If, in the face of an employer's refusal to bargain, the union files an unfair labor practice charge, both the employer and the union know it may be a year, maybe two, before the NLRB gets around to "protecting the workers' right to organize." By that time, the union may or may not still be in existence.

• Unions charged the law is punitive.

Strikers are punished for striking by being denied the right to vote in a representation election if they have been replaced by strikebreakers. Thus, on the one hand picket lines are pruned down by injunctions so that the strikers have no defense against incoming strikebreakers; and then, when sufficient replacements are inside, the NLRB stages an election at the employer's request, in which most of the strikers are prohibited from voting. The strike is effectively broken, and the striking union is ousted.

• Unions charged the anti-Communist affidavits provision constituted denial of the freedom of conviction to union leaders, abridged the right of workers to select officers and unions of their choice.

Many known anti-Communist trade union leaders have refused to sign the "I'm not a Red" affidavits in defense of a principle, one of the principles on which the union movement was founded.

Said Philip Murray at the 1947 CIO convention: "I stated I was unwilling to file an affidavit that I was not a Communist. That is a matter of principle. I do not know why the Congress of the United States should require me to do that, as a citizen. I think the Congress is very presumptuous, because I think if they could do that to me about this question of Communism, they could do it with any other citizen about any kind of issue . . .

Why did not this Congress incorporate in this legislation a provision asking a member of a union holding office if he is a member of the Ku Klux Klan? They did not do it. Or the Silver Shirts, or the Black Shirts or any other type of organization? The Congress did not do it."

(Murray's union, the Steelworkers, has adopted a constitutional amendment barring Communists from union office.)

As bad as the violation of a constitutional right, unions argue, is the discriminatory character of the provision against a single segment of the population. The Wagner Act, and supposedly the Taft-Hartley Act, were adopted to protect a fundamental—not a Congress-granted—right: the right of workers to organize.

Thus, the Steelworkers, the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, the Intl. Typographical Union, the Electrical Workers and numerous other unions are in effect told by the government which is supposed to dispense its protections and benefits to all the people: "We do not recognize your fundamental right to organize, and an employer may freely engage in illegal acts against your members. We will do nothing about it."

• Unions charged that the provision permitting employers to file damage suits in Federal Courts against unions for acts—whether authorized or not—of their "agents" would lead to endless litigation and raids on union treasuries.

To date about $15 million in damages have been filed against unions, with the amount still growing.

This provision of the law was widely represented as a move to make unions "responsible." Unions reply that they have never attempted to shirk responsibility for their acts. They do object, however, to being held responsible for actions of their members committed without the union's knowledge or against its will. They object to being dragged into Federal Courts for actions which, on the part of any other American, would normally be subject to local law enforcement.

They object to this added employer weapon for harassing striking unions. They object to the road it opens for company stooges within the union to commit illegal acts—start a picketline skirmish, say, or throw a brick through a window—in order that the company may file damage suits against the union.

• Unions charged that the ban against the closed shop would stir up labor strife and that the union shop election requirement would cause a useless deluge of cases for the NLRB, under which it would completely bog down.

THE Intl. Typographical Union and the maritime unions are the best examples of unions victimized by the closed shop provision. The ITU's many years of peaceful relations under a closed shop came to an end with the T-H act. The maritime unions, whose members had spilled precious blood in the '30s to oust the oppressive, graft-ridden "shape-up" system of hiring, now find their hiring hall declared illegal under T-H. Even the ship owners have admitted that the hiring hall produced stability and eradicated the old corruption on the waterfront.

As for the union shop elections, based on the theory that workers were being railroaded into unions by labor bosses against their will—98% have been won by the unions, despite the law's unique requirement that a majority of those in the bargaining unit, rather than a majority of those voting, must vote for the union shop. The 12,150-case backlog confronting the Board at the end of March attested to the avalanche under which the Board was buried.

• Unions charged that the so-called "free speech for employers" provision would amount to permitting employers to intimidate workers attempting to form a union.

TECHNICALLY, employers are permitted to say what they will on the subject of unions—provided they do not coerce or bribe or threaten employes. Unions argue that the NLRB has interpreted this provision in such a way that employers are permitted to effectively intimidate workers by innuendo.

For example, in the Wrought Iron Range Co. case, the employer, on the eve of the election told workers that it was their "bargaining agent"; warned them that the election results would "bear directly on your welfare and the welfare of those dependent on you"; said "the Company means to win this election"; urged employes to consider their "own future welfare" and mailed sample ballots to workers marked "'No' votes against the union." The board found none of those acts coercive or interfering with the election.

In the Babcock & Wilcox case, the NLRB ruled it legal for an employer to force his workers to listen to anti-union tirades. The employes, in effect, are denied the right not to listen.

• Unions charged that the T-H Act would create an atmosphere which would give rise to lawlessness against unions and their members.

Such instances have been numerous. Perhaps the most blatant example occurred in Kansas City, Kans., where police, at the prodding of the Chamber of Commerce, were instructed to "crack heads" of CIO Packinghouse Workers on strike at the Cudahy plant. At the time of the unprovoked police attack, there were 15 pickets on the line, there was no picket line incident, and there was no injunction in effect against the strikers. Strikers standing idly by on the sidewalks were clubbed and chased into the union hall. Others—some non-strikers—were pulled out of a restaurant and clubbed. Having fled into the union hall, workers were beaten to the floor. The union hall was wrecked.

IN NASHVILLE, TENN., Steelworkers striking at the Nashville Corp. experienced similar attacks. In Rome, Ga., CIO Textile Workers on strike at the Anchor Duck mill discovered that the company had obtained about 30 pistol-packing permits for its officials and strikebreakers. Two strikers have already been seriously wounded by these "toys."

• Unions charged that the T-H provisions banning expenditures for political purposes is unconstitutional.

The Supreme Court has already ruled that the Law cannot ban union publications from printing political material. The court has not yet ruled on the constitutionality of the section as a whole. In the process of obtaining the right to a free labor press, the CIO was forced to spend over $100,000 in legal and related expenses. And there are court tests still to come.

• Unions charged that the power to prevent a strike meant the power to reduce labor to involuntary servitude.

In defense of the T-H Act, newspapers pointed to the decrease in man-days lost due to strikes in the first half of this year, compared with the first half of last year. What they did not mention was:

(1) That there is no great virtue in forcing workers to take "no" as an answer to legitimate demands and to work against their will.

(2) That the number of strikes to force recognition — indicating the increasing number of employers who refuse to bargain—grew, as unions predicted they would, from 56 in the first quarter of 1947 to 80 in the first quarter of this year under T-H.

(3) That about half of the man-days lost in the first half of 1947 were due to the nationwide telephone strike. The absence of such an enormous toll in the first half of this year was due not to Taft-Hartley, but to numerous other factors. At this moment the telephone workers, after months of fruitless bargaining, are threatening another walkout. That they did not strike earlier in the year was not due to T-H.

Another large group of workers —the Steelworkers — were bound by a two-year contract with a no-strike clause. That they did not strike was not due to T-H. Had either of these unions walked out in the first half of this year, the figure for time lost during this year's first 6 months would have been far greater than last year's corresponding figure. In other industries the current period of business prosperity, prompted employers to come through with wage demands rather than force a walkout and miss out in production.

UE ADMINISTRATION WINS OVER CRITICS

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

THE 13th convention of the CIO Electrical Workers, held last week in Manhattan Center, New York City, backed the policies of the union's administration in an intra-union row over UE's program.

The 1000-delegate convention took these major actions:

1. Adopted, 3484 to 912, with some abstentions, a resolution entitled "Presidential Election, 1948," which indorsed no candidate, though UE Gen. Pres. Albert J. Fitzgerald is co-chairman of the Wallace Progressive Party. Fitzgerald spoke for the resolution, declaring that any indorsement would "split UE wide open."

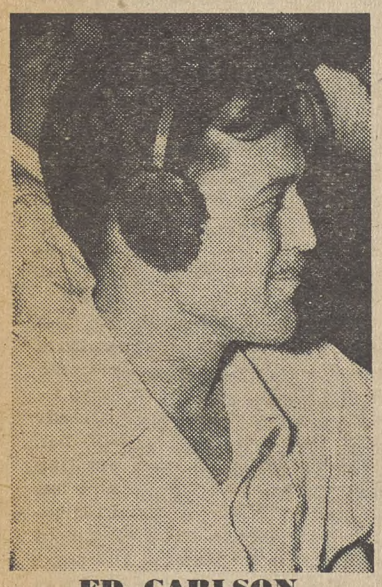
The action automatically killed a substitute resolution by Delegate James B. Carey, who is a member of Local 101, is the UE's former President, and who is also secretary-treasurer of CIO. Carey wanted UE to indorse CIO's national policy, which includes an indorsement of Pres. Truman.

2. Adopted by a voice vote a resolution entitled "Exposure of James B. Carey," which accused Carey of joining Reps. Charles Kersten (R., Wis.) and Carroll Kearns (R., Pa.) "in defaming the UE," of adding "to their slanders of his union," of lying "under oath to do so," and directing that the resolution be sent to CIO and its member unions and to the World Federation of Trade Unions and its members "so that all working people with whom he may have dealings may know of his acts". (Daily newspaper reporters estimate the vote was about 4 to 1.)

Having been apprised of the convention's attack on Carey, the executive board of Local 101 immediately went to New York, inviting Fitzgerald and Matles to appear before it and make their charges against Carey. Both failed to appear.

The board then announced: "In the absence of accusation by those who claim to know the facts, the board has decided unanimously that the public charge has no content; that they are rooted entirely in a campaign of slander and intimidation directed at any and all who dare oppose the prostitution of our union into an agency of Soviet foreign policy . . . The board expresses its full and complete confidence in the integrity of Carey."

3. Adopted a resolution which accused other CIO unions of raiding UE and stated "that the CIO must take steps at once to halt the raiding of one CIO union by another." Reporters estimated the vote was about 6 to 1. This automatically killed a substitute by Carey that would have urged locals which left UE to come back and which also assailed raiding.



ED CARLSON
This delegate to the UE convention wore ear muffs so he wouldn't have to listen to Henry Wallace.

Everybody Wrong

One delegate at the UE convention just couldn't be pleased.

He criticized the union's official organ, the UE News, because, he said, it bears too heavily on news about Henry Wallace—and criticized the CIO News because, he said, it bore too heavily on news about Pres. Truman.

4. Reelected Fitzgerald to his eighth consecutive term; Gen. Secy.-Treas. Julius Emspak to his 13th consecutive term and Dir. of Org. James J. Matles to his 12th consecutive term. The roll call margins were about 4 to 1 or better in each case.

5. Heard Henry A. Wallace read a speech in which he accused labor leaders who have indorsed Pres. Truman for re-election of "following a policy of appeasement." (He did not mention by name CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who is supporting Truman.)

The convention, before Wallace appeared, voted down a resolution to have a representative of CIO state its position to Wallace. Fitzgerald, in opposing such an invitation, said he did not wish to embarrass Pres. Murray and that, anyway, Carey could state the position of the majority of the CIO Executive Board.

6. Adopted, on a voice vote, a resolution assailing the peacetime draft, accusing it of being "part of a 'guns, not butter,' plan to force a war economy upon this country. It is an attempt to build a reserve of soldiers to be used as strike breakers against the interests of the unions and the people."

After a heated debate, the vote was taken and reporters estimate the count was 5 to 3 in favor, closest vote of the convention. Many delegates cried "roll call," but Fitzgerald urged that those which wished to be recorded as voting no, turn their names into the convention proceedings. Carey rose and supported Fitzgerald on this suggestion. Carey said he opposed the convention resolution because it departed from CIO policy in many respects.

Fitzgerald defeated Harry Block, a former vice president of UE, a member of Local 101 and now secretary-treasurer of the Pennsylvania State CIO, by a vote of 3652 to 719.

Emspak won over Anthony Cimino, of Local 202, Springfield, Mass., by a vote of 3614 to 838.

Matles was victor by a 3827 to 594 count over John Duffy, of Local 613, Pittsburgh.

Last year, Fitzgerald defeated Block, 3941 to 493; Emspak defeated James Click, 3872 to 787, anad Matles defeated Bart Enright, 3953 to 504.

THE convention opened with an officers' report on the year since the last convention, which told of a total membership of 570,000; of wage gains of $104,000,000—with $33,000,000 now being negotiated; of 400 locals in 29 states and Canada; of attacks by employers under Taft-Hartley—coupled with accusations of raiding;

Of an advance from 84% of its members to 91% of those who receive at least six paid holidays a year; of 306,000 employes who will get three weeks' vacation after 20 years, compared to 246,000 last year; of 461 contracts carrying group insurance.

There were 1501 plants covered by contract.

Two other incidents occurred during the convention:

● The U. S. Immigration authorities allowed only seven of 18 elected Canadian delegates to cross the border to attend the UE convention. Authorities also arrested UE Vice Pres. C. S. Jackson as he landed at LaGuardia Field after an airplane hop from Canada, and took him to Ellis Island.

On being told that his hearing would not be held until after the convention, Jackson waived a hearing and flew back to Canada.

● Fitzgerald first ordered from the room and then barred from the convention a Life magazine photographer and researcher who said they were taking a picture story of the convention. The photographer, Tony Linck, said his camera had been damaged, some film taken from him and that he was "manhandled" by some delegates and sergeants-at-arms. Fitzgerald accused the two of violating a pledge not to take pictures on the floor.

THE debate on the Presidential election was led by Carey and Fitzgerald.

Carey pleading for CIO's program, accused Wallace of giving "lip service" to civil liberties, citing several instances to emphasize his point.

He recalled that he and George L-P Weaver, director of the CIO Committee Against Discrimination and a Negro, had, during Wallace's term as Secretary of Commerce, ordered meals while waiting for a plane at the Washington Natl. Airport (the airport, which is in Virginia, is under the jurisdiction of the Commerce Dept.).

The waitress took their orders, but when the food arrived, only one meal was brought, that for Carey. Carey and Weaver protested and she brought the manager, who ordered Weaver to leave, because the manager said, his presence was in violation of the laws of Virginia.

He threatened to bring the police. Carey dared him to bring the Natl. Guard, since this was government property, but the manager stalked away and the two CIO men shared the one meal. A protest visit to Wallace, Carey said, brought the statement that we've got to operate under the laws of Virginia.

But, Carey said, Secy. of War Stimson, "not a vocal opponent of discrimination," had ordered the end of cafeteria segregation at the Pentagon, also in Virginia, where the restaurants are also operated by private enterprise.

FITZGERALD stated that the majority resolution had two broad principles (1) allows free political expression and (2) decides the issue of whether or not UE should indorse a candidate.

There is a wide difference of opinion in UE, in the labor movement and in the country at large in this year's campaign, he declared. "Speaking for the general officers," he said, "we feel each member should be permitted to vote his own conscience. Some have questioned my right to be a leader of the Progressive Party. If they try to take that right from me, you are denying free political expression.

"Our majority motion is not an indorsement of anyone, including Wallace. Anyone who interprets it to be an indorsement is a damnable liar. As long as I hold office, I retain the right to be independent politically.

"There must be no regimentation in CIO."

Mine Host

Though the UE convention was held in New York City, which is part of District 4, the official host for the gathering was District 3, upper New York State.

Reason: convention was originally slated for Buffalo, was transferred to New York.

OPPONENTS: James B. Carey (left) smiles at cheers and boos from the delegates to the UE convention as UE Pres. Albert Fitzgerald informs the gathering Carey is about to speak.

IN THE debate over the resolution against Carey, the accused stated his own position. He pointed out that he had refused to appear on invitation before the House Labor Sub-committee of Reps. Kersten and Kearns, and that he finally appeared on subpoena. He denied violating any UE rules or harming the union.

He challenged the convention to send the issue "to the proper level," which is the local union level, he declared. He said he was willing to submit his case to a trial committee of his own local, 101, and also of Fitzgerald's local, 201. "If I am guilty of anything," he asserted, "it is of being anti-Communist, for I believe that Communists will do business with anyone, even Hitler."

Fitzgerald declared he had agreed to appear on invitation before the subcommittee because "I will go anywhere in the U. S. to defend our union.

"I accuse Carey of a sinister plot to force several companies to quit dealing with UE and, if they don't, to force them to do so by adverse publicity. We won't let that happen.

"As to Carey's invitation to appear before my local, I don't want him to, I don't want him to contaminate them.

"I am no kind of a Communist, an anti-Communist or any other kind. I think there was deliberate collusion between Carey and the subcommittee."

Several speakers took the floor to deny Carey's charges that Westinghouse and RCA had fired employes because they were anti-Communists and also his charge that companies would rather deal with pro-Communist UE leadership because such a leadership would be more apt to go easy.

Carey repeated his charges.

ON THE raiding issue, Marie Reed, a delegate from Cleveland, accused CIO Reg. Dir. Sam Sponseller of aiding and abetting raiding. Vice Pres. Ernest DeMaio of Chicago accused Carey of company unionism.

Matles ridiculed reports that UE would leave CIO. He declared this "cannibalism" of raiding within CIO must be halted or CIO cannot survive. He assailed what he called the "swivel chair" attitude of some CIO officers.

WALLACE, when he appeared in the hall, was greeted with cheers intermingled with boos, both of which continued throughout his talk. A large number of delegates took part in neither.

He did not depart from his prepared speech, even where it stated that "of the 56 candidates that the CIO rates as 80% liberal or better, there are very few whom we will oppose."

(CIO-PAC has analyzed the areas in which the Progressives have Congressional candidates and found that the statement concerning the 56 candidates, first made by Wallace's campaign manager, C. B. Baldwin, is far from accurate.)

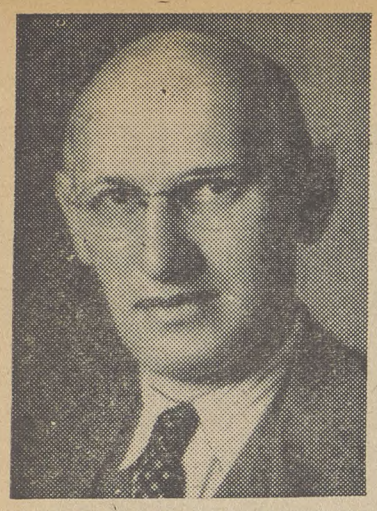
Wallace also assailed labor leaders who back Truman's "bipartisan foreign policy."

"But he who supports Truman on grounds of foreign policy," he said, "supports a policy which would regiment American workers in a labor front led, not by Mr. Murray or by Mr. Green, but by the gauleiters of big business, by the American Robert Leys."

Danger

UE Pres. Albert Fitzgerald, recalling that Rep. Kersten had started to read excerpts from Stalin to him during the hearing over UE's internal policies, declared:

"If those Congressmen don't stop reading Stalin, they may find themselves in the Communist Party."



ATTENDS PARLEY: Frank Rosenblum, secretary-treasurer of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and CIO's member of the executive bureau of the World Federation of Trade Unions, who will attend the WFTU meeting in Paris starting Sept. 17. CIO Secy.-Treas. James Carey and Intl. Affairs Director Michael Ross will also be present at the Paris meeting.

NCSC Ousts Mills; 'Lies,' He Says

Saul Mills, secretary of the Greater New York CIO Council, has been removed from membership in the Natl. CIO Community Services Committee, the committee's chairman, Irving Abramson, has announced.

Abramson said Mills was accused of disloyalty to the committee and to CIO (the New York City CIO Council has refused to follow CIO policy against the Progressive Party); non-cooperation with the committee; failure to carry out committee decisions; violation of the committee's program and sabotage of its work; contempt for CIO's rules and policies.

Mills, in reply, charged the accusations against him were "lies."

Names

The Oil Workers' International Union has had three names.

When it was formed in 1917, it was called the Oil Field and Gas Well Workers, AFL. Later, the name was changed to Oil Field, Gas Well and Refinery Workers. In 1937, when the union helped found CIO, the name became OWIU.

Vic Reuther Says:

Marshall Plan Endangered By Confused U. S. Policy

- American policy in Germany must learn to distinguish between true democrats and "Nazis on the rebound."
- If we fail to give help to true democrats, our Marshall Plan aims and our firmness against Communist challenges are likely to fall by the wayside.

These were the conclusions voiced in a radio speech last week by Victor Reuther, CIO auto union education director, just back from a month's visit to Germany and Austria. He talked with numerous union officials and with American military government officers during his travels.

"The Marshall Plan is in danger," Reuther—a brother of the UAW president—declared. "It is threatened as much by the confusions of our own European policy as by any current or impending Communist efforts to discredit it or impede it."

If we really want to stop Communism, Reuther said in a Mutual radio network talk, we must help "the forgotten men of Berlin"—veteran foes of Nazism—"develop in Germany a democratic alternative to Communism."

DEMOCRATIC leadership can best come from the German union movement, which is larger now than before the rise of Hitler. Its leaders, who have fought every move towards dictatorship, are not being listened to enough by American policy makers, the UAW official charged.

Germany is the "key to European recovery, and therefore to the success of the Marshall Plan," Reuther said, but there is serious conflict between our aims under the Plan and the "day-to-day operation of our policy in Germany."

"As a result of this conflict, our best friends in Germany—those who fought Hitler yesterday and who are fighting Stalinism today—are hurt and bewildered, while our enemies, both Communists and former Nazis, are comforted in their struggle for power," he asserted.

WELCOME TO UAW: Victor Reuther, education director of the CIO auto union, was welcomed to Vienna by Johann Boehm (left), head of the Free Austrian Trade Union Federation. Reuther, brother of the UAW head, toured Austria and Germany for a month, meeting with labor union officials.

America's big problem is how to use German industry to promote European recovery while "guarding against the revival of Germany's war-making power," Reuther declared.

"We cannot resolve this dilemma until we learn to distinguish our friends from those who are not our friends in Germany."

HE said that we are going to have to choose between "reprisal and reconstruction," and that the latter choice will be the wise one. Our policy, he added, should be directed to all-out production, and end to wholesale dismantling of factories and machines, and a firm stand against returning controls to former Nazis who keep their old viewpoints.

"We must make a clear-cut choice between business and professional men who supported Hitler and those trade-unionists, and other democrats, who fought Hitler and landed in Dachau for their pains," Reuther said.

But in the western zones, controlled by the American, French and British, we saw "an unmistakable trend towards reviving the social and economic groups that supported the Nazis and who formed the respectable core of Germany's aggressive nationalism."

While this group increases its privileges, organized workers are being kept from policy decisions; their unions are being harassed; and we are letting down our best friends in that country.

If the American people do not force a change in policy, another war in Europe may be the result, Reuther predicted.

Tempers Flare Over WFTU Resolution at TUC

SHARP tension between a big right wing and a small but vocal left wing marked the annual convention of the powerful British Trades Union Congress last week at Margate, England.

In an atmosphere of unprecedented bitterness against some Communist delegates, the right wing carried test votes by margins ranging from 15-1 to 25-1. The 800 delegates represent some eight million organized British workers.

Left wing efforts to push through a program boomeranged at several points. Most dramatic was an effort to tie the TUC to a statement of full support of the World Federation of Trade Unions and the actions of all its representatives.

The resolution touched off an explosive speech by Arthur Deakin, secretary of Britain's largest union — the 1,300,000-member Transport & General Workers—and president of the WFTU. After listening to speeches by Deakin and others, the resolution of support to the WFTU was voted down.

THE action, however, does not remove the British group from the WFTU, but it appears to give authority to the TUC leadership to dis-affiliate if they so decide. Deakin said he would remain as WFTU president until his term expires in December, and that he would preside at the WFTU executive bureau meeting at Paris starting Sept. 17.

(CIO will be represented at the meeting by Frank Rosenblum of the Clothing Workers, a WFTU vice-president; Sec.-Treas. James Carey, and Intl. Affairs Director Michael Ross.)

Deakin charged that the two unions — engineers and tobacco workers—who sponsored the resolution on the world labor group were "trying to put him on the spot." Leaders of Communist labor organizations which are WFTU members, Deakin said, would try to use such a statement of all-out support against him at WFTU meetings.

SPONSORS of the resolution, "who take their orders from Moscow," would like to see that happen, Deakin said.

The resolution, in addition to supporting the WFTU, would have committed the British unions to resisting attempts to destroy unity of the world labor group. Russian and other Communists in the WFTU have used this charge against spokesmen of both the CIO and the British in their efforts to prevent Communist domination of WFTU policies and practices.

Reported statements by Deakin that the WFTU is Communist-dominated are at odds with the attitude of CIO Secy.-Treas. Carey, who has reported that efforts by non-Communists have thwarted attempts to make the WFTU an instrument of Soviet policy. Carey has urged a strong and positive program to follow up victories over the Communist bloc at recent WFTU meetings.

THE TUC convention also voted down resolutions calling for immediate nationalization of the iron and steel industry and for withdrawal of armed forces from Greece. Delegates also voted condemnation of "wildcat strikes," whose number has been increasing in recent months.

Miss Florence Hancock, TU chairman, said that unofficial work stoppages might sometimes be justified, but that magnification of petty grievances by "mischief makers" should not be permitted to hold up production.

Problems of labor's economic needs in a country controlled by a Labor Government and facing a high quota of goods for export were also discussed at the convention.

Sir Stafford Cripps, the Labor government's economic chief, appealed for support of the administration's wage-price-profit stabilization program, but leaders of about 20 unions said they would continue to press for pay boosts.

H. Talmadge, Civil Rights Foe, Wins

HERMAN TALMADGE, bitter foe of the President's civil rights program, will be Georgia's next governor. He won nomination—to the accompaniment of ugly reports of anti-Negro pressure—in the state primaries, and is assured of election in November.

Georgia's voting was heavy, thanks to abolition of the polltax a few years ago and lifting of restrictions on Negro voting in the Democratic primaries. More than a million people were registered, and about 75% of them apparently went to the polls.

Talmadge's victory over Gov. M. E. Thompson was substantial, but not nearly as decisive as the "unit vote" indicated. Georgia operates under a county unit system like the U. S. Electoral College, with the winner in each county getting all the unit votes from that district. The system cuts down the influence of big cities like Atlanta, and gives added voting strength to back-country rural areas.

Seven of Georgia's Congressmen and Sen. Russell—an ardent anti-Trumanite — were unopposed in the primaries and thus guaranteed election in November. In three other contests, incumbent Congressmen won re-nomination.

Although a record-breaking 141,000 Negroes were registered, they were placed under heavy pressure. Ku Klux Klan crosses blazed in three counties, 558 names of Negroes were struck from the voting list in Griffin, and in Augusta only three Negroes were permitted to vote every hour.

In three western state primaries, voting varied from light to heavy.

UTAH: Rep. Walter Granger (D) was unopposed in his bid for renomination from the state's first district. Granger, a strong Congressional liberal, voted against the Taft-Hartley Act and supported a progressive program.

He'll be opposed in the elections by Republican David Wilson, a lawyer.

Democratic Gov. Herbert Maw took an easy lead in the race for renomination. He'll be opposed by GOP candidate J. B. Lee, who gave Maw a close fight four years ago.

NEVADA: Only 30% of the registered voters went to the polls in sparsely-settled Nevada to vote for candidates for the state's one Congressional seat. Rep. C. H. Russell (R), who supported T-H, was unopposed in the GOP primary. He'll run against Walter S. Baring, Reno Democratic city councilman, in the elections.

ARIZONA: Arizona's primary was marked chiefly by votes of several thousand reservation Indians, voting for the first time—thanks to a Supreme Court decision knocking out a state law which had barred them from the polls. Nearly two-thirds of the registered voters turned out.

Rep. John Murdock (D.), who voted against T-H, led a field of three in the contest for renomination in the state's first district. Rep. Harless (D), another opponent of T-H, trailed in the race for Democratic nomination for governor.

900 People Die Needlessly Every Day

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

Let's assume that every man, woman, and child in Rochester, N. Y., were to be killed the day after tomorrow.

The nation would be shocked. Doctors, nurses, health services, relief and sanitation experts would be rushed to the scene. There'd be probes, investigations, and action. The American people would demand that there be no repetition of such mass death.

Yet every year in these United States, some 325,000 people—about the number who live in Rochester—die needlessly. They don't have to die. There's medical and scientific knowledge to prevent their deaths—yet little is done about ft.

Last week Federal Security Administrator Oscar Ewing set forth a plan for halting the needless killing of Americans—young, old and middle-aged.

In a history-making report to the President, Ewing surveyed the country's resources, its health needs, and the means at hand to improve the health of the people. The report is certain to be attacked by Republicans and vested-interest groups.

BUT despite these attacks, it's also certain to be a permanent milestone in the country's effort to achieve decent health for every citizen.

"Every year, 325,000 people die wh[illegible] we have the knowledge and the skills to save," says the FSA report. "Every year, the nation loses 4,300,000 man-years of work through bad health.

"Every year, the nation loses $27 billion in national wealth through sickness, and partial and total disability. . . .

Death, of course, is inevitable. But death can be postponed to a "normal" age. We've already made a first step in that direction.

TODAY'S baby can count on living 20 years longer than a baby born at the turn of the century. Sweeping epidemics, bringing death in their trail, have been "virtually eliminated." We've learned ways of taking better care of ourselves, and of treating diseases which once meant a certain call for the undertaker.

But even with all these improvements, 900 people will die today who could and should have been kept alive. One out of four deaths still can be prevented.

What do we need to keep those 900 people alive?

The nation's health report spells it out:

1. Health insurance—"to make it possible for everyone to have comprehensive care without worrying about meeting sudden bills out of current pay, without exhausting savings or going into debt, and without being dependent on charity care."

2. Eniugh doctors and dentists to meet local needs and make their services available at hospitals, clinics, offices and homes.

3. Community health programs—covering food inspection, sanitation, control of pests, etc.

4. Community clinics—particularly important for smaller towns and farm areas.

5. Community hospitals—large enough to care for all ordinary needs.

6. A system of district and special hospitals to provide services that are not available in the smaller community hospitals.

7. Medical centers—at least one in every state, for research, refresher courses, training in new methods, etc.

AT present, we're lagging behind on all seven needs.

Most serious is the high cost of medical care.

The U. S. report says this:

"Perhaps the basic lack of our entire health effort is the absence of any method that would permit the individual, regardless of the level of his personal income, to obtain the kind of services he needs to achieve better health.

"A scant 20% of our people are able to afford all the medical care they need. About half our families—those with incomes of $3,000 or less—find it hard, if not impossible to pay for even routine medical care.

"Another 30% of American families with incomes between $3,000 and $5,000 would have to make great sacrifices or go into debt to meet the costs of a severe or chronic illness."

Spending of $4 billion a year—by the federal, state and local governments—will produce "an annual return—in national wealth—of several times that amount. The returns to the nation in terms of human welfare, of added national strength and vitality, are beyond dollar value."

THE goal set forth by the FSA report to Pres. Truman is simply this:

"To assure for every individual his utmost degree of health . . . through providing complete health and medical services to everyone in the nation; to do this for every man, woman and child, without regard to his race or religion, the color of his skin, his place of national origin or the place he lives in our land, and without regard for his personal economic status."

To reach that goal, the Ewing report recommended immediate legislation, to be followed by a three-year "tooling up" period and completion of all aspects of the program within 10 years.

The health insurance set-up outlined by Ewing calls for each person to pay one-half of one per cent of his income—up to a total income of $4,800—to the health fund. After three years, these dues would be increased as more health facilities came into use.

A PRIME feature of the program would be guarantees to the patient as to choice of doctors, dentists and hospitals; and similar assurances to doctors that they would not be "regimented" into operating under the plan, or of having patients "forced" on them.

"I recommend that the President continue to urge upon the Congress the earliest possible enactment of government health insurance in some such terms as outlined in this report," Ewing concluded.

Similar—though less detailed—recommendations were made to the 80th Congress, but Congress refused even—to consider them.

And the 900 needless deaths continue every day.

CIO'S GIFT TO CARE: A $10,000 check—to buy 1,000 food packages for workers in foreign countries—was presented to Pres. Murray Lincoln of CARE by CIO Pres. Philip Murray last week. In all, CIO Community Service Committee has handled purchases of over $500,000 in CARE packages. At the presentation ceremony in Washington were: Marcel Flory, French embassy; Irving Abramson, head of CIO-CSC; Pres. Murray; Murray Lincoln; Ivor Thomas, British embassy; Leo Perlis, director of CIO-CSC. The presentation ceremony was at the Washington Hotel.

More Aid Urged For Needy Kids

ANOTHER report urging steps to cut out the decay in the country's social security system came last week from a 17-man Senate advisory committee.

Like two earlier reports, the statement spotlighted weaknesses in Uncle Sam's handling of care and insurance for the aged, dependent kids, and the sick and disabled.

The 17-man group—on which CIO was represented—serves as an Advisory Council on Social Security to the Senate Finance Committee. The group is headed by Edward Stettinius, Secretary of State during the late years of the war.

Top suggestion in the third report was for an increase in aid payments to needy, dependent children. It called for U. S. payments to the states on a dollar-for-dollar matching basis with state expenditures—to give dependent kids an income along the lines of those now made for the needy aged and blind.

IT urged that Uncle Same give the states $15 for each $20 in average monthly payments for this group of children, and that it provide 50-50 payments over that figure.

A second major recommendation in the Council's report called on the federal government to bear part of the cost of general relief payments now made by the states. It pointed out that insurance is the foundation of the social security system—but that relief is essential for those who can't qualify for the insurance benefits.

Relief payments are slumping at the present time, the Council said, because state governments tend to put their money into programs where they can receive U. S. aid payments.

If earlier recommendations to strengthen social security had been adopted, the Council said, there would be a greatly reduced need for relief.

"Employed and self-employed persons would (if social security were improved) earn protection for themselves and their families while working, and—in the event of old age, permanent and total disability, or death—they or their families would receive insurance benefits," the Council pointed out.

CIO's representative on the Council is Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers Union. Other members of the group come from industry, agriculture, universities and civic organizations.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

CIO Reg. Dir. Frank Bonacci reports the Amalgamated Clothing Workers won an NLRB election at the American Linen Supply Co., Salt Lake City, Utah. The ACWA received 96 votes. 26 were cast for no union.

George Brown, CIO Woodworkers Director of Organization, reports victories at the Wine Glass Ranch Lumber Co. at Bonner, Mont., and the Longbell Lumber Co., Longview, Wash. The Bonner election was for collective bargaining certification and the Longview election was for union shop.

CIO Reg. Dir. W. B. Taylor reports that the Woodworkers of America won an NLRB election at Mengel Co. of Louisville, Ky. For the past eight years the AFL Carpenter's Union was the bargaining agency at this plant.

CIO Reg. Dir. Delmond Garst reports the following union shop victories for the CIO Shoeworkers in plants of the International Shoe Co.: St. Clair, Mo., 310 for, 12 against; St. Genevieve, Mo., 143 for, 7 against; Madison and Jefferson, Mo., 231 for, 34 against; Easton Boot and Shoe Co., 103 for, 1 against; Higginsville, Mo., 373 for, 4 against; Quincy, Mo., 440 for, 24 against; Quincy, Mo., 440 for, 24 against; Dexter, Mo., 226 for, 32 against; Jefferson City, Mo., 204 for, 61 against; Florida, Ill., 215 for, 7 against; Cape Girardiau, Mo., 1025 for, 95 against. Dave Wilson of the Shoe workers union was in charge. Director Garst also reports that the CIO Chemical Workers defeated the AFL in an NLRB election at the Laclede Gas Company, St. Louis, Mo., by a vote of 1121 to 773.

Pres. Harry Sayre of the CIO Paperworkers reports a victory in an NLRB election in the J. N. Deutsch Co., Reading, Pa. Area Dir. Charles Bridgewater and Rep. Ernest Kornfeld were in charge. The following union security elections were also won by the Paperworkers: Shellmar Products Co., Mt. Vernon, Ohio, 475 yes, 2 no; Shellmar Products Co., Zanesville, Ohio, 71 yes, 4 no; Robert Gair Co., Tonawanda, N. Y., 206 yes, 13 no; Mengel Co., Fulton, N. Y., 41 yes, 5 no; Hinde & Dauch Paper Co., Buffalo, N. Y., 48 yes, 3 no; Clifton Paper Board Co., Clifton, N. J., 195 yes, 2 no; Gebhardt Folding Box Co., Dayton, Ohio, 62 yes, 2 no; Sonoco Products Co., Garwood, N. J., 84 yes, 1 no; J. C. Blair Co., Huntingdon, Pa., 252 yes, 1 no; Milprint, Inc., DePere, Wisc., 92 yes, 2 no; Oxford-Miami Paper Co., West Carrollton, Ohio, 346 yes, 8 no; Pioneer Paper Stock Co., Chicago, Ill., 271 yes, 2 no; Milprint, Inc., Stoughton, Wis., 14 yes, 5 no; National Envelope Div., U.S. Envelope Co., Waukegan, Ill., 189 yes, 18 no; Luke, Md., and Williamsburg, Pa., mills of West Virginia Pulp & Paper Co. voted 1609 yes, 128 no.

CIO Reg. Dir. George Craig reports the CIO Chemical Workers won collective bargaining rights at the Foote Mineral Co., Exton, Pa. CIO received 70 votes in this election to 20 for no union. William S. Rittenberry was in charge for the Chemical Workers and was assisted by CIO Reps. Victor Ulivitch and Ben Stahl.

UAW Rep. A. L. Patton in charge. Dir. Miley also reports an election victory at the GM Euclid Station Wagon plant with 392 of the workers voting for the UAW and only 9 against. UAW Rep. John Troeter was in charge and was assisted by Charles Beckman, John DeVito and Bert Foster, officers of UAW Local 45 and David Better, chairman of the bargaining committee of the Euclid plant.

CIO Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone reports that in a NLRB election the employes of the Royal Typewriter Co., Hartford, Conn., voted 4954 for UAW to 381 for no union. The campaign was under the direction of UAW Reg. Dir. Charles Kerrigan.

CIO Reg. Dir. Chester C. Dusten reports the employes of the Great Lakes Carbon Corp., Terrobone, Oreg., voted 32 to 1 in favor of a union shop.

CIO. Reg. Dir. Roy W. Atkinson reports the CIO Steelworkers won an election in the Tacoma, Wash., plant of Permanent Metals. The vote was USA 129, AFL 85. Hugh Matthews, Steelworkers' representative, was in charge of the election.

CIO Reg. Dir. George DeNucci reports a 3-to-1 election victory for the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union at the Logan Milk Co., Logan, Ohio. Intl. Rep. Jerry Hughes was in charge.

Thomas J. Gallagher, Director of Organization for the CIO Shipbuilding Workers Union, reports winning a union security election at the Dravo Shipyard, Wilmington, Del., by a vote of 137 to 4.

TROUBLED OIL: Top photo shows the kind of peaceful picketing the CIO Oil Workers want at the plants of the six California companies where they were forced to strike to protect pay gains won in Texas and the East. Lower photo shows how police made peaceful picketing impossible at the Richmond, Calif., plant of Standard Oil by tossing tear gas bombs at the pickets. The police started the fracas by helping AFL maintenance workers in an attempt to cross the picket lines.

In New York, They Don't Like Dewey

VIN SULLIVAN
President, City CIO Council
SYRACUSE

"Everybody's working on the elections in Syracuse—CIO, AFL, railroad brotherhoods, District 50 of the miners. It's a joint action program—and we're going to ring plenty of doorbells. We're supporting Dick Mosher (Democratic war vet) for Congress and we're going to really work at it. Rep. Richlman's record is !&xx!"

CLARICE BERSHATSKY
Clothing Workers' Local 400
NEW YORK CITY

"I'm a shop steward at the Howard Clothes plant. We've already been ringing doorbells in Brooklyn. Most of the people I talk to are for Truman. Our local's getting its real PAC campaign under way—and when our 700 members get down to work, we'll get plenty of results. We know there's a big job ahead, but I think we'll get it done."

WILLIAM HENDERSON
Steelworkers' Local 2601
BUFFALO

"We're organizing on a block basis. We're raising dollars for PAC. We're aiming for high registration and to get out a big vote. I think the results will be tremendous. I don't think Tom Dewey will get many votes in our plant. With organization, we'll get a tremendous vote for Truman."

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

UNIONS up in New York state want a little sympathy from CIO in the rest of the country.

The Empire State unions don't want Tom Dewey in the White House. But if Tom doesn't get to the White House, he'll spend another two years in Albany as governor of the country's most populous state.

Win or lose, says New York CIO leaders, they'll be stuck with Dewey. They'd like the rest of CIO throughout the country to appreciate their efforts to spare the nation a reign of Dewey-ism.

Last week, at a state PAC conference in mid-state Syracuse, some 600 delegates from locals of all but one CIO national union in the state got down to the business of mapping their campaign for the November elections.

- The New York state unionists want Harry Truman to serve another term as president.
- They don't like Tom Dewey's record in the state, they don't like his silence on important national issues, and they don't want him in Washington to run the government.
- They don't like Henry Wallace's third party and its splitting tactics. It could result in throwing the state to Dewey, in causing defeat of liberal Congressmen, and preventing the election of liberals to some seats now held by anti-labor Republicans.
- They're ready to work—on a ward and precinct and door-by-door basis—to win votes for Truman and other CIO-supported liberal candidates.

Without dissent, the two-day convention enthusiastically endorsed Pres. Truman for re-election and voiced its strong belief in Dewey's "unfitness for the highest office in the land."

The state CIO indictment of Dewey said labor knows the governor as "the boastful author of the Condon-Wadlin Law, which deprives our teachers and all of the other state and municipal employes of basic democratic rights—a law which reduces them to the status of second-class citizens.

"Labor in New York State knows Thomas E. Dewey as the governor who again and again refused to grant our school-teachers essential cost of living salary increases, and who has consistently opposed measures designed to improve our educational system...

"Labor in New York State knows Dewey as a governor who has resisted all attempts to provide adequate state housing, desperately needed."

And, the state PAC pointed out, he "remained silent" on important national issues—wage-hour law, Taft-Hartley, price controls, housing.

Political Prize

New York's 47 electoral votes—out of a national total of 531—are a rich political prize.

Four years ago, FDR carried New York with 3,304,000 votes. Dewey got 2,987,647.

In the 1946 Congressional elections, the New York vote slipped from 6.3 million to 5 million.

This year, says PAC Director Jack Kroll, the New York vote must be "at least seven million" to carry the state for Pres. Truman. That's "not too much to ask"—for in 1944 less than 70% of the eligibles voted.

"The people will not be fooled by this silence," the convention said. "The people know that Dewey and the Republican Congress see eye to eye. The people know that Dewey in accepting the nomination of the Republican party accepted that party's Congressional record."

The resolution of support to Pres. Truman was patterned after the CIO Executive Board statement. It noted failures of the 80th Congress, contrasted Pres. Truman's program with that of the Republicans, praised the President's civil rights stand and pledged active union backing to his campaign.

The Third Party campaign was subject to bitter criticism by the speakers. They charged it would split the liberal vote throughout the nation—and particularly in New York, one of the centers of Wallace's voting strength.

Comments from some of the CIO leaders:

Louis Hollander, State CIO President: "Henry Wallace has shown most clearly in his utterances . . . that he is a spite candidate with personal grudges to settle . . . If there is to be an independent political party of labor, it will come from labor itself, not from the peeve of a single person."

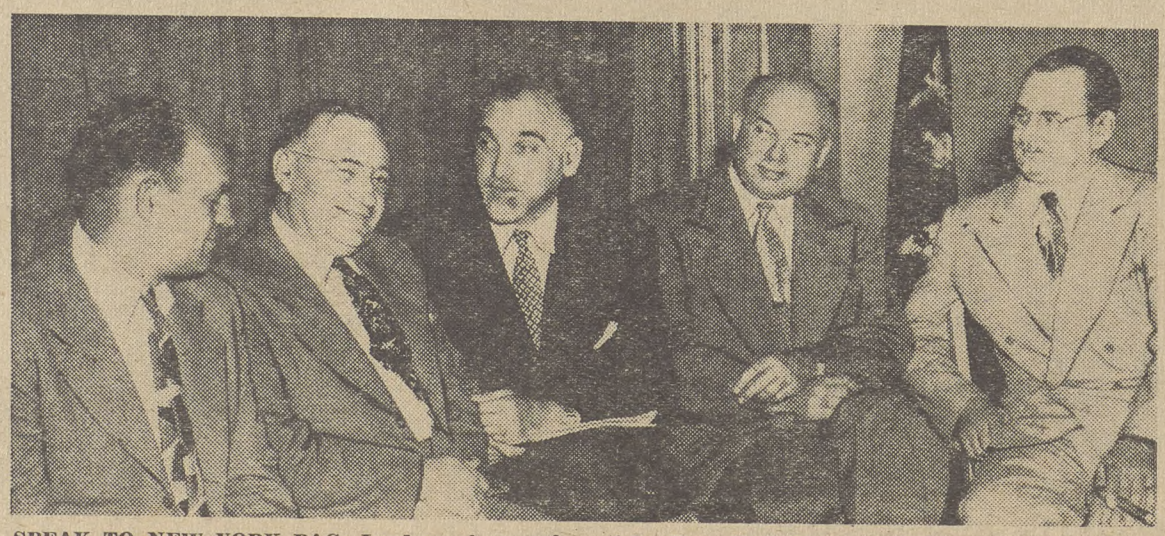
Jack Kroll, director of CIO-PAC: "In 85 instances (of Congressional races) the only function of the Third Party is to split whatever liberal vote there is . . . There they are—all bouncing around on the same mattress—Tom Dewey and Henry Wallace and Strom Thurmond, Joe Grundy and Beanie Baldwin, John Rankin, Fielding Wright and Glen Taylor. They all have the same dream—the defeat of Pres. Truman."

Jacob Potofsky, president of Clothing Workers: "I don't care what the polls show—they indicate only lethargy among the people, not what the people can do and will do if they vote . . Who dares call Philip Murray a misleader of labor because he refuses to support Wallace? Phil Murray is a great leader. I'll stake everything I have on Philip Murray . . . And I call on Henry Wallace to do a service to the common man by withdrawing from the Presidential campaign."

CIO Secy.-Treas. James Carey charged that Wallace, as vice-president and secretary of commerce, failed dismally to practice the anti-discrimination policy that he now preaches.

Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers said the union's 55,000 New York members are solidly for Truman. He revealed that a trio of Communist leaders had demanded last year that Quill and the TWU support Wallace "even if it splits the union down the middle."

Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers said Truman's record is good as FDR could have done "with the millstone of the 80th Congress"; and Pres. Joe Curran of the Maritime Union warned that labor should prepare, in this election, for the "toughest fight in 50 years—a fight for survival."



SPEAK TO NEW YORK PAC: Leaders of several big CIO unions addressed the New York state CIO-PAC conference in Syracuse. Some of them, on the speakers' stand, l. to r.: Pres. Joe Curran, maritime; Pres. Emil Rieve, textile; Pres. Jack Potofsky, clothing; Pres. Louis Hollander and Sec.-Treas. Harold Garno, state CIO council. Delegates, without dissent, indorsed Truman for President.

Truman Calls Taft's Attempt To Put Heat on NLRB 'Entirely Improper'

"The Executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America." — Art. II, Sec. 1, U. S. Constitution.

UNDER the Constitution, the administrative agencies of the federal government are responsible to the President. Congress passes laws and sets policies—and the executive agencies carry them out.

Last week Pres. Truman cracked down hard on an effort by Sen. Taft and others to not only to make policy but to direct how government agencies should carry out their business.

His action involved the Natl. Labor Relations Board and the Congressional Joint Committee on Management-Labor Relations, set up by the Taft-Hartley Act. The committee has been called a "watch-dog" group to report on labor-industry affairs and to recommend new legislation.

When the group went beyond its Legislative powers, the President stepped in.

THE incident started July 28 when Sen. Taft—a member of the joint committee—called three NLRB officials to his office. General Counsel Robert Denham was ill, but two assistants—David Findling and Winthrop Johns—showed up.

The two men had been told the meeting would discuss Taft-Hartley enforcement. When they reached Taft's office, they found present the publishers of four Chicago papers, according to a letter from Findling to the President. All four papers have been struck by the AFL Typographical Union for months, and NLRB cases against the union are in various stages of legal development.

Findling's letter said that Taft voiced concern that an NLRB injunction against the union was not being enforced, that a "serious breakdown of enforcement procedure" had taken place, and that the ITU case was a symbol of Taft-Hartley's power. As Findling reported the incident:

After Taft left the meeting, the newspaper publishers sat around discussing the case with the NLRB officials. They suggested that it might be well to strengthen the anti-union injunction to stop practices still going on, and the paper representatives said their newsapers would be represented at further talks.

NLRB AID TELLS STORY: Davied P. Findling, right, associate general counsel of the NLRB, admitted in a letter to President Truman that he and Winthrop A. Johns, left, another associate general counsel of the agency, attended a conference at the office of Sen. Taft when the Ohio senator indicated that the injunction obtained by the NLRB against the Typographical Union should be enforced. Also present were representatives of four Chicago newspapers, where the union has been on strike several months. Findling said that Robert N. Denham, NLRB's general counsel was not present because of illness.

PRES. TRUMAN, in a letter to Findling, minced no words in describing his views of Taft's meddling into the NLRB's handling of the case.

"It seems to me that it is entirely improper for any Senator, no matter what his rank in the Senate may be, to attempt to put the heat on one of the executive departments," the President wrote.

He recalled that when the new Labor Board was set up after passage of T-H, he had warned them to remember that the NLRB is responsible to the White House, and that they should be "immune to pressure from the legislative branch of the government."

Sen. Taft—ignoring the deep issues involved—tried to pass off the President's letter as a political attempt to "curry favor with the labor bosses who control the labor publicity to which he is looking for help in the election."

In a statement bristling with fury at unions, Taft charged that the President had been responsible for encouraging "open defiance" of T-H by "some of the more radical labor bosses."

Taft also voiced the "greatest confidence" in Denham, NLRB counsel, who often has been attacked by unions for hostility to organized labor.

ARTHUR J. GOLDBERG, CIO general counsel, said the correspondence in the case "fully substantiates" charges made by CIO that Republican members of the joint Congressional Committee have "used their offices to insure . . . that the Taft-Hartley Act will be applied and enforced against labor in the most restrictive way possible."

THhe CIO lawyer said the joint committee "has been used as an official mouthpiece of employers, for the purpose of intervening in labor disputes against unions."

He recalled that Sen. Ball (R., Minn.), head of the committee, had suggested that Denham should "clear" major decisions with the Congressional group, and cited pressure tactics used by committee members against an NLRB trial examiner.

"If the present trend continues," Goldberg said, the committee will "become purely a pressure agency for employers openly dedicated to making administration of the Taft-Hartley Act even more repressive than is warranted by the letter of the law."

Maine Voters Defeat Anti-Labor Bills

IF the nation goes as Maine goes, a lot of state anti-labor laws are headed for the trash-cans.

In Maine's Congressional elections last Tuesday, two severe bills aimed at crippling union activities were decisively beaten. They were the Barlow bill—which would have outlawed all forms of union security, secondary boycotts, sympathetic strikes, jurisdictional strikes and picketing on agricultural premises—and a similar Tabb bill.

Voters were given a chance to vote for either bill or to vote against both of them. Final tallies showed 107,000 votes against both bills, with only 42,000 for the Barlow bill and 13,000 for the Tabb proposals.

In addition, three union locals—one CIO, one AFL and one independent—spearheaded a successful fight to defeat Tabb for re-election to the state legislature, according to Scott Hoyman of the CIO Textile Workers.

The campaign against the anti-union bills was led by committees of CIO and AFL unions, which worked together on basic policy. George Jabar, head of the Maine CIO council, played an active part in directing the campaign.

UNIONS used eight billboards, distributed 250,000 matchbooks, bought four series of newspaper advertisements, and passed out thousands of leaflets. A Citizens Committee Against the Barlow bill—composed of professors, manufacturers, businessmen, lawyers and teachers—also distributed thousands of leaflets and voting instruction cards.

Unions endorsed no candidates in the Maine elections, and spokesmen of both parties criticized the anti-labor referendum proposals. Sen.-elect Margaret Smith (R) joined in the criticism. Although she voted for Taft-Hartley, Mrs. Smith has voted on the liberal side of many questions before the Congress.

SHOWS COLORS: Fred Cantarra, a member of the CIO Textile Workers in the Biddeford-Saco area of Maine, is putting a sticker on his car urging the public to vote against the Barlow and Tabb anti-union bills, both defeated in a referendum at the primary election last week.

Washington Post Criticizes Taft

A Washington Post editorial last week took Sen. Taft to task for his intervention in the administration of the T-H Act:

"Despite the pungent aroma of politics emanating from the interchange of accusations between President Truman and Senator Taft, an important issue is entailed . . .

. . . the Senator did talk to Govt. officials in the presence of the publishers' representatives and did impress upon them that he considered the typographical union case the most important proceeding that had arisen under the Taft-Hartley Act. . . .

"Mr. Taft . . . must recognize that the support of special claimants before a quasi-judicial agency such as the NLRB poses a serious threat to the impartiality and independence which should characterize the agency's judgments. Legislative intervention in issues before executive departments may be, as Senator Taft says, a common practice; but it is a highly dangerous one, threatening to subvert the separation of powers which lies at the heart of the American system of government."

SOLID BEHIND LEADERS: CIO Longshoremen in Wilmington, Cal., vote against signing non-communist affidavits and against accepting the employers' last offer. CIO Pres. Murray flayed the role of the Army, which announced its intention of hiring strikebreakers to handle Army cargoes. (See Page 8.)

ON AND ON AND ON AND ON!

One of our friends reports that one of her friends is in danger of losing a federal job because he was associated with her 15 years ago in an educational program during which she is alleged to have made a certain speech which she didn't make.

Our friend, strongly anti-Communist, was reported by a person, or persons, unknown to her—and to her friend—to have advocated that students read the Communist Daily Worker, which she violently dislikes.

Thus, because of a speech which our friend didn't make in which she didn't advocate the reading of a newspaper which she doesn't like, the economic security of our friend's friend is endangered.

This story, which is no more ridiculous than others along the same line which we've heard, illustrates the "Red-nutty" attitude which permeates much of the Washington atmosphere these days.

It would be easy for us to brush the matter aside—as many others have done—by saying that it's all the result of "post-war hysteria."

Because of this hysteria, advocates of the hysterical theory claim, many persons find it impossible to reason soundly on the subject of Communism.

No doubt that is an important point—but we're becoming more and more convinced that generation of the hysteria was part of a carefully planned campaign to destroy liberalism in the U. S.

JUST EXAMINE ALL THE FACTS

Without giving any aid and comfort to the Communists, whom we do not like and about whom we have considerable knowledge, we charge that the House Un-American Activities Committee has in many instances been as un-American as the subversives it claims it is trying to rout.

This committee has trampled on civil rights and it has not granted to some of the accused the legal privileges accorded an ordinary horse thief.

It has ignored the rules of evidence which are a solid part of our court procedure.

It has turned itself from an investigative body into a prosecution agency conducting a five-star inquisition.

And, to our knowledge, the committee has not been responsible for sending to jail a single person tried and convicted on a charge of engaging in subversive activities.

LET'S CHECK ON EXPENSES

During the first six months of 1948 the House Un-American Activities Committee spent three times as much money as was used by the House committees on Education and Labor, Veterans Affairs, Agriculture, Armed Services and Foreign Affairs. And the Appropriations Committee was the only House group with a larger staff than the Un-American Committee, which has 34 employes.

We'd say that every penny has been well spent if the Un-American group had made any real progress toward strengthening our democracy, making our civil liberties more secure or equipping the public with weapons with which to effectively combat Communism.

The committee can be given credit for none of those things.

But it must be credited with striking a powerful blow at the liberalism which brings progress. It must be credited with character assassination. It must be credited with stupidity.

At this point we pause to ponder whether this editorial will result in our being listed as a "No. 1 Subversive" by the committee about which we're talking despite our long anti-Communist record.

It wouldn't surprise us much if we were!

Hangovers and Their Cures

We've Got A Bad One Now, But The Future One Might Be Worse

By ALLAN L. SWIM

IT'S like waking up in the morning with one of those hangovers which make you wish you were dead.

After gulping down a generous amount of cold water and standing under a needle shower until you're nearly frozen you go to the kitchen and concoct your favorite hangover cure.

With shaking hands you mix together juices, sauces and spices. You grit your teeth, close your eyes, pinch your nose between your fingers and pour the nasty stuff down your throat.

You shudder, shout, "B-r-r-r!" and then you declare that you feel better.

And perhaps you do.

BACK in 1914-'18 a large part of the world went on a killing spree that history records as World War I.

That, you recall, was the war fought to preserve democracy. It was bitter and it was bloody.

After it ended, the U. S.—and the rest of the world—woke up with a bad hangover.

Some leaders got together and concocted a "hangover cure" called the League of Nations.

Some nations drank of this potion and some refused—but it neither cured the hangover nor prevented the big spree which began in the late '30s.

Today we have another world war behind us. We have two "hangover cures"—the United Nations and the European Recovery Program.

But we still have a terrible headache—and we do not have peace.

TODAY'S struggle is an ideological one involving strongly opposing concepts of how the world should be run.

It's a struggle entitled "Capitalism vs. Communism."

Russia leads the Communist bloc and the U. S. is the dominant power in the capitalist bloc.

Those who believe in democracy and the dignity of the individual man shudder at Russia's totalitarian approach to the pressing economic and political problems of the world.

And they shudder—but not so violently—at the approach taken by many of our own citizens to the same problems.

PERHAPS it's worse to disfranchise a man by sending him to a concentration camp than it is to prevent him from voting because of his color—but the results in both cases are the same.

Perhaps it's worse to confiscate a man's property for political reasons than to deny him use of property because of his racial background—but there's similarity between the two.

The Russian labor movement has virtually no freedom because it is completely controlled by the government.

The U. S. labor movement still has considerable freedom, but it has been sharply curbed by the Taft-Hartley Act and by 36 anti-labor state laws. The trend certainly is toward government control of union activities.

THE headlines tell the story when a couple of Red soldiers beat up some anti-Communist Germans in Berlin. The editorial writers become indignant.

But where were the headlines and the indignant editorials about the 21 CIO organizers beaten during the Southern drive?

And how about the Negro who was killed about 10 days ago because he voted in the Georgia primary election?

Congressional committees are trying to find a Red under nearly every bed in which a New Dealer ever slept.

But what about the Ku Klux Klan and the outfits which follow the Gerald L. K. Smith line?

Sure we get burned up about the way anti-Communists are treated in Eastern Europe.

But how about the treatment accorded Jews in many parts of the U. S.?

THE best way to combat Communism is to make our system of political democracy and economic capitalism work better than it has ever worked before.

This country needs to distribute its wealth more equitably among its people.

It needs to provide political freedom for all of its people, regardless of race, color or creed.

It needs to stamp out the economic and political quagmires in which the seeds of Communism grow.

And if we don't make real progress along these lines soon we're likely to wake up some morning in the future and find ourselves with a hangover that will make the current one seem like a mild headache by comparison.

'America Is Like a Mighty Train To Me'

"HAVE you ever ridden on a train, a mighty streamlined monster, bulleting its way over plain and mountain, and shrieking defiance to any obstacle which would hinder its progress?

"America is like that mighty train to me and the privilege to be a passenger on the greatest trip in all history is part of what America means to me."

This is the beginning of a delightful little book, "You and the Constitution of the United States," which extracts the essence of our American form of government in a few short pages so easy and pleasant to read that anybody, young or old, even if he knew nothing whatever about the subject, could quickly get a pretty good idea of its basic points.

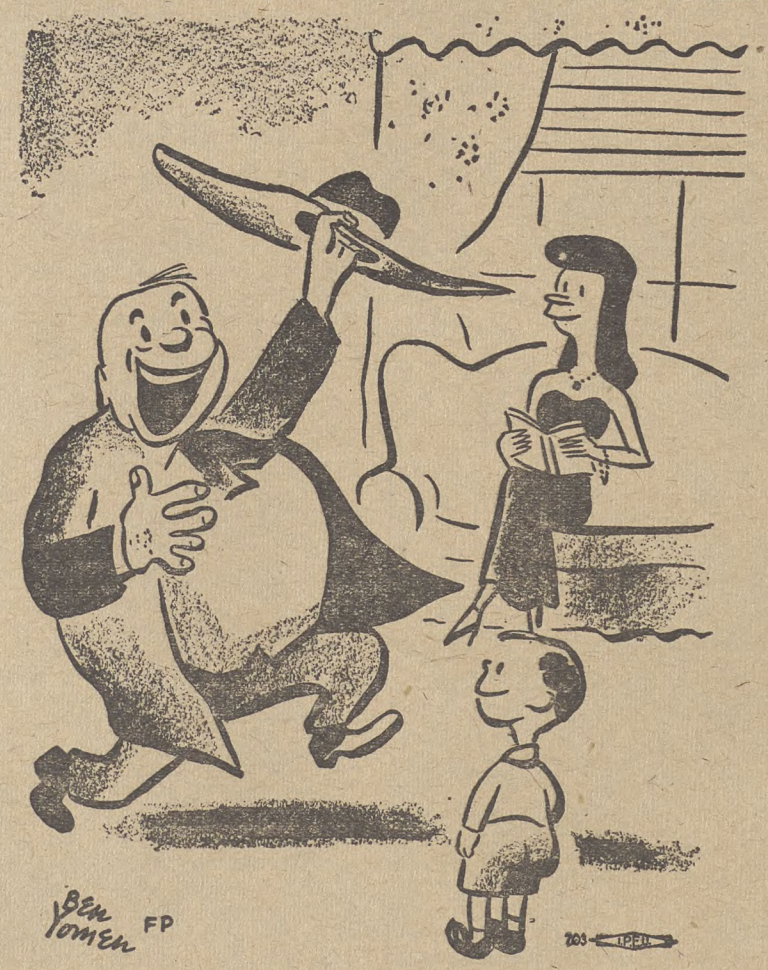
The first section of the book has the fresh touch of youth for it is a prize-winning essay by Graham Finney, high school senior of Greenwich, Conn., submitted in a contest sponsored by the Quiz Kids program on the topic, "What America Means to Me."

The book also gives the main events leading up to the drafting of the Constitution, including the main controversies and their solution; the substance of the seven original articles and the Bill of Rights in simple text and pictures; and the full text of the Constitution.

Part of the book's charm lies in the illustrations drawn by Lois Fisher, with their small humorous touches which the eye may miss at a first glance, and which seem funnier when they are suddenly noticed.

"You and the Constitution of the United States," published by Childrens Press, Inc., Chicago, appeared on Constitution Day, Sept. 17, as the second of a "YOU" series. The first of the series published last year, was "You and the United Nations" written and illustrated by Lois Fisher. It also gives a quick understanding of a timely subject.

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP — BY YOMEN



"Hallelujah! I'm the only one who registered to vote in my district!"

He Really Didn't Want Too Much

HE was affectionately known as Pot Belly and he had a hearty laugh you could hear for nearly a hundred yards.

He was more than six feet tall, weighed at least 260 and was as black as the ace of spades.

He could cook cat-fish and hush-puppies better than anybody else in the community and he could "kill" a quart of beer in a few big gulps.

Friends said Pot Belly could knock down the average man with a slap from the back of his hand. And he probably could.

But he wasn't a violent man. He was a philosopher who hated conflict.

POT Belly slipped into CIO organizing quarters a few nights after it was established and told a union representative, "I want to sign up."

"Let's talk about it a bit first," said the CIO man. "I want to be sure you know what you're doing."

Pot Belly threw back his head and laughed, and then, seriously, he said, "God bless you, mister, old Pot Belly ain't gonna sign up for something lessen he knows exactly what he's doing.

"Why, I've just been hanging on down here for a couple of years, waiting for the CIO to come. I could've gone up to Detroit or New York and made myself some real dough, but that wouldn't have done my people any good.

"Just sign me up and I'll help you organize the colored folks at the mill. I gotta be the first to sign up. You see, I'm the only guy down on the South Side who isn't afraid of the boss."

IT soon became apparent that Pot Belly was a "natural" organizer and that he wasn't afraid of anybody or anything.

He just shrugged his massive shoulders when told the mill superintendent had hired four or five men to beat up those who became too active in the union drive.

"He'd better hire a whole army if he intends to get old Pot Belly," he said. "But I won't be bothered, 'cause he knows that if anything happens to me every man who ever ate any of my cat-fish would join the CIO the next day."

He was not threatened or harmed although others were.

THE campaign was going badly and the organizers knew it—but there was little they could do.

Negroes, in a minority in the mill, were signing up rapidly, largely because of the leadership of Pot Belly. But the white men weren't.

An aged Negro preacher turned his church over to the organizers as a meeting place for members of his race and he spoke in favor of the union on numerous occasions.

However, it was impossible in the company-owned town that had practiced segregation for years to find a place for the white workers to meet.

Finally an election was held and the CIO was defeated.

SEVERAL of the organizers went to Pot Belly's shack before leaving town. They found him singing and frying cat-fish as they walked in.

They said they'd come to tell him goodbye and express regret they had been unable to establish a union.

"Now don't you fret about that—and don't you worry about me," Pot Belly said.

"It's all very simple. I'll get fired in a couple of days and I'll move on to another town and get me a job—and some day you'll show up and I'll sign up some union members.

"Then some day—before too long—I'll be up there standing before old Saint Peter. And when that happens I want to have a clear conscience. I want to tell Saint Peter I really tried to do something good for the colored folks down here in Alabama."

Pot Belly flipped over a piece of cat-fish with a fork and murmured, "M-m-m, shore smells good!"

BLOCK WORKER

ACW: 'Workers Can Win Only If Truman Is Elected'

"THE common people and the workers of America can win in November only if Truman is elected," says an editorial in the Sept. 15 issue of The Advance, official organ of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers. Excerpts from the editorial follow:

WE are for Truman. A careful analysis of the political scene makes our choice a clear one.

Dewey is completely enmeshed in the interests of Big Business and the National Association of Manufacturers. He has said exactly nothing on housing, nothing on price control, and nothing on civil liberties.

His mouth-piece, Harold Stassen, speaking with Dewey's full knowledge and approval, endorsed the Taft-Hartley Law. Dewey has shown neither the capacity nor the desire to disavow the abominable record of the Republicans under Hoover and their more recent performance during the 80th Congress. If there ever was any question that the Republican Party stands for big profits and low wages, the 80th Congress has removed the last doubt.

Wallace is preaching liberalism as if he had a patent on the word. Yet he represents a threat to liberalism that is second only to the avowed reactionaries supporting Dewey. Whether he knows it or not, or whether he intends it or not, Wallace is doing all that he can to defeat liberals for public office. When the Amalgamated withdrew from the American Labor Party in New York State, we issued a statement which said in part:

"A third party in 1948 must inevitably play into the hands of labor's enemies. In New York City alone, if it is effective at all, it will guarantee the election of reactionary Republican congressmen from a number of marginal districts. The same will be true in other parts of the country. This move can only serve the reactionary political and economic interests in this country and it comes at a time when contrary action is so obviously indicated. In our view, the reactionary elements responsible for the Taft-Hartley Act and the inflationary rise in prices should be soundly defeated, not aided and abetted."

Every word of that statement has been underscored by Wallace and his Third Party. Almost anywhere you look among the key areas, whether it be California, Illinois, New York or elsewhere, the same pattern has developed. The Wallace people are concentrating on splitting the liberal vote. In California, Helen Gahagan Douglas and Chet Hollifield would be virtually assured of re-election if Wallaceites were not supporting Third Party candidates. In Illinois Wallace cannot take a single vote from Curley Brooks or Governor Green. But his Third Party candidates, who have failed to qualify for a place on the official ballot, are working tirelessly to build up a large write-in vote and thus cut down the vote for Paul Douglas and Adlai Stevenson, both liberals of proven integrity. In Connecticut, Chester Bowles finds his way to the governship threatened by the Third Party's Thomas Emerson.

We do not pretend that we have approved of all of Mr. Truman's actions either on personnel or policy matters. Neither did we approve of all of Roosevelt's. But Truman has increasingly demonstrated the political daring, the flexibility, and the devotion to principle that, over the long run, can mean a growth of real democracy in this country. His calling of the special session was an act of imaginative daring in the best Rooseveltian tradition.

His quick recognition of Israel was a dramatic shift in approach that indicated a capacity to recognize bad policy and correct it just as Roosevelt did more than once. His position on Taft-Hartley and on civil liberties has carried the banner of high principle far beyond the requirements of immediate political expediency. We like his program. As between Truman and Dewey there can be no problem in choosing. The real tragedy of Wallace is that he has removed himself not only from the Democratic Party at a crucial time when every progressive influence was needed, but also from his real friends who would have welcomed a constructive opportunity to have him pull in harness with us.

The common people and the workers of America can win in November only if Truman is elected. And Truman can win only if the working people register and vote. Wallace's candidacy makes the fight harder. But it will take more than the Wallaceites and Dewey combined to kill the liberal spirit of America. We, along with the rest of the CIO, are committing ourselves to Truman.

Events Commend Truman

"EVENTS are committing Truman to us. It is to Truman's credit that Big Business, the real estate lobby, the Dixiecrats, and the labor baiters want no part of him. The labor movement is the only major force that is with him. His election in November will provide America with a President and a Congress committed to the common people by the strongest obligations that a democracy can impose—the obligation to heed the will and serve the needs of the majority."—The Advance.

Production is Low, Infers N. Y Times, Ignoring Records in Most Big Industries

By GLORIA CAPLAN

BY the way, how's your productivity today?

Don't know, huh? Well, neither does the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics or the U. S. Dept. of Commerce—that is, not on a complete, industry-by-industry basis.

Oh, the BLS has data through 1947 on 31 industries—industries like "clay construction products," "ice cream," "leather," etc. But nothing big like steel, automobiles, rubber. At any rate, the BLS says it wouldn't dare try to hazard a guess at the national productivity level on the basis of its spotty information until its studies, now in process, are completed.

But the New York Times is much more daring than the BLS. Under the by-line of one of its economic specialists, Will Lissner, the Times recently published a series of six articles on productivity. A glance at two of the headlines indicates the reason for devoting all that space to a study which even the writer had to describe as "not a representative sample of the whole economy."

One headline read: "Unit Labor Costs Show Sharp Rises."

Another blurted: "Industry Studies Lag in Production."

IF THE headlines are true, then the average reader can conclude but one thing: Since productivity is going down, and workers are squeezing raises out of their employers, the only thing a boss can do is raise prices. Thus, wage boosts are responsible for today's inflationary prices.

Ever since industry began its successful drive to kill price controls, it's been whooping it up for higher productivity. Given that, they cry, prices would automatically come down to normal levels.

Lissner contributed his share to this theory. "A general rise in productivity would help to stabilize prices and aid efforts to readjust them to needed levels," says he. "But there is no evidence in the data that such a rise is in the offing."

Labor economists would take sharp issue with both those statements. Their reply would run something like this:

Labor agrees that a rise in productivity is good for the economy—but it must be reflected in lower prices for the consumer and higher wages for the worker, as well as higher profits. But has that been our experience, or have the gains from higher productivity been siphoned off into soaring profits?

IN THE period between 1920-22, as Lissner says, productivity rose 11% a year. That was high. But instead of sharing in the gains, workers saw their purchasing power actually go down the next two years—from 1923 to '25.

By 1929, productivity was soaring beautifully, profits were high, wide and handsome, prices were coming down because goods were rotting in the warehouses. Industry had forgotten it needed a market for its increased output—and wages hadn't been increased sufficiently to take the goods off industry's hands. Came the bust . . .

Has industry changed since then? Have prices gone down in those industries which have shown a marked rise in productivity? Not so in the three big industries for which the CIO News has some data—steel, oil and rubber. Not so in rayon, where Mr. Lissner himself notes, unit labor costs went down 10.1% between 1939-45.

Here is the story on two big basic industries not included in Lissner's study:

STEEL: According to the CIO Steelworkers research dept., which obtains its material from industry and government sources, the number of manhours worked in the industry rose 40% from 1939 through 1947. And in the same period finished steel shipments went up 72.9%—indicating a substantial productivity rise. Did the price of steel decline as a result? On the contrary, steel prices climbed 39.6% in that period, plus an additional 7% for "extras." True, part of the increased productivity and prices went into wage increases. Wages rose 72.8% in those eight years. But mostly it went into higher profits, which increased 273%.

RUBBER: Figures from the CIO Rubber Workers research dept., also based on BLS and industry reports, follow the same pattern.

The average worker in the tire and innertube industry was putting out 15% more goods in 1947 than he had in 1946. The employe got a little hunk of it in the form of an 11c hourly increase. But tire prices went up $84 million a year—enough to pay four times the cost of the wage boost. Increased productivity didn't bring tire prices down—and wages can't be blamed for that.

AS FOR Lissner's conclusions that "there is no evidence . . . that such a rise (in productivity) is in the offiing," not only labor economists, but pro-industry and government sources refute that pessimistic view. Here are a few quotes:

Wrote Aryness Joy Wickens, acting Commissioner of Labor Statistics, in a letter to the Times protesting the Lissner series:

"The analysis was based almost wholly upon figures for manufacturing industries pertaining to the year 1945—a war year—yet the casual reader might have inferred that the reports were current . . .

"Although unit labor cost rose in a number of industries during the war, it should not be assumed that they increased universally. For many of the war industries—aircraft, shipbuilding, and munitions generally—output per man-hour rose so phenomenally during the war that it is likely that unit labor costs declined . . .

"Unfortunately, the list of industries for which reports are available is not representative of the whole economy . . . It is for this reason that the Bureau of Labor Statistics has included in all its recent releases on productivity a caution against attempts to generalize . . . for all manufacturing industries, and the bureau itself has issued no generalized statement."

THE pro-industry McGraw-Hill publication, Factory Management & Maintenance, in its current issue publishes a study it made among 610 plants, employing 1,397,864 workers. It discovered a 4.4% productivity increase during 1947. Says FM&M:

"Productivity is up for the second year running. And for the first time since the war the rate of increase clearly exceeds the traditional "3% per year" of the 1899-1939 period.

"1. Productivity is up—4.4% in 12 months.

"2. The rate of productivity increase is up—33% faster than in the previous 19 months."

How reluctant employers are to share productivity gains with their employes is seen in replies to this question FM&M asked:

"Do you believe that the level of productivity in your company is such that a further increase in productivity will justify a corresponding increase in wages?"

Only 27% said yes.

—And that's why workers join unions!

Times Analyst Says Stories Not Flawless

Even New York Times analyst Will Lissner admits his series on labor costs and productivity could have been better.

In reply to a letter from Assistant CIO Research Director Katherine Pollak Ellickson, who protested that the series was "thoroughly misleading and unfair to the nation's workers," Lissner wrote:

"You will find me in complete agreement with your conviction that our series on labor costs and productivity could have been improved. Newspapermen work so regularly within limitations of column space and time that they need constant criticism to keep from making compromises at the expense of clarity and accuracy."

P. S. Lissner only used 178 inches—not counting headlines—of valuable Times space to develop his theory.

Business Group Says Production Is Up

The Natl. Industrial Conference Board is a big business research outfit not noted for its bias toward labor. Here's what the NICB says about productivity in the June 1948 issue of its publication Business Record:

"Some of the leading industries most heavily represented among the 67% reporting higher labor productivity than in 1947 are automobiles and equipment, industrial machinery, machine tools, office equipment, paper and steel."

It's Not News If There's No 'Red' Angle

THE nation's capital worked last week in a deep red haze.

Almost every major story in Washington had its "red angle"—and no story was worth its salt without such a "Communist" tinge.

ITEM: Fulton Lewis, anti-labor radio commentator, voiced serious doubts over the air whether Tom Dewey, if elected, should appoint John Foster Dulles—his foreign affairs advisor—as secretary of state.

Dulles, said Lewis with a sinister voice, recommended Alger Hiss for his job with the Carnegie Peace Foundation. Although nothing has been proved against Hiss, the mere charges seemed enough to Lewis to disqualify the eminently conservative Mr. Dulles from a government post.

ITEM: Some 33 top government scientific jobs—paying $10,000 a year—are vacant. The reason: leading scientists figure that Congressional "red spy" headline hunters can ruin their career with loud charges and no facts. And the risk isn't worth the money.

Harold Urey, Nobel prize winner and leading American atomic scientist explained why he's glad to be out of government: "I'm very fond of being at the University of Chicago. No one investigates me. They treat me just like a full-fledged American citizen."

ITEM: the House UnAmerican Activities Committe decided it would seek "repeal"— or at least new court interpretations—of the Constitutional clause protecting citizens from self-incrimination. The Committee got mad when Steve Nelson, a Pennsylvania Communist, refused to answer "most pertinent questions."

The Constitutional protection clause has been a thorn in the side of the UnAmerican Activities probers, who conduct not trials but investigations. A person answering the Committee's loaded questions can undercut his own defense at any subsequent trials, and his answers could be used as evidence against him.

ITEM: Sen. Taft, feuding with Pres. Truman about the Labor Board, brought in the Communist angle too. Taft maintained that Truman's veto of the Taft-Hartley law used many of the same arguments as those in a statement issued at the time by the "Communist sympathizer, Lee Pressman"—then general counsel of the CIO.

(Taft himself has been called "socialistic" by the real estate lobby because he helped sponsor the housing bill!)

WHILE all this was going on, two incidents occured in the U. S. which will furnish foreign Communists with more propaganda victories than they could get from three spy networks:

- In Georgia, a Negro—sitting on the porch of his home—was shot to death. His crime: he'd voted in Georgia's primaries.
- At the Daughters of the American Revolution hall in Washington, an usher removed the Ethiopian Minister from his box in the diplomatic section of the orchestra—just before Pres. Truman delivered a speech to a scientific convention.

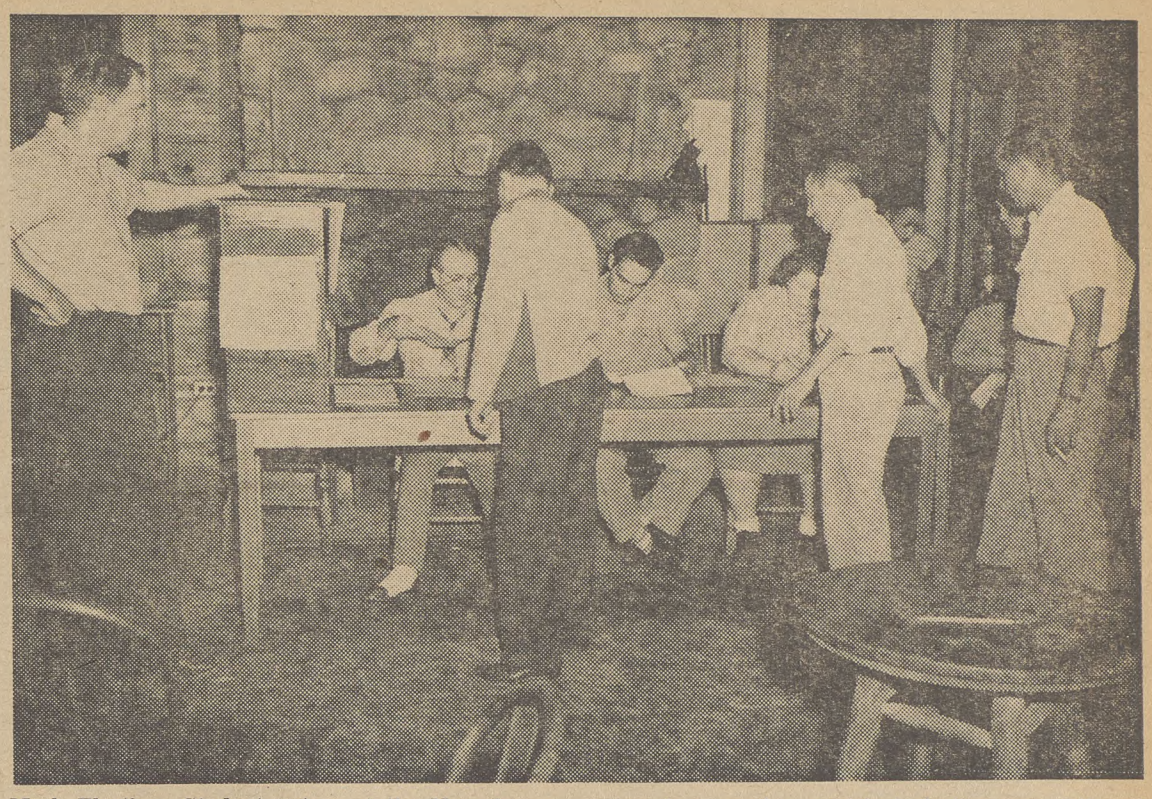
The scientists, angered by the report, apologized profusely and sought to find who had given the expulsion orders to the usher.

If you don't think that stories like those will make impressive anti-American propaganda on both sides of the Iron Curtain—in Asia, Africa and Europe—ask the experts at the State Dept.'s short-wave Voice-of-America section.

They can tell you.

EDUCATION, POLITICS GO HAND-IN-HAND

Wins Anti-Bias Award: New Jersey CIO Pres. Carl Holderman (right) receiving an annual award from the Natl. CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, presented to him by Committee Dir. George Weaver.



Mock Election: Student voters at the New Jersey CIO School cast their ballot for Camp Mayor under watchful eyes of election board officials. All the steps in a regular municipal election were followed in the practice election. They learned a lesson which should should serve them well.

Learn Technique of Doorbell Ringing At N. J. CIO School

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

A CAMP buried in the woods close to the lovely Jenny Jump Mountains in northern New Jersey was the site of the modest but unique CIO school held this summer by State CIO Councils.

The New Jersey school and similar ones sponsored by CIO Councils in Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Vermont and other states, all seem to indicate that a strong fresh wind is blowing toward the political scene from the labor front.

To eay that political action was the main theme of the discussion at these schools is an understatment of the truth. The union workers who attended were really steamed up about the coming election and what had to be done to get out the labor vote.

THE more than 60 typical union workers and faculty members who attended the school, sponsored by the New Jersey CIO Council Sept. 7-12 at the Stevens Institute camp, Johnsonburg, N. J., talked, and argued political action at classes, at meals, at play and probably in their dreams. Bright ideas popped out like lights on a busy switchboard.

Students came from locals affiliated with 10 CIO national and international unions and two councils. Unions represented included Textile, Steel, Clothing, Auto, Rubber, Electrical, Paper, Packinghouse, Playthings & Jewelry, and Telephone Workers.

The class program was set up around three subjects — political action, education and leadership, and public speaking—all focused mostly toward effective methods of convincing workers of the importance of voting and taking an active and intelligent interest in local, state and national governmental affairs.

Students signed up for one of the three topics, choosing the approach closest to their own special interest. Classes and workshops in the three groups met simultaneously. This three-group set-up was used as the framework for staging a mock political campaign and election which was the highpoint of the program.

ALL the steps in a regular municipal election were followed in a campaign for election of a "camp mayor." Charles Glovich, member of the Textile Workers, Freehold, N. J., who won the election over his two opponents, campaigned on a platform advocating "three square meals a day and eight hours sleep at night."

The CIO students packed a lot of moth seriousness and fun into the mock election, blasting campaign speeches over a loud speaker, drawing up platforms, and soliciting votes. The election results and other camp news was carried in a mimeographed newspaper issued by the education group. Election day brought out a 100% vote.

Earlier the students conducted a practice PAC "dollar" drive by soliciting dimes, and a registration drive in which cards made out incorrectly on purpose were checked for wrong addresses and misspelled names. Improperly registered voters were then visited, and other necessary steps taken to see that everybody was qualified to vote.

ANOTHER highlight of the week's session was a dinner attended by some 300 students and guests, in honor of New Jersey CIO Pres. Carl Holderman who was presented with a national award from the Natl. CIO's Committee to Abolish Discrimination.

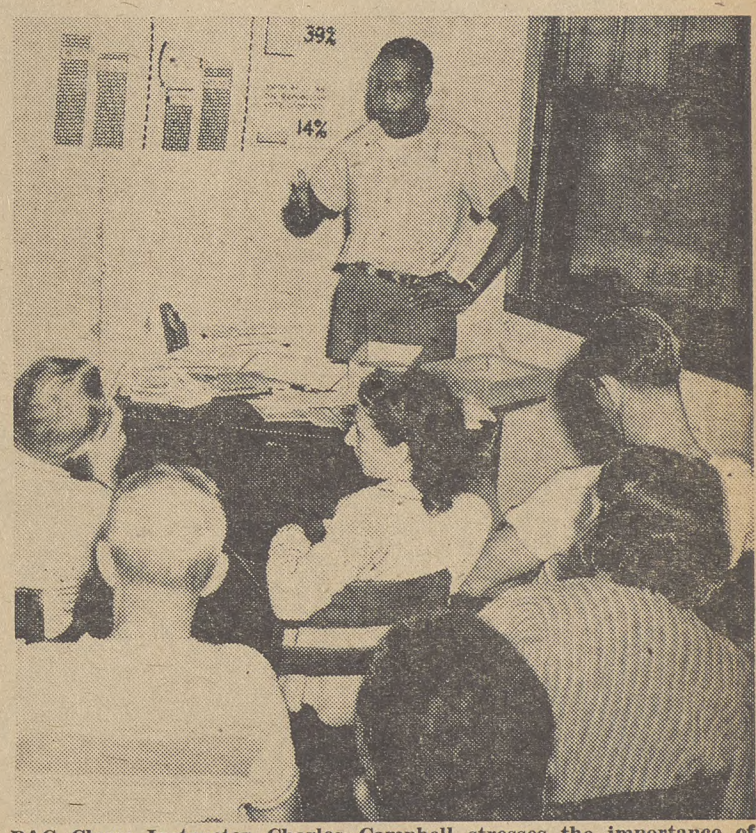
In presenting the award, George Weaver, the committee's director, cited Holderman's "long history of forthright protection and enhancement of civil rights." In addition to Holderman and Weaver, other speakers at the dinner included Leon Henderson, chairman, Americans for Democratic Action; Roy Wilkins, Natl. Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, and Rabbi Kaufman, member of the N. J. Governor's Committee on Civil Rights.

The regular classroom and workshop courses at the school were conducted by both CIO and outside instructors. George Guernsey, Natl. CIO, assisted by Joe Glazer, Textile Workers, and Louise Chapin, Amalgamated Clothing Workers, led the education and leadership classes.

Political Action teachers were Charles Campbell, Natl. PAC; and Henry Shepherd, ACW. Public speaking instructors included August Claessens, Rand School; Hy Bookbinder, ACW; and Norman Dorfman, Rutgers University.

Harry Kranz, education and publicity director for the New Jersey CIO Council, was in charge of the school. The Natl. CIO Dept. of Education & Research cooperated in setting up the program.

Use of Films: George Guernsey from the Natl. CIO Education Dept. demonstrates use of film strip projector to students in the educational leadership course at the N. J. labor school.



PAC Class: Instructor Charles Campbell stresses the importance of getting out the vote on election day by organizing a detailed plan ahead of time. Students listened eagerly because they wanted to apply the lesson at home. The student body represented 10 CIO national and international unions and two councils. More than 60 workers and teachers were present.

In Longshoremen's Strike

Murray Blasts Army's Role

CIO Pres. Philip Murray has termed the army's announced intention to hire strikebreakers from the streets rather than obtain stevedores through the union hiring hall a move "on the side of the employers" in the strike of the CIO Longshoremen on the West Coast.

In a letter to Secy. of the Army Kenneth Royall, Murray noted that the striking union had offered on the first day of the walkout to handle Army and Navy cargoes, but the Waterfront Employers Association and the Pacific Shipowners Association turned down the offer.

In previous years and throughout the war, Murray pointed out, it was the Army's practice to obtain longshoremen through the Central Dispatching hall, so that the present refusal to do so is a "sharp departure from past Army policy," he said.

Murray urged that the Army rescind its order to hire men from the streets, obtain stevedores through the hiring hall and take "appropriate measures" to compel the steamship companies to live up to the terms of their contracts to move army cargoes.

Meanwhile, ILWU Pres. Harry Bridges urged Royall to use the big stevedoring firm of Griffiths & Sprague to load Army cargoes in San Francisco and Seattle. The company, largest in Seattle, has settled independently with the union for a 15c increase above the June 15 rates. The union, however, offered to supply men to work Army cargoes at Griffiths & Sprague at old rate.

The longshoremen and other West Coast maritime unions have been out since Sept. 2. Since then agreements have been reached with Alaska firms and Griffiths & Sprague. Steamship owners have refused to permit their ships to be loaded by these companies, however, with some few exceptions.

Textile Workers Back Truman

Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers announced last week that the union's international executive council has unanimously indorsed President Truman for re-election in November.

Rieve said the action came "in recognition of the new liberal spirit which was infused into the Democratic party last July during the course of its convention in Philadelphia."

TWUA will back up its indorsement with intensive ward and district work in all textile areas, Rieve said. The union has a substantial PAC staff which already has produced good results in the registration of voters in many states, he said.

In California

Truce Ends Battle At Oil Refinery

INDEFINITE extension of a truce between the striking CIO Oil Workers and two other unions at the Standard Oil refinery plant in Richmond, Cal., brought peace back into the picture after an embattled few days.

Hundreds of striking CIO Oil Workers were teargassed and 12 injured Sept. 14 in an hour-long attack outside the Standard Oil refinery which started when police—in full battle regalia—attempted to escort AFL maintenance men past the picket line.

As the strikers attempted to prevent the maintenance men from entering the refinery, the steel-helmeted police donned gas masks and hurled round after round of teargas shells into the throng.

After an hour, the police opened a path for a few trucks carrying about 100 boilermakers, electricians, sailors, steamfitters, sheet metal workers, carpenters, bricklayers and machinists. Other drivers fled the scene.

No attempt was made Sept. 15 to pass the maintenance men through the lines and all was quiet at the strikebound plant. This was believed due in part to a protest from the oil strikers who, following their battle with police, marched in a body to the local machinists' hall from where the maintenance men had been dispatched. They demanded that their picketlines be respected and then marched on to City Hall where they lodged a formal protest with the mayor against the police.

The men walked out in a demand for a 30c hourly increase (later reduced to 21c) compared to "final" employer offers of 12½c.

CANADIAN LABOR FIGHTS PROVINCIAL T-H

By JACK WILLIAMS

CANADIAN labor, in both the federal and provincial fields, is carrying on a running fight against legislation which in some respects echoes the States' Taft-Hartley Act.

In Prince Edward Island (population 94,000) an act has appeared which out-Tafts the American legislation. The most drastic act of its kind ever introduced in Canada, the bill puts a complete ban on both national and international unions. The Canadian Congress of Labor is campaigning to have the legislation disallowed by the federal government.

(CIO unions in the Dominion belong to the Canadian Congress of Labor.)

A new federal code came into effect Sept. 1, but it applies only to a limited number of workers—railways, shipping, communications. Main criticism of this code by the CCL has been its inadequate coverage. CCL has maintained that such industries as steel and packing, which operate on a national scale, should be brought under the bill. Failure to meet that proposal has left the federal government without adequate power to cope with national disputes.

IRA MOSER
Pres., Canadian Congress of Labor

CCL also has urged that some form of union security and a check-off should be automatic with the certification of a union. The government has refused to provide automatic union security, although that was recommended by a parliamentary committee. The new legislation provides for police court enforcement, which has been strongly opposed by the CCL.

MOST Canadian workers have been left under provincial jurisdiction. The federal government has issued an open invitation to the provinces to adopt its new code, but Ontario so far is the only province which has indicated it will accept.

While Prince Edward is largely agricultural, the CCL has taken a serious view of the legislation because of the possibility that it may provide a pattern for other provinces.

The Trades and Labor Congress of Canada, representing AFL unions, and the railway brotherhoods, have joined the CCL in its application for disallowance of the P.E.I. Act. Decision was reserved.

The P.E.I. Act requires provincial unions to be licensed, thus giving the provincial secretary arbitrary power to grant, refuse or revoke licenses. Penalties are provided for persons representing themselves as acting on behalf of any unlicensed union. Fines run up to $100 with an alternative of 30 days imprisonment on default of payment of the fine.

Any attempt to organize a new union would almost certainly be regarded as infraction of this section, but so far there has been no test case. CCL unions are depending, first, on their effort to have the Act disallowed and, failing that, a test case will have to be pressed to show that the province has exceeded its powers.

The penalty provided for anyone representing an unlicensed union also has the effect of prohibiting representatives of national and international unions from agitating for repeal of the law. But railway workers, who come under federal jurisdiction, are exempt and the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Employes and the Transport Workers, a CCL affiliate, have taken the lead in a move to have such action taken.

MEMBERSHIP of all licensed unions is restricted to "employes" and, as a result, any unions which submit themselves to the straitjacket legislation will be deprived of the services of full-time business agents and skilled negotiators.

The Act imposes compulsory arbitration and prohibits strikes and lockouts until the dispute has been submitted to arbitration with the finding binding on both parties. Thus, strikes are in effect outlawed. The closed shop is specifically banned. The wording of the section makes it apparent that the way is open for the legislation to be used to ban union shops and maintenance - of - membership clauses.

A Bright Spot

Only Canadian province where there is no anti-labor legislation is Saskatchewan. The party in power there is the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation, which was supported by the Canadian Congress of Labor. Legislation in that province is regarded as favorable to labor.

CCL's Secretary-Treasurer

Law Encourages Boss to Stall

A British Columbia employer may stall negotiations for a long time and then claim that the union no longer represents a majority of the employes. The provincial labor board then may cancel the certification if it considers that the boss' claim is true.

The B. C. (appropriate initials, don't you think?) board may allow an employer to make changes in working conditions during negotiations and compel strikers to vote on any settlement plan offered by management.

This board may revoke certification if it considers a strike illegal and establish any procedure it sees fit for negotiating settlement.

SET FOR ELECTION: These new members of the CIO Woodworkers who recently won a contract from their Louisville, Ky., employer are standing by the bus that took them to the registration office. Third man from the right is Woodworkers' Rep. William Beller. CIO-PAC's drive to swell the registration figures in Louisville and Jefferson County continued until the last registration day. CIO-PAC has provided buses to take workers to the registration office on many occasions during the drive.

Fines Are Used To Break Strikes

If an Alberta judge rules that a strike is illegal, the agreement held by the striking union, including the check-off clause, becomes null and void. Union officers and representatives are subject to a fine of $50 a day for a strike called in violation of the provincial act.

Any union is subject to payment of a fine up to a dollar a day for each member taking part in a strike three days after a judge rules that it is illegal.

If the fine is not paid within 10 days, the employer must check off union dues until he has sufficient money to pay the fine. Any officer, agent or representative of the union who took part in an illegal strike is liable to a fine of as much as $250 and costs or 90 days in jail.

PLAN UNITED ACTION: Representatives of more than 300,000 telephone workers met in Washington to plan joint action to get pay increases from the A. T. & T. and its subsidiaries. Left to right, seated, Sec-Treas. R. W. Long of the CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee; Vice-Pres. J. L. Crull of the independent Communication Workers of America; Pres. Margaret Kennedy of the Telephone Employes Association, New York; rear, Pres Howard Jones, Maryland Federation of Telephone Workers; Pres. Katherine H. Krug of Accounting Employes Organization of Pennsylvania, and William S. Leary, Pennsylvania Federation of Telephone Workers.

CAN'T EAT HAY—If Michigan Bell Telephone Co. doesn't come through with a raise, at least most Detroiters will know about it. Members of Communications Workers of America drive a hay wagon through town advertising their plight. The independent CWA and the CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee are cooperating in a campaign to get wage increases from the Bell System. The CIO Communication Equipment Workers last week won an average 11c hourly increase from Western Electric, which may set a pattern for other telephone unions.

WE Offers 11c; Strike Averted

THREAT of a nationwide walkout by 25,000 CIO Communications Equipment Workers finally resulted in an offer of an 11c average hourly wage increase by Western Electric after five months of negotiations.

Had the ACEW struck there was the possibility of a nationwide telephone tieup by nonstriking telephone unionists who might have refused to cross ACEW picketlines. Western Electric is a subsidiary of the American Telephone & Telegraph Corp.

ACEW Pres. Ernest Weaver said the walkout was being postponed indefinitely "to give the members an opportunity to ratify the proposal made to us." He said the proposal is the best made by any company in the Bell system and predicted approval by the membership.

In addition to the wage increase, which ranges from 9 to 15c in some areas and 8 to 14c in others, the settlement provides the following gains:

- A $2 increase in the "mobility allowance"—per diem pay for workers sent out of town.
- Increase in the meal allowance.

The contract was extended until Nov. 30, 1950, with a wage reopening on Sept. 15, 1949. If no agreement is reached, the union is free to strike at that time without jeopardizing the contract.

The Western Electric settlement was expected to pave the way for agreements with other telephone unions which began wage talks Sept. 16. Unions now involved in negotiations include the long lines employes and other affiliates of the CIO Telephone Equipment Workers, most Communications Workers Association affiliates and a number of independent unions.

CIO Man Votes For Whole County

Here's how good CIO citizenship works.

Some weeks ago, the Jackson County, Texas, Democratic convention elected seven delegates to the state party convention. A majority of these delegates were of the Dixiecrat stripe.

One of them, however, was A. H. Brown, a member of the CIO Oil Workers union.

When the state convention opened, six of Jackson County's seven delegates were absent. They allowed business or personal reasons to prevent them from attending.

But Brown was there. He was there because 20 of his fellow CIO members passed the hat and collected expense money to send him to the convention. He laid off work to fill the civic post assigned to him.

Result: Brown cast the entire Jackson County vote in support of loyal Democrats who purged all Dixiecrats from the state organization.

Fur Union Probe Yields Little News

A HOUSE Labor Committee fishing in the affairs of the CIO Fur & Leather Workers Committee came up with little news after a week of hearings in Washington.

The committee found: (1) that some employers in the highly competitive New York fur industry don't like the union's rules and bargaining demands; (2) that some employers find the union leadership very "statesmanlike"; and (3) that Ben Gold, an admitted Communist, is indeed a Communist.

The hearing was conducted by Rep. Max Schwabe (R., Mo.) and Rep. Wingate Lucas (D. Tex.). Both voted for the Taft-Hartley bill and for Wage-Hour crippling amendments during the 80th Congress.

Pres. Ben Gold of the union admitted his Communist membership —though objecting to the committee's right to inquire about political affiliations of witnesses.

Questioned about his views on government and international politics, Gold said he hates war, but that he'd "fight to the death in defense of America." He described as "impossible" a suggestion that Russia would attack the U. S. and reminded Rep. Lucas that "you forget the Russians saved thousands of lives of American boys during the war."

He was complimented by Schwabe as a forthright and honest witness.

Union Flays Ban On Canadians

By MORRIS WRIGHT

THE CIO Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, at its 55th anniversary convention in San Francisco, sent a strong protest last week to President Truman and the Immigration Dept. against this country's refusal to permit Canadian Mine-Mill delegates to cross the border.

The letter said, in part: "The entire delegation from the largest local of the union at Sudbury, Ontario, has been denied entrance to the United States. Other delegates, including women of our auxiliary, nave been turned back.

"In so doing, our Immigration Dept. has acted as the abject and shameless agent of anti-union employers.

"Owners and representatives of business concerns travel with complete freedom across the United States-Canadian border.

"Aside from its flagrant violation of the traditional American sense of fair play, this act is the latest and most ominous in a chain of events which follows the pattern of the dreaded police state.

"When Intl. Vice-Pres. Reid Robinson was deported from Canada early this year we warned that the 'red' issue was only the opening shot in a war on all organized labor. Our warning was quickly substiantiated when Canadian delegates to a convention of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers were denied permission to enter the United States."

The convention also sent a telegram to CIO Pres. Philip Murray urging that the CIO withdraw its indorsement of President Truman unless he immediately reverses the strikebreaking order against the CIO Longshoremen's Union issued by Army Secy. Royall.

Speakers included Senator Glen Taylor, Progressive Party candidate for vice-president, Pres. Harry Bridges of the Longshoremen's Union, and Camilo Chavez, an officer of the Mexican Miners Union.

Full Recognition Asked For Israel

CIO has asked Pres. Truman to extend full "de jure" recognition to the new state of Israel.

The request was in the form of a wire from CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who urged that "consideration be given to the granting of a substantial loan to the new state."

In addition, Murray said "we believe that residents in displaced persons camps in Germany should be permitted to immigrate to Israel."

Ask Revocation of Greater New York Council's Charter

A PETITION to Pres. Murray to revoke the charter of the Greater New York CIO Council has received 2-1 endorsement by New York state CIO leaders.

Serious friction with the city CIO group developed early this year when it declined to support national CIO policy in support of the European Recovery Plan and against the Third Party. Shortly afterwards, a wholesale exodus of right-wing locals from the city CIO council got under way.

The city council was also jolted by the resignation of its president, Michael Quill, head of the Transport Workers.

Quill quit his post in the council last spring over differences in policy regarding the New York subway fare and the union's successful effort to win a 24c wage increase. Quill was succeeded in the city council by James Durkin, head of the Office & Professional Workers.

About the same time, national CIO-PAC made clear that the city CIO council had no official political functions in national elections and a right-wing CIO-PAC organization, affiliated with the state CIO council, was established. The city council has been supporting the American Labor Party, which is closely linked with the Wallace Third Party.

PRES. LOUIS HOLLANDER of the state CIO council says he is "confident" that a new city CIO group will be formed to "represent the interests of the members of CIO, not the interests of the Cominform." At a state PAC convention in Syacuse, he hinted that Quill would head the new city CIO council when it is set up.

The vote against the city CIO group was 315,476 to 164,236 in the state council executive board. Hollander said a committee would seek a meeting with Pres. Murray this week to press its charges and seek a new charter.

Secy. Saul Mills of the city group accused Hollander of maintaining a "center of disruption" against the city CIO council, but his charge was rejected by state leaders as "scurrilous, unfounded and not in accordance with the facts."

Martin Says:

Guild To Aid In Improving Publicity

"THE CIO has a good story to tell the public but doesn't always tell it well."

That's what Harry Martin, president of the CIO Newspaper Guild, said recently before leaving for Europe to take over an important Economic Cooperation Administration post.

"The Guild, because of the nature of its membership, should be in a position to help the CIO tell its story well," Martin said.

"That's why we—at our recent annual convention—decided to urge our members throughout the country to become more active in labor publicity and public relations work.

"Allan L. Swim, CIO publicity director, was selected as chairman of the Guild's Labor Public Relations Committee because of his familiarity with the need for such a program and because of his years of activity in the Guild."

Swim recently spoke at a meeting of the Pennsylvania-Ohio-Indiana Guild Council, urging delegates to set up a committee to work with CIO councils and local unions in the region on publicity and public relations problems.

"I AM not urging that you become propagandists for the CIO and I am not suggesting that you take advantage of your connection with the newspapers to serve as publicity men for the labor movement," Swim said.

"What I am suggesting is that you work with the general CIO movement in an effort to get the CIO's story presented honestly to the public."

The P-O-I Council selected Bill Davy, executive secretary of the Cleveland Guild, and Rollin Everett, Cincinnati city councilman and editor of a labor newspaper, to direct the publicity-public relations committee which it established at the meeting.

Davy and Everett said their first job would be to work with the Ohio Industrial Union Council in an effort to broaden and improve labor public relations throughout Ohio.

UE Brands ERP "Business Plan"

The CIO Electrical Workers, on the closing day of its 13th annual convention in New York City, branded the European Recovery Program as a "big business plan" to swell industrial profits and depress American living standards.

The resolution was passed by a vote of 2943-1265, closest vote of the entire convention. Last year the anti-ERP resolution glided through by an overwhelming majority.

Delegates also—

- Voted to continue refusal to comply with Taft-Hartley filing requirements but to stay within the law. Repeal of the entire law was urged.
- Called for abolition of the House Un-American Activities Committee and an end to government interference with rights of unionists and other citizens.
- Condemned the record of both the Republicans and Democrats, urging support for candidates "purely on the test of their ability and will to fight for the people's interests." The union's previous withdrawal from CIO-PAC, which has endorsed Pres. Truman, was thus approved by the convention.

A NATURAL: Milwaukee, the brewing center of the universe, was host to the CIO Brewery Workers Union convention last week, a "natch" if there ever was one. Here a group of delegates and members of the big Local 9 in Milwaukee sample the local product in a brewery, pronouncing it OK. That soft drink bottle intruding upon the scene is OK, too, for the union's membership in the U. S. and Canada includes thousands of soft drink workers, to say nothing of distillery workers.

Closing of Pharis Rubber: How Anti-Union Stories Start

SEVEN hundred workers—most of them with 15 to 25 years' service—and their families have had difficult days since the Pharis Tire & Rubber Co., Newark, Ohio, was closed by management last May 2.

The story is particularly worth telling since many newspapers throughout the country have printed news accounts blaming the closing of the plant on Local 21 of the CIO United Rubber Workers.

This story of what happened at Pharis Tire & Rubber Co. is based on an article by Editor Bob Cruden in the Sept. issue of the Rubber Worker.

Local 21 has long been known as a responsible union. Relations were so good that the National Planning Association in August, 1947, cited the union and the company for "their unusual record of successful stable industrial relations over a considerable period of time."

THE company claimed that it was losing money despite the fact that the report of the company president, Furber Marshall, on March 19, 1948, showed that the 1947 profits were $358,873 compared to the pre-war average of $203,090, an increase of 56%.

"If take-home pay looked high," wrote Editor Bob Cruden of the United Rubber Worker, "it was because production was the highest in the industry."

This was in accordance with an agreement made by the company with the union in 1946. The workers agreed that they would cooperate in an all-out production program. The company, in turn, agreed not to reduce rates as production rose.

The company knew that the workers had kept their part of the bargain. As late as April 6—just 24 days before the plant was closed—Vice Pres. H. I. Houlette of the company wrote Local 21 expressing "wholehearted appreciation of your cooperation in obtaining the high rate of production that has contributed so greatly to our competitive position in the past."

IN a full page ad published in the Newark Advocate the company complained that it was being forced out of business because the union would not accept a "reasonable proposal."

The "reasonable proposal" contained three main provisions:

1. Wage rates were to be reduced by 10%-35%. The company's own figures showed that the cut would reduce take-home pay by 7%-30%.
2. Seniority would be scrapped, with the company given the sole and exclusive right to hire, fire and transfer.
3. All gains made by the union through 15 years of bargaining would be wiped out.

The workers rejected this program four times.

The employes, through their union, were willing to make several concessions. They were willing to go back to work under the old contract until an impartial study could be made of the company's financial position. The union would also forego the 11c hourly wage increase and six paid holidays granted by the company's competitors until the financial study was made, thus saving the company at least $3,000 a week.

The union also proposed that after the plant was opened, the company and the union would cooperate in a time study of all jobs where rates were supposedly out of line, with adjustments to be made where necessary.

Civic Groups Try, But Fail

Several attempts were made by independent groups to keep the Pharis Rubber plant going. A citizens committee was fed with company propaganda, but withdrew after it heard the union's side of the story.

A ministers' committee also threw up its hands. It had agreed to poll workers on whether they would return to work. When the clergymen learned that the company had mailed out twice as many ballots as there were workers, they also gave up their efforts.

Various civic groups set up a "Keep Pharis Going Committee." Members of the committee sat in on negotiating sessions. In the presence of committee representatives, company officials rejected the union's concessions.

The efforts of Mayor Edwin J. Hayes of Newark to bring an agreement also failed.

Buckmaster On Production Council

PRES. L. S. Buckmaster of the United Rubber Workers will represent CIO on a newly-formed Anglo-American production council.

The group was established at the recommendation of ECA boss Paul Hoffman to seek means of lifting industrial output in Great Britain. Objective of the committee is to seek more efficient production without speed-up or cutting workers' living standards.

The committee comprises six British unionists and four American unionists, together with an equal number of industrial spokesmen. Other labor representatives from the U. S. are Pres. Harvey Brown of the Machinists (independent) and Lee Minton of the AFL Glass Blowers. A fourth man is yet to be selected.

American industrial representatives are Philip Reed of General Electric, Spencer Love of the Burlington Mills, Ira Mosher, former Manufacturers Association head, and Ernest Breech of Ford.

Joseph Scanlon, former steel union official who is now a professor of industrial relations at Mass. Tech and Otto Beyer, construction engineer, will serve as technical consultants to the group.

Clinton Golden and Bert Jewell, labor advisors to ECA, hailed formation of the joint production council as "irrefutable evidence that this is a recovery, not a relief program.

"The peoples of Europe want to get back on their feet, they want desperately to make their countries self-sustaining and independent. They are welcoming our advice and assistance to that end—we are eager and pleased to give them whatever help we can."

The Council's first meeting will be in London October 25. It will look over British industry, study bottlenecks created by shortages of raw materials, and probe methods for best spreading production know-how which has developed in the U. S. and may be useful to British industries.

Sub-committees will make special studies of various industries, and talk with industry and labor spokesmen about major output problems. The Council will report back to Washington late in the year with suggestions for future work.

Monopolies:

Bust 'Em Up, Boys, Says Tom Clark

THE U. S. Justice Dept. has gone into the Federal courts in an effort to force four giant meat packing and three top farm machinery companies to "break it up."

The seven companies are charged with "suppressing competition" in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act—in other words, monopoly.

Atty. Gen. Tom C. Clark said the goal of the Justice Dept. is to have the meat trust divided into 14 separate and competing companies—Armour and Swift each to be carved into five separate companies and Cudahy and Wilson each into two separate concerns.

According to the complaint against Armour, Swift, Cudahy and Wilson, the companies control the supply of meat which each company obtains for sale by controlling the amount of livestock each will purchase. These four companies, the complaint alleges, accounted for 58% of the cattle, 54% of the hogs, 68% per cent of the calves and 79% of the sheep slaughtered under federal inspection during the past 10 years.

The packers are also charged with utilizing uniform cost formulas for setting prices, selling at "loading" rather than "delivered" weights and selling at substantially identical prices and sale terms.

If the Justice Dept. wins its case, the result is expected to be lower meat prices for the consumer.

"No avenue must be overlooked," Clark said, "to prevent the basic necessities of life such as food from falling into the hands of monopolistic groups."

Suits against the farm machinery manufacturers—Intl. Harvester, J. I. Case and Deere & Co., and nine of its subsidiaries—charge the companies with making agreements with retail dealers to prevent competing manufacturers from using them as outlets. With competition thus eliminated, the manufacturers presumably were able to keep prices up.

Anti-Picketing Law Ruled Illegal

The Pennsylvania 1947 labor picketing act has been ruled unconstitutional by Mercer County Court Judge George H. Rowley.

Acting on a test case of national interest, the jurist ruled the state had no right to forbid "organizational picketing" by nonemployes. Rowley said the law violates freedom of speech as guaranteed in the first amendment to the constitution and buttressed in the 14th.

The case, which is expected to be appealed to the state supreme court, holds national interest because several other states have since passed acts almost identical with that of Pennsylvania.

Back Truman, Garmatz

Baltimore CIO Council's PAC has streamlined its strategy to intensify its efforts for the reelection of President Truman and Representative Garmatz, and to elect candidates for Congress acceptable to PAC.

Labor's Friends Win Several Primaries

LABOR votes rang the victory bell last week in another of the series of state primary elections.

The victories ranged from industrial Michigan, where newspapers talked of labor's "political resurgence" to non-industrial Maine, where two antilabor referendum bills were handily defeated.

One major upset occurred in Michigan's 5th District—around Grand Rapids—where Rep. Bartel Jonkman's long string of "wrong" votes finally caught up with him.

Jonkman, a longtime isolationist and supporter of the Taft-Hartley Act, was snowed under in the GOP primaries by Gerald Ford, lawyer and onetime football star. Jonkman voted wrong 14 times, right only twice, in the CIO News Voting Record of the 80th Congress.

G. Mennen Williams — liberal and wealthy offspring of a big soap-and-shaving-cream family, won Democratic nomination for governor in Michigan, with strong CIO support. Williams, a 37-year-old lawyer and war vet, has been an active leader of the American Veterans Committee and supporter of New Deal programs. In Wayne County (Detroit), where Pres. Truman made his Labor Day speech, the Democratic vote surged way up, with Democratic primary winners polling 20% to 25% more votes than their GOP opposite numbers.

MORE SUPPORT: Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers calls on President Truman to assure him that he and the other officials of his union will do their utmost to obtain his re-election to the presidency.

MINNESOTA: Liberal, labor-supported Hubert Humphrey, mayor of Minneapolis and a sparkplug among the progressive forces at the Democratic national convention, romped to an easy victory in the Democratic-Farmer-Labor party primary. He snowed under the opposition of James Shields, Wallace supporter.

In the November elections, Humphrey will face Sen. Joe Ball (R.), one of the Senate's most ardent labor-baiters. With former Gov. Elmer Benson announcing he would not run as an independent in the elections, Humphrey's chances are strengthened considerably.

COLORADO: Democratic Sen. Ed Johnson, veteran isolationist who usually voted "right" on domestic issues, won a 5-2 victory in his bid for re-election to a third six-year term in the Senate. Johnson was opposed by New Dealer Gene Cervi. Both men had labor endorsement.

WASHINGTON: Gov. Mon C. Wallgren, former liberal Senator and friend of Pres. Truman, won the Democratic nomination for re-election. He'll have both Republican and Progressive opposition in the November voting.

Washington's six Congressmen —five Republicans, one Democrat —all won re-nomination. In the first district, Rep. H. R. Jones (R.), who voted against Taft-Hartley, will be opposed by liberal Hugh Mitchell, a former Senator.

MASSACHUSETTS: Secy. of Labor Maurice Tobin (D.), dropped out of the primary contest for governor when he was appointed to the Cabinet. Nevertheless, Tobin—who was governor from 1942 to 1944—polled a "popularity vote" of 66,500; but the Bay State Democratic gubernatorial nomination went to Paul Dever, running without real opposition. He'll run against incumbent Robert Bradford (R.) in the fall.

All Massachusetts Congressmen were renominated. Four of them —including Democrats McCormack and Kennedy, both liberals —were unopposed in the primary and will have no competition in the November elections.

With no real contest on either side for the nomination for governor, Dever polled 9,000 votes more than Republican Gov. Bradford. In addition, he'll probably pick up the Democratic votes cast for Tobin in last week's voting.

LOUISIANA: Miss Lucille Savoie, executive secretary of the CIO Textile Workers Joint Board in New Orleans, didn't succeed in defeating the Democratic machine, but she did succeed in polling three times as many votes as any independent candidate has ever won in a Congressional race in the district.

Miss Savoie, backed by the CIO, was running in the Democratic Congressional primary against Rep. Hebert, who consistently voted for Taft-Hartley and other anti-labor measures. She polled 15,000 votes, but Hebert, receiving 44,000 votes, won nomination, which is equivalent to election.

CIO Helps In Purge Of Dixiecrats

By RAY DAVIDSON

MARK Texas off the list of Southern states wherein the Dixiecrats have stolen the Democratic Party.

In the state party convention in Fort Worth last week, the Democrats of Texas — among whom were a number of CIO union members—purged their party of Dixiecrats all the way from precinct chairmen to national committeeman.

After all Dixiecrat delegations were driven from the hall in retreat, the Democrats remaining ordered that all party officers who refused to pledge support of the party nominees be removed from office.

Then the convention adopted a liberal platform which called for repeal of the entire list of anti-labor Texas laws and abolition of the poll tax.

It was not a convention dominated by union men. Among the 2200 delegates were approximately 150 CIO members and perhaps as many AFL and other unionists. But the union men merely played roles of good citizenship.

Defeat of the Dixiecrats was possible only through co-operation of union men, farmers, professional people and business men from all sections of the state who rebelled at seeing the big-money Dixiecrats steal the party ballot.

It was almost as if Franklin D. Roosevelt were alive.

CIO To Join In UN Day

CIO will play a prominent part in observances throughout the country on October 24 marking "United Nations Day."

The day is the anniversary of the effective operation of the United Nations Charter, and the UN General Assembly has called on member nations to celebrate the event.

In this country the National Citizens Committee for United Nations Day—which was appointed by Sec. of State Marshall—has set up a plan for community and national programs on Oct. 24. The organizing group is headed by Harper Sibley, and CIO Pres. Philip Murray is a member of the national committee.

"United Nations Day will be a day of international stock-taking," the Committee says, "to see what progress we have made, and of planning to see how we can accomplish what remains to be done.

"By itself, United Nations Day will not guarantee peace or solve problems of how to live and work together, but through it the people of the earth will be able better than ever to know and use their common will to achieve peace by making their United Nations stronger, sounder and more effective."

The committee is suggesting local meetings, to be attended by prominent citizens and representatives of all important civic groups.

The committee, with headquarters at 700 Jackson Place N.W., Washington, has also prepared lists of displays, movies, radio material, fact books and pictures which are available for use in connection with UN Day meetings.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

Irwin L. DeShelter, CIO Regional Director for Southern California, reports that Packinghouse Workers have won two elections in Los Angeles. Workers at the Cudahy Packing Co. voted 554 for the CIO and 112 for the AFL. At the Liquid Carbonic Corp. the workers voted 12 for the CIO and 1 for the AFL. James Stanton, Regional Director of the Packinghouse Workers, directed the campaigns and was assisted by Reps. Sonny Morrison and Al Shippey. These elections are positive proof that the workers in that industry have not been deceived by the underhanded tactics of the AFL which precipitated their recent strike and have not been discouraged from loyalty to their CIO union by the severe resistance the strike met from reactionary employers, anti-labor courts and the police.

DeShelter also reports that the CIO Textile Workers won an election at the California Hand Print Co., Hermosa Beach, by a vote of 75 to 38. TWUA Area Dir. Harry Stillman was in charge, assisted by Anthony Ramuglia and CIO Staff Rep. George Douglas.

Reg. Dir. Frank Bender reports that the CIO Auto Workers have won a union shop election at the Fairchild Engine and Airplane Corp., Hagerstown, Md., by a vote of 1902 to 60 in the production and maintenance unit and 175 to 7 in the office and clerical unit.

Reg. Dir. George DeNucci reports that the CIO won an NLRB election at the Nelsonville Foundry, Nelsonville, Ohio, by approximately 2 to 1.

Reg. Dir. George Craig reports three CIO election victories in eastern Pennsylvania. At William Schofield and Co., Philadelphia, the Textile Workers got 19 of the 23 votes cast. The Paperworkers won collective bargaining rights at J. M. Deutsch, Inc., Reading. In Cornwall Heights the Glass Workers came out on top in the election at the Cornwall Chemical Corp.

Thomas J. Gallegher, Director of Organization for the Shipbuilding Workers, reports that in an election held at the National Gypsum Co., Dover, N. J., the IUMSWA received 101 of the 114 votes cast. At the Benrus Co., Waterbury, Conn., IUMSWA won by a vote of 305 to 28 for the AFL. At the Creamery Package Co., Ansonia, Conn., the IUMSWA got 24 of the 25 votes cast.

Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports that an NLRB election at the Harman Tailoring Co. in Denver, resulted in 97 votes for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, 13 votes for no union. Earl Graham, ACWA Representative and Mrs. Nettie Sides, business manager of Local 263, ACWA, conducted the campaign. This company had viciously opposed the organization of its workers.

Intl. UAW Rep. William J. Beckham reports that the polishers and buffers at the Randall Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, voted in an NLRB election to become a part of the over-all industrial unit which is represented by the UAW rather than remain in the AFL.

WOMEN TAKE PART IN CIO

More and more women are becoming a part of our CIO movement each day. This is a natural outcome of the fact that more women are entering American industry and staying in it. No longer does marriage mean they will quit their jobs. No longer are they discriminated against and given inferior treatment.

Organization of industries which have vast majorities of women employes is adding to their ranks in the CIO. Retail establishments, offices and the telephone industry are among these.

We should look upon this influx as a source of new, vital, enthusiastic leadership. Women are known to be more emotional than men and this very emotionalism can give them the fire and power which will be of great benefit in our union's struggles and their day-to-day efforts.

Miss Florence Hancock recently completed a year as president of the British Trades Union Congress.

The TUC represents 8,000,000 British workers in mines, factories, shipyards, transportation, cotton mills, shoe factories and the clothing trades. Its decisions become directives for Prime Minister Clement Attlee's Labor Government.

At the age of 12, Florence Hancock, an orphan, was earning $1.60 a week as a cafe dishwasher. She had to support herself, her two little brothers and a small sister on that meager wage. From the cafe kitchen she went to work in a condensed milk factory.

There, awakened by her own suffering and privation and stimulated by her contact with the union in that plant, she began to realize the suffering, starvation and exploitation of the English poor. She became an active unionist.

The career of Miss Hancock, should serve as an inspiration and guide-post to every woman in the CIO. It should also serve as a talisman to all those men in the CIO who scoff at the idea of women in positions of leadership.

The writer last week visited the Brewery Workers at their convention in Milwaukee. While one of the older unions in the United States, it is one of the newer CIO unions. The Brewery Workers have brought to the CIO a wealth of tradition, prestige and stability, and in the CIO they have experienced the encouragement which has resulted in their becoming a growing union. They are a great bunch and I was proud to be with them and expect in the next few years to see really great things from them.

The CIO News

Vol. 11 WASHINGTON, D. C., SEPTEMBER 27, 1948 82 No. 38

It's Politics . . .

Wherever you went — from the rock-ribbed coast of Maine to the sunny shore of California — it was the same. Folks were talking politics.

Major negotiators for a four-year contract with the White House—Harry Truman and Tom Dewey —were covering a lot of territory and making a lot of speeches as the campaign neared the final month before election day.

CIO was hardening up the muscle on its political arm—the PAC. The drive for bucks for PAC was picking up speed. Precinct and block worker organizations were growing. More doorbells were being rung.

'Way down east in Maine unions were feeling good over defeat of two anti-labor measures at the polls. This victory for labor required work—work of the type pictured top left, where Lucille Dubois, too ill to go to the city hall, was given instruction about absentee balloting by CIO Member John Pierce.

You can't vote if you don't register, said PAC. Textile Workers at Louisville, Ky., (center photo) agreed.

Truman and many unionists were shooting holes in the story that the Republicans "had a mandate from the people." Steelworkers, meeting at Dayton, were shown chart (lower right) that in an Ohio district the only "mandate" the GOP got came from stay-at-home Democrats.

Our Story

CIO's views on the political campaign and its issues will be well known to millions before election day rolls around.

Four radio shows—on prices, housing, Taft-Hartley Act and civil rights—will be available to CIO's 443 state and local Political Action Committees throughout the country. There'll be spot announcements on registering and voting, too.

Nearly 2,000,000 PAC pamphlets and about 1,500,000 copies of the CIO News 1948 Voting Record have been distributed, and orders for more copies are still coming in.

And thousands of CIO officials will make political speeches between now and Nov. 2 Through these various mediums of expression millions in the nation will hear our story.

NAM Tries A Dodge

The National Association of Manufacturers is planting among club women speeches, ostensibly prepared by women who have standing in the community, the CIO Newspaper Guild reports. These speeches give all the NAM arguments for T-H, says the Guild. (See Page 2)

District 25 of the CIO Steelworkers sponsored a conference at Dayton, Ohio, to tell CIOers the advantages of the CIO Community Services Committee counselling plans. When sickness, accidents and other misfortunes strike, the CIO counsellors tell where to go for help. (See Page 6)

Speeches on T-H for Women's Club Speakers Written by NAM (If You Examine Closely)

"PLAYING on the credulity of club women, the National Association of Manufacturers is engaged in an ambitious propaganda drive plugging the Taft-Hartley act with an artful campaign of deceit and misrepresentation," according to the current issue of the Guild Reporter, publication of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

"This campaign is more than a propaganda drive; it's a swindle.

"The NAM propaganda is planted among club women as 'speeches,' ostensibly prepared by women who have standing in the community—as the studied opinions of the speakers.

"Instead, these 'talks' are canned NAM propaganda to drum up sentiment against labor."

Excerpts from The Guild Reporter story follow:

Banking on the idea that preparing a program and speeches involves a certain amount of work, research and preparation, the NAM has ground out its own special speeches labeled "program notes for women's clubs."

It's a slick job—neither accurate nor honest; it's the same job done by a carnival spieler, but more polished.

The canned NAM speeches do not depend on facts to impress an audience. Instead, the speeches by the NAM ghost use slick slogans, artful adjectives, and appeal to prejudice by shifty selection of a few horrible examples, or careful use of half-truths.

A yellow folder labeled "program notes" is sent to club women, on the apparent theory that the busy club woman will be delighted to make use of ready-made speeches.

The propaganda folder has the by-line, "Marian Read," and is addressed to women's club program planners.

There is no NAM by-line on the ready-made speeches to show they are an NAM product. The talks are made to appear to be the work and opinion of the speaker.

Inside the folder is the NAM imprint, and there is a six-question questionnaire from the NAM; otherwise the NAM carefully conceals its connection with the propaganda.

The folder has five speeches; questions (with answers) for each speaker, to be planted in the audience; short introductions and summations for the moderator; invitations to be sent to "club members and friends"; and sample releases to go to the newspapers before and after.

THE NAM has done a slick job not only in getting club women to peddle NAM ideas as measured opinions of club speakers, but also in artful and deceitful propaganda.

One of the major obstacles in attempting to expose half truths and falsehoods is that the NAM trickery needs many words to do a proper expose, to combat untruths with facts. The longer an explanation must be, the faster one loses the audience.

As Mark Twain once expressed it, a lie gets around the world while truth puts its boots on.

ONE of the questions apparently to be planted for the speaker to answer (NAM supplies the answers too) is: "Is the law hurting unions?"

And the NAM answer for the club woman goes like this:

"I think it is obvious that unions are not being handicapped by the act . . . Furthermore, there has been no wage cutting under the law, and none of the industrial strife and chaos which its opponents predicted . . ."

1. Obviously the speaker didn't answer the question.

2. The T-H act doesn't prevent wage cuts; these are prevented by no-pay-cut clauses in union contracts.

3. As to strife and chaos, look around. The United Mine Workers, ITU and maritime strikes were directly a result of the T-H act and its operations.

Another question is: "What is the attitude of employers toward the act?"

And the canned answer reads: "Generally speaking, the attitudes of employers have been moderate, and reasoned . . . Employers have shown little inclination to take advantage of legal technicalities . . ."

Here is an open admission that there are legal technicalities in the act which employers can take advantage of, and the not too subtle implication is that when the economic scene shifts, or when the employers' position changes, they will be quick to take advantage of these technicalities.

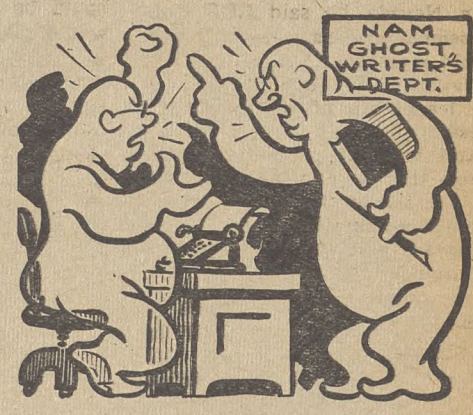
These NAM ghost writers ought to get together. In one speech the argument is advanced that the closed shop should be abandoned because, he says, the argument that it helps maintain union discipline is cockeyed. He says discipline is the role of management.

But in another speech for the club women the argument is presented equally fervently that it is proper to impose financial liability on unions for failing to maintain this discipline!

There is one honest little gem from the NAM propaganda mill, in the speech for the second speaker:

"The number of false statements concerning the provisions of the Taft-Hartley law are legion."

And the NAM certainly proved its point and added to the list with its collection of five speeches (and questions and answers) on tap for the club women of America.



NAM Pressure Plus GOP Congress Equals Setback For People

The 80th Congress has been called the "NAM Congress."

Latest lobbying figures filed by NAM give at least a partial explanation.

During the first half of 1948, the NAM spent $75,269 on activities which "might be considered" as influencing federal legislation.

The legislative figure was only a drop in the bucket of NAM's overall spending. The employers' outfit, with its 17,000 corporation members, took in $1,636,327 during the first six months of the year. It spent, altogether, some $2,049,208.

The $75,269 figure was reached by some complicated arithmetic on the part of NAM, which estimated that legislative expenditures are only 1.9% of its entire program.

Of course, $75,269 doesn't "buy" a Congress—at least not at 1948 prices. But expenditures of NAM and other business groups interested in legislation ran into big money.

Pressure of these expenditures, combined with type of Republican Congressmen elected in the light-vote 1946 elections, paved the way for setbacks on a score of people's legislative programs.

Bargaining For Pensions Upheld

UNIONS have a right to bargain collectively on pension and retirement plans, the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled last week in the first major decision so far made on the subject.

The ruling upheld an order issued by the Natl. Labor Relations Board in a case involving the CIO United Steelworkers of America and the Inland Steel Co. On the basis that neither pension nor retirement plans were subjects for bargaining under the Taft-Hartley Act, the company had refused to discuss such matters with the union.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray called the decision "a great victory" which upheld a position long held by the United Steelworkers.

"This decision will have a salutory affect throughout American industry," Murry declared, "and will give great legal impetus to bargaining on these issues. Now that the courts have decided, we will expect employers to live up to the decision and negotiate reasonable and substantial plans with unions representing their employes.

"We are entirely confident that if the company appeals, this judgment will be affirmed by the Supreme Court."

Referring to a second part of the decision, however, upholding the provision of the Taft-Hartley affidavits, Murray said: "We will promptly appeal this aspect of the case through the Supreme Court. We expect that arguments on this appeal will be heard this Fall, and that the Supreme Court will hand down a decision shortly thereafter."

Although the Court's decision on pension and retirement plans was unanimous, the judges split two-to-one on the second phase of the case involving the constitutionality of the Taft-Hartley requirement that union officers file non-Communist affidavits.

Judge J. Earl Major dissented from the majority opinion upholding the constitutionality of the provision, pointing out that the law was directed not at unions as such, but at individual officers, anyone of whom could, he declared, "stymie the entire bargaining process and thus deprive the union of its right to act as bargaining agent."

He declared that the requirement for non-Communist affidavits "is a direct and serious impairment upon the constitutional rights of both the employes and the union. The rights of the former to organize, select a bargaining agent of their own choosing and elect officers of the union have been reduced to a meaningless gesture."

3 TWUA Members Win in Maine

Maine may look like a Republican stronghold this year, but—

Four members of the CIO Textile Workers recently were elected to the Maine House of Representatives on the Democratic ticket.

Three of them—Eddie Dostie, Omer Gauvin and Leo St. Pierre—belong to TWUA at Lewiston, which has five House members in the Legislature. The fourth is Edward McEnery of TWUA at Saco.

Standard Stalls Oil Negotiations

NEGOTIATIONS in the West Coast oil walkout came to a standstill as talks with Standard Oil broke off indefinitely and other struck companies awaited outcome of the Standard talks.

The CIO Oil Workers has scaled its original demand for 22¢ an hour down to 17½c, retroactive from July 3 to Sept. 1, and 19c thereafter. The union claims that a 22c hourly raise is required to bring California scales up to those in Texas and in the East. Standard Oil, bellweather for the industry, is standing pat on its refusal to go above 12½c.

Intensified efforts of the Union Oil Co. to get workers back into the refineries has resulted in the shooting of a 20-year-old picket at Rodeo, Calif., and the ambushing and beating of a picket at the company's Oleum refinery.

The union has taken to the air and sea in efforts to spot and prevent delivery of supplies into refineries by waters. Sixty small boats, some equipped with a loudspeaker, and two airplanes have been hired.

IN a letter sent each of its employes, the Union Oil Co. on Sept. 17 warned workers to return to work on or before Sept. 24, 1948" or suffer "whatever action (the company) deems appropriate . . "

Union Oil also mailed to workers a reprint of an editorial printed by the "Argonaut," accusing OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight and union District Director Elro Brown of calling the strike "in defiance of the wishes and interests of the oil workers." Both the company and the newspaper conveniently neglected to mention that the walkout was called after 94%—and above in some plants—of the Union Oil employes voted to strike. Lowest percentage approving the walkout in any plant was 86%.

Truman Says

1948 Issue: 'Special Interests Against People'

By ALLAN L. SWIM

FOUR traveling men—Harry Truman, Tom Dewey and Alben Barkley and Earl Warren — packed their suitcases, boarded trains and headed across the nation.

They were the country's top salesmen for two entirely different lines.

Truman and Barkley had a "New Deal, pro-labor" label on the goods they were trying to sell the voters.

The package Dewey and Warren were trying to get the public to buy was labeled "anti-New Deal, anti-labor."

A couple of lesser salesmen—Henry Wallace of the Progressives and Strom Thurmond of the Dixiecrats—were calling on the "prospective customers," too.

Wallace and Thurmond were featured only in the sideshow—but it was a sideshow that could greatly affect the outcome of the performance in the main tent.

TRUMAN, following a schedule that would have driven an old three-a-day vaudeville performer to distraction, was making good on his promise to "visit every whistle-stop in the country."

He was on a barnstorming tour, taking his message to the folks, talking "off the cuff" at railway stations, telling audiences large and small that the Democratic Party was the party of the people and not the privileged few.

Out in California he stated this idea in a few simple words by saying that the top issue of 1948 was "the special interests against the people."

In Nevada he said GOP Congressional leaders were a "bunch of old mossbacks living in 1890."

He lashed out time and again at the leadership of the 80th Congress.

And he kept pounding at the theme that he and his party will be victorious in November if there is a heavy vote.

Dewey, who for a long time maintained almost complete silence on all of the important issues of the campaign, finally opened up in Iowa's tall-corn country.

There, in a speech reminiscent of a high school commencement oration, he said he had faith in the nation and its people and he promised to "unite us as we have never been united before."

He spoke as though he already were President.

"There are some difficulties that confront us," he said, adding that the election of an administration which could unite the people would be the "greatest single step toward solving these problems."

As he reached the west coast he started calling for less government spending and lower taxes as a means of cutting the cost of living.

He attempted to place blame for inflation on the doorsteps of the Democrats, charging that they for years had been "moving Heaven and earth trying to bring on just such an inflation."

Barkley, speaking at a union-sponsored rally at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., chided the Republicans for assuming they already had won the election, then declared:

"Labor will vote in the coming election because it has seen its rights and privileges, fought for and obtained over the long stretch of the years, attacked and reduced by a Republican-dominated Congress.

"Labor will vote because labor knows that only the presence of a Democrat in the White House prevented the destruction of even more of the rights and privileges than they witnessed in the last two years."

He said profits had gone up much faster than wages in recent years and charged the GOP with refusal to take concrete action to curb inflation.

WARREN, in a mood of sweetness and light, stumped 10 states in a week and made one big pledge to the people.

He said his party, if victorious, "will never forget the importance of flood control, reclamation, irrigation and hydroelectric power development."

He echoed the Dewey theme of "unity" and said Dewey "believes in" the principle of farm price support.

But mostly he talked about water, the lack of which is a major problem in arid regions of the West.

His theme was pitched mainly on the line that the GOP would help the West achieve its rightful place in the nation's economy.

THE CIO's political arm—PAC—threw a couple of short jabs at the Republican candidates.

Dewey, PAC said, must assume responsibility for the way the leadership of Congress behaved at the special "Turnip Day" session called by Truman.

"The Republicans dominated both houses and they looked for guidance to their party leader, Governor Dewey," PAC said. "What he told them was, 'Stay around a week or so—and then go home.'

"The CIO-PAC is shocked by Warren's proposal that the campaign pass over the real issues. He would like, he said, a campaign without discussion of the high cost of living, or the housing shortage, or the relations between management and labor, or the peace of the world."

Wallace kept hammering away on the points of the program he outlined weeks ago.

And the Dixiecrats continued their drive to cut the ground from under Truman below the Mason-Dixon line.

Roll On Primary Victories

'We've Got the Ball and Can Score'

By DILLARD STOKES

LABOR showed its muscle in recent primaries, turned out huge blocs of new voters in critical districts and won half a dozen hard-fought nominations for its candidates.

Republican editors who had been forecasting pushovers for their party in November took one look at the primary totals, gasped and sharply changed their tune. Now they are predicting close races in Massachusetts, Michigan and Washington.

But even the most friendly experts agreed that labor's battle was far from over. The primaries, they held, proved the election could be won but that doing it would take two things:

1. Using every precious day before the deadline on registration to qualify the millions of union members who have not yet registered.

2. Hammering away at house by house, block by block campaigning, to make sure that all the newly registered voters, and all those whose ballots nailed down the primary victories, go back to the polls on Nov. 2.

"We've got the ball now and we know we can score," said Jack Kroll, director of the CIO Political Action Committee. "But if our block workers let up in the next five weeks—that's all brother!"

Here are the results by States:

WASHINGTON — PAC-backed Gov. Mon. C. Wallgren piled up a victory over former Gov. Clarence Martin for the Domocratic nominations for Governor. Former Sen. Hugh Mitchell took the Democratic nomination for Congress in the First District and Rep. Henry M. Jackson was nominated in the Republican primaries by 25,000, reflecting the get-out-the-vote drive of PAC and other labor agencies.

MICHIGAN — PAC spadework was credited with adding 20 to 25% to the primary total vote, which showed the Democrats about neck and neck with the Republicans, instead of heavily behind. PAC-backed G. Mennen Williams topped two opponents by a narrow margin for the Democratic nomination for Governor. Former Congressman Frank Hook, PAC indorsed, was unopposed for the Democratic nomination for Senator and will oppose Sen. Homer Ferguson, Republican, in November.

PAC candidates ran well in the Congressional races. Congressmen George Sadowski took the First District Democratic nomination. In the Fifth District, Gerald R. Ford Jr., a PAC candidate, wrested the Republican nomination from Congressman Bartel J. Jonkelman.

MASSACHUSETTS — Another show of labor strength put the Democrats ahead of the Republicans in Massachusetts. Although he had dropped out of the race to be Secretary of Labor, Maurice Tobin drew 66,570 votes for the Democratic nomination for Governor, which went to Paul A. Dever, who piled up 218,570.

CONNECTICUT — the State Democratic convention was a PAC walkaway. Nominated for Governor was Chester Bowles, former OPA administrator. Nominated for Congress were: 1st district, Abraham Ribicoff; 2d district, Mrs. Chase Going Woodhouse; 3d district, John Maguire, 4th district, William Gaston, and 5th district, Vincent Kiernan.

MINNESOTA — Forecasts of Third Party strength in the Democratic primary fizzled out when the votes were counted. PAC backed Mayor Hubert Humphrey of Minneapolis swamped Jim Shields, the Third Party entry for the Democratic nomination for Senator, by 10 to 1. Former Gov. Elmer Benson, who has been slated to run for the Third Party in the general election, threw in his towel and left the race between Humphrey and Republican Senator Joe Ball. Ball polled a heavy vote in the Republican primary and the PAC and other labor groups faced an uphill fight to beat him in November.

WISCONSIN — Former Rep. Andrew J. Biemiller, PAC indorsed, walked away with the Democratic nomination for Congress in the 5th district. Also nominated was Clement Zablocki, indorsed by the PAC in the fourth district.

COLORADO—Sen. Ed. Johnson won the Democratic nomination for Senator over Eugene Cervi. Both men were approved by the PAC. Four PAC-approved candidates won the Democratic nominations for Congress.

Pa. PAC Gives Truman 'Energetic Support'

Pennsylvania's CIO-PAC—at a meeting at which the Progressive Party wasn't even mentioned—voted unanimously for "energetic support" of President Truman.

Truman, says a resolution adopted by about 100 Pennsylvania CIO leaders, "has persistently urged Congress to enact the great liberal and humane legislation which came from the statesmanship of President Roosevelt for the common advantage of our nation."

Natl. PAC Dir. Jack Kroll told the group that "registration of voters has been pushed most vigorously, voluntary donations of dollar bills have been received from every member in many unions, and the practical organization in the precincts is going ahead at a swift pace.

"We certainly count on many districts reversing the awful results in 1946, when only about one-third of the voters went to the polls and we got a reactionary Congress and state legislature."
